

THE BOOK of LEGENDS

SEFER HA-AGGADAH

Legends from the Talmud and Midrash

EDITED BY

HAYIM NAHMAN BIALIK

AND YEHOSHUA HANA RAVNITZKY

TRANSLATED BY

WILLIAM G. BRAUDE

FPT

The first complete English translation of the Hebrew classic Sefer Ha-Aggadah brings to the English-speaking world the greatest and best-loved anthology of classical Rabbinic literature ever compiled. First published in Odessa in 1908–11, it was recognized immediately as a masterwork in its own right, and reprinted numerous times in Israel.

The Hebrew poet Hayim Nahman Bialik and the renowned editor Yehoshua Hana Ravnitzky, the architects of this masterful compendium, selected hundreds of texts from the Talmud and midrashic literature and arranged them thematically, in order to provide their contemporaries with easy access to the national literary heritage of the Jewish people—the texts of Rabbinic Judaism that remain at the heart of Jewish literacy today.

Bialik and Ravnitzky chose Aggadah—the non-legal portions of the Talmud and Midrash—for their anthology. Loosely translated as "legends," Aggadah includes the genres of biblical exegesis, stories about biblical characters, the lives of the Talmudic era sages and their contemporary history, parables, proverbs, and folklore. A capitivating mélange of wisdom and piety, fantasy and satire, Aggadah is the expressive medium of the Jewish creative genius.

The arrangement of this compendium reflects the theological concerns of the Rabbinic sages: the role of Israel and the nations; God, good and evil; human relations; the world of nature; and the art of healing. Here, the reader who wants to explore traditional Jewish views on a particular subject is treated to a selection of relevant texts at his fingertips but will soon become immersed in a way of thinking, exploring, and questioning that is the hallmark of Jewish inquiry.

"Whatever the imagination can invent is found in the Aggadah," wrote the historian Leopold Zunz, "its purpose always being to teach man the ways of God." The Book of Legends/Sefer Ha-Aggadah, now available in William Braude's superbly annotated translation, enables modern Jews to experience first-hand the richness and excitement of their cultural inheritance.

THE BOOK OF LEGENDS

Sefer Ha-Aggadah

LEGENDS FROM THE TALMUD AND MIDRASH

E D I T E D B Y

HAYIM NAHMAN BIALIK

A N D

YEHOSHUA HANA RAVNITZKY

•

TRANSLATED BY WILLIAM G. BRAUDE

•

Introduction by David Stern

SCHOCKEN BOOKS • NEW YORK

To my grandchildren,
Yosef, Yoni, Rachel, and Naomi,
whose lives are my assurance,
I dedicate this book.
—W. G. B.

English translation
copyright © 1992 by Schocken Books Inc.
Introduction copyright © 1992 by David Stern

All rights reserved under International and Pan-American Copyright Conventions. Published in the United States by Schocken Books Inc., New York, and simultaneously in Canada by Random House of Canada Limited, Toronto. Distributed by Pantheon Books, a division of Random House, Inc., New York.

Originally published in Hebrew in Odessa, 1908–1911, the Sefer ha-Aggadah has gone through eighteen impressions, including an enlarged edition published in Tel Aviv, 1936, by Dvir Publishing. This translation is based on the latest revised edition published by Dvir Publishing, Tel Aviv, in 1952. Copyright © 1952 by Dvir Publishing. Published by arrangement with Zmora-Bitan Publishing Ltd., Tel Aviv.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data
Sefer ha-aggadah. English.
The Book of Legends : the first complete translation of Sefer ha-aggadah / [compiled by] Hayim Nahman Bialik and Yehoshua Hana Ravnitzky.
p. cm.
Translation of: Sefer ha-aggadah.
Includes index.
1. Aggada—Translations into English. 2. Midrash—Translations into English. 3. Legends, Jewish. I. Bialik, Hayim Nahman, 1873–1934. II. Ravnitzky, Yehoshua Hana, 1859–1944. III. Title.
BM516.B482E5 1992 296.1'420521—dc20 91-52700
ISBN 0-8052-4113-2

Book Design by Robert Bull Design
Manufactured in the United States of America
First American Edition

CONTENTS

PUBLISHER'S NOTE xi
ACKNOWLEDGMENTS xiii
NOTE ON TRANSLITERATION xv
INTRODUCTION BY DAVID STERN xvii

PART I

CHAPTER ONE
PROEM

The Meaning of Aggadah and of the Parable 3
The Meaning of Aggadah and Halakhah 4

CHAPTER TWO
THE WORK OF CREATION AND THE FIRST GENERATIONS

The Creation of the World 6
Heaven and Earth 7
The Light 9
The Water 10
Grasses and Trees 11
The Moon 11
The Variety of Creatures 11
Man 12
The Upper Worlds and the Lower Worlds 15
Things Created at Twilight on Sabbath Eve 16
The Order of, and Changes in, the Work of Creation 16
The Handiwork of the Holy One 17
In the World's Praise 18
Eve 19
The Serpent and Sin 20
The Tree of Life and the Tree of Knowledge 21
The Primeval Serpent 22
Adam after the Sin 22
Cain and Abel 23
The Corruption of Succeeding Generations 25
Noah 25
The Generation of the Flood 25
Noah and the Flood 27
Nimrod and the Generation of the Dispersion of Mankind 29

CHAPTER THREE
THE DEEDS OF THE FATHERS

Our Father Abraham 31
Abraham's Prayer and Sodom's Sins 35
Abraham's Progeny 37
The Binding of Isaac 39
After the Death of Abraham 42
Isaac, Rebekah, and Their Progeny 42
Isaac's Blessing 44
Our Father Jacob When He Left Beersheba 45
Jacob, Esau, and the Angels 48
The Portions of Jacob and Esau 50
Rebekah's Death and Rachel's Burial 50
The House of Jacob and the House of Esau 50
Joseph and His Brothers 51
The Going Down of Judah 51
Joseph in Egypt 52
Joseph before Pharaoh 52
Joseph's Brothers in Egypt 53
Joseph Makes Himself Known to His Brothers 55
Jacob's Going Down to Egypt 56
The Death and Burial of Jacob 56

CHAPTER FOUR
ISRAEL IN EGYPT AND THE DEPARTURE FROM EGYPT

The Servitude in Egypt 58
The Birth and Growing Up of Moses 60
Moses Goes Forth to His Brethren 61
Moses in Midian 62
The Groaning of the Children of Israel and the Mission of Moses 62
Moses Returns to Egypt 64
Moses before Pharaoh 64
The Brutality of the Enslavement 65
The Signs and the Plagues 66
Events Preceding the Exodus 70
The Spoils of Egypt 70
Joseph's Coffin 70
The Exodus from Egypt 71
The Splitting of the Red Sea and the Plunder at the Sea 72

CHAPTER FIVE
ISRAEL IN THE WILDERNESS

From Egypt into the Wilderness 75
The Manna 75
The Well 76
Clouds of Glory 76
Amalek's War 77
The Giving of Torah 78

Nadab and Abihu 83
The Sin of the Golden Calf 83
The Tabernacle and Its Vessels 86
Israel's Journey and Encampment in the Wilderness 88
The Scouts 89
The Controversy of Korah and His Company 91
The Waters of Meribah 93
Litigious [Impertinent, and Suspicious] Persons 93
Aaron 93
Aaron's Death 94
The Miracles in the Valley of Arnon 95
Og, King of Bashan 96
Balaam 96
The Daughters of Zelophehad 97
The War with Midian 98
Israel's Provisioning in the Wilderness 99
The End of the Forty Years in the Wilderness 99
The Prophecy of Moses 100
Eldad and Medad 100
Moses and Joshua 101
The Death of Moses 101
Moses' Burial Place 105

CHAPTER SIX
JUDGES, KINGS, AND PROPHETS

The Chosen Land 106
Joshua 106
In the Days When the Judges Judged 107
The Prophetess Deborah 108
Jephthah and His Daughter 109
Samson 109
Micah's Idol 110
The Scroll of Ruth 111
Elkanah and Hannah 113
The Sons of Eli 114
Samuel 114
The Destruction of Shiloh 114
The Sons of Samuel 115
King Saul 116
The Death of Saul 117
David the Shepherd 117
David and the Works of the Lord 118
David's Harp 118
David's Sin and Repentance 119
David's Humility 119
David and Abner 120
David and Israel's Enemies 120
David and His Son Absalom 121
David and Ishbi-benob 121
David's Death 122
The Wisdom and Greatness of King Solomon 123
Solomon as Builder 124
Solomon's Throne 126
Solomon and the Queen of Sheba 127
Solomon—King and Commoner 129
Jeroboam 131
Omri and Ahab 132
Elijah and the Worshipers of Baal 133
Jonah 133
The Banishment of the Ten Tribes 134
The Cutheans [Samaritans] 135
Hezekiah and the Fall of Sennacherib 135
Hezekiah and Isaiah 139
The Reward for the Three Steps Merodach-baladan Took 139
Manasseh 140
King Zedekiah 140
Nebuchadnezzar 141
Jehoiakim and Jeconiah 141

CHAPTER SEVEN
THE DESTRUCTION OF THE FIRST TEMPLE

The Destruction of the Temple 142
The Ninth of Av 143
Upon the Ruins of Jerusalem 143
The Departure of the Presence 145
The Holy One Weeping 145
Mourning by the Fathers 146
The Blood of Zechariah 148
The Sufferings of the Exiles 148
By the Rivers of Babylon 149
Yearnings 150
Comforting 150

CHAPTER EIGHT
THE ERA BETWEEN THE FIRST AND SECOND TEMPLES

Daniel and the Dragon in Babylon 151
The Dead whom Ezekiel Brought Back to Life 151
Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah 151
Ezra 152
Men of the Great Assembly 152
In the Days of Mordecai and Esther 152
Deborah and Esther 153
The Feast of Ahasuerus 153
Bigthan and Teresh 153
The Promotion of Haman 154
Haman's Intention 154
Haman's Slander and Ahasuerus's Decree 154
The Fall of Haman and the Exaltation of Mordecai 157
The Hanging of Haman 159

CHAPTER NINE
THE SECOND TEMPLE— ITS STRUCTURE AND ITS SERVICE

The Temple in Its Glory 160
The Hiding of the Ark 161
The Crown of Priesthood 162
Simeon the Righteous 162
The Temple of Onias 163
Alexandria's Synagogue with the Double Colonnade 163
Priestly Families 164
Alexander of Macedon 166
The Servitude under Greece and the Jews Who Betrayed the Covenant 168
The Mother of Children 169
The House of the Hasmoneans 169
Herod's Temple 171
The Service in the Temple 172
The Miracles in the Temple 174
Diligent Priests 175
The Paschal Lamb 175
The Sheaf of the Omer (Lev. 23:9–11) 176
The Bringing of the Firstfruits 177
The Service of Yom Kippur [the Day of Atonement] 178
The Lulav Cluster 182
The Water Libation 182
The Rejoicing at the Place of the Water-drawing 183
The King's Passage in Scripture 183
The Eighth Day Festival [Shemini Atzeret] and the Night Following the Seventh Day of Sukkot 184
Festival Pilgrimage to Jerusalem 184
Pilgrimage to Jerusalem during the Time of an Adverse Decree 185
The Cleverness of the People of Jerusalem 185

CHAPTER TEN
THE DESTRUCTION OF THE SECOND TEMPLE AND OF THE LAND

The Years before the Destruction 189
Why the Land Was Destroyed 189
The Wickedness of Hadrian 195
Zion's Precious Children 195
The Holy One Mourns 197
Menahem the Comforter 197
The Mourners for Zion 198
Since the Temple Was Destroyed 199
Consolations 199

•

PART II

CHAPTER ONE
THE DEEDS OF THE SAGES

R. Simeon ben Shetah (fl. 1st century B.C.E.) 201
Honi the Circle Maker and His Progeny (fl. 2d half of 1st century B.C.E.) 202
Hillel the Elder (fl. end of 1st century B.C.E.) 204
Akavia ben Mahalalel (fl. middle of 1st century C.E.) 207
Rabban Gamaliel the Elder (fl. 90–110 C.E.) 207
R. Zadok and His Son R. Eleazar (fl. 2d half of 1st century C.E.) 207
The School of Shammai and the School of Hillel (middle of 1st century C.E.) 208
Jonathan ben Uzziel (fl. middle of 1st century C.E.) 209
Samuel the Little (fl. 1st century C.E.) 209
Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai (1st century C.E.) 210
R. Dosa ben Horkinas (fl. 1st century C.E.) 213
R. Hanina ben Dosa (fl. 1st century C.E.) 214
Rabban Gamaliel II (fl. 90–110 C.E.) 216
R. Eliezer [the Elder] ben Hyrcanus (fl. 2d century C.E.) 221
R. Joshua ben Hananiah (fl. ca. 90–130 C.E.) 226
Nahum the Man of Gamzo (fl. ca. 90–130 C.E.) 230
R. Tarfon (fl. ca. 110–35 C.E.) 231
R. Akiva (fl. 95–135 C.E.) 232
The Ten Martyrs 238
R. Meir, Elisha ben Avuyah (Aher), Beruriah (fl. ca. 130–60 C.E.) 242
R. Simeon ben Yohai (fl. ca. 130–60 C.E.) and His Son R. Eleazar (fl. end of 2d century C.E.) 249
R. Yose ben Halafta (fl. 2d half of 2d century C.E.) and His Son R. Ishmael (fl. 1st half of 3d century C.E.) 254
R. Judah bar Ilai (2d half of 2d century C.E.) 256
R. Eleazar ben Shammua (fl. 2d half of 2d century C.E.) and His Son R. Simeon (1st third of 3d century C.E.) 257
Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel II (2d half of 2d century C.E.) 259
R. Phinehas ben Yair (1st third of 3d century C.E.) 260
R. Judah I, the Patriarch (Rabbi, Our Holy Rabbi); R. Hiyya the Elder and His Sons (fl. last quarter of 2d century to beginning of 3d century C.E.) 261
Bar Kappara (1st half of 3d century C.E.) 270
R. Simeon ben Halafta (1st half of 3d century C.E.) 271

R. Hanina bar Hama
(fl. 1st half of 3d century C.E.) 273
R. Oshaia the Elder ben R. Hama
(fl. 1st half of 3d century C.E.) 275
R. Joshua ben Levi
(fl. 1st half of 3d century C.E.) 276
R. Yohanan ben ha-Nappah (died ca. 279 C.E.)
and R. Simeon ben Lakish [Resh Lakish]
(2d half of 2d century C.E.) 279
R. Judah [II] the Patriarch
(R. Yudan the Patriarch) (fl. 225–53 C.E.) 285
R. Eleazar ben Pedat
(fl. 1st half of 4th century C.E.) 287
R. Abbahu (fl. 1st half of 4th century C.E.) 289
R. Zera (Ze'era) (fl. 1st half of 4th century C.E.) 292
Rav (R. Abba bar Aibu) (fl. 219–47 C.E.) 295
Samuel (fl. 219–54 C.E.) 299
R. Judah (bar Ezekiel) (fl. 254–99 C.E.) 301
R. Jeremiah (fl. middle of 4th century C.E.) 305
R. Huna (fl. 257–97 C.E.) 306
R. Hisda (died 300 C.E.) 308
R. Sheshet (fl. 1st half of 4th century C.E.) 310
R. Nahman [bar Jacob] (died 329 C.E.) 311
Rabbah [bar Nahmani] (died 339 C.E.) 312
R. Joseph (died 333 C.E.) 313
Abbaye bar Kaylil (280–338/39 C.E.) 315
Rava bar Joseph bar Hama (fl. 299–352 C.E.) 317
R. Papa (died 375 C.E.) 322
R. Ashi (fl. 352–427 C.E.) 324
Patriarch and Exilarch 325
The Merit of the Sages 326
The Former and the Latter Generations 327
The Sages of the Land of Israel and the Sages of Babylonia 328
Sages at Their Going In and Their Coming
Out of the House of Study 329
The Death of Sages and Their Eulogies 330

PART III

CHAPTER ONE
ISRAEL AND THE NATIONS OF THE WORLD

God's Love for Israel 333
Between Israel and the Nations 335
The Character of Israel 338
Israel's Afflictions 341
The Characteristics of Israel 342
Transgressors in Israel 342
Israel—One Cluster 344
The Enemies and Friends of Israel 345
Constellations Have No Power over Israel 346
Israel Endure Forever 347
The Purity of Families in Israel 348
Proselytes in Israel 349
Those Who Became Proselytes Because of Lions 353
The Nations of the World 354

CHAPTER TWO
THE LAND OF ISRAEL

The Land and Israel 359
The Land and Its Settlement 359
Love for the Land 362
The Holiness of the Land 363
Torah of the Land 363
The Dimensions of the Land 364
A Land Flowing with Milk and Honey 365
Jerusalem 371

CHAPTER THREE LANGUAGE

The Sacred Tongue 374
The Sacred Tongue and Other Languages 375
Exactness in the Use of Language 376

CHAPTER FOUR EXILE

The Hardship of Exile and the Enslavement
by Kingdoms 377
Israel: An Object of Derision among the Nations 381
The Holy One Is Partner in Israel's Travail 381
The Guardian of Israel 383
Watchman, What of the Night? 384

CHAPTER FIVE
REDEMPTION AND THE DAYS OF THE MESSIAH

Archives of Travails and Archives of Deliverance 387
The Merit of the Fathers 388
The Time of Redemption 389
The Footprints of the Messiah 391
Redemption and the Ingathering of Exiles 393
The Day of Darkness and Light 394
The Messiah 395

CHAPTER SIX
IN THE TIME-TO-COME

The Good That Is to Be 399
Resurrection of the Dead 401

•

CHAPTER SEVEN TORAH

On the Value and Study of Torah 403
How Torah Is Acquired and in Whom It Maintains Itself 409
Torah for Its Own Sake 414
They Who Teach Torah and the Ways of Study 414
They Who Study Torah and the Ways of Study 419
Teacher and Companion: Attending upon [Sages in] Torah 427
Honoring Torah and Those Who Study It 429
The Disciple of the Wise and the Unlearned Person 434
The Oral Torah 440
Holy Writings and Other Books 444
The Language of Torah and [the Aramaic] Targum 449
Study and Practice 451
The Precepts of Torah 453
A Fence around the Torah 464
Torah's Mysteries 467

CHAPTER EIGHT
WISDOM, PROPHECY, AND SONG

Wisdom 469
Prophecy and the Holy Spirit 472
Song 481

CHAPTER NINE
SABBATH, FEASTS, AND FASTS

Sabbath 486
Hallowing the New Moon and Intercalating the Year 493
New Year's Day and the Day of Atonement 496
Pilgrimage Festivals 498
Hanukkah and Purim 500
The Scroll of Fasts 501
Fasts 501

PART IV

CHAPTER ONE
THE HOLY ONE, BLESSED BE HE, AND RELATIONS BETWEEN HUMAN BEINGS AND HIM WHO IS EVERYWHERE

The Holy One, Blessed Be He 503
The Household Above 511
Idolatry 514
Heretics 517
Between Man and Him Who Is Everywhere 521
Prayer 523
Benedictions 533

CHAPTER TWO GOOD AND EVIL

The Impulse to Good and the Impulse to Evil 537
Precept and Transgression 543
The Righteous and the Wicked 546
Repentance 556
Reward and Punishment 561
The World-to-Come 568
The Garden of Eden and Gehenna 569

PART V

CHAPTER ONE MAN AND HIS NEEDS

Man at His Birth, in His Old Age, and at His Death 575
Man's Soul 584
Man's Delight 585
Food and Drink 587
Proper Order and Manners at a Feast 590
A Man's Clothing 592
Bathing and Anointing 593
Healing the Body 594
Care of the Body 595
Man's Sustenance—Poverty and Riches 600
The Labor of Man's Hands 605
Work on the Land and the Give-and-Take of Business 609

CHAPTER TWO A MAN'S HOUSEHOLD

Marriage 614
A Woman's Character 624
Matters between Husband and Wife 628
Children and the Rearing of Children 632
Honoring Father and Mother 638

CHAPTER THREE
BETWEEN MAN AND MAN

The Right Course and a Good Name 642
The Honor to Be Accorded to One's Fellow Man 643
Love of Fellow Man and Hatred of Fellow Man 646
A Companion 647
Rules of Conduct and Good Manners Required between a Man and His Fellow 648

Theft, Robbery, and Bloodshed 651
Wronging [Overreaching] and Deception 655
Returning a Lost Article 658
Workmen and Slaves 660
Compassion for God's Creatures 663
Charity 664
The Ways of Charity 671
Collectors for Charity 675
Bringing Up Orphans and Redeeming Captives 676
Deeds of Loving-kindness 677
Hospitality to Wayfarers 679
Saving an Endangered Life 682
Visiting the Sick 683
Burying the Dead and Comforting the Mourners 684

CHAPTER FOUR TRAITS AND ATTITUDES

Peace and Strife 690
Charitable Judgment and Suspicion 692
Reproof, Flattery, and Hypocrisy 693
Slander and Disclosing Another's Secret 696
Truth and Falsehood, Vows and Oaths 700
Refined Speech and Lascivious Talk 702
Silence and Speech 704
Anger 706
Humility and Pride 707
Shamefacedness and Brazenness 712
Joy and Sadness, Frivolity and Levity 712
Resignation to Suffering 715
Analysis of Human Traits 719

CHAPTER FIVE
THE COMMUNITY, THE STATE AND THEIR REQUIREMENTS

The Individual and the Community 722
They Who Labor for the Community and Endeavor to Benefit Its People 722
The Leader of a Community 723
The King 729
Judgment and Judges 733
Taking Bribes and Showing Favor 737
Compromise [Arbitration] and Going Beyond the Letter of the Law 741
Courts and Judicial Procedure 742
Cities of Refuge 746
For the Public Weal 747
Widespread Trouble and the Community's Fast 749 Warfare 757

PART VI

CHAPTER ONE
THE WORLD AND ALL THAT IT HOLDS

The World 759
Heaven and the Luminaries 761
The Earth 764
Lightnings and Thunders, Clouds and Rains, Rainbows and Earthquakes 765
Fire and Wind 767
Seas and Rivers 769
Gold and Precious Stones 771
Grasses and Trees 771
Various Kinds of Creatures 773
Fowl 775
Reptiles and Creeping Things 776
Domesticated and Wild Animals 780
Travelers' Tales 784
Human Beings 786

CHAPTER TWO
MATTERS PERTAINING TO DIVINATION AND HEALING

The Influence of Constellations 789
Dreams 790
Destructive Forces That Afflict Mankind 792
Sorceries and Optical Illusion 794
Whispered Charms and Sundry Kinds of Healing 796
The Ways of the Amorites and Omens 803
The Evil Eye 805

CHAPTER THREE PARABLES, PROVERBS, AND SAYINGS

Parables 807

CHAPTER FOUR A MISCELLANY

Series of Matters Set Forth by Number 811
Sundry Matters 815

GLOSSARY 819
REFERENCES 822
Abbreviations of Tractates 822
Other Sources 822
INDEX OF NAMES AND SUBJECTS 827
INDEX OF BIBLICAL REFERENCES 885

PUBLISHER'S NOTE

William G. Braude, the distinguished translator of rabbinic literature and rabbi emeritus of Temple Beth El in Providence, Rhode Island, finished this translation shortly before his death in 1988. We regret that he did not live to see the publication of his labor of love.

This translation of Bialik and Ravnitzky's classic work is complete except for a subsection of one-line proverbial sayings in Part Six of the Hebrew original.

The Book of Legends/Sefer Ha-Aggadah is a compendium of rabbinic lore culled from many sources. The reader should bear in mind that many apparent inconsistencies result from the fact that the selections of Aggadah are taken from entirely distinct and separate sources. Thus the reader will encounter such anomalous situations as a paragraph about the death of R. Judah I the Patriarch (Part II, chap. 1, § 328) followed by a paragraph in which he is described as ill.

For some reason, there are occasional variant spellings of the same name (e.g., R. Bannai and R. Benaiah; R. Hoshaia and R. Oshaia; R. Zera and R. Ze'era). Bialik and Ravnitzky retained these variant spellings in deference to their sources, and they are retained in this translation as well.

Another feature that requires explanation is the presence of numerous "parallel passages"—stories that are repeated several times throughout the book. Bialik and Ravnitzky chose to repeat certain stories, parables, anecdotes, and proverbs which are relevant in more than one context in the overall thematic organization of the book. For example, the story of R. Zadok's fasting to save the Temple from destruction (Part I, chap. 10, § 2) also appears in the section entitled "The Deeds of the Sages" (Part II, chap. 11, § 26).

The parable of a vineyard grown wild, which is not razed because of the presence in it of a single rose-colored lily—Israel—included in "Israel and the Nations of the World" (Part III, chap. 1, § 15), replicates an earlier telling of the same parable to illustrate Israel's eagerness to hear God's word at Sinai (Part I, chap. 5, § 28).

These parallel passages are not necessarily rendered identically. Bialik and Ravnitzky frequently provided more than one version in Hebrew of an Aramaic passage. Some inconsistencies may have been accidental, but other variations reveal a clear intention: to show the range of possibilities in interpreting a text.

In this English version, translations of Scripture are generally based on the Jewish Publication Society's translation of the Masoretic text, The Holy Scriptures (1917). Other modern translations were consulted as well, and, in some instances, the translator provided his own translation of biblical verses.

The Hebrew term shene'emar, which typically heralds a direct quotation from the Bible, is generally translated by the phrase "as is said" or "as Scripture says." On occasion, a colon is substituted for the phrase. The Hebrew epithet for God, literally "the Holy One, blessed be He," is rendered as "the Holy One." R. Judah I the Patriarch is sometimes referred to simply as Rabbi, or our holy Rabbi; the title "Rabbi" is generally abbreviated as "R."

Phrases appearing in brackets throughout the text indicate the translator's interpolations for sense and comprehension. The translator also verified the source citations given by Bialik and Ravnitzky, and when necessary provided his own source citations for many passages.

The Publisher wishes to thank Beverly Colman and Professor Everett Fox for their help in editing and preparing the manuscript for publication.

To Rabbi Braude זי"ל we owe heartfelt gratitude for this living legacy.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Above all I am grateful to my wife, Pen, whose help and unwavering support enabled me to complete this work. My son, Benjamin Braude, dealt with countless matters to ensure its publication. Leon Nemoy, former editor of the Yale Judaica Series, read the entire manuscript, and his comments and suggestions are incorporated in notes throughout this translation. Brother Caedmon Holmes of the Portsmouth Abbey also read the manuscript, made numerous and valuable suggestions, and helped me verify the accuracy of source references. Professor Jakob J. Petuchowski of the Hebrew Union College helped me resolve many textual difficulties. Professor Edward Brookner of Boston University generously responded to numerous questions of style. Cynthia Agronik assisted in many ways the progress of the work. Elizabeth Homans faithfully typed and retyped the manuscript numerous times.

Special thanks go to my many dear friends who, during my stay at the Rhode Island Hospital and later the Verks Rehabilitation Center, read my translation aloud while I reread the Hebrew text to see if any word, line, or passage in the translation had been inadvertently omitted. For this, I am grateful to my sister, Dorothy Fuerst, my sons, Daniel and Joel Braude, and my friends, Abraham Adelman, Louis Astrachan, Rabbi Herman Blumberg, Paul Chernov, Samuel David, Samuel Eisenstadt, Herman Feinstein, Dr. Max Fershtman, Geraldine Foster, Leah Franks, Louis Gilbert, Zelda Gourse, Rabbi Jerome Gurland, Rabbi Jacob Handler, Rabbi Alvin Kaunfer, Seymour Krieger, Rabbi Saul Leeman, Abbot Lieberman, Bernard Margulis, Allan C. Metz, Dr. Samuel Pritzker, Sarah Rosenthal, Professor Albert Salzberg, Rabbi Lawrence Silverman, Pauly Strasmich, Herbert Wagner, and Dorothy Weiner.

Finally, I wish to thank the people of Temple Beth El, especially my colleague and successor, Rabbi Leslie Y. Gutterman, and president Carl Feldman for their support and encouragement.

William G. Braude

After completing the first draft of the translation of Sefer Ha-Aggadah, my father suffered a stroke in February of 1983 which left his intellect intact but his speech slurred and his body half paralyzed. He had been working day and night, for he had a foreboding of the affliction. As he was carried into the ambulance, he somehow managed to let us know that we must stuff into his case his worn-out copy of Sefer Ha-Aggadah and the sections of the translation he was then reviewing. Installed in the hospital with all the miracles of modern medicine around him, he quickly brought himself back to Bialik and Ravnitzky's world of the ancient rabbis. Within a day he started organizing a troupe of family, friends, visitors, patients, and anyone else who happened into his room, to read aloud his translation so he could check it against the original. Eventually, after months of rehabilitation, he recovered and returned home and, working with the constant support and assistance of my mother, was able to complete his final revisions. Throughout this labor against illness, his determination and dedication never flagged. What kept him going was the conviction that he was part of a tradition, ancient and yet living, of engagement with sacred writ. In each generation the sages had told and retold the stories of Jewish lore. At the beginning of this century, Bialik and Ravnitzky had made them more accessible by recasting them in modern Hebrew. Now my father strove to open this treasure to the English-speaking world. He drew sustenance from the hope that the ongoing tradition of Jewish legend, lore, and study of Scripture would attract and delight yet new generations of readers.

Benjamin Braude

NOTE ON TRANSLITERATION

The transliteration system of Hebrew and Aramaic words and names adopted in this volume is designed for the general reader. It follows fairly closely the pronunciation of modern spoken (Sephardic) Hebrew, with the exception that the letter het, which has a rather guttural sound, is not distinguished from heh—both are represented by the English h. Diacritical marks, such as those distinguishing the silent letters ayin from alef, have been omitted, except in cases where they are needed for pronunciation (as in Be'er instead of Beer) or to make a grammatical point.

Biblical names generally follow the usage found in conventional English Bible translations. On the other hand, the names of the rabbis are transcribed in a manner closer to their Hebrew pronunciation, and in general follow the usage found in the Encyclopaedia Judaica.

In all transliterated words, the letter a is to be pronounced as the a in father.

INTRODUCTION

BY DAVID STERN

In the first decade of the twentieth century, two leading representatives of the Hebrew renascence in Russia, Hayim Nahman Bialik and Yehoshua Hana Ravnitzky, commenced the creation of this massive compendium of Rabbinic legend and lore. It is telling indeed that Bialik, already recognized as the national poet of the Jewish people, and Ravnitzky, editor, journalist, and co-founder with Bialik of the prestigious Hebrew publishing house of Dvir, chose this project and this material to spearhead the revival of a Hebrew national ethos for their contemporaries. First published in Odessa in 1908–11, Sefer Ha-Aggadah (The Book of Legends) was reprinted numerous times in Israel after Bialik and Ravnitzky emigrated to the land of Israel. An instant classic, "an inheritance for all Jews everywhere," as one admirer wrote, Sefer Ha-Aggadah was more than just a charming collection of classical Jewish stories and sayings. It was, as many recognized immediately, a masterwork in its own right, a monument to the capacity of modern Jewish culture to assimilate and appropriate its classical heritage.

In the original Hebrew Introduction to the first edition of Sefer Ha-Aggadah, Bialik and Ravnitzky articulated the vision behind their work. Aggadah (pl. Aggadot), the traditional name for all the nonlegal teachings of the early sages of Rabbinic Judaism, from their homilies to their tales, was, Bialik and Ravnitzky wrote, "the principal literary form" of the Jewish people, the "classic expression of their spirit." The product of the creative powers of generations of rabbis, it was like "a beautiful palace" in which "the spirit and soul of the Jews permanently dwelled." Alas, in their own day, that palace had become a ruin; forsaken by all except for a few pedantic scholars and talentless popularizers, it resembled more "an ownerless field, an abandoned grove in which wild vegetation and aftergrowth increase and multiply on their own."

It was this ruined palace, this ownerless and abandoned field of classical Hebrew literature, that Bialik and Ravnitzky sought to restore to its original state of "pristine glory," as they wrote, and thereby to make this literature available to their contemporaries. The task was neither a simple nor an obvious one. Even in Bialik's time, Aggadah was among the more inaccessible branches of classical Jewish literature, surely the least structured, and the most inchoate. To make Aggadah comprehensible to a contemporary audience, Bialik and Ravnitzky faced numerous challenges, most of which arose from the very nature of the material they wished to present.

For one thing, Aggadah presented itself as an almost entirely unsystematized, unorganized body of materials of a truly bewildering variety. As the term was used by the rabbis, and as it continues to be employed by scholars today, Aggadah essentially designates all the traditions, statements, and beliefs in early Judaism that fall outside the bounds of the Halakhah, the system of Rabbinic law. The literary record of Jewish existence during the first seven centuries in the Common Era in the two main centers of Rabbinic culture—initially, the land of Israel, Roman Palestine; later, Babylonia—Aggadah touches upon virtually every conceivable aspect of human life, every subject and matter that drew the sages' attention or shaped their world. Its literary forms similarly range across the entire spectrum: from biblical exegeses and extra-biblical legends—stories elaborating upon biblical characters and episodes in their careers not found in the Bible itself—to fully developed sermons that may once have been delivered in ancient synagogues, to snippets of popular folklore, anecdotes about the sages' own lives and about their contemporary history, and, not least of all, the entire body of Rabbinic thought—every belief held by the sages, from their theological ideas about God to their views on the creation, the reasons for the commandments, and much material that some would call popular religion and others superstition—namely, topics like magic, angelology, demonology, folk medicine, the sciences of amulets, secret charms, astrology, and so on.

To be sure, the richness of Aggadah's contents has always been a major source of its interest; if nothing else, it shows how fully involved the Rabbinic sages were in every imaginable facet of their world. But for a modern reader, the diversity of the material, its sheer heterogeneity, could also be overwhelming, and especially so on account of the way Aggadah tends to be preserved and recorded in Rabbinic literature. In its beginnings an oral tradition passed down from generation to generation—the word Aggadah itself literally means "that which is told"—its various strands were committed to writing only at a time far removed from their origins. As a result, it is often difficult to date an Aggadah or to understand the context in which it was created or its original meaning. The same aggadic story or saying, like many types of oral literature, is frequently preserved in multiple versions that differ from one another significantly, and there is often little indication in the sources as to which one is more authentic.

Moreover, when the various traditions were finally written down, they were not preserved for posterity in collections devoted specifically to Aggadah. Instead, they were recorded in seemingly haphazard fashion throughout the breadth of Rabbinic literature, in the numerous anthologies devoted to Midrash, biblical commentary, and in the two massive editions of the Talmud, one compiled in the land of Israel and the other in Babylonia. And even within these classical compilations, Aggadah was typically not preserved as generically independent or self-standing material. Rather, most Aggadot typically appear within the context of a more complex literary form or in the course of a lengthier, extended discussion. They can be found in a complicated biblical exegesis, a précis of a sermon or lecture, or even as part of a legal debate, as a precedent for one opinion's view, or as an exemplum, a story used to illustrate how a certain commandment was to be performed or the great rewards that observance will bring to the person who piously performs a particular religious deed.

Finally—this was the greatest challenge of all posed to a modern audience—the vast part of Aggadah, as preserved in Rabbinic literature, is recorded in a style that is typically fragmentary and elusive and written in a language so condensed and given to allusion that, to the uninitiated reader, it is sometimes barely intelligible and nearly always difficult to appreciate in any profound or sensitive way without some help or guidance from the outside. Futhermore, for many of Bialik's contemporaries, the language of Rabbinic Hebrew itself—different from both biblical Hebrew and the new modern Hebrew that was then in the process of being born—was an obstacle on account of both its unfamiliar expressions and its inclusion of numerous Greek and Latin loanwords that even scholars today have difficulty deciphering. And last of all, a large part of Aggadah is composed not in Hebrew but in Aramaic, a closely related but distinct Semitic language that, in one or another of its dialects, was the lingua franca, the common language, of Jews living in both Palestine and Babylonia in late antiquity. Even an adept Hebraist would find the Aramaic hard to comprehend unless he was already familiar with Rabbinic literature and its idioms.

In resolving these difficulties, the rabbis themselves were not of much help. In general, they were not interested in either systematizing or conceptualizing their thoughts, or in otherwise facilitating their readers' way through the maze of Rabbinic literature. The rabbis preferred to exemplify the quality of an idea through a well-chosen simile or a memorable anecdote rather than theorize about its meaning or explicate it discursively. Consider the term Aggadah itself. In not a single place, in all of Rabbinic literature, do the rabbis ever offer a true definition of Aggadah or of its significance as a literary genre. Rather, when they discuss Aggadah, they tend to do it as follows:

> "Manna . . . was like coriander seed, white" (Exod. 16:31) . . . . Some sages say that, like manna [which drew the heart of a hungry man], Aggadah draws a man's heart [to Torah], even as water [draws the heart of a thirsty man].
>
> "The delights of the sons of men" (Eccles. 2:8). These are the Aggadot, which give delight to [the study of] Scripture.
>
> "His lips are as lilies" (Song 5:13). These are the Aggadot [whose fragrance is like that of lilies].
>
> —(The Book of Legends/Sefer Ha-Aggadah, p. 3)

These passages, all formulated in the guise of biblical interpretations or Midrashim, as though the verses in Scripture were originally meant to refer to Aggadah, suggest its feel—the taste, the smell, the almost tactile seductiveness of Aggadah. But they hardly define the term or its genre. What makes them memorable is the cleverness of their exegeses, their use of startling similes derived from Scripture to convey the delights and attractions of Aggadah.

Similarly, when the rabbis wished to describe the importance of the parable, one of their favorite literary forms, they chose to do so by telling a parable about parables:

> Do not let the parable appear of little worth to you. Through a parable a man can fathom words of Torah. Consider the king who has lost a gold coin or a precious pearl in his house. May he not find it by the light of a wick worth no more than an issar [a Roman penny]? Likewise do not let the parable appear of little worth to you. By its light a man may fathom words of Torah. (SA, p. 3)

For the rabbis, the value of the parable, like that of Aggadah in general, lay in its didactic function, its use as a medium for understanding Torah, God's Law. Yet even this characterization of the parable's use, of its ideological function (for what the rabbis meant by Torah was their understanding of Torah, that is, the worldview of Rabbinic Judaism), never tells us what the parable is or why the rabbis so loved to use it. All it tells us is what a parable is like: a valuable thing but worth no more than a penny!

To be sure, this last feature, the rabbis' acute sense of paradox, along with their lack of concern with setting out their views or ideas systematically, is also a major source of Aggadah's charm. Indeed, a large part of its rhetorical and literary art lies in its ability effortlessly to communicate a decidedly abstract and difficult idea through a concrete example, a sensuous image or memorable word-picture rather than through a more precise but prosaic formulation. And this art must surely have been fully appreciated by Bialik, the poet. But to the reader unfamiliar with Aggadah's obscure language and intimidated by the massive edifice of Rabbinic discourse, the lyrical quality of Aggadah with its frequently associative, rather than logical, structures of thought, could pose a formidable obstacle to its comprehension.

These were some of the challenges that Bialik and Ravnitzky faced in compiling Sefer Ha-Aggadah—challenges that arose from the very nature of Aggadah itself. To meet and surmount them, Bialik and Ravnitzky spent three years combing through the entirety of Rabbinic literature in order to select what appeared to them "the best" of aggadic tradition—best, that is, in their judgment, which, though in general highly reliable, certainly reflected the biases of their age. In making their selection, the two editors followed several guidelines. When there existed multiple versions of the same Aggadah, they chose the one that seemed to them most representative (preferring, in general, the versions found in the Babylonian Talmud, which, though probably the latest in date and hence the least original, Bialik and Ravnitzky selected because they were the best known). If the two halves of what seemed to them a single Aggadah were found in separate sources, they combined them. When the aggadic passages selected were in Aramaic, or if they contained Aramaic sections, they faithfully translated them into a contemporary Hebrew that managed to blend easily into the Rabbinic Hebrew of the remainder of the texts; from the second edition on, they also vocalized the text with grammatical precision. And, last of all, they wrote brief but extremely helpful glosses to nearly the entire book, which are incorporated into this translation.

Finally the greatest contribution of Bialik and Ravnitzky was the thematic organization of the material they collected. In their own minds, the disorderliness of Aggadah, its hapless dispersion throughout Rabbinic literature, was its greatest failing. "Not every person," they wrote in their introduction, "is willing or able to rummage through the piles and piles in [these Rabbinic] works, heaped up through the duration of so many generations as tall as mountains—just in order to find pearls beneath them! . . . Contemporary man . . . [is] accustomed to seek order, method, and the possibility of completeness in his study."

To assist in the attainment of such completeness, Bialik and Ravnitzky divided the Aggadot into six main sections and numerous subsections. Parts One and Two are the lengthiest and most historical in nature: they encompass the history of the world from creation through the destruction of the Second Temple in the year 70 C.E., and the lives of the Rabbinic sages themselves. The other four main sections are organized topically: Part Three deals with Aggadot relating to the Jewish people, the land of Israel, the Hebrew language, Torah, and the redemption; Part Four with God and Good and Evil; Part Five with traditions pertaining to the human being's place in the world; and Part Six, the final section, is a miscellany of Aggadot dealing with the world, folk medicine, popular religion (demons, the evil eye, magic), and selected proverbs and folk sayings.

It is difficult to overestimate the conceptual achievement of this job of organization, or the sheer work that Bialik and Ravnitzky invested in it; indeed, the two men preferred to think of themselves as the mesadrim, the "organizers" or "arrangers" of Aggadah, rather than as its editors. But for Bialik in particular the project was more than just an intellectual task. The "structured arrangement" of the completed work, Sefer Ha-Aggadah—in Bialik's own words, "fragments of stones . . . joined into layers, layers into walls, and walls into a complete fortress, a fortress into which whoever enters finds everything arranged and installed in its proper place"—was a means to a greater end. For this completed fortress, he wrote, would ultimately allow the reader to "grasp finally that worldview and perspective on life in whose spirit the Aggadah was originally created, an entity unique to the Jewish people." Aggadah, in other words, was the key to Jewish uniqueness, and this anthology a means for revealing that uniqueness once again.

For Bialik, this project of reconstruction, of gathering and rearranging the dispersed fragments of Aggadah, of restoring the ruined palace to its original glory, was in fact a trope, a figure in his mind for the reconstruction, the restoration, of the Jewish people themselves. Like the fragments of Aggadah in Rabbinic literature, the Jews, too, were scattered, dispersed among the nations; they, too, could recapture their special glory, their singular worldview and perspective on life, only by being reassembled and reconstituted in their homeland, their "palace."

Yet restoration to a geographical homeland alone was not enough. The danger, as Bialik and other cultural Zionists like him saw it, was that, though the Zionist movement might succeed in physically restoring the Jews to their homeland, the spiritual regeneration of the Jewish people, the restoration of the Jewish ethos, would be overlooked and forgotten in the process. Important as the political restoration was, it was only through an equivalent cultural rehabilitation that the Jewish people would truly be reconstituted and their future existence guaranteed. And this rehabilitation was to be achieved partly through the recovery of the national literary past. Sefer Ha-Aggadah was, in fact, the foundation of a larger project that Bialik called kinus, the "ingathering" of the classical Jewish literary heritage, which, he hoped, would become a kind of national library. For Bialik was certain that the national genius resided in that literary past and that only by recovering it could the future promise of that genius be ensured; indeed, it was the classical literature of the Jews, and the literature of Aggadah especially, that most fully expressed the national genius.

This last estimation was, in a sense, axiomatic for Bialik. But there are additional reasons that may explain why the Aggadah of the rabbis in particular held such a deep attraction for him. For one thing, he may very well have felt a deep parallel between the historical predicament of his own age and that of the rabbis. And from that perspective, Aggadah may have seemed to Bialik an exemplary response, an instance of Jewish creativity at its most intense. Hence the urgency of Bialik's belief not only that his contemporaries needed to familiarize themselves with Aggadah as an important chapter in the history of Jewish culture but also that they needed to absorb and assimilate its meaning: this would be key to their own capacity for responding to the challenges of their contemporary historical predicament.

This last point requires some words of explanation. Both Aggadah and its parent, Rabbinic Judaism, were born out of a complex of historical factors that include some of the most productive and most catastrophic moments in all of Jewish history. Rabbinic Judaism, the religious system eventually created by the rabbis, originated in the period of the Second Temple, in the last centuries before the Common Era. During this period, partly under the impact of the confrontation of the biblical heritage of Israel with that of the Hellenistic world—in the early fourth century B.C.E. the land of Israel first came under the rule of Alexander the Great's empire—the religion of Israel, whose observance had previously centered on the Temple and its sacrificial cult, began to shift to a new type of worship that was more egalitarian, extending to all Jews the kinds of religious piety and obligation that had formerly been the prerogatives of the priestly class alone, and more intellectual in tenor. The latter shift can be seen in the emergence of the scribe, later the Pharisee, a religious figure who anticipated the Rabbinic sage, and it was accompanied by a new emphasis on study—specifically, study of the Bible, God's revealed Law—as a religious activity in its own right, as a medium for discovering God's will in the present time through the words of Scripture. This latter tendency eventually came to its fullest fruition in Rabbinic Judaism both in midrashic interpretation and in the Talmud's studious explication of Halakhah.

These revolutionary changes in Judaism were immanent developments; if nothing else had happened in history during their course, they would have continued from their own impetus and still would have radically altered the face of Judaism as a religion. But these changes were only hastened and exacerbated by contemporary historical events. First, in 70 C.E., the Second Temple was destroyed, a national tragedy that climaxed a three-year-long war waged by the Jews of Palestine against their Roman rulers. Then, some sixty-five years later, there was a second military defeat, that of the Bar Kokhba Rebellion, a last aborted attempt at regaining national independence.

Both the destruction of the Temple and the calamitous Bar Kokhba Rebellion were watersheds in the history of Rabbinic Judaism. The former was the immediate cause of immense religious despair. With the Temple's destruction, the main avenue of worship in Israel, the offering of sacrifices, along with many other religious practices and observances connected to the Temple cult, were all rendered impossible. How could Jews now worship God? This was a question asked by many, and the feelings of desperation and hopelessness that it engendered for the future were only deepened by an implicit and equally pressing question: Was the destruction an unequivocal sign that God had finally decided to reject Israel as His chosen people? The Bar Kokhba Rebellion, its defeat even bloodier and more devastating than that of the earlier war, drove home a second message only hinted at by the destruction: It proved to the Jews, once and for all, that there would be no quick deliverance from their state of political subjection to the Romans, no miraculous resolution to their spiritual dilemma.

The achievement of the rabbis in the aftermath of the two catastrophes was to respond to their crises on the political, social, and religious planes by remaking Judaism. In part, they did this by turning Judaism into a portable possession. They recentered Judaism, shifting its forms of worship from a particular place, a special class of religious functionaries, and a specific type of worship dependent upon both that place and its functionaries (the Temple, the priests, and the Temple cult) to a complex of newly important institutions—the synagogue, Torah-study, communal worship, Halakhah in all its details, and so on—that could more readily be transported and adapted to changing geographical locations and historical situations.

Even more crucially, however, the rabbis offered a reinterpretation—a transvaluation, as it were—of the entire temporal and spatial framework in which the success and failure of Jewish existence had previously been gauged. No longer, in their view, was the truth of Judaism to be measured by the rules of conventional history, by the external appearance of the Jewish national condition. Yes, the Jews would again be returned to a politically independent homeland, in the time of the future redemption. And yes, the kingdom of David would be restored then, too; and the Temple rebuilt. But in the meantime, that is to say, for the rest of human history, Jewish existence would take place in a more inner-directed realm. And its success and failure would be counted in the coinage of that realm: mastery of Torah and devotion to Halakhah. In this way, the rabbis made the Jews' personal spiritual and communal life take the place, in effect, of a national political existence. And so, too, they transferred the meaning of Jewish existence to a realm whose conditions they could determine, whose fate and destiny they could control.

It is this transformation, this remaking of Judaism, that Aggadah records. In addition, though, Aggadah also embodies the process of remaking in its own creations—in its anecdotes about the sages and their careers, in its pseudohistorical accounts, and especially in its retellings and elaborations of the biblical past. At the heart of the latter lies Midrash, the name for the Rabbinic mode of Scriptural study. To appreciate Midrash it is crucial to understand that, for the rabbis, the Bible was not only Torah, the divine source for Israel's Law and its history. The words of the Torah, its text, were also the lens, the prism, through which the sages viewed their own world. The Torah gave them the terms of reference in which they experienced their daily lives, the vocabulary through which they articulated their every feeling and thought. When they sought knowledge, any kind of knowledge, they sought it first in Torah. And when they sought the meaning of Torah itself or, as was the case more frequently, the meaning of a particular verse or phrase in the Torah—or even, more precisely, the meaning*fulness* of that verse or phrase—they would search after it, first, in themselves, in their own experiences and in what they knew to be true. If Scripture could not lie, neither could it be false or contradictory to the rabbis' own selves and to their knowledge, their sense of the world and of their place in it.

The collapsing of time and history that is so characteristic of Midrash—as when the rabbis unselfconsciously portray figures from the distant past like the patriarchs in their own image—should not be viewed as a matter of naïve anachronizing on the rabbis' part or as self-serving exploitation of Scripture for their own ends. Rather, its meaning is a symbolic one. By bringing their own experiences to the interpretation of the words of Torah, and taking back from the Torah the language that allowed them to articulate their own experiences, the rabbis created a kind of mythical, timeless realm removed from the travails and injustices of contemporary history. In this realm, the beliefs they valued, the lives they wished to live, their hopes, their dreams, even their moments of anguish, could take shape, unimpeded by hostile forces, and be realized, however complexly so. And from this mythical, legendary realm, they could also learn how to live in this imperfect world. Precisely because the rabbis' beloved ancestors, the patriarchs, had faced the same dilemmas and challenges as the rabbis themselves and overcome them, or so the rabbis' aggadic retelling of the biblical narrative asserted, they could serve as such perfect examples for their descendants.

Through this midrashic model the rabbis found the creativity, the national genius, to remake Judaism and to overcome the crises of their time. And this was the model, too, that Bialik sought by recovering Aggadah so as to enable the remaking of Judaism in his own time, in the face of its own crises. Of all these, the greatest crisis, the one Bialik himself had personally suffered through most terribly, was the loss of faith, the collapse of the traditional structures and tenets of Jewish belief, the erosion of the security of existence that those religious structures and tenets had previously ensured. If traditional faith could not be recovered, a surrogate for it nonetheless had to be found, and it was such a surrogate that Bialik, somewhat paradoxically perhaps, looked for in the cultural heritage epitomized by Aggadah. In a poem entitled "Before the Bookcase" (Lifnei Aron Hasefarim, 1910), as the literary critic Dan Miron has suggested, Bialik expressed his deep ambivalence toward the project of Sefer Ha-Aggadah and the years of his life he had devoted to it. Bialik described his loss of faith figuratively, through the image of a necklace of black pearls whose string had suddenly given way. By collecting the scattered pearls of Aggadah and restringing them to form the necklacelike compilation of Sefer Ha-Aggadah, he was in a deep sense trying to reconstruct, recover, something of his lost faith.

Yet here lay an important difference between the modern poet and the ancient rabbis. For the rabbis, the study of Aggadah had been an intrinsically religious pursuit, a path to worshiping God. "If you wish to know Him by whose word the world came into being, study Aggadah; you will thereby come to know the Holy One, blessed be He, and hold fast to His ways," a famous Rabbinic statement declares (SA, p. 3). In his introduction to Sefer Ha-Aggadah, Bialik paraphrased this saying as follows: "Whoever wishes to know the nation of Israel . . . let him 'go to the Aggadah' . . ." In place of the knowledge of God, Aggadah, for Bialik, held the knowledge of the nation of Israel, the secret of the Jewish genius, of the national ethos. Or to put the same point somewhat differently: The recovery of a national ethos had become for cultural Zionists like Bialik a kind of religious calling, a sacred vocation. It was not merely that in Aggadah lay the secret to recovering the national ethos. Because it was literature—"the principal literary form" of the Jewish people, the "classic expression of their spirit"—Aggadah was the national genius.

Bialik's identification of Aggadah as "literature" was a decidedly Romantic idea. While he did not view Aggadah as real folklore, as did some of his contemporaries, Bialik did seem to believe that the fragments of Aggadah in Rabbinic literature preserved what had once been an epic literature of the Jewish people. Part of the purpose of Sefer Ha-Aggadah was to recover that epic. Although he and Ravnitzky claimed in their introduction not to have "reworked" the form of the Aggadah, they did admit to having made a few alterations in the name of "modesty." In fact, they made numerous unacknowledged revisions whose purpose was to make Aggadah more like their idea of literature.

Thus, in the case of some narrative Aggadot, they eliminated homiletical digressions that distracted from the plot. More seriously, they tried to wrest Aggadot from their midrashic, exegetical settings, which, to Bialik, seemed particularly cloying, all too reminiscent of the beit midrash, the dusty, suffocating house of study, the home of traditional piety, from which he had fled as a youth. And finally, he and Ravnitzky joined and conflated separate Aggadot into lengthier, more continuous narratives in order to make their "epic" character more recognizable. In some cases, this was not particularly objectionable, merely a matter of attaching together exegetically discrete units that were, however, all of a piece. In other cases, though, as the Israeli scholar Joseph Heinemann has shown in a particularly brilliant study of Sefer Ha-Aggadah, this tendency resulted in the creation of absolutely new narratives, some of which were quite brilliant but were the inventions of Bialik and Ravnitzky, not the rabbis. It was more than slightly ironic that, precisely in order to recover Aggadah, Bialik and Ravnitzky found themselves reworking the very tradition they wished to save.

And yet, even with these criticisms, the achievement of Sefer Ha-Aggadah is hardly diminished. Bialik and Ravnitzky were not the only ones in their generation to concern themselves with recovering Aggadah. Indeed, the project was, in a sense, the project of their generation. The same period that witnessed the publication of Sefer Ha-Aggadah saw the appearance of two other important works devoted to Aggadah, Louis Ginzberg's The Legends of the Jews and Micah Yosef (bin Gorion) Berdichevsky's Mimekor Yisrael. The difference between these works and Sefer Ha-Aggadah is revealing. Berdichevsky was primarily interested in recovering Aggadah as folklore; although he published the separate versions of the same Aggadah if they were sufficiently different, he limited himself to what he considered folkloric material; while his anthology extended to include folklore far beyond the Rabbinic period, he did not include much Aggadah that is in Sefer Ha-Aggadah because he did not consider it folklore. In contrast, Ginzberg's work was limited to Rabbinic elaborations of the biblical narrative. A monument to its author's scholarly erudition, indeed one of the great monuments of Jewish scholarship in this century, The Legends of the Jews was not, however, a genuine anthology. Ginzberg did not print the rabbis' own Aggadot; he paraphrased and retold them in his own somewhat mannered voice and in a continuous narrative that was incomparably further from the style of aggadic narration than any revision that Bialik and Ravnitzky ventured.

For all their subtle revisions, Bialik and Ravnitzky preserved the rabbis' own voices; even when they altered the details of an Aggadah, they treated their material with a tact and sensitivity that are hard to fault. Indeed, it may even be suggested that, in editing the Aggadot, Bialik and Ravnitzky were acting in the spirit of Aggadah itself. For the rabbis, too, had altered and adapted many Aggadot that they received from earlier hands in the course of handing them on to their own audiences. The history of Aggadah is in large part the story of such adaptations and transformations. It is the history of tradition: the reshaping of the past precisely in order to make it capable of transmission to a future generation. In this sense, when they turned Aggadah into literature in order to make it available to their contemporaries, Bialik and Ravnitzky were acting in the spirit of the very tradition they believed would revitalize the Jewish ethos for their time. And this no doubt is one reason why Sefer Ha-Aggadah remains for our time as much as it was for that of Bialik and Ravnitzky the incomparable treasury that it is.

THE BOOK OF LEGENDS

Sefer Ha-Aggadah

PART I

CHAPTER ONE

PROEM

The Meaning of Aggadah and of the Parable

1. Those who look for Scripture's inherent meaning say: If you wish to know Him by whose word the world came into being, study [Scripture's homiletical interpretations in the] Aggadah; you will thereby come to know the Holy One, blessed be He, and hold fast to His ways.[1]

2. Do not let the parable appear of little worth to you. Through a parable, a man can fathom words of Torah. Consider the king who has lost a gold coin or a precious pearl in his house. May he not find it by the light of a wick worth no more than an issar? Likewise, do not let the parable appear of little worth to you. By its light, a man may fathom words of Torah.[2]

3. "A further word: Because Koheleth[3] was a sage, he continued to instruct the people. He listened to and tested the soundness of many parables" (Eccles. 12:9). R. Nahman said: What Solomon did may be understood by the parable of a great palace which had many hallways, so that whoever entered it got lost. What did a clever man do? He took a coil of reedgrass, tied it to an entrance, went in unwinding the coil, and came out rewinding the coil. Then everybody proceeded to go in and come out using such a coil. Likewise, until Solomon appeared, no man could properly grasp words of Torah; but after Solomon appeared, all men could comprehend Torah's words.

Another example: What Solomon did may be understood by the parable of a thicket of reeds so dense that no man dared enter. Whoever entered it got lost. What did a clever man do? He took a sickle, cut down a few reeds, and went in a step, cut down a few more reeds, and went in farther; and so on, until finally he went all the way in by the path he had cut and returned by the same path. Thereafter, everybody proceeded to enter and leave by that path. Such was the way of Solomon.

R. Yose said: What Solomon did may be understood by the parable of a large basket full of fruit. Since the basket had no handles, it could not be moved about until a clever man came and made handles for it, so that it could be carried by the handles. So, too, until Solomon appeared, no man could properly grasp words of Torah; but after Solomon appeared, everyone began to comprehend Torah. R. Shela said: Solomon's role reminds us of a large cruse that was full of boiling water and had no handle which it could be carried about. Then a man came and made a handle for it by which it could be carried. R. Hanina said: Solomon's role reminds us of an exceedingly deep well full of water that was cold, sweet, and wholesome. But no creature could get a drink out of it until a man came and tied rope to rope and cord to cord, drew water from it, and drank; then everyone began to draw and drink. So, too, proceeding from one word to another, from one parable to another, Solomon penetrated to the hidden meaning of Torah.[4]

4. Rich in possessions and rich in popular acclaim—such is the master of Haggadot.[5]

5. "A man to whom God giveth riches . . . yet God giveth him not the power to decide what thereof to eat" (Eccles. 6:2)—such a one is the master of Aggadah, for he does not have the power to prohibit or to permit, to declare unclean or to declare clean.[6]

6. "Because they regard not the works of the Lord, nor the operation of His hands" (Ps. 28:5). This applies, according to R. Joshua ben Levi, to men who have no regard for Aggadot.[7]

7. "Their words to the world's uttermost ends" (Ps. 19:5). This refers to the study of Aggadot, which its master tellers hallow the Holy One's great Name to the ends of the world.[8]

8. "Manna . . . was like coriander (gad) seed, white (lavan)" (Exod. 16:31). Some sages—who derive gad from the verb ngd, "to draw," and read libban, "their heart," for lavan—say that, like manna [which drew the heart of a hungry man], Aggadah draws a man's heart [to Torah], even as water [draws the heart of a thirsty man].[9]

9. "The delights of the sons of men" (Eccles. 2:8). These are the Aggadot, which give delight to [the study of] Scripture.[10]

10. "His lips are as lilies" (Song 5:13). These are the Aggadot [whose fragrance is like that of lilies].[11]

11. "And wilt do that which is right in thine eyes" (Exod. 15:26)—heed, that is, the exemplary Aggadot, which [unlike Halakhot] are readily understood and deemed right by all men.[12]

---

1. Sif Deut., §49.
2. Song R. 1:1, §8.
3. Solomon is said to have been Koheleth, the author of Ecclesiastes.
4. Song R. 1:1, §8; Gen. R. 12:1, 93:4; Eccles. 2:11, §1.
5. He expounds to large and receptive audiences. B. BB 145b.
6. P. Hor 3:5, 48c.
7. MTeh 28:5.
8. TdE, ed. Friedmann p. 11 (JPS, p. 61); Yalkut, Ps., §672.
9. B. Yoma 75b.
10. Eccles. R. 2:8, §1.
11. Yalkut, Song, §991.
12. Mek, Be-shallah, Va-yassa, 1.

12. As certain as a formal covenant is the assurance that he who studies Aggadah from a book will not soon forget it.[1]

The Meaning of Aggadah and Halakhah

13. "My teaching shall drop as the rain" (Deut. 32:2). Even as one rain falling on various trees gives to each a special savor in keeping with its species—to the vine the savor of grapes, to the olive tree the savor of olives, to the fig tree the savor of figs—so the words of Torah are one, yet within them are Scripture and Mishnah, Halakhot and Aggadot.[2]

14. "It is not an empty thing even if it seems so to you" (Deut. 32:47):[3] although matter that you say is empty may seem empty to you, it is, in truth, your life and the light and length of your days. So that you should not say, "I have studied Halakhot—that is enough," Scripture asserts, "You shall be mindful of this entire instruction" (Deut. 11:22)—the instruction in its entirety: learn Midrash,[4] as well as Halakhot and Aggadot. In this connection, Scripture also says, "Man doth not live by bread alone" (Deut. 8:3)—by Midrash—"but by every thing that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord doth man live" (ibid.), by both Halakhot and Aggadot.[5]

15. "As banks (migdelot) of sweet herbs" (Song 5:13). R. Tanhuma said: Just as the spicemaker's casket (migdelot) is full of all kinds of spices, so should a scholar be full of Scripture, Mishnah and Talmud, Halakhot and Aggadot.[6]

16. R. Eleazar ben Shammua said: Three types of disciples of the wise are exemplified by a hewn stone [in a wall], a cornerstone, and a polished stone [in a massive pier].

What disciple is like a hewn stone [in a wall]? The one who has studied only Midrash, so that when a colleague comes to him and asks about Midrash, he can reply. He is like a hewn stone [in a wall], which has only one side exposed.

What disciple is like a cornerstone? The one who has studied Midrash and Halakhot, so that when a colleague comes to him and asks about Midrash, he can reply; about Halakhot, he can reply. He is like a cornerstone, which has two sides exposed.

What disciple is like a polished stone [in a massive pier]? The one who has studied Midrash, Halakhot, Aggadot, and Toseftot, so that when a colleague comes to him and asks about Midrash, he can reply; about Halakhot, he can reply; about Toseftot, he can reply; about Aggadot, he can reply. He is like a polished stone [in a massive pier], which has all four sides exposed.[7]

17. "He meteth out the water [of Torah] by measure (Job 28:25). R. Yudan said in the name of R. Samuel: Even words of Torah—Scripture, Mishnah, Talmud, Halakhot, and Aggadah—that were given in great abundance] from above were meted out in different measures, so that one man may have a capacity only for Scripture, another only for Mishnah, another only for Talmud, and still another only for Aggadah; yet, now and then, there is a man who has the capacity for all of Torah.[8]

18. R. Simlai came to R. Jonathan with a request: Teach me Aggadah.[9] R. Jonathan answered: I hold to a tradition from my forebears not to teach Aggadah to anyone from Babylonia or from southern Israel, because such persons are arrogant and know little of Torah[10]—and you are both a native of Nehardea [in Babylonia] and a resident of the south.[11]

19. "The Lord spoke with you face (panim) to face (panim)" (Deut. 5:4). The first panim, being a plural [literally, "faces"],[12] implies at least two faces, and the second panim implies at least two more faces. Thus a total of four faces, referring respectively to Scripture, Mishnah, Talmud, and Aggadot: an awestricken face for Scripture, an equanimous face for Mishnah,[13] a friendly face for Talmud, and a joyous face for Aggadah.[14]

20. "Sustain me with ashishot" (Song 2:5)[15] that is, with Halakhot, laws, which are closely reasoned and precisely expressed (meushashot). "Refresh me with apples" (ibid.)—with Haggadot, whose fragrance and taste are like those of apples.

[In another comment], the words usually read, "I am lovesick" (Song 2:5), are read, "Because I am sickly, I require love." When a man is well, he can eat anything he gets; but when he becomes sick, he wants only delicate foods: "Sustain me with delicacies.[16] Hence R. Isaac said: Formerly, when people were [well], familiar with the main outlines of Torah, they were eager to listen to a matter in Mishnah, in Halakhah, or in Talmud. But now that people are [not well], not familiar with the main outlines of Torah, they are willing to listen only to a passage in Scripture or a theme in Aggadah [delicacies].[17]

"But I yearn for love" (Song 2:5)[18] R. Levi said:

---

1. P. Ber 5:1, 9a.
2. Sif Deut., §206.
3. JV: "It is not an empty thing for you."
4. Sifra and Sifre. So R. Hillel, as quoted by Meir Friedmann.
5. Sif Deut., § 48.
6. Song R. 5:13, §1.
7. ARN p. 28.
8. Lev. R. 15:2.
9. Proper interpretation of Scripture.
10. And therefore twist Scripture to suit themselves or simply ridicule it.
11. P. Pes 5:3, 32a.
12. The Hebrew word for "face" is panim, a plural that has no singular form.
13. Because the Mishnah is regulatory and does not involve discussion and reasoning.
14. Sof 16; PRKM 12:25.
15. JV: "with dainties."
16. Ibid.
17. Or: In former times, everyone knew God's law [Torah] and therefore was interested in Mishnah and Talmud [which interpret and carry forward Torah]; nowadays, people are ignorant of law [Torah] and want to hear only scriptural lessons and homilies on them. So Leon Nemoy (former editor of the Yale Judaica Series).
18. JV: "For I am lovesick." But hlh ("to be sick") can also mean "to yearn."

Formerly, when there was money enough to live on, people were strong enough to study a topic in Mishnah or a topic in Talmud; but now that there is not enough money to live on, and at the same time we are made to suffer from apprehension [by the kingdoms], a man yearns only for words of blessing and comfort.[1]

21. R. Abbahu and R. Hiyya bar Abba happened to come to a certain place where R. Abbahu lectured on Aggadah while R. Hiyya bar Abba lectured on Halakhah. All the people left R. Hiyya bar Abba and went to hear R. Abbahu, so that R. Hiyya bar Abba was greatly upset. To comfort him, R. Abbahu said: May I tell you a parable to illustrate what each of us represents? Two men came to a certain city, one to sell precious stones and pearls, and the other to sell different kinds of [cheap] notions. To whom will people run? Will they not run to him who sells the different kinds of notions:[2]

22. The verse usually read, "The rich man is wise in his own eyes; but the poor man that hath understanding searcheth him through" (Prov. 28:11), R. Samuel son of R. Yose son of R. Bun read differently, taking it to imply; "The man wise in comprehension of Gemara may in his own eyes appear to be rich; but he who understands Aggadah may, through his small change, outdo him."[3] [R. Samuel's reading of the verse can be illustrated by] the parable of two men who come into a city—one with gold bars and the other with small change. The man with gold bars cannot use them to pay for his daily needs [and may starve to death], while the man with small change can easily spend it and keep alive.[4]

23. When R. Ammi and R. Assi sat before R. Isaac Nappaha, one said, "Will the master please lecture on Halakhah?" while the other said, "Will the master please discourse on Aggadah?" When R. Isaac started on a theme of Aggadah, the one did not let him go on; and when he started on a theme of Halakhah, the other did not let him go on. So R. Isaac said, I will tell you a parable to illustrate my plight. A man had two wives, one young and the other of advanced years. The younger one used to pluck out his white hair, while the older one used to pluck out his black hair—in the end he became quite bald![5]

24. "Every prop of food" (Isa. 3:1)—these are the masters of Talmud;[6] "and every stay of water" (ibid.)—these are the masters of Aggadah, who draw men's hearts with Aggadah as easily as one draws water from a well.[7]

25. The words "of the dew of heaven" (Gen. 27:28) apply to Scripture;[8] "and of the fat places of the earth" to Mishnah;[9] "new grain" (ibid.) to Talmud; "and wine" (ibid.) to Aggadah.[10]

26. The words "kidney-fat of wheat" (Deut. 32:14) apply to Halakhot, which are the essence of Torah; and the words "of the blood of the grape thou drankest foaming wine" (ibid.) apply to Aggadot, which, like wine, draw a man's heart.[11]

27. The words "They shall bring to life new grain" (Hos. 14:8) apply to Talmud; and the words "shall blossom as the vine" (ibid.) apply to Aggadah.[12]

---

1. Song R. 2:5, §1; Sof 16.
2. B. Sot 40a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
3. Apparently R. Samuel associates dal ("poor") with "reduced to little, handing out small change"; and hkr ("search through") with bsr ("despise," as in Targum, ad loc.)—hence, "worst," "defeat" "outdo."
4. P. Hor 3:5, 49c.
5. B. BK 60b.
6. Their teachings are as essential as bread.
7. B. Hag 14a.
8. Like the dew, it came from heaven.
9. Apparently a play on mi-shemane ("fat places") and Mishnah.
10. Gen. R. 66:3.
11. Sif Deut., §317.
12. Lev. R. 1:2.

CHAPTER TWO

THE WORK OF CREATION AND THE FIRST GENERATIONS

The Creation of the World

1. Quoting the verse "Inquire now concerning the days past" (Deut. 4:32), [1] the sages said: These words might be taken to imply that one is allowed to inquire concerning the entire pre-creation period which is "past." Hence Scripture goes on to allow inquiry only "since the day that God created man upon the earth" (ibid.). But these words might be taken to imply that one is also not allowed to inquire concerning the six days of creation [that preceded the making of man]; therefore Scripture extends the time when inquiry is allowed to "the [six] days past, which were [immediately] before thee" (ibid.). Since Scripture's extending the range of inquiry might be taken to imply that one is also allowed to inquire concerning what is above [the heavens] and what is below [the deep], what is before [the beginning of time] and what is after [its end], therefore, with the phrase "from one end of heaven unto the other" (ibid.), Scripture limits inquiry [to the finite span of time and space that the phrase suggests]. Accordingly, you are allowed to inquire concerning the things that are from one end of heaven to the other, but not concerning what is above [the heavens], what is below [the deep], what is before [the six days of creation], and what is after [the world's existence].[2]

2. Why was the world created with the letter bet:[3] Just as bet is closed on three sides and open only in front, so you are not permitted to investigate what is above [the heavens] and what is below [the deep], what is before [the six days of creation] and what is [to happen] after [the world's existence]—you are permitted only from the time the world was created and thereafter [the world we live in].[4]

3. "The wise man, his eyes are at the beginning" (Eccles. 2:14)—he is one who inquires from the world's beginning, from the six days of creation and thereafter [the world we live in]. "But the fool walketh in darkness" (ibid.)—he is one who puts aside the time of the world's existence and inquires only concerning the time prior, the time of darkness.[5]

4. "Now the earth was worthless and waste (toho va vohu)" (Gen. 1:2). R. Eleazar said in the name of Ben Sira: "Do not pry into things too hard for you or examine what is beyond your reach. Meditate on the commandments you have been given; what the Lord keeps secret is no concern of yours" (Ecclesiasticus 3:21). One reason for such limiting of inquiry is suggested by the parable of a king who built a palace on a site of dunghills, sewers, and waste matter. Should a man come and say, "This palace was built on a site of sewers, dunghills, and waste matter," would one not be likely to value the palace less? So, too, should a man come and say, "This world was created upon that which 'was worthless and waste, tohu-va-vohu' " (Gen. 1:2), does he not demean [God's creation? Hence] R. Huna stated in the name of Bar Kappara: Were not the account set down in Scripture, it would be impossible to say such a thing as "In the beginning God created" (Gen. 1:1). Created on what sort of site? On "the earth which was worthless and waste, tohu va-vohu" (Gen. 1:2).[6]

5. A pagan philosopher argued with Rabban Gamaliel: "Your God is indeed a great artist, but surely He found on hand suitable materials which were of help to him!"[7] "What are they?" asked Rabban Gamaliel. The philosopher replied, "Tohu, bohu, darkness, water, wind, and the depths."[8] Rabban Gamaliel exclaimed, "May the breath of a man such as you be blasted out! Since the term 'creation' is used by Scripture for all of them, [it is clear that God Himself brought them into being]. Tohu and bohu: 'I make peace [perfection] and create evil [lack of perfection]' (Isa. 45:7);[9] darkness: 'I form the light, and create darkness' (ibid.); water: 'Praise Him, ye heavens of heavens, and ye waters' (Ps. 148:4). Why the water's praise? 'Because He commanded, and they were created' (Ps. 148:5); wind: 'For, lo, He that formeth the mountains and created the wind' (Amos 4:13); the depths: 'When there were no depths, I created them' " (Prov. 8:24).[10]

6. "God created" (Gen. 1:1). It happened that a heretic came to R. Akiva and asked "This world—who created it?" R. Akiva replied: "The Holy One, blessed be He." The heretic said, "Show me clear proof." R. Akiva replied, "Come back to me tomorrow." The next day, when the

---

1. In the parallel B. Hag 11b, the text goes on: "One may inquire but two may not."
2. B. Hag 11b.
3. The first letter in Bereshit, "In the beginning" (Gen. 1:1).
4. Gen. R. 1:10. This may refer either to space or to time, or to both space and time. So Tosafot on B. Hag 11b, s.v. yakhol.
5. MhG Gen., pp. 7–8.
6. P. Hag 2:1, 47c; Gen. R. 1:5.
7. The philosopher believed that God had indeed created the world, but in his question implied that He had used primeval matter, which was preexistent.
8. The philosopher construed "In the beginning God created heaven and earth" as a topical sentence that is followed by a detailed account of creation in which are mentioned tohu, bohu, darkness, etc., elements he presumed to be preexistent.
9. "By tohu and bohu the philosopher meant primeval matter without form. Thereupon Rabban Gamaliel quoted: "I made shalom (that which is whole, i.e., what contains both matter and form) and evil, i.e., that which is defective, consisting of matter only without form.' Thus that too was created" (I. Husik). Perhaps, too, this is an allusion to the view that matter is a source of evil" (Gen. R. Soncino, p. 8, n. 5).
10. Gen. R. 1:9 (Soncino, p. 8, n. 1: "Since at one time there were no depths, God must have created them"); MhG Gen. 20.

heretic came, R. Akiva asked him, "What are you wearing?" The heretic replied, "A garment." R. Akiva asked, "Who made it?" The heretic: "A weaver." "I don't believe you," said R. Akiva; "show me clear proof." The heretic: "What can I show you? Don't you know that a weaver made it?" R. Akiva then asked; "And you, do you not know that the Holy One made His world?" After the heretic departed, R. Akiva's disciples asked him, "But what is the clear proof?" He replied, "My children, even as a house proclaims its builder, a garment its weaver, or a door its carpenter, so does the world proclaim the Holy One, blessed be He, that he created it."[1]

7. R. Judah ben Pazzi expounded: At the beginning the world was nothing but water, as is said, "And the spirit of God hovered over the face of the waters" (Gen. 1:2). Then He proceeded to make it into snow: "He tosseth down hail like crumbs" (Ps. 147:17). Finally He made it into earth: "He said to the snow: 'Become earth' " (Job 37:6).[2]

8. R. Judah bar Simon said: "He revealed [to the prophets] deep and secret things" (Dan. 2:22) concerning the world's beginning. Thus Genesis merely says, "In the beginning God created the heaven" (Gen. 1:1), but does not explain how heaven was created. Who explains it? Isaiah: "He stretched out the heavens as a curtain, and spread them out as a tent to dwell in" (Isa. 40:22). Genesis says, "Created . . . the earth" (Gen. 1:1), but does not explain how it was created. Who explains it? Job: "He said to the snow: "Become loose earth' " (Job 37:6), and presently "the loose earth stuck together" (Job 38:38). Genesis says, "God said: "let there be light' " (Gen. 1:3), but does not explain how the light came into being. Who explains it? A psalm: "Thou didst cover Thyself with light as with a garment" (Ps. 104:2).[3]

9. Six things preceded the creation of the world. Some were actually created, and others came up only in God's thought as what was to be created. Torah and the throne of glory were created. The creation of the fathers, Israel, the Temple, and the name of the Messiah came up only in God's thought. R. Ahavah son of R. Ze'era said: So, too, repentance. And some say: Also the Garden of Eden and Gehenna.[4]

It is said in the name of R. Samuel son of R. Isaac that the thought of creating Israel preceded all else.[5] Had not the Holy One foreseen that after twenty-six generations Israel would accept the Torah, He would not have written in the Torah: "Command the children of Israel" (Num. 5:2) or "Speak to the children of Israel" (Exod. 25:2).

R. Bannai said: The world and the fullness thereof were created only for the sake of Torah.[6]

1. B. Tem 3.
2. P. Hag 2:1, 77a.
3. Gen. R. 1:6.
4. The idea that all these came before the creation described in Genesis is based on Prov. 8:22, Ps. 93:2, Hos. 9:10, Ps. 74:2, Jer. 17:12, Ps. 72:17, Ps. 90:2–3, Gen. 2:8, and Isa. 30:33. See Gen. R. 1:4; TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 160.
5. Including Torah.
6. So that its words may be studied and its precepts obeyed. Gen. R. 1:4.

10. R. Hoshaia Rabbah began his discourse with the verse "Then I was by Him as a nursling (amon)" (Prov. 8:30). The word amon may be read umman, meaning "overall design"—I was in the mind of the Holy One, says the Torah, like the overall design in the mind of a craftsman. In the way of the world, when a king of flesh and blood builds a palace, he builds it not according to his own whim, but according to the idea of an architect. Moreover, the architect does not build it out of his own head; he has [a design]—plans and diagrams to know how to lay out the chambers and where to put in wicket doors. Even so the Holy One looked into the Torah as He created the world.[7]

11. R. Zutra bar Tobiah said in the name of Rav: The world was created by means of ten capacities and powers: By wisdom, by understanding,[8] by reason,[9] by strength,[10] by rebuke,[11] by might,[12] by righteousness, by judgment, by loving-kindness, and by compassion.[13]

12. "The Lord God[14] made earth and heaven" (Gen. 2:4). A parable of a king who had cups made of delicate glass. The king said: If I pour hot water into them, they will [expand and] burst; if cold water, they will contract [and break]. What did he do? He mixed hot and cold water, and poured it into them, and so they remained unbroken. Likewise, the Holy One said: If I create the world with the attribute of mercy alone, its sins will be too many; if with justice alone, how could the world be expected to endure? So I will create it with both justice and mercy, and may it endure![15]

Heaven and Earth

13. The sages taught: The school of Shammai says, Heaven was created first and the earth was created afterward, for it is said, "In the beginning God created heaven and earth" (Gen. 1:1). But the school of Hillel says: The earth was created first and heaven afterward, for it is said, "In the day that the Lord God made earth and heaven" (Gen. 2:4). The school of Hillel said to the school of Shammai: According to you, a man should build the upper story of the house first and the lower story afterward, for in the verse "It is He that buildeth His upper chambers

7. Gen. R. 1:1.
8. The ability to understand what one learns.
9. Deductive power.
10. Physical strength.
11. "In Job 26:11 it is implied that at first the pillars of heaven were weak and shaky, till God rebuked them, when, like a person taken aback by astonishment, they stiffened and hardened" (Israel Abrahams in Hag, Soncino, p. 65, n. 6).
12. Moral power.
13. The aforementioned capacities and powers are taken to be intimated in Prov. 3:19–20, Ps. 65:7, Job 26:11, Ps. 89:15, and Ps. 25:6. B. Hag 12a.
14. In rabbinic conception, Adonai ("Lord") represents the attribute of mercy, while Elohim ("God") represents the attribute of justice. Both, according to Gen. 2:4, were brought together at the making of heaven and earth.
15. Gen. R. 12:15; Yalkut, Bereshit, §19.

in the heaven, and hath founded His [lower] vault upon the earth" (Amos 9:6), [the upper chambers are identified with heaven]. The school of Shammai replied to the school of Hillel: According to you, a man should first make a footstool and then make the throne,[1] for in the verse "The heaven is My throne and the earth is My footstool" (Isa. 66:1) [the earth is identified as God's footstool]. But the sages say: Both were created at one and the same time, for it is said, "Yea, Mine hand hath laid the foundation of the earth, and My right hand hath spread out the heavens; when I called unto them, they stood up together" (Isa. 48:13).[2]

In the name of the sages, R. Yohanan said: In creation, heaven was first; in being brought to completion, earth was first. R. Tanhuma said, I will state the proof for this statement: the verse "God created heaven and earth" (Gen. 1:1) shows that heaven was first in creation; while the verse "In the day the Lord God completed making earth and heaven" (Gen. 2:4) shows that earth was first in being brought to completion.[3]

14. R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon observed: Why does Scripture at times put earth before heaven, and at other times heaven before earth? To teach that the two are of equal value.[4]

15. "From the beginning . . . [the inhabitants of] the earth [were such dissemblers that they] set one to wonder what their true nature (tohu va-vohu) was" (Gen. 1:2).[5] And so R. Berekhiah began his discourse with the verse "Though his actions appear to be innocent and proper, even a child may in fact dissemble in his behavior" (Prov. 20:11).[6] Accordingly, R. Berekhiah went on to say: At the very beginning, mankind was like a young fig tree which put forth thorns even before it bore fruit. Hence, in prophetic vision it was to be said, "I looked at [the inhabitants of] the earth, and they set one to wonder what their true nature was" (Jer. 4:23).[7]

Differing, R. Abbahu [construed the verse "The inhabitants of the earth were bewildered and confounded (tohu va-vohu)" (Gen. 1:2) and in explanation] told the parable of a king who bought two slaves, both on one bill of sale and at the same price. For one, he decreed that he be fed by the royal treasury; and for the other, that he must toil to eat. The latter sat bewildered and confounded (toheh u-voheh), and said: Both of us were acquired through one bill of sale and at the same price. Yet he is fed by the treasury, and I am fed only for my toil! Likewise, the earth sat bewildered and confounded (tohah u-vohah), saying: The beings above and the beings below were created at the same time. Yet those above are nourished by the splendor of the Presence, while those below do not eat if they do not toil. I am perplexed!

R. Judah bar Simon told the parable of a king who bought two maidservants, both on one bill of sale and at the same price. For one, he decreed that she need never leave the palace; while for the other, he decreed banishment. The second one sat there bewildered and confounded (tohah u-vohah), and said: Both of us were acquired through the same bill of sale and at the same price. Yet she need never leave the palace, while for me the king has decreed banishment. I am perplexed! Likewise, the earth sat bewildered and confounded (tohah u-vohah), saying; The beings above and the beings below were created at the same time. Yet the beings above live on, while the beings below die. Hence Scripture: "The earth was bewildered and confounded (tohu va-vohu)" (Gen. 1:2).

R. Tanhuma told the parable of a prince who slept in a cradle while his nurse sat by anxious and troubled (tohah u-vohah). Why? Because she knew she was to receive her punishment through him. Likewise, the earth foresaw that she was to receive her punishment through Adam, as is said, "Cursed be the earth because of thee" (Gen. 3:17). Hence Scripture: "The earth was bewildered and confounded.[8]

16. "And God made the firmament" (Gen. 1:7). This is a verse whose apparent implication caused Ben Zoma to shake the world [of Jewish learning]. " 'And God made!'—an unbelievable utterance," he said. "Did not the firmament come into being by God's word—"by the word of the Lord were the heavens made, and all the host of them by the breath of His mouth' (Ps. 33:6)?"[9]

17. Concerning the verse "And God said: "Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters' " (Gen. 1:6), the sages observed: When the Holy One commanded, "Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters," the middle layer solidified, and thus the separation between the lower heaven and the upper heaven of heavens came into being.[10]

"Let there be a firmament." But was not heaven already made on the first day? Rav explained: On the first day, heaven was in a form that was still fluid, but on the second day, it congealed. Hence, "Let there be a firmament" is to be understood as meaning: Let the firmament congeal, let it be covered by an overlay, let it be stretched out, let it become firm.[11]

R. Hanina said: Fire descended from above and licked the top surface of the firmament. Hence, whenever R. Yohanan came to the verse "By His [fiery] breath heaven was smoothed"[12] (Job 26:13), he would say, "R. Hanina taught me well."[13]

---

1. "The size of the footstool cannot be determined till the throne has been made" (Israel Abrahams in Hag, Soncino, p. 66, n. 6).
2. B. Hag 12a; Gen. R. 1:15.
3. Gen. R. 1:15.
4. Ibid. Accordingly, the difference in order has no bearing on the priority of either in creation.
5. JV: "Now the earth was unformed and void." But tohu ("unformed") may be derived from thh ("to wonder"); and bohu [vohu] ("void"), broken into the syllables bo [vo] ("within") and hu ("it"), may be taken to mean "what is in it."
6. NJV: "A child may be dissembling in his behavior even though his actions be innocent and proper."
7. JV: "I beheld the earth, and, lo, it was waste and void."
8. Gen. R. 2:1–2.
9. "Made" would seem to imply almost blasphemously that God had to work at the "making" of the firmament. Gen. R. 4:6; Yalkut, Bereshit, §6.
10. Gen. R. 4:2.
11. P. Ber 1:1, 2c; Gen. R. 4:2.
12. JV: "was serene."
13. Gen. R. 4:2.

18. "And God called the firmament heaven (shamayim)" (Gen. 1:8). Rav said: Shamayim is a composite of esh ("fire") and mayim ("water"). The Holy One took fire and water, and worked them into each other; and out of the two, heaven was made.

Another comment: Shamayim is so called because men wonder (mishtomemim) at it, saying: Of what (shel mah) is it composed? Of fire? Of water? It is an enigma![1]

19. "All that has been generated in heaven and on earth is now in the form in which it was created[2] on the day the Lord God made earth and heaven" (Gen. 2:4), which implies, R. Nehemiah stated: On the very same day that heaven and earth were created, they brought forth at once the generations that have since issued from them. R. Judah objected: But is it not said, "And there was evening and there was morning, one day . . . a second day . . . a third day . . . a fourth day . . . a fifth day . . . a sixth day"?[3] R. Nehemiah replied: All that has been generated from heaven and earth corresponds to the experience of those who harvest figs [4]—each being [was created at the beginning but] became visible only at the time designated for it.

[In agreement with R. Nehemiah], R. Berekhiah said: The words "And the earth brought forth" (Gen. 1:12) imply that what was brought forth had already been deposited within it.[5]

20. A Caesar said to Rabban Gamaliel [of Yavneh]: He who created the mountains did not create the wind, for it is written, "There is He that formed the mountains and there is He that created the wind" (Amos 4:13).[6] Rabban Gamaliel replied: If so, then in the account of the making of Adam, where Scripture says, "He created" (Gen. 1:27) and "He formed" (Gen. 2:7)—would you, in keeping with your reasoning, also say that He who created one part of Adam did not create any other part of him? Further, there is an area of the human body no more than a handbreadth square, which contains two openings,[7] of which it is written, "He that planteth the ear, shall He not hear? He that formeth the eye, shall He not see?" (Ps. 94:9)[8]—would you maintain here, too, that He who created the one did not create the other? "Yes, even so," answered Caesar. "Yet," Rabban Gamaliel retorted, "Would you say that at a creature's death the creators of the eye and the ear agree to let their creature die?"[9]

The Light

21. "And God said: "Let there be light' " (Gen. 1:3). R. Judah taught: The light was created first, and then [all that is in] the world.[10] A parable of a king who wanted to build a palace, but the site was dark. What did he do? He lit lamps and lanterns to see where to lay the foundations. Hence, light had to be created first. But R. Nehemiah maintained: The world was created first; just as a king would first build a palace and then adorn it with lights and lanterns.[11]

22. R. Simeon ben Jehozadak interrogated R. Samuel bar Nahman, saying: Since I hear that you are a master of Aggadah, tell me how light was created. R. Samuel bar Nahman replied: God wrapped Himself in a white garment, and the radiance of His majesty illuminated the world from one end to the other.[12]

23. "And God saw the light, that it was [for the] good, and God set it aside" (Gen. 1:4). R. Eleazar said: By the light that the Holy One created on the first day, one could see from one end of the world to the other. But as soon as the Holy One observed the generation of the flood and the generation of the dispersion of mankind, [13] and saw that their conduct was to be depraved, He proceeded to secrete His light from them. And for whom did He secrete it? For the righteous in the time-to-come, just like a king who has a goodly treasure and sets it aside for his son. And where did He hide the light? In the Garden of Eden.[14]

24. "And God divided the light from the darkness" (Gen. 1:4). R. Berekhiah said: Two men of renown, R. Yohanan and R. Simeon ben Lakish, took the words "And . . . divided" to imply actual division of domains and illustrated this interpretation by a parable: A king had two chiefs of the guards who argued with each other. One said: I am to be in charge during the day. And the other said: No! I am to be in charge during the day. So the king summoned the first, saying to him: So-and-so, daytime is to be your domain; then he summoned the second: So-and-so, nighttime is to be your domain. Likewise, "for the light God summoned the day" (Gen. 1:5), saying, "Daytime is to be your domain"; "and for the darkness He

---

1. Gen. R. 4:7.
2. JV: "These are the generations of the heaven and of the earth when they were created."
3. Which would indicate that only heaven and earth were created on the first day, whereas what issued from them was created on subsequent days.
4. Figs on the tree assume their shape at about the same time but do not all ripen simultaneously. So, too, all that was to issue from heaven and earth had already been created on the first day: only their appearance was delayed to subsequent days.
5. Gen. R. 12:4.
6. JV: "He that formeth the mountains, and createth the wind." Caesar took these words to refer to two divine beings.
7. The face, which contains the eye and the ear.
8. "Two different expressions are used for the creation of the eye and ear respectively" (Jacob Shachter in Sanh, Soncino, p. 249).
9. B. Sanh 39a. "The one who planted and the one who created, i.e., assuming that there were two creators of man, he could not completely die unless both agreed; otherwise, the creator of the eye might insist that the eye go on living, whilst the creator of the ear might wish it to die" (Jacob Shachter in Sanh, Soncino, p. 249).
10. According to R. Judah, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth" (Gen. 1:1) is a general statement, followed by details which begin with the command "Let there be light" (Gen. 1:3).
11. Gen. R. 3:1; Exod. R. 34:2.
12. Gen. R. 3:4; MTeh 104:4.
13. See Gen. 11:9.
14. B. Hag 12a; Gen. R. 3:6; Exod. R. 35:1.

summoned the night" (ibid.), saying, "Nighttime is to be your domain."[1]

25. "And there was evening and there was morning, one day" (Gen. 1:5). Scripture says here not, "Let there be evening," but, "There was evening." Hence, it follows that the order of time had already existed before creation.[2]

The Water

26. "And God made the firmament, and divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament" (Gen. 1:7). R. Yohanan said: The Holy One took all the primeval waters and put half of them in the firmament and half of them in the Great Ocean, as is said, "Each half (peleg) of the river (peleg) of God is [always] full of water" (Ps. 65:10)[3]—peleg in the verse being construed [in a dual sense: "river" and] "half."[4]

R. Berekhiah said: The lower waters did not part from the upper waters without weeping. This is implied in the verse "Because of weeping, He had to bind the streams with poultices" (Job 28:11).[5]

27. A heretic asked R. Meir, "Is it possible that the upper waters are prevented from pouring down by God's mere word?" "Yes," R. Meir answered, and added, "Bring me a water clock."[6] When he brought the water clock, R. Meir placed a plate of gold on top of it. But the water did not stop flowing out. He then placed a plate of silver on top of it. But the water still did not stop flowing out. When R. Meir put his finger on top of it, the water stopped flowing out.

The heretic said, "But you put your finger on top of it!" R. Meir replied, "I am no more than flesh and blood, yet my finger stops the water's flow; how much more and more powerful is the finger—the word—of the Holy One."[7]

28. Why is "It was good" not written about the second day [of creation]? R. Samuel bar Nahman said: Because the disposition of the waters was not yet finished.[8] Consequently, "It was good" is written twice in connection with the third day, once about the disposition of the waters and a second time about the work that was begun and completed on that day.

A Roman noblewoman asked R. Yose, "Why is 'It was good' not written about the second day?" He replied, "But in fact, Scripture subsequently does include all the days in the words 'And God saw everything that He had made, and behold, it was very good' " (Gen. 1:31). She said, "Suppose six men came to you, and you gave to each of five one maneh, but you did not give one to the sixth, and then you gave a second maneh to all of them together. Would not each of the first five now have a maneh and one-sixth, while the sixth man would have only one-sixth of a maneh? I am still baffled."

At that, R. Yose, retracting his own explanation, explained the matter in the same way as R. Samuel bar Nahman.

R. Simon, in the name of R. Joshua ben Levi, told the parable of a king who had an excessively fierce legion, and he said: Since the legion is so fierce, let it not bear my name. Likewise, the Holy One said: Since the generation of the flood, the generation of Enosh,[9] and the generation of the dispersion of mankind will be punished by water, let not "It was good"[10] be set down concerning water.

But R. Hanina explained: Because separation [that is to say, disunion] was brought into being on the second day, as indicated in "Let [the firmament] separate water from water" (Gen. 1:6), [the statement "It was good" does not occur]. In this regard, R. Tavyome noted: If there is no mention of "It was good" about an act of separation conducive to the world's improvement and well-being, all the less should such words occur in describing occasions leading to the world's disarray.[11]

29. On the third day, the earth was as flat as a plain, and the waters covered the entire surface of the earth. And when out of the mouth of the Almighty there issued the command "Let the waters be gathered together . . . and let the dry land appear" (Gen. 1:9), mountains and hills rising up in different parts of the earth emerged over its entire surface, so that it became pitted with many valleys. As the core of the earth rose up, the waters rolled down into the valleys [and became seas]. Forthwith, swelling with pride, the waters rose in order to cover the earth as at the beginning. But then the Holy One rebuked them, subdued them, placed them beneath the soles of His feet, and measured out their extent with His own span, so that they should neither enlarge nor diminish. And as a man makes a hedge for his vineyard, so He made the sand into a hedge for the seas, so that when the waters rise and see the sand before them, they turn back and recede.[12]

30. "Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together to one place" (Gen. 1:9). R. Yudan said in the name of R. Levi, and R. Berekhiah in the name of R. Judah son of R. Simeon: The whole earth is filled with waters within waters, and yet you say, "To one place"?

---

1. Gen. R. 3:6.
2. Gen. R. 3:7.
3. JV: "With the river of God that is full of water."
4. Gen. R. 4:4.
5. JV: "He bindeth the streams that they trickle [literally, "weep"] not." Gen. R. 5:4.
6. "The meaning of the word is doubtful. It would appear to mean a clepsydra, a contrivance for measuring time by the flow of water. The bottom was perforated with such small holes that if the upper apertures were completely closed, the water would not flow out from the bottom" (H. Freedman in Gen. R., Soncino, p. 28, n. 6).
7. Gen. R. 4:4.
8. "It was good" may be said only of a work that has been completed.
9. The generation of Enosh suffered partial flood. See PR 48:2 (YJS 2:816).
10. One of God's names is "Good."
11. Gen. R. 4:6.
12. PRE 5; MTeh 93:5 (YJS 2:126); Yalkut, Bereshit, §8.

How is such a thing possible? Consider the parable of ten wineskins fully inflated with air, lying in a banqueting hall [and occupying a great deal of space]. When the king needs the space they occupy, what does he do to them? He unties them, lets out the air, and moves them into a corner [of the hall]. So, too, the Holy One trod down upon the primeval waters, causing the air to come out of them, and then moved them into the Great Ocean. It is about this that Scripture says, "He compressed the waters as though they had been in a wineskin, and then put the deeps in vaults" (Ps. 33:7)[1] and "He pressed[2] upon the waters, and they dried up" (Job 12:15) and "He trod upon the waves" (Job 9:8).[3]

31. R. Joshua son of R. Nehemiah said: The waters ascended mountains and descended into depths, until they reached the Great Ocean. Of this, Scripture says, "They ascended the mountains, they descended into valleys, unto the place which Thou hadst founded for them" (Ps. 104:8). Which place hadst Thou founded for them? The great Ocean.[4]

Grasses and Trees

32. In expounding the verse "The glory of the Lord endures for ever; the Lord rightly rejoices in His works" (Ps. 104:31), R. Hanina bar Papa said: The angel of the universe [5] uttered this verse. For when the Holy One enjoined each fruit tree to bear fruit "after its kind" (Gen 1:11), the grasses applied to themselves an a fortiori argument, saying: If God enjoined "after its kind"[6] upon trees, which by nature do not grow up in promiscuous miscellany, how much more does it apply to us! Immediately, each grass sprouted forth after its kind, as is said, "The earth sprouted grass, herb yielding seed after its kind" (Gen. 1:12). Then the angel of the universe declared, "The glory of the Lord endures forever; the Lord rightly rejoices in His works!"[7]

33. R. Assi pointed out a [seeming] contradiction between two verses. One verse, referring to the third day, says, "And the earth brought forth grass" (Gen. 1:12), whereas another verse, when speaking of the sixth day, says, "No vegetation of the field was yet in the earth" (Gen. 2:5). However, the two verses, seemingly contradictory, teach us that the plants commenced to grow [on the third day] but stopped just as they were about to break through the soil, until Adam came [on the sixth day] and besought the mercy [of rain] for them; and when rain fell, they sprouted forth.[8]

34. "No one to converse with (siah, 'tree') in the field" (Gen. 2:5). All trees converse (mesihim)[9], as it were, with one another. Indeed, one may add, all trees converse with mortals; all trees—created, as trees were, to provide fellowship[10] for mortals.[11]

35. R. Simon said: There is not one herb without its own constellation (mazzal) in heaven, which slaps it and says, "Grow!"[12]

The Moon

36. R. Simeon ben Pazzi pointed out a [seeming] contradiction between two parts of the same verse. The verse begins by saying, "And God made the two great lights" (Gen. 1:16), and then goes on to speak of "a greater light . . . and a lesser light" (ibid.) [However, this is what happened]: The moon dared say to the Holy One, "Master of the universe, is it possible for two kings to wear the same size crown?" The Holy One answered, "Go, then, and make yourself smaller." But the moon protested, "Master of the universe, must I make myself smaller merely because I suggested to You something that is sensible?" The Holy One conceded, "Very well. Go and rule by day[13] as well as by night."[14]

37. "And the stars" (Gen. 1:16). R. Aha said: [The association of the stars with the moon] will be understood by the parable of a king who had two administrators, one ruling in the city and the other ruling over the [rest of the] province. The king said: Since one was willing to be diminished to rule only in the city, I decree that whenever he goes forth, the city council and the populace shall go forth with him, and whenever he returns, the city council and the populace shall return with him. So, too, did the Holy One: Since the moon was willing to be diminished and to rule by night, I, [said God], decree that when she comes forth, the stars shall go forth with her, and when she returns, the stars shall return with her.[15]

38. When the Holy One rebuked the moon, and it fell, some sparks fell from it into the sky—these are the stars.[16]

The Variety of Creatures

39. R. Akiva used to quote, "What variety Thou hast created, O Lord!" (Ps. 104:24). You have creatures that grow in the sea and You have creatures that grow on dry

---

1. JV: "He gathereth the waters of the sea together as a heap; He layeth up the deeps in storehouses." But nd may mean "heap" or "wineskin."
2. JV: "Withholdeth." But the verb 'ter can mean "withhold" and also "press." Cf. Targum on Judg. 6:38.
3. Gen. R. 5:2; MTeh 93:5 (YJS 2:127).
4. Gen. R. 5:3.
5. Metatron. See Tosafot on B. Hul 60a.
6. This phrase appears in connection with the trees but not in connection with grasses.
7. B. Hul 60a.
8. B. Hul 60b.
9. The usual word for "tree" is etz. Hence siah, used instead, is construed in a dual sense: "tree" and "converse, provide fellowship."
10. "Fellowship"—Gen. R. TA; BR: "benefit."
11. Gen. R. 13:2.
12. Gen. R. 10:6. On mazzal, cf. Sanh, Soncino, p. 629, n. 10. Here it is stated that not only each man but each herb has its own mazzal.
13. The moon is at times visible during the day.
14. B. Hul 60b.
15. Gen. R. 6:4.
16. Yalkut Reuveni, quoting Midrash Toledot Yitzhak (BhM, 5; 156).

land. If those of the sea were to come up on dry land, they would immediately die; and if those of the dry land were to go down into the sea, they would immediately die. You have creatures that grow in fire,[1] and You have creatures that grow in the air. If those of the fire were to come up into the air, they would immediately die. [If those of the air were to come down into the fire, they would immediately die.] The place of life for the one is the cause of death for the other; and the place of death for the one is the cause of life for the other. "What variety Thou hast created, O Lord!"[2]

40. "And all the host of them" (Gen. 2:1). Even those creatures that you may look upon as superfluous in the world, such as flies, fleas, or gnats—they too are part of the entirety of creation. The Holy One effects His purpose through all creatures, even through a frog or a flea.[3]

41. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: Of all that the Holy One created in His world, He did not create a single thing that is useless.[4]

42. Elijah told the following: One day, as I was walking through the greatest city of the world,[5] there was a draft roundup and I was peremptorily seized and brought into the king's house. Presently a Parsee priest came and asked me, "Are you a man of books?" I replied, "A bit of one." He said, "If you can answer the particular question I am about to ask, you may go in peace." I replied, "Ask." He then asked, "Why did God create loathsome reptiles and creeping things?"[6] I replied, "God is a judge who is indeed holy and just, but He is also loving because He is perceptive [of man's condition] forever and ever and ever. He knows both beginning and end, and can tell from the beginning what the end of anything is to be, long, long before it has been made; still, He chooses to see the good and chooses not to see the evil [in whatever is made]. In His wisdom and with His understanding He created His world and set it on its foundation. Then He created Adam and brought him into the world. And He created him for no other purpose than to serve Him with a whole heart; He would thus find contentment in him and in his descendants after him until the end of all generations. But then, after Adam complied with the command to be fruitful and multiply, one [descendant] worshiped the sun and the moon, and another worshiped wood and stone, and thus every day Adam's descendants came to be deemed by Him as deserving annihilation. Nevertheless, upon reconsidering all the work of His hands in the world of His creation, God said: These [human beings] have life, and those [other creatures] have life. These have breath and those have breath; these crave food and drink, and those crave food and drink. Human beings ought therefore to be deemed as important as cattle or wild beasts, or, at worst, as important as the variety of loathsome reptiles and creeping things that I created upon the earth. At once He felt some measure of contentment and resolved not to annihilate mankind. And so you see that reptiles and creeping things were created in the world as a means of mankind's preservation.[7]

43. [The Roman general Quintus asked Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai]: One verse speaks of fowl as having been created out of the waters of the sea: "God said, 'Let the waters bring forth abundantly . . . fowl that may fly above the earth' " (Gen. 1:20). But another verse speaks of them as having been created out of the earth: "Out of the ground the Lord God formed . . . every fowl of the air" (Gen. 2:19). Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai replied: [Both are true.] Fowl were created out of the alluvial mud.

R. Samuel of Cappadocia commented: Just the same, [fowl are related to fish], for the skin of chickens' feet resembles the scale-covered skin of fish [and so fowl are considered fishlike].[8]

Man

44. "And God said: 'Let us make man' " (Gen. 1:26). With whom did He take counsel? R. Ammi said: He took counsel with His own heart. He was like a king who built a palace with the counsel of an architect. When he saw the palace, it did not please him. At whom was he indignant? Was it not at the architect? Hence, "and it grieved Him at His heart" (Gen. 6:6) [with which He had taken counsel at the making of man].

R. Hanina said: He consulted the ministering angels.

R. Berekhiah said: When the Holy One was about to create Adam, he saw both the righteous and the wicked who were to issue from him. So He said: If I create him, wicked men will issue from him; if I do not create him, how are righteous men to be born? What did the Holy One do? He diverted the way of the wicked from before His sight,[9] partnered the quality of mercy[10] with Himself, [saying to it, "Let us make man], and then created him.[11]

45. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: When the Holy One was about to create man, He first created a company of ministering angels and asked them: Is it your desire that "we make man in our image" (Gen. 1:26)? They replied: Master of the universe, what will be his deeds? God said: Such-and-such will be his deeds. Indignantly, they exclaimed: Master of the universe, "what is man that Thou art mindful of him, and the son of man that Thou thinkest of him" (Ps. 8:5)? At once He stretched out His little

---

1. Salamanders were believed to live in fire.
2. B. Hul 127a; Yalkut, Ps., §862.
3. Gen. R. 10:7; Exod. R. 10:1.
4. B. Shab 77b.
5. Probably Ctesiphon, capital of the Sassanids. See Jacob Mann, "Date and Place of Redaction of Seder Eliahu Rabbah and Zuta," HUCA 4,: 302–10, particularly n. 137. (To a Babylonian Jew, Ctesiphon no doubt seemed the largest city in the world—Leon Nemoy.)
6. In Zoroastrian teaching, such creatures are the work of Ahriman, the god of darkness and evil. But for Elijah, as will become evident, such creatures serve an admirable purpose.
7. TdE, Ed. Friedmann, pp. 5–6.
8. B. Hul 27b, and Tosafot and En Yaakov, ad loc.
9. He deliberately disregarded it.
10. Mercy is often hypostatized.
11. Gen. R. 8:3–4; Yalkut, Bereshit, §13.

finger among them and consumed them with fire. The same thing happened with a second company. The third company said to Him: Master of the universe, what did it avail the former [angels that they spoke to You] as they did? The whole world is Yours, and whatever You wish to do therein, do it.

When God came to the generation of the flood and to the generation of the dispersion of mankind, whose deeds were so corrupt, the angels said: Lord of the universe, did not the first [company of angels] speak justly? He retorted, "Even to old age . . . and even to hoar hair will I put up [with man]" (Isa. 46:4).[1]

46. R. Simon said: When the Holy One was about to create Adam, the ministering angels formed themselves into groups and companies, some of them saying, "Let him be created," while others urged, "Let him not be created." Thus it is written, "Love and truth fought together, righteousness and peace combated each other" (Ps. 85:11).[2] Love said, "Let him be created, because he will perform acts of love." Truth said, "Let him not be created, because all of him will be falsehood." Righteousness said, "Let him be created, because he will do righteous deeds." Peace said, "Let him not be created, because he will be all strife." What did the Holy One do? He took truth and cast it to the ground, as is said, "Thou didst cast down truth to the ground" (Dan. 8:12). The ministering angels dared say to the Holy One, "Master of the universe, why do You humiliate Your seal?[3] Let truth arise from the earth." Hence it is written, "Let truth spring up from the earth" (Ps. 85:12).[4]

The elder R. Huna of Sepphoris said: While the ministering angels were parleying with one another and disputing with one another, the Holy One created Adam and then said: What are you parleying about? Man is already made.[5]

47. R. Huna said in the name of R. Aibu: God created Adam with due deliberation. He first created the means of man's sustenance and only then did He create him. The ministering angels spoke up to the Holy One: "Master of universes, "what is man that Thou art mindful of him, and the son of man that Thou thinkest of him?' [Ps. 8:5]. This source of trouble—why should he be created?" "If what you hint in your question is to be followed," God replied, " 'sheep and oxen, all of them' [Ps. 8:8]—why should they have been created? Why should 'the fowl of the air and the fish of the sea' [Ps. 8:9] have been created? I am like a king who has a tower full of good things, but no guests. What joy can the tower give the king who filled it?" At that, the ministering angels declared, "Master of universes, 'Lord, our Lord, how glorious is Thy Name in all the earth' [Ps. 8:10]. Do what pleases You."[6]

48. R. Samuel bar Nahman said in the name of R. Jonathan: At the time when Moses was engaged in writing the Torah, he had to set down what happened on each of the six days of creation. When he got to the verse "And God said: "Let us make Adam' " (Gen. 1:26), Moses dared ask, "Master of the universe, why do You give heretics their opportunity?"[7] "Write, O son of Amram," God replied: "Whoever wishes to err, let him err." The Holy One then added, "O Moses, this Adam whom I created by Myself—will I not cause both greater and lesser men to issue from him? Accordingly, whenever a great man is inclined to seek approval [for an important act] from one who is less than he and holds back, saying, 'Why should I seek approval from one who is less than I?' he will be told: Learn from your Creator, who created the creatures above and the creatures below [on His own], yet when He was about to create Adam, He took counsel with the ministering angels."[8]

R. Hila[9] differed: No taking counsel is implied here. What happened will be understood by the parable of a king who was strolling at the entrance to his palace when he saw a clump of earth lying about. So he said: What shall we[10] do with it? Some might suggest: [Use it to build] public baths; others might suggest: Private baths. But I will make a statuelike figure out of it! Who is to hinder me?[11]

49. R. Aha said: When the Holy One desired to create the first man, He consulted the ministering angels and said to them, "Shall we make man?"[12] They asked, "What is to be his character?" God replied, "This being whom I desire to create—his wisdom will be greater than yours." How did God prove it? He assembled all domestic animals, all wild beasts, and all fowls, and made them pass before the angels. Then He asked, "What are the names of these creatures?" The angels did not know. Subsequently, when He created the first man, He again assembled all domestic animals, all wild beasts, and all fowl, and made them pass before him. He asked him, "What are the names of these creatures?" Adam replied, "This one—the name 'ox' fits him. This one—'ass.' And this one—'horse.' And this one—'camel.' And this one—'lion.' And this one—'vulture.' " And he named the others as well. Thus it is written, "And the man gave names to all cattle, to the fowl of the air," etc. (Gen. 2:20). God asked him, "And you, what is your name?" He replied, "The name Adam fits me." God asked, "Why?" He replied, "Because I was fashioned out of the earth (adamah)." God asked, "And I, what is My Name?" "The name Lord fits You." God asked, "Why?" "Because You are Lord over all Your works."[13]

---

1. B. Sanh 38a.
2. JV: "Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other." But the commentator interprets "met" in the sense of "fought," and derives nashaku ("kissed") from neshek ("arms"), reading: "have taken arms against each other."
3. Truth is the seal of God.
4. Gen. R. 8:5.
5. Gen. R. 8:5 (Soncino, p. 58). R. Huna thus reads not na'aseh ("Let us make") but ne'esah ("is already made").
6. Gen. R. 8:6.
7. They will say that there are numerous deities.
8. Gen. R. 8:8.
9. So Gen. R. TA; BR: "R. Levi."
10. The royal plural.
11. Gen. R. 8:8.
12. JV: "Let us make man."
13. PR 14:9 (YJS 1; 272–73): Tanhuma, Hukkat, §6; Gen. R. 17:4; Num. R. 19:3.

50. R. Meir used to say: Adam—the dust out of which he was made was gathered from the entire earth.[1]

51. R. Simeon ben Yohai, quoting "The Craftsman,[2] His work is perfect" (Deut. 32:4), said: The Craftsman who wrought the world and man, His work is perfect. In the way of the world, when a king of flesh and blood builds a palace, mortals who enter it say: Had the columns been taller, how much more beautiful the palace would have been! Had the walls been higher, how much more beautiful it would have been! Had the ceiling been loftier, how much more beautiful it would have been! But does any man come and say: If I had three eyes, three arms, three legs, how much better off I would be! If I walked on my head, or if my face were turned backward, how much better off I would be! I wonder. To assure that no one would say such a thing, the King of kings of kings, the Holy One and His court had themselves, in a manner of speaking, polled concerning the placing of every part of your body and set you up in a way that is right for you.[3]

52. R. Levi bar Haita said: Were a king of flesh and blood to build a palace and place a rainspout over its entrance, it would be unseemly. But the King of kings of kings, the Holy One, created man, and placed the spout [his nose] over the entrance [his mouth], and that makes man's beauty, man's comeliness.[4]

53. "And God created man in His own image" (Gen. 1:27). R. Hoshaia said: At the time the Holy One created the first man, the ministering angels mistook him [for God Himself] and were about to say "Holy" before him. What did the Holy One do? He put him into a deep sleep, and all the angels realized that he was no more than man. [God and man together in the world were then] like a king and a governor riding together in a state carriage. The people of the province were about to cry. "Hail, domine!" but did not know which one was king. What did the king do? He pushed aside the governor and put him out of the carriage, whereupon all realized that that one was no more than a governor.[5]

54. Man was created alone in order to teach you that if anyone causes a single soul to perish from Israel, Scripture imputes to him the destruction of the entire world; and if anyone saves alive a single soul in Israel,[6] Scripture imputes to him the saving alive of the entire world. Again, [man was created alone] for the sake of peace among men, that one might not say to his fellow, "My father was greater than yours"; and that heretics might not say, "There are many ruling powers in heaven." Another reason: To proclaim the greatness of the Holy One. For if a man strikes many coins from one die, they all resemble one another; in fact, they are all exactly alike. But though the King of kings of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He, fashioned every man from the die of the first man, not a single one of them is exactly like his fellow. Hence, each and every person should say, "The world was created for my sake."[7]

55. The sages taught: Man was created alone. And why so? For the sake of the righteous and for the sake of the wicked. That the righteous might not say, "Ours is a righteous heredity,"[8] and that the wicked might not say, "Ours is an evil heredity."[9]

Another answer: For the sake of [the different] families, that they might not quarrel with one another.[10] Now, if at present, though originally but one man was created, they quarrel anyway, how much more would they have quarreled had two been created?

Another answer: Because of brigands and plunderers. If at present, though originally but one man was created, people rob and plunder, how much more so had two been created?[11]

And why are men's faces not like one another? Lest a man see a beautiful dwelling or a beautiful woman [belonging to someone else] and say, "she is mine."[12]

56. Man was created on the eve of Sabbath, [the last of all created beings]. And why? Lest heretics say, "The Holy One had [Adam as] partner in His work of creation."

Another answer: Should a man's opinion of himself become overweening, he may be reminded that the gnat preceded him in the order of creation.

Another answer: So that immediately [after his creation] he could proceed to fulfill the precept [of hallowing the Sabbath].

Another answer: So that he might at once go to the banquet.[13] Thus, God was like the king of flesh and blood who built a palace, decorated it, and made arrangements for a banquet [so that all would be in readiness when his guests arrived].

57. The words "Man is raised aloft" (Prov. 29:4)[14] refer to the first man, who was the climax of creation—lifted out, as the world's dough offering.[15]

58. When the Holy One created the first man, He took him and led him around all the trees of the Garden of Eden, and said to him: Behold My works, how beautiful, how splendid they are. All that I have created, I created

---

1. B. Sanh 38b.
2. Instead of tzur ("Rock" [=God]), R. Simeon ben Yohai read tzayyar ("Craftsman").
3. Sif Deut., §307; Gen. R. 12:1.
4. Gen. R. 12:1.
5. Gen. R. 8:10.
6. Some texts omit "from Israel" and "in Israel."
7. B. Sanh 38a.
8. Therefore we have no need to shun temptation.
9. And therefore we cannot avoid succumbing to temptation.
10. On the superiority of their respective ancestry.
11. I.e., if they had come from different stocks.
12. B. Sanh 38a.
13. All nature was ready for his sustenance.
14. JV: "He that exacteth gifts." But terumot ("He that exacteth gifts") may also mean "raised aloft."
15. After a woman pours water on the flour, she separates hallah, the dough offering. Similarly, after God watered the ground (Gen. 2:6), He separated hallah, which was man, thus making him the sacred part of creation (see P. Shab 2:6, 5b). Gen. R. 14:1.

for your sake. Take care that you do not become corrupt and thus destroy My world. For once you become corrupt, there is no one after you to repair it.[1]

59. "Both last and first You made me" (Ps. 139:5).[2] When a man is worthy, he is told: You preceded the ministering angels.[3] But if he is not, he is told: The fly preceded you, the gnat preceded you, this earthworm preceded you in the work of creation.[4]

60. R. Jeremiah ben Eleazar said: When the Holy One created Adam, He created him hermaphrodite [bisexual],[5] as is said, "Male and female created He them[6] . . . and called their name Adam" (Gen. 5:2).

R. Samuel bar Nahman said: When the Holy One created Adam, He made him with two fronts; then He sawed him in half[7] and thus gave him two backs, a back for one part and a back for the other part. Someone objected: But does not Scripture say, "And He took one of his ribs (mi-tzalotav)" (Gen. 2:21)? R. Samuel replied: Mi-tzalotav may also mean "his sides," as in the verse "And for the second side (tzela) of the Tabernacle" (Exod. 26:20).[8]

61. "And man became an animal being" (Gen. 2:7).[9] R. Judah said: These words teach us that He first provided him with a tail like an animal, but then removed it from him for the sake of human dignity.[10]

62. "And the Lord God created man afar"[11] (Gen. 2:7). R. Judah bar Simon said: Read the word ofer,[12] "a young man"—Adam was created as a young man, in the fullness of vigor. R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon added: Eve also was created fully developed.

[Even more precise], R. Yohanan said: Adam and Eve were created as at the age of twenty.[13]

63. It is said in the name of R. Eleazar: As the Lord was creating Adam, He had come to the stage when Adam had the form of a golem, an unarticulated lump, which lay prone from one end of the world to the other. With regard to this, Scripture says, "Thine eyes did see my golem" (Ps. 139:16).[14]

"This is the book of the generations of Adam" (Gen. 5:1). R. Judah bar Simon said: While the first man lay prone as a golem before Him who spoke and the world came into being, He caused to pass before him each generation with its expounders of Scripture, each generation with its sages, each generation with its scribes, and each generation with its leaders, as is said, "O [Adam], when thou wast still a golem, thine eyes did see all [the worthies whose names were] inscribed in thy book" (Ps. 139:16). O golem, all that your eyes have seen had already been written in your book, the book of the first man.[15]

64. While the first man lay prone as a golem, the Holy One showed him each and every righteous man that was to issue from him—some hung on Adam's head, some hung on his hair, some on his forehead, some on his eyes, some on his nose, some on his mouth, some on his ears, some on his teeth.[16]

The Upper Worlds and the Lower Worlds

65. "These are the generations of heaven and earth" (Gen. 2:4). R. Simeon ben Halafta said: Great is peace, for when the Holy One created His world, He made peace between the upper and lower worlds. Thus, what He created on the first day, He created out of both upper and lower worlds, as is said, "In the beginning God created heaven and earth" (Gen. 1:1). What He created on the second day, He created out of the upper worlds, as is said, "Let there be a firmament" (Gen. 1:6). What He created on the third day, He created out of the lower worlds, as is said, "Let the earth put forth grass" (Gen. 1:11). What He created on the fourth day, He created out of the upper worlds, as is said, "Let there be lights" (Gen. 1:14). On the fifth, out of the lower worlds, as is said, "Let the waters swarm" (Gen. 1:20). On the sixth, as He was about to create man, He said, If I create him out of the upper worlds, the upper worlds will outnumber the lower worlds by one; if I create him out of the lower worlds, the lower worlds will outnumber the upper worlds by one. As a result, there will be no peace in the world. I will therefore create him out of both upper and lower worlds, as is said, "Then the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground" (Gen. 2:7)—out of the lower worlds; "and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life" (ibid.)—out of the upper worlds.[17]

---

1. Eccles. R. 7:13, §1.
2. JV: "Thou hast hemmed me in behind and before."
3. Since man's soul, the spirit, came into being at creation's beginning, while the angels were created on the second day or, according to some, on the fifth day. Tanhuma, Bereshit, §1.
4. Gen. R. 8:1; B. Sanh 38a.
5. Normally androgynos means one who has both male and female genitals; but here it means two bodies, male and female, joined together.
6. Thus Adam was originally male and female.
7. Thus Eve was created out of half of Adam's body and not out of a mere rib (Leon Nemoy).
8. Gen. R. 8:1.
9. The literal meaning of nefesh hayyah. JV: "And man became a living soul."
10. Gen. R. 14:10.
11. JV: "out of the dust."
12. The word afar ("dust") is superfluous, as Scripture could have stated, "Then the Lord God formed man of the ground." By a play on words, afar ("dust") is connected with ofer ("a youth," "a strong man").
13. Gen. R. 14:7.
14. R. Eleazar construes these words as saying: So large was the golem that wherever You, O God, looked, You saw it.
15. Gen. R. 24:2; PR 23:2 (YJS 1: 472–73).
16. Or: "earlobes." The different members of the body are taken to suggest the particular qualities of heart and mind that single out a righteous man. Exod. R. 40:3.
17. When Scripture speaks of the creation of animals, it does not add that God breathed into their nostrils the breath of life. But with regard to man, Scripture says that God did breathe such breath into his nostrils. Hence the commentator concludes that the breath of life refers to man's creation out of the upper worlds. Gen. R. 12:8; Lev. R. 9:9.

66. "Then the Lord God formed (va-yitzer) man" (Gen. 2:7). There were two formations,[1] a formation partaking of the nature of beings below and a formation partaking of the nature of beings above.

R. Tifdai said in the name of R. Aha: The celestial beings were created in the image and likeness [of God], but they do not reproduce, while the terrestrial beings reproduce but were not created in the image and likeness [of God]. Said the Holy One: I will create man in My image and likeness, [and thus he will partake] of the [character of] celestial beings, but he will also reproduce [as is the nature] of terrestrial beings.

R. Tifdai said further in the name of R. Aha: The Holy One also declared: If I create man out of celestial elements, he will live [forever] and not die; if out of terrestrial elements, he will die and not live [in a future life]. Therefore I will create him out of both celestial and terrestrial elements. If he sins, he will die; if not, he will live in a future life.[2]

Things Created at Twilight on Sabbath Eve

67. Ten things were created on the eve of the Sabbath at twilight.[3] They are (1) the mouth of the earth [which engulfed Korah],[4] (2) the mouth of the well [which supplied Israel with water in the wilderness],[5] (3) the mouth of the ass [which spoke to Balaam],[6] (4) the rainbow [given as a sign after the flood],[7] (5) the manna [dropped from heaven], (6) the rod [of Moses],[8] (7) the shamir [a mythical creature employed for splitting stones at the building of the Temple],[9] (8) the shape of the written characters [on the Tablets],[10] (9) the writing,[11] and (10) the Tablets.[12] And some say; also the destructive forces [that afflict mankind], the grave of Moses,[13] and the ram of Abraham our father.[14] R. Judah said: Also the original tongs, for, as he put it, [in human conception] tongs can be made only by means of other tongs.[15]

The Order of, and Changes in, the Work of Creation

68. R. Jeremiah ben Eleazar said: With everything that was created during the six days of creation, God made certain stipulations, about which Scripture says, "I, even My hands, have stretched out the heavens, and all their host have I commanded" (Isa. 45:12). I commanded the Red Sea to split apart for Israel; I commanded heaven and earth to be silent before Moses; I commanded the sun and the moon to stand still before Joshua; I commanded the ravens to feed Elijah; I commanded the heavens to open before Ezekiel; I commanded the fish to spew out Jonah; I commanded the fire to do no hurt to Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah; I commanded the lions not to harm Daniel.[16]

---

1. Scripture spells va-yitzer here with two *yod*s not with one, as in verse 10, where the formation of animals is spoken of.
2. Gen. R. 14:3 (Soncino, p. 112). Or, as in Gen. R. TA, p. 128: "but when he dies, he will live forever."
3. At the end of the six days of creation prior to the first Sabbath.
4. "And if the Lord shall be found to have created a special creation, and the ground open her mouth, and swallow them up, with all that appertain unto them" (Num. 16:30).
5. Possibly the Well of Miriam, which may be the well referred to in Num. 21:16–18.
6. Num. 22:28–30.
7. Gen. 9:13–17.
8. Exod. 4:1–5.
9. "Iron is created to shorten man's life, whereas the altar was created to prolong man's life" (Mid 3:4 and MTeh 78:12 [YJS 2:30–35]). Hence, no iron was used in the building of the Temple.
10. "The letters having been cut right through, the stones were not only equally readable on both sides, but a letter such as the ancient ayin—which was O-shaped—could in such circumstances have been possible only by a miracle (see B. Shab 104a). This belief was based on Exod. 32:15: 'Tablets that were written on both their sides; on the one side and on the other were they written' " (J. Israelstam in Avot, Soncino, pp. 63–64, n. 7).
11. "And the writing was the writing of God" (Exod. 32:16). Others (e.g., Rashi) vocalize here in the Mishnah makhtev or mekhattev, "writing, or engraving, instrument" (J. Israelstam, in Avot, Soncino, pp. 63–64, n. 8).
12. "And the Tablets were the work of God" (Exod. 32:16).
13. Deut. 34:6.
14. Gen. 22:13. "It was ordained on the eve of the first Sabbath at twilight that a certain ram in Abraham's time should be ownerless (hefker), so that when Abraham would require one as a last-minute substitute for Isaac, he might find it ready at hand and could rightfully (i.e., without robbing anyone) appropriate it for a sacrifice" (J. Israelstam in Avot, Soncino, p. 64, n. 3, in which he quotes Israel Lipschütz, ad loc.).
15. "Who then made the tongs which held the first tongs while they were being made?" (Hertz, APB, p. 689). Avot 5:6. "All phenomena that seemed to partake at once of the natural and the supernatural were conceived as having had their origin in the interval between the close of the work of creation and the commencement of the Sabbath [APB, p. 200]. It is generally held that what is meant is that these things were created on the Sabbath eve at twilight, in posse, to become available in esse, when the right time for their use would arrive" (J. Israelstam in Avot, Soncino, p. 64, n. 5).

In his commentary on Avot, Menahem Ha-Meiri explains the meaning of the aforementioned miracles as follows: Immediately upon creation, certain principles of faith became obligatory: (1) that the wicked are punished, as intimated by the opening of the mouth of the earth; (2) that the righteous are rewarded, as intimated by the mouth of the well; (3) that God protects Israel, as intimated by Balaam's ass, which spoke; (4) that God also protects mankind, as signified by the rainbow (but for such protection, mankind would have perished during the flood); (5) that God's protection of Israel was to be made evident by the giving of manna and (6) the miracles performed in their behalf by the rod of Moses; (7) that the transcending significance of the Temple is attested by the miraculous character of the shamir; (8–9) that the wondrous nature of the Hebrew tongue was to be made evident by the shape of its characters and by the Divine Person who first wrote them; (10) that the Torah whose Tablets God wrought was revealed by Him; that the destructive passions without which no man would wed, beget children, or build a house are providential (MTeh 9:1 [YJS 1:131]). See Perushe ha-Mishnah le-ha-Meiri (Jerusalem, 1974), Avot 5:242. Avot 5:9; B. Pes 54a.
16. The incidents hinted at are described in Exod. 14, Deut. 32:1, Josh. 10, 1 Kings 17, Ezek. 1, Jon. 2, and Dan. 3 and 6. Gen. R. 5:5; Yalkut, Be-shallah, §238.

69. "I know that whatever God doeth, it shall be forever; nothing can be added to it, nor anything taken from it; yet [at times] God hath acted [exceptionally], that men should fear before Him" (Eccles. 3:14). R. Eleazar said: From the very beginning of His creation of the world, the Holy One issued a decree and commanded: "Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together unto one place [the sea]" (Gen. 1:9). Why then does Scripture elsewhere say twice, "Who summoned the waters of the sea and poured them out upon the face of the earth" (Amos 5:8 and 9:6)—once in the generation of Enosh and again in the generation of the dispersion of mankind?[1] Because in these instances "God acted [exceptionally]," in order "that men should fear before Him" (Eccles. 3:14). A parable of a province that rebelled against its king. So the king dispatched a fierce legion to march throughout the province in order that the people would see it and come to fear him. So, too, why does Scripture say, "He gathereth the waters of the sea as a [towering] heap, and layeth up the deeps in storehouses" (Ps. 33:7)? In order that "all the inhabitants of the world may stand in awe of Him" (Ps. 33:8).

Another comment: The Holy One so created the world that day should be day and night should be night. Along came Jacob and turned day into night, since for his sake the Holy One had the sun set before its proper time;[2] and Joshua came and turned night into day.[3] Thus the righteous both diminish and add to the words of the Holy One, so that mortals may fear Him.

Likewise, the Holy One created the world that the sea should be sea and the dry land should be dry land. Moses came and turned the sea into dry land,[4] and Elisha came and turned the dry land into sea.[5]

So, too, the Holy One created the winter that it should be winter and the summer should be summer. Elijah came and turned the winter into rainless summer,[6] and Samuel came and turned the summer into [the rainy season], winter.[7]

So, too, the Holy One created [the world] that the realms above should be for celestial beings and the realms below for terrestrial beings, for, as Scripture says, "The heavens are the heavens of the Lord, but the earth hath He given to the children of men" (Ps. 115:16). Moses came and converted the realms below into realms above and the realms above into realms below, as Scripture says, "Moses went up unto God" (Exod. 19:3) and "the Lord came down upon Mount Sinai" (Exod. 19:20).[8]

1. During these two generations there was a partial flood (PR 48:2 [YJS 2; 816–17]), which seemingly reversed His decree that the waters should be gathered in one place and stay there.
2. See Gen. R. 68:10.
3. See Josh. 10:12.
4. Exod. 14:21.
5. 2 Kings 3:16ff.
6. 1 Kings 17:1.
7. 1 Sam. 12:17.
8. Gen. R. 5:6; Duet. R. 10:2; and Eccles. R. 3:14, §1.

The Handiwork of the Holy One

70. In the Torah, Moses set down many matters that remained obscure until David arose and clarified them. Thus we find in the account of creation that after He had created heaven and earth, He created the light, for it says, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth" (Gen. 1:1), and then, "God said: "Let there be light' " (Gen. 1:3). But David clarified the sequence in creation. After God created the light, He created the heaven, for, as David stated in a psalm: "Thou didst cover Thyself with light as with a garment" (Ps. 104:2), and then, "Thou didst spread out the heaven like a curtain" (ibid.).[9] And so we learn that only after He created light did He create heaven.

Three creations preceded the making of the world: water, wind (spirit), and fire.[10] Water conceived and gave birth to thick darkness,[11] fire conceived and gave birth to light, wind (spirit) conceived and gave birth to wisdom. The world is maintained by means of these six creations: by wind (spirit), wisdom, fire, light, darkness, and water.[12]

"Bless the Lord, O my soul" (Ps. 104:1). When a man sees a beautiful pillar, he exclaims: Blessed be He who created the quarry from which the pillar was hewn. Blessed be He who hewed out the pillar, bringing it into being with a mere word.[13] Blessed art thou, O world, in which the Holy One is King.

"O Lord my God, Thou art very great" (Ps. 104:1). When a king of flesh and blood engraves his image on a wooden tablet, the tablet, it goes without saying, is larger than the image on it. But since He, may His Name be blessed, who wrought worlds is very great, His image [man] must also be very great, [so that by comparison] the world [the tablet on which the image appears] is small, for man, God's image, is greater than the world, [even as God], to whom it is said, "O Lord my God, Thou art very great," [is ever so much greater than man].

"Thou didst cover Thyself with light as with a garment" (Ps. 104:1). After God covered Himself with light, He proceeded to create the world.

"Thou didst spread out the heaven like a curtain" (Ps. 104:2). When a man builds a house, he builds the upper story last. But God did not do so,[14] for after He spread—stretched out—the roof. He built the top story;[15]

9. "This is not a contradiction, but rather shows that, in view of David's statement, Gen. 1:1f. must be translated: In the beginning of God's creating the heaven and the earth, God said: Let there be light (cf. Rashi, ad loc.)" (S. M. Lehrman in Exod. R., Soncino, p. 188, n. 1).
10. The three are not, accordingly, to be regarded as eternal, uncreated matter, which formed God's raw material, as it were.
11. The commentator perhaps finds this intimated in the words "and darkness [appeared] on the face of the deep" (Gen. 1:2)—on the watery deep, that is.
12. All six are mentioned in Ps. 104. So Yede Moshe, ad loc.
13. So emended by Yefeh Toar on Exod. R. 15:22.
14. He first made the heavens. Such is the view of the school of Shammai. See above in this chapter, §13.
15. Under this roof.

and after He built the top story, He suspended it above the earth's atmosphere, resting on nothing.[1] After that, He formed clouds as His chariot, with its base on a whirlwind.

"Who layest the beams of water for Thine upper chambers" (Ps. 104:3)—beams not of brass or iron, but of jetting columns of water. [Then He built the top stories] not with stone or hewn blocks, but with walls of congealed water.

"Who makest the clouds Thy chariot" (Ps. 104:3). A man makes his chariot sturdy—of brass or iron, of silver or gold—so that it will bear all his weight. But God, may His Name be blessed, makes His chariot of clouds—though clouds have no substance, yet He makes His chariot of clouds.

"Who walkest upon the wings of the wind" (Ps. 104:3). A man confronted by ground so swampy that one sinks into it will walk on stepping stones, which are hard. But not God. He walks upon the wings of the wind; abandoning the cloud that is visible, He chooses to walk upon the wind, which is invisible.

"Who makest winds Thy messengers" (Ps. 104:4). A mortal will enlist men who are strong and sturdy as his soldiers, and will have them wear helmets and mail, and carry weapons. But the Holy One makes winds His messengers—He enlists soldiers who are invisible: "His messengers [are followed by] flaming fire, His ministers" (ibid.). The wind comes first, and then lightning [His weapon].

"Who didst establish the earth upon its foundations. . . . [Then] Thou didst cover it with a vesture" (Ps. 104:5–6). At first He made the deep without a vesture[2] and the earth with a vesture [of water]. As in the parable of a man with two servants who stripped the vesture off one and put it on the other, God said, "Let the waters be gathered . . . so that the part that is to be dry be seen" (Gen. 1:9), thus laying bare the earth and covering the deep.

"The waters stood above the mountains" (Ps. 104:6). A parable of a man who saw his vat full of grapes, while his vineyard was ready for further vintaging. What did he do? He first trod on the grapes in the vat, little by little pressing them down. Then, when he brought in the rest of the grapes from the vineyard, the vat was able to contain them all. Likewise, the world was full of water upon water, and the earth was sunk deep in the water. And so when the Holy One said, "Let the dry land appear" (Gen. 1:9), the waters replied: Behold, we fill the whole world; if we hardly had sufficient room hitherto, where shall we go now? At that, the Holy One tamped down the waters of the Great Ocean and slew its prince, as is said, "With His power He made the sea shrink, and by His understanding He smote through Rahab"[3] (Job 26:12). After He slew him, the waters wept. Indeed, they still weep to this day. Why did God slay Rahab? Because a place that can hold a hundred living can hold a thousand dead.

"At Thy rebuke they fled, at the voice of Thy thunder they hasted away" (Ps. 104:7). At the sound of the Ocean's cry, the waters elsewhere fled but did not know where they were to flee. "They went up mountains, they went down into the valleys—unto the place which Thou hadst founded for them" (Ps. 104:8). They were like a slave to whom his master said, "Wait for me in the marketplace," without specifying the particular spot. The slave pondered: Maybe he wanted me to wait at the forum, or at the bathhouse, or at the theater. When the master came and found the servant, he slapped him on the cheek, saying, "I sent you to the gate of the prefect's palace!"[4] So, too, when the waters heard, "Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together in one place" (Gen. 1:9), God did not let them know whether it was to be in the north or in the south. So they went to and fro—"they went up mountains, they came down into valleys" (Ps. 104:8). The Holy One struck them a blow, saying: I told you to go to the place of Leviathan [the sea], "unto this place which Thou hadst founded for them" (Ps. 104:8).[5]

"Thou didst set a bound which they should not pass over" (Ps. 104:9). Just like a man who brings his cattle into the shed and bolts the lock so that they should not go out and eat the corn in the fields, so, too, did God enclose the sea with sand and make it swear that it would not go beyond the sand.

"Thou causest springs to gush forth in torrents, after they make their way from between the mountains" (Ps. 104:10). Just like a man who has two bales of olive pulp and presses each with the pressing beam so that pure oil spurts down [into the vat], so, too, a mountain on one side and a mountain on the other side compressed the springs, and from between the mountains clear water gushed forth in torrents.[6]

In the World's Praise

71. "And God saw everything that He had made, and, behold, it was very good" (Gen. 1:31). R. Tanhuma began his discourse with the verse "He has made everything beautiful in its time" (Eccles. 3:11), a verse that implies that the world was created in its proper time, and before that it was not deemed right for the world to be created. As R. Abbahu said: From this verse it may be deduced

---

1. "The conception is of an upper world ('the roof') resting on heaven ('the top story'), which in turn is suspended on nothing above the world, i.e., [above] the earth" (S. M. Lehrman in Exod. R., Soncino, p. 189, n. 2).
2. "The deep was naked before Him, Abaddon had no vesture" (Job 26:6), while the earth was covered with water. But then God covered the deep with the water that hitherto had covered the earth. So A. A. Ha-Levi in his edition of Exod. R., p. 198.
3. The prince of the Ocean is called Rahab [Rahav].
4. "And you should have understood that!"
5. The waters, to be sure, were told to go to "this place which Thou hadst founded for them." But how were they to know where "this place" was? The commentator, however, identifies "this place" as the sea, because later in the same psalm the word "this" in the phrase "This is Leviathan" (Ps. 104:26) clearly refers to the sea; in rabbinic commentary, Leviathan is a synonym for the sea. From the occurrence of "this" in both verses, he infers that in each instance God directed the waters to the sea, a direction they should have understood. The phrase "This is Leviathan" is cited in Exod. R. 15:22 and Tanhuma, Hayye Sarah, §3, BR's sources for the passage.
6. Exod. R. 15:22, Tanhuma, Hayye Sarah, §3.

that the Holy One kept creating worlds and destroying them, creating worlds and destroying them, until He created these [heaven and earth]. Then He said: Those did not please Me, but these do please Me.[1]

72. "And God saw everything that He had made, and [said], Would that[2] at all times it were very good." R. Hama bar Hanina told the parable of a king who built a palace. When he looked at it, it pleased him, and he said: O palace, palace, may you find favor in my eyes at all times just as you find favor in my eyes at this moment, So, too, the Holy One said to His world: My world, My world, may you find favor in My eyes at all times just as you find favor in My eyes at this moment.[3]

73. "And on the seventh day God finished" (Gen. 2:2). Isn't this statement curious?[4] Geniva explained it by the parable of a king who made a bridal chamber, which he painted and decorated. Now, what did the bridal chamber still lack? The bride to enter it. So, too, what did the world still lack? The Sabbath.[5]

74. "[In Eden] . . . He put the man whom He had formed" (Gen. 2:8). If one dare say such a thing, the Holy One exults in His world, saying: Behold the creature I made, the shape I formed.[6]

"These are the generations of the heaven and of the earth when they were created" (Gen 2:4). Since their Creator praises them, who dare disparage them? Since their Creator lauds them, who dare find fault with them? Indeed, heaven and earth are beautiful and worthy of praise.[7]

Eve

75. "But for Adam there was not found a helpmeet for him" (Gen. 2:20). For God had caused all cattle, beasts, and birds to pass before Adam in pairs [male and female]. Said Adam: Every one has a mate, yet I have none!

And why did God not create a mate for Adam at the beginning? Because the Holy One foresaw that Adam would bring charges against Eve. Therefore He did not create her until Adam expressly asked for her. As soon as he did, at once "God causes a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept" (Gen. 2:21).[8]

76. "And the Lord God built (va-yiven) the rib" (Gen. 2:22). R. Joshua of Sikhnin said in the name of R. Levi: The text says va-yiven, which can also mean, "He considered well (hitbonen)[9] from what part to create her." God said: I will not create her from Adam's head, lest she be conceited; nor from the eye, lest she be a coquette; nor from the ear, lest she be an eavesdropper; [nor from the neck, lest she be haughty];[10] nor from the mouth, lest she be a gossip; nor from the heart, lest she be prone to jealousy; nor from the hand, lest she be light-fingered; nor from the foot, lest she be a gadabout—so He made her from the rib, a part most modest and chaste. Still, even though, as He was creating each and every member of her body, He kept saying, "Be modest, be chaste," "Ye have [nevertheless] set at naught all My counsel" (Prov. 1:25), for all the aforementioned undesirable qualities are in her.[11]

77. R. Hanina son of R. Idi said: [The letter samekh appears here for the first time in the Torah, which implies that] at Eve's creation, Satan was created with her.[12]

78. A Caesar once said to Rabban Gamaliel:[13] "Your God is a thief, for it is written, 'And the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and He took one of his ribs' " (Gen. 2:21). Rabban Gamaliel's daughter said, "Leave him to me and I will answer him." [Turning to Caesar], she said, "Send me a police officer." "Why do you need one?" he asked. She replied, "Thieves came to us during the night and took a silver pitcher from us, leaving one of gold in its place." "Would that such a thief came to us every day," he exclaimed. "Ah!" said she, "was it not Adam's gain that he was deprived of a rib and given a wife to serve him?"[14]

79. R. Simeon ben Menasya expounded the verse "And with the rib which the Lord God had taken from the man, He plaited the hair (banah) of the woman[15] and brought her unto the man" (Gen. 2:22). The word banah suggests that the Holy One plaited Eve's hair and brought her [thus adorned] to Adam, for in cities far beyond the sea a woman's plaited hair is called binyata.[16]

---

1. R. Abbahu may construe hinneh ("behold") as derived from hnh ("to please") and so reads Gen. 1:31: "And God saw all that he made, which, being good, pleased Him." Gen. R. 9:2; MTeh 34:1; Exod. R. 30:3.
2. The word hinneh ("behold" is taken to be a variant of hen ("would that").
3. Gen. R. 9:4.
4. Did not God finish His work of creation in six days? Why then does Scripture say He finished on the seventh day?
5. Geniva construes va-yekhal ("finished") as derived from the root kallah ("bride") and so he reads the verse: "On the seventh day He invited the bride to enter." Gen. R. 10:9.
6. An implication drawn from the fact that Scripture has already stated in Gen. 2:7 that God had formed man. Why then the repetition?
7. The phrase "These are" is understood to mean that, like a craftsman, God points to the excellence of what He has made. Gen. R. 12:1.
8. Gen. R. 17:4.
9. The commentator regards va-yiven as a form of bin ("understand").
10. Interpolated by BR.
11. Gen. R. 18:2; Deut. R. 6:11; Tanhuma, Va-yeshev, §6.
12. In "And He closed up (va-yisgor) the place with flesh" (Gen. 2:21), the verb sgr ("close up") begins with the letter samekh. R. Hanina takes the letter to hint the presence of Satan, who personifies evil passions. The word "Satan," usually spelled with a sin, is for the purpose of the comment spelled with a samekh. Gen. R. 17:6.
13. Gamaliel II, who visited Rome twice, once during the reign of Domitian and again during that of Nerva, his successor (end of the first century C.E.).
14. B. Sanh 39a.
15. JV: "And the rib, which the Lord God had taken from the man, made He (banah) a woman."
16. B. Ber 6la; B. Er 18a; MTeh 25:11.

80. "And He [Himself] brought her to Adam" (Gen. 2:22). These words intimate that the Holy One acted for Adam as the one who escorted Eve. No, said R. Judah son of R. Simon: Michael and Gabriel were Adam's escorts who brought in Eve.[1]

81. It is taught in the name of R. Simeon ben Yohai: God Himself adorned Eve like a bride and brought her to Adam. In this connection, R. Hama bar Hanina said: What do you suppose—that He brought Eve to Adam [as one might bring something found] under a carob tree or a sycamore tree? The fact is that only after He had decked her out with twenty-four kinds of finery[2] did He bring her to Adam. Thus Scripture: "Thou wast in Eden the garden of God; every precious stone was thy covering" (Ezek. 28:13).[3]

82. "And Adam said: Zot ha-paam," etc. (Gen. 2:23).[4] If paam here is taken to mean "bell," as in the phrase "a golden bell (paamon)" (Exod. 28:34), Adam said of Eve, "This is the one whose impending arrival rang like a bell through me (mephaamtani) all night," a woman's capacity to do so being intimated, said Resh Lakish, in the fact that Eve made her first appearance before Adam during a dream [in the night].[5]

The Serpent and Sin

83. "God made Adam upright" (Eccles. 7:29). Adam was upright and straightforward, it being said of him, "Behold, Adam is as one of us" (Gen. 3:22), as one of the ministering angels. However, once Adam and Eve became a pair, "they sought out many inventions" (Eccles. 7:29).[6]

84. R. Judah ben Tema used to say: Adam reclined in the Garden of Eden, while ministering angels, hovering over him, roasted flesh and strained wine for him. When the serpent looked in and saw the honor bestowed on him, he became envious.[7]

85. "Now the serpent was most subtle" (Gen. 3:1). The serpent reasoned to himself: If I go and speak to Adam, I know that he will not listen to me, for it is difficult to lead a man away from his own mind. So I shall go and speak to Eve, for I know that she will listen to me, since women are light-headed and easily led by everybody.

"For God doth know" (Gen. 3:5). R. Judah of Sikhnin said in the name of R. Levi: The serpent spoke slander against his Creator, saying to Eve: Our Creator ate of this tree and then created the world. And because every craftsman hates to have a rival in his craft, He said to you, "You shall not eat of it," so that you might not create other worlds.

[The serpent also said to Eve]: Whatever was created after its companion dominates it. Now, Adam was created after all creatures in order to rule over all of them. So make haste and eat [of the tree] before God creates other worlds which will rule over both of you.

Then the serpent touched the tree with his hands and feet, shaking it until its fruit fell to the ground. The tree then cried out: Villain, do not touch me—"Let not the foot of pride overtake me, and let not the hand of the wicked shake me" (Ps. 36:12). The serpent said to the woman, "Look, I touched the tree, yet I did not die. You, too, if you touch it, will not die." Right away, he pushed her and she touched the tree.

When she saw the angel of death coming toward her, she said, "Woe is me! I am as good as dead, and the Holy One will make another woman and give her to Adam." Immediately, "she took of its fruit and ate; and she also gave some to her husband, and he ate" (Gen. 3:6).

R. Aibu said: She squeezed grapes[8] and gave the juice to Adam.

R. Simlai said: She came at him with her answers all rehearsed, saying to him, "What do you suppose—that I will die and another Eve will be created for you? [There will be no new Eve]—'there is nothing new under the sun' [Eccles. 1:9]. Or that I will die and you will have no obligations? 'He created it not a waste, He formed it to be inhabited' " (Isa. 45:18). But our masters maintained: She raised her voice in howling at him, as is said, "Because thou hast hearkened unto the [loud] voice of thy wife" (Gen. 3:17).

["And she also gave unto her husband" (Gen. 3:6).] The world "also" is a word that suggests she also gave the fruit to others to eat, to cattle, beasts, and birds. All obeyed her, except for a certain bird named hol (phoenix), of which it is said, "I shall die with my nest, yet I shall multiply my days as the hol"[9] (Job 29:18). The school of R. Yannai maintained: The hol lives a thousand years. At the end of a thousand years, a fire issues from its nest and burns it up, yet of the bird a piece the size of an egg is left; it grows new limbs and lives again. But R. Yudan son of R. Simeon said: At the end of a thousand years, its body dries up and its wings drop off, yet of the bird a piece the size of an egg is left; it grows new limbs and lives again.[10]

86. "And the woman said unto the serpent" (Gen. 3:2). Now, where was Adam during this conversation? Abba bar Guria said: He had [engaged in intercourse and] fallen asleep. But the sages said: At that time the Holy One was taking him around the entire world, saying to him: Here is a place fit for planting trees, here is a place fit for sowing cereals.[11]

---

1. Michael represents mercy and love; Gabriel represents stern justice. Hence, the presence of the two angels may perhaps signify the alternatives that Adam and Eve had before them, whereas God's presence symbolizes a yearning father's blessing. Gen. R. 18:3.
2. The ones mentioned in Isa. 3:18–24.
3. Gen. R. 18:1.
4. Gen. 2:23 will apparently be construed: "This one rings through me as though it were a bone of my bones and flesh of my flesh." JV: "This is now bone of my bones and flesh of my flesh." Gen. R. 18:4.
5. Thus Eve was, so to speak, created out of a dream. Gen. R. 18:4.
6. Eccles. R. 7:29, §1.
7. B. Sanh 59b.
8. See below in this chapter, §91.
9. JV: "as the phoenix."
10. Gen. R. 19:4–5; PRE 13; MhG Gen., pp. 95–96; ARNA, p. 2b (YJS, p. 9); ARNB, 2b–3a (trans. Saldarini, pp. 33–34): Yalkut, Bereshit, §27.
11. Gen. R. 19:3.

87. R. Simeon ben Yohai said: By what parable may what happened to Eve and Adam [at that time] be illustrated? By the parable of a man who had a wife at home. He went and brought a cask, and put a certain number of figs and a certain number of nuts into it. Then he caught a scorpion and put it at the mouth of the cask, sealed the cask with a tight-fitting lid, and put it in a corner. "My dear," he said to her, "everything I have in this house is in your hands, except this cask, which you may not touch at all because there is a scorpion in it."

When her husband left for the marketplace, an old woman came calling on her, like those who drop in to borrow a little vinegar. The woman asked, "How does your husband treat you?" The wife replied, "My husband treats me wonderfully—he has given me authority over everything he owns, except for this cask." The old woman said, "Very likely all his precious jewels are inside it. And he didn't tell you that, because he intends to marry another woman and give them to her." What did the wife do then? She proceeded to open the cask and put her hand into it. Whereupon the scorpion stung her. She stepped back and collapsed upon her couch.

When her husband returned from the marketplace, he asked, "What is this?" "I put my hand in the cask," she replied, "and a scorpion stung me, and now I am dying." "Did I not tell you in the beginning" he cried out, "everything I own in this house is in your hands except this cask, which you may not touch at all?" He grew angry at her and no longer thought of her as his wife.[1]

88. "[The trees] were heard voicing amazement: 'There walking about is the thief (gannav) [at whose formation the epithets] Lord and God [were used]' " (Gen. 3:8).[2] Thus, the trees were saying, "That one walking about turned out to be a thief, a deceiver who even sought to deceive his Creator."

Or, the verse is read, "The ministering angels were heard voicing delight:[3] 'That one walking about will soon be dead and gone.' "[4]

89. "Cursed to the ground on account of thee" (Gen. 3:17). Why curse the ground? It is like a man who says, "Cursed be the breast that suckled such a person."[5]

The Tree of Life and the Tree of Knowledge

90. The tree of life—meaning the tree that spreads its branches over all things alive. R. Judah bar Ilai said: The tree of life spread over an area that at an ordinary rate of speed would require five hundred years to traverse, and all the primeval waters branched out in streams from under it. It was not only that its boughs required a five hundred years' journey—even to go around its trunk required a five hundred years' journey.[6]

91. What kind of tree did Adam and Eve eat of? Wheat, according to R. Meir. When a man has no understanding, people say of him: He has never put bread made of wheat [the source of wisdom] into his mouth.[7] (R. Samuel son of R. Isaac put the following question to R. Ze'era: "How can you say it was a grain—wheat?" "Nevertheless, it was so," R. Ze'era replied. R. Samuel argued: "But Scripture speaks of a tree." R. Ze'era replied: "[In the Garden of Eden] stalks of wheat were like trees, for they grew to the height of cedars of Lebanon."

[Adam ate] grapes, according to R. Judah bar Ilai, for Scripture says, "Grapes of gall, they have clusters of bitterness" (Deut. 32:32)—those grape clusters brought bitterness into the world.

According to R. Abba of Acco, it was the etrog,[8] for it is said, "And the woman saw that the tree [its wood] was good for food" (Gen. 3:6). Go forth and see what tree there is whose wood, like its fruit, may be eaten. You will find none but the etrog.

R. Yose said: They were figs, as may be inferred from the context. A parable of a king's son who disgraced himself with one of the maidservants. When the king heard of it, he deprived his son of high rank and expelled him from the palace. The son then went about to the doorways of the other maidservants, and none would take him in. But she who disgraced herself with him opened the door of her house and received him. So, too, when Adam ate of that tree, the Holy One deprived him of lofty status and expelled him from the Garden of Eden. Adam then went about among all the trees, but none would receive him. (What did they say to him? They said, so R. Berekhiah taught, Behold the thief who sought to deceive his Creator. "Let not the foot of pride come unto me" [Ps. 36:12]—the foot that stepped forward in pride toward its Creator; "and let not the hand of the wicked shake me" [ibid.] to take even one leaf from me.) But the fig tree whose fruit Adam had eaten opened its doors [so to speak] and received him, as is said, "They sewed fig leaves together" (Gen. 3:7).

---

1. ARNA 3b (YJS 12–13); ARNB 4a (trans. Saldarini, pp. 35–36); PRE 13; Gen. R. 19:10.
2. The word va-yishmeu ("they heard") is read va-yashmiu ("caused to be heard, were heard"). The reference to the Lord God in the verse is understood to allude to the exceptional use of both "Lord" and "God" in the account of the formation of Adam and Eve (Gen. 2:7 and 2:22). Finally, ba-gan ("in the garden"), is transposed to read as though it were a contraction of gannav ("thief, deceiver"). JV: "And they heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden."
3. Some ministering angels, unhappy to begin with at the making of man (see above in this chapter, §46), were naturally delighted about what they believed to be the imminence of his death.
4. The verb mt'hlk appears to be used in a dual sense: "walking"; and also, by dividing it into mt ("dead") and hlk ("gone"), "dead and gone." Gen. R. 19:8. Or: They heard the voice of the trees saying, Here is the one who stole the Lord God's mind, and the voice of the ministering angels saying, Here is the one who walketh to his death. So Leon Nemoy.
5. Gen. R. 5:9.
6. Gen. R. 15:6, Song R. 6:9, §2–3.
7. Wheat was the first cereal to be domesticated. Hence it is considered both source and symbol of wisdom.
8. A citron used during the Feast of Sukkot (Tabernacles).

The sages taught in the name of R. Joshua ben Levi: Heaven forbid [that we should try to guess the identity of the tree]. The Holy One did not reveal it, nor will He reveal it, for He who is everywhere spares [the honor of a tree,[1] even as He spares] man's honor.[2]

The Primeval Serpent

92. Our masters taught: The primeval serpent set its eyes on that which was not meant for it; what it sought was not given to it, and what it had was taken away from it. The Holy One said: I declared, "Let the serpent be king over all cattle and beasts," but now, "cursed art thou above all cattle and above every beast of the field" (Gen. 3:14). I declared: Let the serpent walk with an erect posture, but now, "upon thy belly shalt thou go" (ibid.). I declared: Let its food be the same as man's, but now, "dust shalt thou eat" (ibid.). The serpent said: I will slay Adam and wed Eve. But now, "I will put enmity between thee and the woman" (Gen. 3:15).[3]

93. R. Simeon ben Menasya said: What a pity that a great servant was lost to the world! Had the serpent not been cursed, everyone in Israel would have had two useful serpents at his beck and call, and would have been able to send one north and the other south to bring him valuable sardonyx, precious stones, pearls of purest ray, and every kind of exquisite thing of great worth in the world. Not only that, but the serpent could have been used instead of a camel or donkey or mule, for a strap could have been fastened under its tail and it would then have brought earth and manure for everyone's garden and wasteland.[4]

Adam after the Sin

94. What was Adam's garment [before his sin]: A fragrant mist of onycha[5] and a divine aura of glory covered him. After he ate the fruit of the tree, the onycha's mist was divested from him, the aura of glory departed from him, and he saw himself naked.[6]

95. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: Adam's body reached from one end of the world to the other. But after he acted offensively, the Holy One laid His hand upon him and diminished him, as is said, "Thou hast hemmed me in behind and before, so that Thou wast able to lay Thy hand upon me" (Ps. 139:5).[7]

96. "[Speed in] heaven and [growth on] the earth were diminished (va-yekhullu)" (Gen. 2:1).[8] R. Efes—so said R. Hoshaia—preached in Antioch,[9] saying that the word va-yekhullu refers to God's punitive measures, which led to diminution in the speed of growth. To illustrate with a parable: When a king entered a province, the people in the province praised him greatly, and their praise was pleasing to him. So he increased the number of fleet-footed runners and rapidly moving chariots in the local arena. Later on, when the people in the province angered him, he reduced the number of such runners and chariots. Likewise, before Adam sinned, the constellations revolved in short courses and at great speed [bringing springtime sooner and causing greater speed in the growth of vegetation]. But after Adam sinned, God made the constellations revolve in long courses and at a slow pace. Thus, by way of an example which R. Phinehas cited in the name of R. Hanan of Sepphoris, nowadays white figs produce their fruit only once in three years, whereas at their creation[10] they produced fruit that very day. However, in the time-to-come the Holy One will [again speed up the growth of vegetation and thus] heal the injury inflicted; as is said, "He will heal the injury it has suffered" (Isa. 30:26),[11] meaning that He will heal the injury the world has suffered.[12]

97. R. Berekhiah said in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman: Though all living things [such as white figs] came into being in the fullness of their growth, they shriveled up as soon as Adam sinned and will not return to their perfection until a scion of Perez [the Messiah][13] comes. [To summarize]: After Adam sinned, the Holy One deprived Adam of six things: splendor of visage, lofty stature, life without death, perfection of the earth's fruit, the Garden of Eden, and brilliance of the luminaries in heaven. In the time-to-come, the Holy One will restore them.[14]

98. Our masters taught: When Adam on the day of his creation saw the sun sinking in the sky before him, he said, "Woe is me! Because I acted offensively, the world is darkening for me and is about to return to darkness and desolation—indeed, this is the death that Heaven has decreed for me." So he sat down to fast and to weep throughout the night, while Eve wept beside him. But when the dawn began slowly rising like a column, he said, "Such

---

1. That it be not said, "Through this tree Adam brought death to the world."
2. Gen. R. 15:7.
3. B. Sot 9b.
4. B. Sanh 59b; ARN 1.
5. An incense used in the Temple.
6. PRE 14.
7. B. Sanh 38b.
8. JV: "The heaven and the earth were finished." But klh, the root of va-yekhullu, can mean "finish" and "reduce, diminish."
9. The capital of Syria on the Orontes, founded by Seleucus Nicator.
10. Plants were created on the third day, while Adam was made on the sixth day, the very day he sinned. See Gen. 1:11–12 and 1:26–27.
11. The context of the passage is messianic.
12. Gen. R. 10:4.
13. Throughout Scripture the word tldt [toledot] ("generations") is written defectively, lacking one or even both vavs. But in describing the generations of heaven and earth (Gen. 2:4), and in setting down the generations of Perez (Ruth 4:18), the word tldt is spelled out—thus; twldvt or toledot, with two vavs. Hence it is concluded that at the Messiah's coming, all things created will return to their perfection.
14. The restoration of these six is taken to be intimated by inclusion of the vav in toledot, a letter whose numerical value is six. Gen. R. 12:6; Tanhuma, Bereshit, §6.

is the way of nature, and I did not realize it," and then proceeded to offer up a bullock.[1]

99. R. Yose said: There was the thought [in God's mind] that fire be brought into being on Sabbath eve. In the event, it was brought into being at Sabbath's outgoing. At Sabbath's outgoing the Holy One gave Adam knowledge that partook of the knowledge that is above, and he procured two flints which he struck one against the other. From these issued fire, and over it Adam uttered the blessing "[Blessed be Thou] who createst divers lights of fire."[2]

100. Others of our masters taught: When Adam saw the day gradually diminishing, he said, "Woe is me! Perhaps because I acted offensively, the world around me is growing darker and darker, and is about to return to chaos and confusion, and this is the death Heaven has decreed for me." He then sat eight days in fast and prayer. But when the winter solstice arrived, and he saw the days getting gradually longer, he said, "Such is the way of the world," and proceeded to observe eight days of festivity. The following year he observed both the eight days preceding and the eight days following the solstice as days of festivity.[3]

Cain and Abel

101. "Cain said to Abel his brother" (Gen. 4:8). What Cain said to Abel was: Come and let us divide the world between us. Abel replied: Very well. So Cain said: You take chattel, and I will take land.[4] And it was stipulated between them that neither should have any claim against the other about this division.

Nevertheless, when Abel proceeded to graze the flock, Cain said: The land you are standing on is mine. Abel replied: The wool you are wearing is mine. "Strip!" said Abel. "Seat!" said Cain. At that, "Cain rose up against Abel his brother" (Gen. 4:8). [The meaning of "rose up" will be explained in what follows]: Cain proceeded to chase Abel from hill to dale and from dale to hill, until the two grappled. Abel overcame Cain, so that Cain fell underneath Abel. Cain, aware how badly it was going with him, began to plead aloud: Abel my brother, there are only two of us in the world. What are you going to tell our father? . . . Abel, filled with compassion for his brother, let him go. At once Cain rose up against him and slew him. For the verse "Cain rose up against Abel his brother, and slew him" (ibid.) implies that at first Cain had been underneath Abel.

How did he slay him? Cain took a stone and inflicted many contusions and bruises on Abel's arms and legs, for he did not know what part of the body the soul goes out of, until, when he got to his neck, Abel died.

After he slew him, Cain said: I must flee from my father and mother. Since, except for Abel and me, there is no one else in the world, they will demand an accounting from me. Immediately the Holy One revealed Himself to him, saying, "You may flee from your parents, but not from Me. 'Can any hide himself in secret places that I shall not see him?' [Jer. 23:24]. 'Where is Abel thy brother?' " (Gen. 4:9). Cain replied, "I do not know. Why ask me about him? I should be asking You where he is!" "O wicked one," the Holy One replied, "the voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me" (Gen. 4:10).

God's reply may be illustrated by the parable of a man who entered a garden patch, took some mulberries, and ate them. When the owner ran after him, saying, "What's in your hands?" and the man replied, "Nothing," the owner said, "But your hands are stained!"

Or God's reply may also be illustrated by the parable of a man who entered a pasture, seized a kid, and slung it over his back. When the owner of the pasture ran after him, saying, "What are you holding?" and the man replied, "Nothing," the owner said, "But the kid is bleating behind your back!"

"The voice of thy brother's blood cries out against Me[5] from the ground" (Gen. 4:10). R. Simeon ben Yohai said: This verse is all but intolerable to recite and impossible to explain. For it seems to regard Cain and Abel as two gladiators, wrestling in the king's presence [in an arena, where] if the king desires it, he may separate them; or if he does not desire to separate them, and one gladiator prevails over the other and is about to kill him, the other may cry out, "Who will intercede for me with the king?"[6] [Therefore God said: Since I, the King, did not interfere between Cain and Abel] "The voice of thy brother's blood cries out against Me."

Another comment. Cain said to God, "Am I [expected to be] my brother's keeper?" (Gen. 4:9). You are the keeper of all creatures, yet You call me to account for him. Cain's question may be understood by the parable of a thief who stole some vessels during the night and was not caught. The following morning, the gatekeeper did catch him and asked, "Why did you steal the vessels?" The thief replied, "I, thief that I am, did not slacken at my trade, but you—your trade is to keep watch at the gate. Why did you slacken in your occupation?" Accordingly, Cain's question is in fact a defiant assertion: I slew Abel—it was You who created in me the impulse to evil. But You are the keeper of all things—yet You let me slay him. It is You who slew him. Had You accepted my offering as You did his, I would not have been jealous of him. Immediately the Holy One countered, "What have you done? 'The voice of thy brother's blood crieth' " (Gen. 4:10). Then [in self-defense] Cain pleaded: Master of the universe, I never in

---

1. B. AZ 8a.
2. B. Pes 54a; Gen. R. 11:2.
3. B. AZ 8a.
4. Scripture does not tell what Cain said. So, in view of the fact that Cain brought an offering of the fruit of the earth, while Abel brought of the firstlings of his flock, it is surmised that each offering represented the share in the world that each brother had taken.
5. Since "unto Me" is regarded as unnecessary, the word elay ("unto Me") is read alay ("Against Me").
6. The spectators in the arena sometimes asked the king to spare the life of the gladiator who was down. See Ignaz Ziegler, Die Königsgleichnisse des Midrasch (Breslau, 1908), p. 312.

my life knew or saw anyone slain. How was I to know that if I struck Abel with a stone, he would die? Cain went on, "Is my sin so great that it cannot be borne?" (Gen. 4:13).[1] He said further: Master of the universe, are there, in Your presence, informers who come up to denounce a person before You? My father and mother are on the earth, and yet they do not know that I slew Abel. You are in heaven—how do You know? The Holy One replied: Fool! The whole world, all of it, I bear. Cain then said: The whole world, all of it, You bear, yet my sin You cannot bear! "Is my sin so great that it cannot be borne?"

[Now that Cain spoke of his act as a sin], the Holy One said: Since you vowed repentance, go forth as a wandering exile from this place, "and Cain went out from the presence of the Lord and dwelt in the land as a wanderer" (Gen. 4:16).[2]

As he went forth, wherever he walked, the earth quaked beneath him,[3] and all animals, wild and tame, shaken at the sight of him said, "What sort of a creature is this?" Then, to one another, "Cain has slain his brother Abel; so the Holy One has decreed for Cain, 'A fugitive and a wanderer shalt thou be' [Gen. 4:12]. Let's go at him and devour him," and they surrounded him and came at him to exact reckoning for Abel's blood.

The tears began to flow from Cain's eyes as he said:

Whither shall I go
From Thy spirit?
Or whither shall I flee
From Thy Presence?
If I ascend up into heaven,
Thou art there;
If I make my bed in the nether world,
Behold, Thou art there.
If I take the wings of the morning,
Or dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea;
Even there would Thy hand
Apprehend me,
And Thy right hand would Seize me (Ps. 139:7–10).

At that, the Holy One [reassuring him] said, "Whosoever slayeth Cain, sevenfold vengeance shall be taken on him" (Gen. 4:15).[4]

102. After Abel was slain, he was lying in a field, his blood spattered over sticks and stones. The dog who had been guarding Abel's flock now also guarded Abel's corpse from the beasts of the field and the birds of the sky.

Adam and his mate came and sat by the corpse, weeping and mourning for him—but they did not know what to do with Abel's body.

A raven whose companion had just died said: I will teach Adam what to do. The raven took his dead companion, dug up the earth before the eyes of Adam and his mate, and buried him in it. Adam said: We will do as the raven. At once he took Abel's corpse and buried it in the ground.[5]

103. "And the Lord provided Cain with a token for his protection" (Gen. 4:15). He gave him a dog,[6] according to Rav; but according to Abba Yose, He made a horn sprout on his forehead.[7]

104. "Cain went out from the Presence of the Lord" (Gen. 4:16). How can it be said that a man went out from the Presence of the Lord?[8] However, according to R. Yudan, citing R. Aibu, the verse signifies that Cain left [his consciousness of] the Lord's Presence by tossing off the words ["My sin is greater than can be forgiven"], as if by mouthing them he could blunt the Almighty's awareness of his sin.[9]

105. "Cain went out from the Presence of the Lord" (Gen. 4:16). Cain [did not speak deceitfully, but] went forth as one glad in heart. Adam met him and asked, "What was done in punishment of you?" Cain replied, "I vowed repentance and was granted clemency." Upon hearing this, Adam, in self-reproach, began to stroke himself in the face as he said, "Such is the power of repentance, and I knew it not." Then and there Adam exclaimed, "It is a good thing to confess to the Lord" (Ps. 92:2).[10]

106. Lamech, seventh in the generations of mankind, who was Cain's grandson, was blind. One time he went out hunting, with his young son holding him by the hand. The child saw something that looked like a beast's horn and said, "I see something that looks like a beast." Lamech bent the bow, [let go the arrow], and slew Cain. When the child, still at a distance, saw that it was a dead man with a horn on his forehead, he said to Lamech, "My father, this looks like a slain man with a horn on his forehead." Lamech cried out, "Woe is me! It is my grandfather." In contrition, he clapped his two hands together, inadvertently striking the child's head and killing him. It is con-

---

1. JV: "My punishment is greater than I can bear."
2. At first he was told, "A fugitive and a wanderer shalt thou be" (Gen. 4:12); but since he vowed repentance, half the punishment—being a fugitive—was remitted.
3. Apparently, the commentator reads here Gen. 4:16: "He sought to find a place on the earth, [though it was] nod, quaking [under him]."
4. Tanhuma, Bereshit, §9; Gen. R. 22:9. In Gen. R. 22:12 and in Tanhuma, Bereshit, §9, R. Nehemiah interprets Gen. 4:15 as follows: Cain's sentence shall not be like that of other murderers. Cain, slayer though he is, had no way of knowing the enormity of his crime. Henceforth, however, "all who slay shall be slain" (Gen. R. 22:12).
5. PRE 21; Yalkut, Bereshit, §38.
6. To ward off the animals that threatened to attack him, Adam had domesticated the dog. Yefeh Toar suggests that the commentator read not le-kayin ot ("a sign for Cain") but lo kinot (= Greek kuon, genitive kunos): "for him a dog").
7. Gen. R. 22:12. To terrify foes, ancient tribesmen put horns on their foreheads.
8. An impossible feat. Does not the psalmist say, "Whither shall I go from Thy spirit?" (Ps. 139:7).
9. Or: Cain reversed his garment front to back and went out thinking that he had deceived [literally, stolen the mind of] the Holy One. So Leon Nemoy. Gen. R. 22:12; PRKM 24:11 (PRKS, pp. 371–72).
10. Gen. R. 22:12. In the parallel in PRKM (PRKS, p. 372), the word yotze ("went out") is taken to indicate the connotation of that word in the verse "He goeth out (yotze) to meet thee, he will be glad in his heart" (Exod. 4:14).

cerning this double slaying that Lamech said, "By a wound of mine [my blindness] I slew a man, and by a blow of mine [clapping my hands] a child" (Gen. 4:23).[1]

The Corruption of Succeeding Generations

107. R. Jeremiah ben Eleazar said: In all the years that Adam was under the ban,[2] he begot evil spirits—male demons and female demons, for it is said, "Adam lived a hundred and thirty years, and begot a son in his own likeness, after his own image" (Gen. 5:3), from which it follows that until Adam reached the age of one hundred and thirty, he did not beget after his own image.[3]

Abba Kohen bar Dala was asked: [Why does Scripture list] "Adam . . . Seth, Enosh" (Gen. 4:25–26), and no more?[4] "Down to Enosh," he replied, "They were created in the image and likeness of God. But thereafter, the generations having become corrupt, centaurs came into being."[5]

Four things changed in the days of Enosh son of Seth: Mountainsides turned rocky [unfit for plowing]; corpses putrefied and generated worms; men's faces turned ape-like; and [the divine image having departed from human beings], demons became free to work their will upon them.[6]

Noah

108. "And he called his name Noah, saying: 'This same shall comfort us in our work and in the toil of our hands' " (Gen. 5:29). Before Noah's birth, what was reaped was not what had been sewn. Where wheat or barley was sown, thorns and thistles were reaped. But after Noah was born, the earth returned to orderly growth. What was sown was reaped—when wheat was sown, wheat was reaped; when barley was sown, barley was reaped. More! Until Noah's birth men worked the soil with their bare hands, as implied by "the toil of our hands." But after Noah was born, he, to help them, invented the plow, the scythe, the hoe, and other implements for cultivating the ground.[7]

109. R. Yohanan said: When the Holy One created man, He gave him dominion over all things—the heifer was obedient to the plowman; so, too, the furrow responded to the plowman. But after Adam sinned, both rebelled against him—a heifer was no longer obedient to a plowman, nor was a furrow responsive to a plowman. However, after Noah came, they submitted again.

R. Simeon ben Lakish said: Until Noah came, the tides[8] would rise high twice, once in the morning and once in the evening, flushing corpses out of their graves. With the coming of Noah, the tides were stilled.[9]

The Generation of the Flood

110. "The Lord said: 'I will blot out man' " (Gen. 6:7). A parable of a king who built a palace and tenanted it with mutes, who would rise early and—with a gesture or a finger or a kerchief—salute the king. The king said: If these, who are mute, rise early and salute me with gestures, with fingers, or with kerchiefs, how much more and more would they do if they possessed the faculty of speech? So he replaced them with people capable of normal speech. But these at once seized the palace, saying: The palace is not the king's—it is ours. At that, the king said: Let the palace be restored to its former tenants.

Similarly, at the beginning of the world's creation, the praise of the Holy One came only from the waters. Of their praise of Him, it is written, "From the voices of many waters" (Ps. 93:4). What did these voices proclaim? "The Lord on high is mighty" (ibid.). Said the Holy One, "If these, who have neither say nor speech, praise Me, how much more and more will I be praised when I create man?" But when the generation of Enosh rose up and rebelled against Him, and the generation of the flood rose up and rebelled against Him, the Holy One said, "Let these be removed, and let the waters come into their place."[10]

111. R. Joshua ben Levi said: Before bringing the flood, the Holy One grieved seven days over His world, as is said, "And He grieved in His heart" (Gen. 6:6).[11]

112. "And He blotted out every living substance which was upon the face of the ground, both man and cattle" (Gen. 7:23). Man, to be sure, sinned, but in what way did cattle sin? It is taught in the name of R. Joshua ben Korhah: The question may be answered with the parable of a man who set up a bridal canopy for his son and prepared all kinds of food for the festive meal. But within a few days, the son died. So the man dismantled the canopy [and threw out the food], saying: I have prepared all of this for the sake of my son. Now that he is dead, what need have I of [food or] canopy? Likewise, the Holy One said: I have created animals, wild and tame, only for the sake of man; now that man has sinned, what need have I of animals, wild or tame?[12]

---

1. JV: "I have slain a man for wounding me and a child for bruising me." Tanhuma, Bereshit, §11; MhG Gen., pp. 126–27.
2. Because he ate the fruit of the tree of knowledge.
3. Semen discharged not for procreation is said to be utilized by evil spirits to procreate their own kind. B. Er 18b.
4. Instead of continuing the genealogical record of Adam, the narrative is interrupted and starts afresh with, "This is the book of the generations of Adam" (Gen. 5:1).
5. Centaurs were men in the upper portion of their bodies and horses in the lower portion. The implication: succeeding generations gave themselves to copulation in the manner of horses.
6. Gen. R. 23:6.
7. Tanhuma, Bereshit, §11.
8. Waters of a partial flood meant to serve as a warning that a great flood was to come.
9. Note the alliteration: Noah and nahu ("were stilled"). Gen. R. 25:2.
10. Gen. R. 5:1 and 28:2.
11. Gen. R. 27:4. The proof is drawn from the later statement "And it came to pass after the seven days, that the waters of the flood were upon the earth" (Gen. 7:10), the seven days being understood as God's seven days of anticipatory mourning prior to the flood.
12. B. Sanh 108a.

113. When the generation of the flood arose and gave themselves over to lewd idolatry, the Holy One was grieved. Two angels, Shamhazai and Azzael, rose up and said: Master of the universe, did we not say to You when You created Your world, "What is man that Thou art mindful of him" (Ps. 8:5)? God asked: But [if I destroy mankind], what is to become of the world? They replied: Master of the universe, we will make use of it. He said: It is revealed and known to Me that, if you lived in the world, the impulse to evil would gain mastery over you, and you would be more obdurate than the children of men. They replied: Nevertheless, give us permission to dwell among mortal creatures, and You will see how we hallow Your Name. Then God said: Go down and dwell among them. They immediately misbehaved with the daughters of men, who were so beautiful that the angels could not conquer their impulse.[1]

Thus, when Shamhazai noticed a certain maiden whose name was Istahar, he gazed lustfully upon her and pleaded, "Do my bidding." She replied, "I will not do your bidding until you give me your wings and teach me the Explicit Name, which you go up to heaven upon uttering."

So he gave her his wings and taught her the Name, whereupon she uttered it, went up to heaven, and was spared from corruption.

The Holy One said: Since she shunned transgression, go and set her among the seven stars yonder. Thus, it came about that Istahar was set in the constellation of Draco. When Shamhazai and Azzael saw this, they took wives, and Shamhazai begot sons: Hiva and Hayya.

Metatron[2] sent an emissary to tell Shamhazai: The Holy One will destroy His world by bringing a flood upon it. Shamhazai fell to weeping, grieving over the world and his sons. What would his sons do? What would they eat, should the world be destroyed? For every day each of them ate a thousand camels, a thousand horses, and a thousand oxen.

That night Hiva and Hayya both had dreams. The first saw a stone on the ground, lying flat like a table, its top incised with many lines of script. An angel came down from heaven, in his hand a kind of chisel with which he scraped and erased all the lines, until he left only four letters.[3] The second saw a large and beautiful orchard planted with all kinds of trees. In the orchard were angels, and in their hands axes with which they felled the trees until they left only one tree with three branches.

Upon waking, Hiva and Hayya stood up in consternation and went to their father, who said to them: The Holy One is about to bring a flood [upon the world] and will leave only Noah and his [three] sons. Hearing this, they fell to wailing and weeping. He said to them: Grieve not, your names will never cease among mortals. Every time mortals saw lumber, heave stones, or haul in ships, they will mention your names—Hiva and Hayya.[4] At that, Hiva and Hayya grew calm.

Shamhazai repented and suspended himself, head down and feet up, between heaven and earth, and to this day he continues thus suspended in repentance. Azzael did not repent and still continues in his corruption.[5]

114. "For all flesh had become dissolute" (Gen. 6:12). R. Azariah said in the name of R. Judah bar Simon: In the generation of the flood, all had become dissolute—the dog mated with the wolf, the rooster with the peacock. R. Luliani bar Tibrin said in the name of R. Isaac: Even the earth acted like a harlot—when planted with wheat, it brought forth tares. In fact, tares stem from the generation of the flood.[6]

115. "Lamech took him two wives" (Gen. 4:19). R. Azariah said in the name of R. Judah bar Simon: This is what the men of the generation of the flood used to do—each would take to himself two wives, one for procreation and the other for sexual pleasure. The one for procreation was almost like a widow, though her husband was still alive; while the one for sexual pleasure was made by her husband to swallow a potion[7] so that she would not conceive. She sat in his house painted like a harlot.

You can readily see that it was so, for even Lamech, the best among that generation, took two wives—Adah, "apart from [scorned by] him"; and Zillah [Tzillah],[8] "who dwelt in his shadow [was inseparable from him]."[9]

116. R. Isaac said: [The people of the generation of the flood] needed to plant only once [to raise enough food for] forty years, could walk from world's end to world's end in no time at all, and while walking could [easily] uproot cedars of Lebanon. As for the bite of lions or leopards, it was regarded by the people of that generation as no more dangerous than a flea's prick in the flesh. Besides, they constantly enjoyed the kind of beautiful weather that prevails from Passover to Pentecost.[10]

117. "They send forth their sucklings as though they were sheep in a flock, their newly born are able to skip about" (Job 21:11).[11] When a woman gave birth during the day, she would say to her newborn infant: Go and fetch me a flint, and I will cut your umbilical cord. When she gave birth during the night, she would say to her infant: Go and kindle a lamp for me, and I will cut your cord.

Once a woman who had given birth during the night

---

1. The story of the two angels, an elaboration of Gen. 6:1–2, intends to link the two verses with the account of the flood in Gen. 6:5ff., which follows.
2. The angel of the Presence.
3. Yod, he, vav, he (?): God's Name.
4. These names became exclamations of encouragement, like "Heave-ho!" or "way-haul-away!"
5. Midrash Avkir; BhM 4:127–28.
6. The Hebrew word for tares, "zonin," is similar to the word for harlotry. Gen. R. 28:8.
7. Literally, "a cup of root-drink."
8. In Aramaic, adah means "being apart"; tzel in Hebrew means "shade."
9. Gen. R. 23:2.
10. Approximately from April through May. Gen. R. 36:1.
11. JV: "They send forth their little ones like a flock, and their children dance." But Job 21:1ff. is often construed as referring to the generation of the flood. See, e.g., Mek, La 2:13; and PR 42:8 (YJS 2:749).

said to her newborn son: Go, kindle a lamp for me so that I can cut your cord. When he went out, he met the demon Shamdon, prince of all evil spirits. While the two were talking, the cock crowed. So Shamdon said: You may go and boast before your mother that [you managed to survive until] the cock crowed. For had the cock not crowed, I would have killed you with one blow. The newborn retorted: You go and boast before your mother's mother that [you survived] because my mother had not cut my cord—had my mother cut my cord, I would have killed you with but one blow![1]

Noah and the Flood

118. "These are the generations of Noah. Noah was a righteous man, and perfect in his generation" (Gen. 6:9). In his generation, R. Yohanan pointed out, but not in other generations. However, according to Resh Lakish, the verse intimates that even in his generation Noah was a righteous man, all the more so in other generations.

R. Hanina said: R. Yohanan's view may be illustrated by the parable of a jar of wine stored in a cellar filled with jars of vinegar. In such a place, the fragrance of the wine is sensed [because of the vinegar's fumes]; in any other place, its fragrance might not be sensed.[2]

R. Oshaia said: Resh Lakish's view may be illustrated by a vial of [fragrant] spikenard oil lying amid excrement: if its fragrance is sensed even in such surroundings, how much more so amid spices![3]

119. "Noah walked with God" (Gen. 6:9). R. Judah said: The phrasing may be understood from the parable of a king who had two sons, one grown up and the other a child. To the child he said, Walk with me; but to the adult, Walk before me. Likewise to Abraham, whose [spiritual] strength was great, he said, "Because you are wholehearted, walk before me" (Gen. 17:1). But to Noah, whose [spiritual] strength was feeble, Scripture says, "Noah walked with God."[4]

120. "Make thee an ark of cedarwood"[5] (Gen. 6:14). R. Huna said in the name of R. Yose: For one hundred and twenty years, the Holy One kept warning the generation of the flood in the hope that they would resolve to repent. When they did not repent, He said to Noah, "Make thee an ark of cedarwood." Noah proceeded to plant cedars. When asked, "Why these cedars?" he would reply, "The Holy One is about to bring a flood upon the world, and He told me to make an ark, that I and my family might escape." They mocked and ridiculed him. In the meantime, he watered the cedars, which kept growing.

When asked again, "What are you doing?" he gave them the same reply, and the generation of the flood continued to ridicule him. Finally he cut the cedars down, and, as he sawed them into planks, he was again asked, "What are you doing?" He replied, "What I said I would do," even as he continued to warn the generation of the flood.

When they did not repent even then, the Holy One brought the flood upon them.

At last, when they realized that they were about to perish, they tried to overturn the ark. What did the Holy One do then? He surrounded the ark with lions.[6]

121. "A light (tzohar) shalt thou make for the ark" (Gen. 6:16). R. Levi said: Tzohar means a pearl of purest ray. Throughout the twelve months that Noah was in the ark, he had no need of the light of the sun by day, nor of the light of the moon by night. For he had a pearl which he hung up: while it was dim, he knew that it was day, and while it glowed, he knew that it was night.[7]

122. "And of every living thing, of all flesh, two of every sort, thou shalt bring into the ark" (Gen. 6:19). R. Judah said: The re'em[8] did not enter the ark; only his whelps did.[9] R. Nehemiah differed: Neither he nor his whelps did, but Noah tied him to the ark, and as he swam, he plowed furrows in the water as long as the distance from Tiberias to Susitha.[10]

123. As the floodwaters swelled, Og, king of Bashan, sat himself on one of the rungs of the ark's ladders and swore to Noah and to his sons that he would be their slave forever. What did Noah do? He punched a hole in the ark, and through it he handed out food to Og every day.

Og's survival is intimated in the verse "Only Og remained of the remnant of the Rephaim" (Deut. 3:11).[11]

124. R. Yohanan said: Each and every raindrop the Holy One caused to come down upon the generation of the flood, He first brought to a boil in Gehenna; then He carried it out and dropped it on them.[12]

125. "Behold, I will destroy them with the earth" (Gen. 6:13). It is said in the name of R. Kahana bar Malkia: Even the three handbreadths of the earth's soil that the plow turns up were washed away. It is as if a prince had a nurse, and whenever he did wrong, his nurse was punished. So the Holy One said, "Behold, I will destroy them with the earth"—I will destroy them, and together with them that part of the earth[13] [that gives them sustenance].[14]

---

1. Gen. R. 36:1; Lev. R. 5:1.
2. In other generations, Noah would not have been deemed exceptional.
3. How much more righteous would Noah have been had he lived in a generation of righteous men. B. Sanh 108a.
4. Gen. R. 30:10.
5. So Targum Onkelos; JV: "of gopher wood."
6. Tanhuma, Noah, §5.
7. Gen. R. 31:11.
8. A fabulous animal of giant proportions.
9. The comment is based on the phrase "of every living thing," which is deemed to be superfluous.
10. Tiberias is on the western side of Lake Kinneret, while Susitha is on its eastern bank. Gen. R. 31:13.
11. The Rephaim are identified as the generation of the flood. PRE 23.
12. Gen. R. 28:8.
13. The three handbreadths that are said to be turned by the plow.
14. Gen. R. 31:7.

126. R. Yohanan said: During the twelve months of the flood, the planets did not perform their function. R. Jonathan differed: They did perform their function, but their effect was imperceptible.[1]

127. "And he sent forth a raven, and it went forth to and fro" (Gen. 8:7). It to-and-fro'ed,[2] argued with him, saying: Of all the cattle, beasts, and fowl you have here, you send none but me! Noah replied: What need has the world of you? You are fit neither for food nor as an offering.

Then, said Resh Lakish, the raven gave Noah an irrefutable retort: Your Lord hates me and you hate me. Your Lord showed His hatred of me by ordering that seven pair of the clean fowl be taken into the ark, but only two pair of the unclean. And you hate me, seeing that you spare the species of which there are seven pair, but from the species of which there are only two pair, you send me. Should the prince of heat or the prince of cold smite me, might not the world lose one entire species of creature?

Nevertheless, "Noah did send out the raven" (Gen. 8:7) to learn what was going on in the world. The raven flew out and, finding a man's corpse flung on a mountaintop, perched itself over this food and did not come back to its sender with word concerning its errand. Then Noah sent out the dove, and she did bring back word.

"And lo, in her mouth an olive leaf freshly plucked" (Gen. 8:11). From where did the dove bring it? R. Bebai said: The gates of the Garden of Eden were opened for her, and she brought it from there. R. Aibu said to him: Had she brought it from the Garden of Eden, would she not have brought something finer, such as a stick of cinnamon or a leaf of balsam? But in truth the dove's olive leaf was a way of hinting to Noah: My master Noah, I would rather have something even more bitter than this from the hand of the Holy One than something sweet from your hand.[3]

128. "And lo, in her mouth an olive leaf freshly plucked" (Gen. 8:11). The dove said to the Holy One: Master of the universe, let my sustenance be bitter as this olive leaf, just so it comes from you, rather than sweet as honey but coming from flesh and blood.[4]

129. "And God spoke to Noah, saying: 'Go forth from the ark' " (Gen. 8:15–16). R. Yudan said: Had I been there, I would have made a breach in the ark and left without ado. But Noah said: Even as I did not go into the ark except with God's permission, so I shall not leave it except with His permission. "Come thou into the ark"—"and Noah went in." "Go forth from the ark"—"and Noah went forth."[5]

130. "After their kinds they went forth from the ark" (Gen. 8:19). Eliezer [Abraham's servant] asked Shem, Noah's oldest son: How did you manage to take care of the many kinds of animals [with habits so divergent]? Shem replied: The truth is, we had much trouble in the ark. The creature whose habit it was to eat by day, we fed by day; the one who ate by night, we fed by night. As for the chameleon, my father did not know what it ate. One day, as my father was sitting and cutting a pomegranate, a worm fell out of it and the chameleon consumed it. After that, he would knead some prickly reeds infested with worms and feed it with them. As for the phoenix, my father found him sleeping in a corner of the ark and asked him: Why did you not request food? He replied: I saw you were busy, and I said to myself that I should not trouble you. Noah responded: Since you were concerned about my trouble, may it be the Lord's will that you never die. Hence it is said, "I shall multiply my days as the phoenix"[6] (Job 29:18).

131. Our masters said: During the twelve months Noah spent in the ark, he did not savor the taste of sleep—neither he nor his sons, neither by day nor by night, occupied as he was with feeding the creatures that were with him. One creature fed in the first hour of the day, another in the second hour, still another in the third hour, and yet another in the fourth hour; one creature fed at the end of the first third of the night, another in the middle of the night, and still another at the time of the cock's crowing. What did Noah feed them? Each and every species got what it was accustomed to eat—straw for camels, vine tendrils for elephants, barley for donkeys, cistus shrubs for gazelles, glass for ostriches.[7]

Once, as he was late in feeding the lion, the beast struck him and he went out limping. That this happened is implied in the words "And only (akh)[8] Noah remained" (Gen. 7:23). In these words it is also implied that he was coughing and spitting up blood because of overwork in the tending of animals and beasts.[9]

132. R. Levi taught: When the Holy One said to Noah, "Gather unto thee two living creatures of every kind into the ark," all the creatures came and each of them entered the ark with his mate. Falsehood also came and wished to enter, but Noah said, "You cannot enter unless you wed a proper mate." So Falsehood went looking for a mate and encountered Vexation. Vexation asked, "Where are you coming from?" Falsehood replied, "From Noah. I wanted

---

1. Neither the sun nor the moon provided the usual illumination. Gen. R. 25:2.
2. In the play on words, shov ("return") is associated with hashev, ("retort"). Gen. R. 33:5.
3. Gen. R. 33:6; Lev. R. 31:10; Song R. 1:15, §4; Yalkut, Noah, §58.
4. B. Er 18b; B. Sanh 108b; PRE 23; Yalkut, Noah, §58.
5. Gen. R. 34:4; Yalkut, Noah, §59.
6. A legendary bird which is immortal. B. Sanh 108b; Yalkut, Noah, §59.
7. The ostrich is said to keep stones in its gizzard, which it digests over a period of time (Aelian De Natura Animalium 14:7), and is also capable of digesting iron (Alexander of Aphrodisias Problems, preface, 249:15). Professor David Pingree of Brown University provided this information.

   Accordingly, since bringing stones or iron into the ark was impractical, the ostrich had to make do with glass.
8. The commentator regards "only" as superfluous. Hence he construes akh as implying nkh ("smite"), which accounts for his limping, as well as khh ("hacking, spitting up blood"). See Tanhuma, Noah, §9.
9. Tanhuma B. Noah, §3 and §14; Tanhuma, Noah, §9; Gen. R. 31:11; Rashi on Gen. 7:23.

to enter the ark, but he would not allow me to do so unless I had a proper mate with me. Would you be willing to be my mate?" Vexation asked, "What will you give me?" Falsehood replied, "I pledge you that all that I may lay by, you shall take." [Vexation agreed to Falsehood's proposal] and they both entered the ark. After they left the ark, Falsehood went about laying things by, and Vexation took them, one by one. When Falsehood came and inquired, "Where are all the things I laid by?" Vexation replied, "Was it not agreed between us that I would take everything you might lay by?" Falsehood had nothing more to say.

"Yea, Vexation has become heavy with what Falsehood has brought forth" (Ps. 7:15).[1] As the proverb puts it: What falsehood begets, vexation takes over.[2]

133. "And Noah the tiller of the soil became profane" (Gen. 9:20).[3] He profaned himself and became profane. How did he bring this about? Scripture says, "And planted a vineyard" (ibid.). Should he not have planted something of use, say a young fig shoot or an olive shoot? But no—he "planted a vineyard."

But where did he get the grapevines? R. Abba bar Kahana said: He had taken some vine tendrils into the ark with him, as well as fig saplings and olive saplings.

As he set about to plant the vineyard, the demon Shamdon met him and suggested: Take me into partnership. But beware, do not trespass into my part. If you do, I will hurt you.[4]

134. When Noah began planting, Satan came, stationed himself before him, and asked, "What are you planting?" Noah: "A vineyard." Satan: "What is its nature?" Noah: "Its fruit, whether fresh or dried, is sweet, and from it one makes wine, which gladdens a man's heart." Satan: "Will you agree to let both of us plant it together?" Noah: "Very well."

What did Satan do? He brought a ewe lamb and slaughtered it over a vine. After that, he brought a lion, which he likewise slaughtered. Then a monkey, which he also slaughtered over it. Finally a pig, which he again slaughtered over that vine. And with the blood that dripped from them, he watered the vineyard.

The charade was Satan's way of saying that when a man drinks one cup of wine, he acts like a ewe lamb, humble and meek. When he drinks two, he immediately believes himself to be as strong as a lion and proceeds to brag mightily, saying, "Who is like me?" When he drinks three or four cups, he immediately becomes like a monkey, hopping about giggling, and uttering obscenities in public, without realizing what he is doing. Finally, when he becomes blind drunk, he is like a pig, wallowing in mire and coming to rest among refuse.

All the above befell Noah.[5]

---

1. JV: "Yea, he conceiveth mischief, and bringeth forth falsehood."
2. MTeh 7:11; Yalkut, Noah, §56.
3. EV: "And Noah the tiller of the soil began . . . " But since the verb in Hebrew is placed at the opening of the verse, suggesting special emphasis, the commentator understands it as stemming not from hvl [hul] ("begin") but from hll ("profane").
4. Gen. R. 36:3 and 31:14.
5. Tanhuma, Noah, §13.

Nimrod and the Generation of the Dispersion of Mankind

135. "[The animals' prostrating themselves before Nimrod's garment made all think] he was a mighty lord" (Gen. 10:9).[6] R. Judah said: The garment of glory that the Holy One made for Adam and for his wife was with Noah in the ark. When they left the ark, Noah's son Ham took it, brought it out with him, and bequeathed it to Nimrod. Whenever Nimrod wore it, all cattle, beasts, and fowl, upon seeing the garment on him, would come and prostrate themselves before him. Now, human beings supposed that the greatness of Nimrod's own strength brought about such adoration, and so they made him king over them. Whereupon he said to his people, "Come, let us build us a city and a tower" (Gen. 11:4).[7]

136. "Let us build us a city and a tower with its top in heaven" (Gen. 11:4). They said: Once every one thousand six hundred and fifty-six years, the firmament topples. Come and let us make supports for it [under each of its four sides].

Another interpretation of what they said: It is not for Him to choose for Himself the worlds above and give us those below. Come, let us make us a tower, place an image on its top, and put a sword in its hand, and it will seem that it is waging war against Him.[8]

137. "Come, let us make brick . . . and for them a small brick grow to the size of a foundation stone, and a handful of slime became a heap of mortar" (Gen. 11:3). So greatly did their work prosper, said R. Huna, that a man laying one brick found that two bricks had been laid; another plastering one row found that two rows had been plastered.[9]

138. The tower had seven levels on its east and seven on its west. The builders brought the bricks up on one side and came down on the other. If a man fell down and died, no heed was given to him. But when a brick fell down, they stopped work and wept, saying, "Woe unto us! When will another be brought up in its stead?"

When Abram son of Terah passed by and saw them building the city, he cursed them in the name of his God: "O Lord, confound their speech, confuse it!" (Ps. 55:10).[10]

139. "Come . . . let us confound their language" (Gen. 11:7). When one said to another, "Bring me water," he brought him earth. Whereupon the one cracked the other's skull. When one said to another, "Bring me an ax," he brought him a spade. Whereupon the one cracked open the other's skull.[11]

---

6. JV: "He was a mighty hunter before the Lord."
7. PRE 24; MhG Gen., p. 194.
8. Gen. R. 38:6.
9. Gen. R. 38:8.
10. PRE 24.
11. Gen. R. 38:10.

140. "And they said . . . 'Lest we be dispersed upon the face of the whole earth.' . . . So the Lord dispersed them from thence upon the face of all the earth" (Gen. 11:4 and 11:9). R. Levi said: In its foreboding, the generation that was to be dispersed was like a woman who said to her husband, "In a dream I saw you divorcing me." The husband replied, "Why only in a dream? Here is your bill of divorce—a real one."[1]

141. R. Yohanan said: The tower—one-third [of its height] was burned, one-third was swallowed up, and the lowest third still stands. Whoever ascends the part still standing sees palm trees below him as no bigger than grasshoppers.[2]

142. R. Eliezer said: Who is more reprehensible—he who says to the king, "Either you or I in the palace," or he who says, "I and not you in the palace"? Clearly he who says to the king, "I and not you in the palace," is the more reprehensible. Thus, the generation of the flood said to Him, "What is the Almighty that we should serve Him? And what profit should we have, if we pray unto Him?" (Job 21:15). But the generation of the dispersion of mankind said: It is not for Him to choose for Himself the worlds above and give us those below. Come, let us make us a tower, place an image on its top, and put a sword in its hand, and it will seem that it is waging war against Him.

Consequently, the generation of the flood [which sought to displace God]—of them, no remnant survived; whereas the generation of the dispersion of mankind [which sought to share God's power with Him]—of these, a remnant did survive.

Besides, the generation of the flood was steeped in malfeasance, as is said, "They remove the landmarks, they carry off flocks and pasture them" (Job 24:2). Therefore no remnant of them survived. But the latter generation, because they cherished love for one another, as is said, "And the whole earth was of one language" (Gen. 11:1)—of them, a remnant did survive.[3]

---

[1] Out of fear that they might be dispersed all over the world, the generation that was to be dispersed set out to build a tower with its top in the sky. God said, " 'If this is how they have begun (hahilam) to act,' etc. [Gen. 11:6], I will disperse them at once." R. Levi, associating the unusual form hahilam with halom ("dream"), translates the word "the dream that they dreamed"; their being dispersed has become a reality—they have been dispersed, they did receive their divorce, so to speak, from God. Gen. R. 23:7.

[2] B. Sanh 109a; Gen. R. 38:4.

[3] Gen. R. 38:6.

CHAPTER THREE

THE DEEDS OF THE FATHERS

Our Father Abraham

1. There were ten generations from Adam to Noah—to make known God's patience, for all these generations kept provoking Him until finally [in the days of Noah] He brought the waters of the flood upon them.

There were ten generations from Noah to Abraham—to make known God's patience, for all these generations kept provoking Him until our father Abraham came and received the reward [saving] all of them.[1]

2. There were ten generations from Noah to Abraham, and in all of these God spoke to only one of their number, to Abraham. R. Berekhiah taught in the name of R. Nehemiah: [God's sifting through the generations until he found Abraham] may be illustrated by the parable of a king who, while traversing from place to place, lost a pearl from [the crown on] his head. The king halted and had his retinue halt. When passersby asked, "What is going on here with the king and his entire retinue?" they were told, "A pearl has fallen from the king's head." What did the king do? He heaped the soil in a number of piles, brought sieves, and sifted the first pile, but did not find the pearl; he sifted the second, but did not find it; but when he sifted the third pile, he found it. Then the passersby said, "The king has finally found his precious pearl."

Likewise, the Holy One said to Abraham, "Go—for you"[2] (Gen. 12:1), it was for you I was waiting. Otherwise, what need had I to record the [lengthy] genealogy of Shem, Arpachshad, Shelah, Eber, Peleg, Reu, Serug, Nahor, and Terah? Was it not on account of you? Hence it is written, "Thou didst choose Abram . . . because Thou foundest his heart faithful before Thee (Neh. 9:7–8).[3]

3. R. Abba bar Kahana said: In the world's practice, when a man joins a pair of beams so that they come together at an angle, where does he place them? Does he not place them in the middle of the chamber, so that they give support to the beams in front of them and behind them? So, too, why did the Holy One create Abraham in the middle of the generations? In order that he might sustain the generations before and after him.[4]

4. "And told Abram the Hebrew (ha-ivri)" (Gen. 14:13). R. Judah used to say: [Ha-ivri, "he who is on the other side," signifies] the whole world was on one side, while he was on the other side (ever).[5]

5. When our father Abraham was born, a star rose in the east and swallowed four stars in the four corners of heaven. Nimrod's wizards said to him: To Terah, at this hour, a son has been born, out of whom will issue a people destined to inherit this world and the world-to-come. With your permission, let his father be given a house full of silver and gold, on condition that his newly born son be slain.

Nimrod sent word to Terah, saying: Last night a son was born to you. Now give him to me, that we may slay him, and I will fill your house with silver and gold. Terah said: "I reply with a parable that will make you understand my anguish. A horse was told, "Let us cut off your head, and we will give you a barnful of barley." The horse replied, "You fools! If you cut off my head, who will eat the barley?" So, too, if you slay my son, who will make use of the silver and gold? King Nimrod said: From what you say, I gather that a son has indeed been born to you. Terah: A son was born, but he died. Nimrod: My offer was for a live son, not a dead one. What did Terah do then? He hid his son in a cave for three years, and the Holy One provided for the child two apertures—out of one issued oil, out of the other fine flour.

When Abraham was three years old, he went out of the cave and [observing the world] wondered in his heart: Who created heaven and earth and me? All that day he prayed to the sun. In the evening, the sun set in the west and the moon rose in the east. Upon seeing the moon and the stars around it, he said: This one must have created heaven and earth and me—these stars must be the moon's princes and courtiers. So all night long he stood in prayer to the moon. In the morning, the moon sank in the west and the sun rose in the east. Then he said: There is no might in either of these. There must be a higher Lord over them—to Him will I pray, and before Him will I prostrate myself.[6]

6. R. Simeon ben Yohai said: Our father Abraham—his own father did not teach him, nor did he have a master to teach him. From whom, then, did Abraham learn Torah? It was the Holy One who had provided him with reins that were like two pitchers overflowing and filling him with Torah and wisdom all through the night.[7] R. Levi, however, said: Abraham learned Torah all by himself.[8]

---

1. Avot 5:2.
2. JV: "Get thee out."
3. Gen. R. 39:10; Ruth R. 8:1.
4. Gen. R. 14:6; Eccles. R. 3:11, §2.
5. Of all mankind, he alone believed in the true God. Gen. R. 42:8.
6. BhM 2:118–196.
7. Abraham, with the help of God, discovered the Law through his own conscience and reason; the reins, or kidneys, are conceived of in the Bible and the Talmud as the seat of the moral conscience as well as of intellectual deliberation.
8. Gen. R. 61:16 and 95:3; Mteh 1:13.

7. R. Isaaf told the parable of a man who was traveling from place to place when he saw a mansion in flames.[1] He wondered: Is it possible that the mansion is without someone to look after it? At that moment the owner of the mansion peered out at him and said: I am the owner of this mansion! So, too, as Abraham was wondering, Is it possible that the world should be without someone to look after it? the Holy One peered down at him and said: I am the world's Owner![2]

8. Abraham's family used to make images and sell them in the market. One day, when it was Abraham's turn to sell, his father Terah gave him several baskets of household gods and set him up in the marketplace. A man came to him and asked: Have you a god to sell? Abraham: What kind of god do you wish to buy? The man: I am a mighty man—give me a god as mighty as I am. So Abraham took an image that was standing on a shelf higher than all the others and said: Pay the money and take this one. The man asked: Is this god as mighty as I am? Abraham replied: You good-for-nothing! Don't you know the way of gods? The one who sits above all others is the mightiest of all. As the man was about to leave, Abraham asked him: How old are you? The man answered: Seventy years. Abraham said: Woe to a man who is seventy, yet prostrates himself before this thing which was made only today. At that, the man flung that god back into Abraham's basket, demanded the return of his money, and went his way.

Next came a widow, who said to Abraham: I am a poor woman—give me a god as poor as I am. At once Abraham took an image that was on a shelf lower than all the others and said: To suit your poverty, take this god who is humble, placed as he is on a shelf below all the others; but he will not budge until you pay me the money. [So she paid the price] and, as she was about to depart, he asked her: How old are you? She replied: Quite old. Abraham then said: May the breath of such a woman be blasted! To think that one so old prostrates herself before a god who is only one day old. She immediately dropped the god into the basket, got back her money from Abraham, and went her way.

Then Abraham took all the gods and brought them back to his father Terah. Terah's other sons said to their father: This Abraham does not know how to sell gods; come, then, and let us make him a priest. Abraham asked: What is a priest's work? They replied: He waits upon the gods, offers sacrifices to them, and serves them food and drink. So they made him priest. Abraham promptly set food and drink before the images and said to them: Come and eat, come and drink, so that you may be able to bestow good upon human beings. But not one of them took anything at all to eat or to drink. Then Abraham began to recite the verse "They have mouths but they speak not; eyes have they, but they see not; they have ears, but they hear not; noses have they, but they smell not; they have hands, but they handle not; feet have they, but they walk not" (Ps. 115:5–7).

A woman came carrying a bowl of fine flour and said: Here, offer it to the gods. At that, Abraham seized a stick, smashed all the images, and placed the stick in the hand of the biggest of them. When his father came, he asked: Who did this to the gods? Abraham answered: Would I hide anything from my father? A woman came with a bowl of fine flour and said: Here, offer it up to them. When I offered it, one god said, "I will eat first," and another said, "No, I will eat first." Then the biggest of them rose up and smashed all the others. His father replied: Are you making sport of me? They cannot do anything! Abraham answered: You say they cannot. Let your ears hear what your mouth is saying!

Terah took hold of Abraham and turned him over to Nimrod.

Nimrod asked Abraham: Are you Abraham son of Terah? Abraham: Yes. Nimrod asked: Do you not know that I am Lord of all [the heavenly] works—sun, moon, stars, and planets—and that all men go forth at my pleasure? Now, you—how dare you destroy what I hold in awe?

In that instant the Holy One gave Abraham the capacity to argue ingeniously, so that he answered Nimrod: May I, with your permission, say something that will redound to your greatness? Nimrod: Say it. Abraham: It is the way of the world that, from the day the world was created until now, the sun goes forth in the east and sets in the west. Tomorrow, bid the sun to go forth in the west and set in the east, and I shall bear witness for you that you are indeed Lord of the world. More: If you are Lord of the world, surely all hidden things are known to you. If so, tell me now what is in my heart and what I intend to do.

The wicked Nimrod stroked his beard in perplexity. Abraham said: Be not perplexed—you are not Lord of the world. You are the son of Cush. If you were Lord of the world, why could you not deliver your own father from death? The truth is, as you did not deliver your father from death, so will you not deliver your own self from death.

Nimrod summoned Terah and asked him: What judgment shall be imposed on your son Abraham, who destroyed my divinities? None other than burning. Then he turned back to Abraham and said: Bow down to fire, and you will be saved. Abraham: Perhaps I should bow down to water, which quenches fire. Nimrod then said: Very well, bow down to water. Abraham: If so, I should bow down to a cloud, which is laden with water. Nimrod: Then bow down to a cloud. Abraham: Perhaps I should bow down to the wind, which scatters the cloud. Nimrod: Then bow down to the wind. Abraham: Let me rather bow down to man, who withstands wind. Nimrod: You are playing word games with me. I bow down to nothing but fire, and I am about to cast you into the midst of it—let the God to whom you bow down come and save you!

They immediately took Abraham out to cast him into an open fire. They bound him hand and foot, and put him on the stony ground. Then they surrounded him on all sides with wood—five cubits wide on every side, and five cubits high—and set the wood on fire.

Just then Terah's neighbors and townsmen came by, tapped him [jeeringly] on the head, and said: What a great and bitter shame! This son of yours, who you have been saying was to inherit both this world and the world-to-come—Nimrod is burning him in fire!

---

[1] So, too, Abraham saw the world devoured by the flames of evildoing.
[2] Gen. R. 39:1.

At once the Holy One's mercies crested and He came down and saved Abraham.

Now, Haran, Abraham's brother, was standing there undecided. If Abraham is victorious, he thought, I will say that I share Abraham's belief. Should Nimrod win, I will say that I share Nimrod's belief. So after Abraham went down into the open fire and was saved, and Haran was asked, "Whose side are you on?" he replied, "Abraham's." He was immediately seized and thrown into the fire. His innards were scorched, so that, upon emerging, he died in the presence of his father, as is said, "Haran died in the presence of his father Terah" (Gen. 11:28).[1]

9. When wicked Nimrod cast our father Abraham into the open fire, Gabriel[2] spoke up to the Holy One, "Master of the universe, may I go down and cool the fire, to save the righteous man from burning in it?" The Holy One replied, "I am the Unique One in My world, even as he is the unique one in his. It is fitting that the Unique One deliver the unique one." But since the Holy One does not hold back the reward of any creature, he said to Gabriel, "Yours will be the privilege of saving three of his descendants."[3]

10. "I was with thee when thou didst offer thyself willingly" (Ps. 110:3).[4] The verse is to be understood as the Holy One's saying, "I was with you when for My Name's sake you willingly consented to enter the open fire. 'In the day of thy hosts'[5] [ibid.]—the day you gathered unto Me all those hosts of people [who, following your trial in the open fire, became converted]. 'In beauties, holiness' [ibid.]—out of the beauties of the [eastern part of the] world,[6] I [God] hallowed you; 'from the very creation ["womb"] of the world I sought you out.[7] Let it be the dew of your childhood to you' " (ibid.). Abraham was afraid and said, "Perhaps I bear guilt all those years I [seemingly] worshiped idols." Hence the Holy One went on, " 'Let it be the dew of your childhood to you'—even as dew evaporates, so have your sins evaporated. Even as dew is a sign of blessing for the world, so are you a sign of blessing for the world."[8]

11. When the Holy One said to Abraham, "Get thee out of thy country and from thy kindred" (Gen. 12:1), what did Abraham resemble? A vial of scent with a tight-fitting lid put away in a corner so that its fragrance could not go forth. As soon as it was moved from that place [and opened], its fragrance began to go forth. So the Holy One said to Abraham: Abraham, many good deeds are in you. Travel about from place to place, and the greatness of your name will go forth in My world. "Get thee out . . . and I will have thee acclaimed a great nation."[9]

12. "And I will make thy name great" (Gen. 12:2). That is, coinage with Abraham's name was current in the world. And what symbols did his currency bear? An old man and an old woman on one side, and a young man and a young woman on the other.[10]

13. "Walk [before Me], in My very presence" (Gen. 17:1). To whom may Abraham be likened? To a king's friend, who saw the king walking about in dark alleys[11] and began lighting the way for him through a window. When the king looked up and saw him, he said: Instead of lighting the way for me through a window, come out and light the way for me in my very presence. So, too, the Holy One said to our father Abraham: Instead of lighting the way that leads to Me from Mesopotamia and neighboring territories, come down here and light the way to Me in My very presence—in the Land of Israel.[12]

14. R. Levi said: When Abraham was traveling through Aram-naharaim and Aram-nahor, he saw the inhabitants eating and drinking and reveling. "May my portion not be in this land," he exclaimed. But when he reached the Ladder of Tyre[13] and saw the people there engaged in weeding at weeding time, and in hoeing at hoeing time, he exclaimed, "Would that my portion be in this land." At that, the Holy One said, "Unto thy seed will I give this land" (Gen. 12:7).[14]

15. "The souls that they had made in Haran" (Gen. 12:5). The verse implies: Our father Abraham would bring people into his home, give them food and drink, befriend them, and thus attract them, and then convert them and bring them under the wings of the Presence. Hence you learn that a man who brings a single creature under the wings of the Presence is accounted as if he had created him, shaped him, and articulated his parts.[15]

16. "And Abraham planted an eshel"[16] (Gen. 21:33). R. Judah said: Eshel means a fruitful orchard, the word implying, "Ask (she'al) of it anything you wish—figs, grapes, or pomegranates." R. Nehemiah differed: Eshel means a

---

1. TdE, pp. 27–28; Gen. R. 38:13.
2. Gabriel is the angel who ordinarily executes God's judicial decrees.
3. Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah. Dan. 3; B. Pes 118a.
4. The commentator assumes that Ps. 110 refers to Abraham and so makes the following change: Since Abraham had no "people," he reads ammekha ("thy people") as immekha ("[I was] with thee"). JV: "Thy people offer themselves willingly."
5. The word hel can mean "warfare, retinue, hosts of people."
6. Babylon.
7. JV: "from the womb of the dawn." But mishhar ("dawn") can also be read as a form of shhr ("seek out").
8. Gen. R. 39:8; Yalkut, Ps., §869.
9. Gen. R. 39:2; Song R. 1:3, §3.
10. Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Rebekah. Gen. R. 39:11; B. BK 97b.
11. Where people steeped in idolatry lived.
12. Gen. R. 30:10.
13. Scala Tyriorum, a promontory south of Tyre.
14. Since the Land requires constant care and cultivation, allowing no time for idleness which leads to drinking and reveling, Abraham hoped that his children would settle in it. Gen. R. 39:8.
15. Sif Deut., §32; Gen. R. 39:14; Song R. 1:3, §3; PR 43:6 (YJS 2:764).
16. JV: "tamarisk tree."

[well-stocked] inn, the word suggesting, "Ask (she'al) anything you wish—bread, meat, wine, or eggs.[1]

17. "And he called there on the Name of the Lord, the [everlasting] God[2] of the world" (Gen. 21:33). Resh Lakish said: Read not, "And he called," but, "And he caused to call," meaning that our father Abraham caused the Name of the Holy One to be called by the mouth of every passerby. How did it come about? After travelers [whom he made his guests] had eaten and drunk, they stood up to bless him. He said to them: Was it of mine that you ate? You ate of that which belongs to the [everlasting] God of the world. Thank, praise, and bless Him who spoke and the world came into being.[3]

18. Abraham used to receive wayfarers. After they had eaten and drunk, he would suggest, "Say grace." When they asked, "What shall we say?" he would reply, "[Say], 'Blessed be the everlasting God of the world, of whose bounty we have partaken.' " If the wayfarer, having eaten and drunk, accepted the suggestion and said grace, he would be allowed to depart. But if he refused, Abraham would say, "Pay what you owe me." When the wayfarer asked, "How much do I owe you?" Abraham would reply, "A jug of wine—so much; a pound of meat—so much; a loaf of bread—so much. Who do you suppose is giving you wine in the wilderness? meat in the wilderness? bread in the wilderness?"

The wayfarer, now aware that he must either pay or thank God by saying grace, would say, "Blessed be the everlasting God of the world, of whose bounty we have partaken." This is the meaning of the description of Abraham as one who "bestows free bounty and justice" (Gen. 18:19)—first bounty, then justice.[4]

19. Until Abraham made his way into the wider world, the Holy One was, if one dare say such a thing, sovereign only in heaven, for in referring to his earlier years, Abraham said, "The Lord, God of heaven, who took me from my father's house" (Gen. 24:7). But after Abraham made his way into the wider world, he was able to declare Him sovereign over both heaven and earth, as when Abraham said to Eliezer, "I will make thee swear by the Lord, the God of heaven and the God of earth" (Gen. 24:3).[5]

20. "And Abram went down to Egypt" (Gen. 12:10). The Holy One said: Go and tread out a path for your children.[6]

21. "And it came to pass, that when Abram was come into Egypt, the Egyptians beheld . . ." (Gen. 12:14). [Only Abram is mentioned as having come into Egypt]—where was Sarah? Abram put her in a box and locked her in it so that the Egyptians should not see her. When Abram reached the portals of Egypt, the customs people asked, "What are you carrying in this box?" He replied, "Barley." Said they, "You are carrying [something more valuable] wheat." "Very well," he replied, charge me the duty on wheat." "You are carrying pepper." "Charge me the duty on pepper." "You are carrying gold." "Charge me the duty on gold." "You are carrying silks." "Charge me the duty on silks." "You are carrying precious stones." "Charge me the duty on precious stones." They figured: If he did not have something of extraordinary worth in his possession, he would not have agreed to whatever duty was asked of him. So they said to him, "You will not stir from here until you open the box and show us what is inside."

When he opened the box, all of Egypt was illuminated by the radiance of Sarah's beauty.[7]

22. "And Abram went up out of Egypt. . . . And there was a strife between the herdsmen of Abram's cattle and the herdsmen of Lot's cattle" (Gen. 13:1 and 13:7). R. Berekhiah said in the name of R. Judah bar R. Simon: Abraham's cattle used to go out muzzled,[8] but Lot's cattle did not go out muzzled. When Abraham's herdsmen asked, "Since when is robbery permitted?" Lot's herdsmen replied, "You know that the Holy One said to Abraham: 'Unto thy seed have I given this Land' [Gen. 24:7]. But Abraham is a barren mule and cannot beget children. Soon he will die and his nephew Lot will be his heir. So if these cattle eat outside of Lot's fields, it is their own that they eat."

The Holy One then said to Lot's herdsmen: I did, to be sure, tell Abraham, "Unto thy seed have I given this Land." When? After the seven nations are uprooted from it. But now "the Canaanite and the Perizzite still dwell in the Land" (Gen. 13:7). Up to now, the right to the Land has been granted them.[9]

23. In the words "Who hath raised up those from the east?" (Isa. 41:2), Isaiah meant: Who raised—bestirred—the hearts of peoples of the east that they came [to the Land, and there] fell by the hand of Abraham?[10]

In going on to say, "Tzedek (Righteous) called him to His feet" (Isa. 41:2),[11] Isaiah implied that [it was Tzedek, the Righteous One], Life of all worlds, who illumined[12] Abraham's path wherever he went.

But R. Berekhiah said that, according to Isaiah, it was the planet Tzedek (Jupiter) that illumined Abraham's path.[13]

However, R. Reuben said that, according to Isaiah, it was righteousness (tzedek) that cried out and said,

---

1. Gen. R. 54:6.
2. The Hebrew el olam can be translated either "everlasting God" or "God of the world."
3. Sot 10a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
4. Gen. R. 49:4, 43:7 and 54:6.
5. Sif Deut., §313.
6. What is said in Scripture of the patriarchs intimates what is to happen to their descendants, the people of Israel. Gen. R. 40:6, B. BB 100a.
7. Gen. R. 40:5; Tanhuma, Lekh Lekha, §5; Tanhuma B, Lekh Lekha, §8, pp. 65–66.
8. So as not to graze in other people's fields.
9. Gen. R. 41:5.
10. See Gen. 14.
11. JV: "At whose step victory attendeth."
12. The commentator may associate the word yikraehu ("attendeth") with ykr ("brightness"): "The moon walking in brightness (ykr)" (Job 31:26).
13. Jupiter was Abraham's planet. See B. Shab 156b.

"If there is no Abraham, no one will do my bidding."[1]

"He giveth nations before him, and maketh him rule over kings; his sword maketh them as the dust, his bow as the driven stubble" (Isa. 41:2). R. Judah said: Abraham threw dust at the four kings, which turned into swords; stubble, which turned into arrows.

But R. Nehemiah objected: The text does not say, "He maketh dust [his sword]," but "Maketh them as the dust": the four kings threw swords at Abraham, which turned to dust, and shot arrows, which became stubble.

"He pursueth them and passeth on safely; the way with his feet he toucheth not" (Isa. 41:3). R. Nehemiah said in the name of R. Abbahu: The feet of Abraham and his companions were no more soiled by dust than the feet of one who walks from his house to the synagogue.

"And the king of Sodom went out to meet him" (Gen. 14:17). The king began, as it were, wagging his tail at Abraham, saying: Even as you went down into a fiery furnace and were saved, so did I descend into the bitumen[2] and was saved.

"At the Vale of Shaveh—the same is the King's Vale" (Gen. 14:17). In the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman, the sages said: There all the nations acting in concert (hushvu)[3] cut down cedars, made a large dais, seated Abraham on top of it, and extolled him, saying, " 'Hear us, lord; thou art ruler—god' [Gen. 23:6]. You are to be king over us! You are to be ruler over us! You are to be god over us!" Abraham replied, "The world is not without its [true] King—the world is not without its [true] God."[4]

24. "Fear not Abram, I am thy shield, thy reward shall be exceedingly great" (Gen. 15:1). R. Levi said: God spoke to him thus, because Abraham was filled with misgiving, saying to himself: Possibly there was a righteous or a God-fearing man among those hosts I slew. Abraham's misgiving may be illustrated by the parable of a straw merchant who, while passing the king's orchard, saw a pile of thorns. He descended [from his wagon] and picked it up. At that moment the king looked out and caught sight of him, whereupon the straw merchant tried to hide. The king asked, "Why are you trying to hide? How many laborers would I have required to gather those thorns! Now that you have gathered them, come and receive your reward." So, too, the Holy One said to Abraham, "The hosts you slew were thorns, meant to be cut down."[5]

25. "And the Lord appeared unto him in the terebinths of Mamre" (Gen. 18:1). When the Holy One told Abraham to circumcise himself, he went and consulted his three friends, Aner, Eshkol, and Mamre. Aner said to him, "You are now about one hundred years old—are you going to inflict such pain upon yourself?" Eshkol said, "Why should you make yourself readily identifiable in battle among your enemies?" But Mamre said, "Your God, who stood by you in a fiery furnace, in your battle against the four kings, and during famine—will you not heed Him in this matter?"

The Holy One said to Mamre, "You gave Abraham good advice that he circumcise himself. As you live, I will appear to him neither in the palace of Aner nor in the palace of Eshkol—only in your palace." Hence, "the Lord appeared unto him in Mamre's [palace built out of] terebinths" (Gen. 18:1).[6]

26. "And the Lord appeared unto him . . . on a day that was very hot" (Gen. 18:1). Why did God make that day very hot? R. Hama bar Hanina explained: It was the third day after Abraham's circumcision,[7] and the Holy One came to ask how Abraham was; so He drew the sun out of its sheath [to make the day so hot], that the righteous Abraham would not be troubled by attending to wayfarers. [Since no one came because of the heat], Abraham sent out Eliezer [to look around]. He went out but found no wayfarers. So, in accord with the proverb "Never trust a slave," Abraham said, "I do not believe you," and he himself went out. "And he lifted up his eyes, and looked, and lo, three men stood by him" (Gen. 18:2). What kind of people were these three [who were able to stir abroad on such a hot day]? They were the angels Michael, Raphael, and Gabriel. Michael came to announce to Sarah [that she was to bear a child]; Raphael, to heal Abraham; and Gabriel, to overturn Sodom.[8]

27. "And Abraham ran after the calf" (Gen. 18:7).[9] The calf had run away from Abraham and entered the cave of Machpelah. When Abraham entered after it, he saw Adam and his mate lying asleep on couches, lamps burning above them, and their bodies giving forth a goodly odor, sweet in savor. This is how it came about that Abraham was eager to have the cave of Machpelah as a burying place.[10]

Abraham's Prayer and Sodom's Sins

28. "Abraham drew near and said: 'The Judge of all the earth must not exercise justice too strictly' " (Gen. 18:23 and 18:25).[11] According to R. Levi, the verse means that Abraham said: If You seek to have a world, strict justice cannot be exercised; and if You seek strict justice, there will be no world. Do You expect to take hold of the well's

---

1. Three opinions are stated here concerning the meaning of tzedek in Isa. 41:2: (1) An anonymous opinion: God, the Righteous One, brought Abraham near Him, to His feet, so to speak, and thus illumined Abraham's path. (2) R. Berekhiah's: Abraham's natural talent, his affinity with Tzedek, the planet Jupiter, illumined a path for his feet. (3) R. Reuben's: Righteousness (tzedek), personified in the verse, required Abraham's presence; so that its feet, so to speak, might be advanced in the world through Abraham's righteous deeds.
2. He fell into a bitumen pit. See Gen. 14:10.
3. Shaveh, ("equal") is thus taken to imply unanimity.
4. Gen. R. 42:5.
5. Gen. R. 44:5.
6. Gen. R. 42:8.
7. When he was particularly weak. See Gen. 34:25.
8. B. BM 86b.
9. JV: "And Abraham ran unto the herd."
10. PRE 36.
11. JV: "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do justly?"

rope at both ends? You desire a world and You also desire justice? You can have only one of the two. If You do not relent a little, the world will not endure.[1]

29. "Peradventure the fifty will be lacking—there will be only five" (Gen. 18:28).[2] R. Hiyya bar Abba said: In his plea, Abraham was about to come down at once from fifty to five. But the Holy One said to Abraham, "Go back to the fifty you mentioned first [and reduce gradually the number of the righteous whose presence would save the cities]." The matter may be illustrated by R. Levi's parable of a water clock full of water:[3] only as long as it contains water may the defending counsel plead. However, when the judge wishes the defending counsel to continue his defense, he will say: Add water to the water clock.[4]

30. Our masters taught: The people of Sodom were arrogant because of the bounty the Holy One had bestowed upon them. How is Sodom described in Scripture? "As for [Sodom's] earth, out of it cometh bread [in abundance]. The stones of it are the place of sapphires; and it hath dust of gold. Its paths no bird of prey knoweth, and no falcon's eye hath seen" (Job 28:6–7). There was not a path in Sodom that did not have the foliage of seven trees over it, each shading the one below it: foliage of the vine, fig, pomegranate, walnut and almond, apple, and peach, so that each path was fully sheltered. R. Levi said in the name of R. Yohanan: There is a species of falcon [so keen-sighted] that even when it soars eighteen mil in the sky, it can sight its food. Yet when that falcon stood upon Sodom's trees, it could not see the ground below because of the massive foliage of those trees.

More. When a man would go to a gardener and say to him, "Give me an issar's worth of greens," and the gardener would rinse the greens in water, he would shake down gold flakes out of the soil clinging to their roots.

So the [inhabitants of] Sodom said, "We live in peace and plenty—food can be got from our land, gold and silver can be mined from our land, precious stones and pearls can be obtained from our land. What need have we to look after wayfarers, who come to us only to deprive us? Come, let us see to it that the duty of entertaining foot travelers be forgotten in our land, as is said, "They who keep aloof from [wayfaring] men, turning away [in disdain] from them, had come to forget utterly [their duty toward] foot travelers" (Job 28:4).[5]

So the Holy One said: Because of the bounty I bestowed upon you, you would make the very memory of wayfarers' feet forgotten in your midst—therefore I will cause the memory of [anything good in you] to be utterly forgotten in the world.

Rava expounded: What is meant by the verse "How long will ye imagine mischief against men, all of you plan murder by devices such as a leaning wall or a tottering fence" (Ps. 62:4)? The verse intimates that the Sodomites would cast envious eyes upon a wealthy man. So they would seat him in the shadow of a leaning wall, push the wall down on him, and then seize his money.

What is meant by "In the dark they dig into houses, which they had marked for themselves in the daytime" (Job 24:16)? This verse likewise shows that the Sodomites used to cast envious eyes upon men of wealth. In order to mark the exact place where the wealthy men stored their valuables, Sodomites would deposit their precious scented oil (ostensibly for safekeeping) with the wealthy men, who would store this oil with their own valuables. Then later, in the dark of night, these Sodomites would come and, like dogs, sniff out the oil's whereabouts, dig there, and haul away the wealthy men's valuables.

[Their rules were calculated to do injury to the poor.] Thus they said, "He who has an ox is obliged to render one day's herding service; but he who has no ox has to give two day's service." It happened that an orphan, a widow's son, was made to care for the oxen of many owners. To get even, he proceeded to kill all the oxen. Then he said, "He who had one ox may take one hide, but he who had none is to take two hides." When asked, "How does such a rule make sense?" he replied, "The latter rule is no more twisted than the former rule."

When a bricklayer had set out a row of bricks, the inhabitants of Sodom would come and each of them help himself to a brick. When accused, each would say, "But I took only one."

When a greengrocer spread out garlic or onions [to season them], the inhabitants of Sodom would come and each of them steal one; when accused, each would say, "But I took only one."

In Sodom there were four judges: Shakrai ("liar"); Shakrurai ("archdeceiver"); Zayyefai ("forger"); and Matzle-dina ("perverter of justice").

When a man struck his neighbor's wife and caused her to miscarry, the husband would be told, "Give her to this man to impregnate her again."

When a man cut off the ear of another man's donkey, the aggrieved owner would be told, "Give the donkey to this man to keep until its ear grows back."

When a man wounded another, the victim would be told, "Pay the man a fee for having bled you."

When a man crossed a bridge, he would be charged four zuz; but if he waded through the water [to avoid the toll] he would be charged eight zuz.

It happened that a launderer came to Sodom and was told, "Pay four zuz." When he said, "But I waded through the water," he was told, "In that case, pay eight." When he refused, they roughed him up until he bled. Then he appeared before Sodom's judges, who ruled: Pay the men of Sodom a fee for having bled you, besides the eight zuz for having waded through the water.

When Eliezer, Abraham's servant, happened to be in Sodom, he was roughed up until he bled. So he appeared before a judge, who ruled: Pay the man a fee for having bled you. At that, Eliezer took a stone, wounded the judge with it, and said: Pay the fee you owe me for bleeding you to this man; as for my own money, it will remain in its place.

Among the people of Sodom, it was agreed that a

---

1. Gen. R. 39:6 and 49:9; PR 29/30a (YJS 2:576).
2. JV: "Peradventure there shall lack five of the fifty righteous."
3. Used in courts of justice for measuring the time allowed for argument.
4. Gen. R. 49:12.
5. So apparently the commentator construes the verse. JV: "They are forgotten of the foot that passeth by; they hang afar from men, they swing to and fro."

man who invited a stranger to a banquet should be punished by being stripped of his cloak. Eliezer happened to come to Sodom when a feast was about to take place, and of course no one invited him to join them. But since he wanted to eat, he sat down at the end of the table. When asked, "Who invited you?" he whispered to the man sitting next to him, "You invited me." The man thought: If they hear that I invited a stranger, I will be stripped of my garment. So he picked up his cloak and ran out. Eliezer did the same thing to each and every one at the table, until they all fled. Then he ate his fill of the meal [in peace].

In Sodom they had a bed on which wayfarers were made to lie. If a wayfarer was too long for the bed, they cut him down to fit it. If he was too short, they stretched his limbs until he filled it. When Eliezer came to Sodom and was told, "Come on up and lie down on this bed," he replied, "Since the day my mother died, I vowed never to lie down on a bed."

When a poor man came to the land of Sodom, each Sodomite would give him a denar with the Sodomite's name inscribed on it, but not one of them would sell him a morsel of bread to eat. Eventually, when the poor man died of hunger, each Sodomite would come to claim his denar. There was a maiden in Sodom who once brought a morsel of bread concealed in her pitcher to a poor man. When three days passed and the poor man did not die, the reason for his staying alive became clear. The Sodomites smeared the maiden with honey and placed her on a rooftop, so that bees came and stung her to death. Of this maiden's anguish, Scripture says, "The cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great (rabbah)" (Gen. 18:20)—the cry was so great because of what befell that maiden (rivah).[1]

31. It once happened that two maidens went down to draw water from a well. One asked the other, "Why is your face so sickly?" The other answered, "We have no food left, and we are about to die." What did the first one do? She filled her own pitcher with flour, and the two exchanged pitchers, each taking the other's. When the Sodomites became aware of this, they seized the one who saved the other's life and burned her alive. The Holy One said, "Even if I wished to remain silent, justice for that maiden does not allow Me to do so." Hence: "Whether they have done according to her cry" (Gen. 18:21)—the cry of that maiden.[2]

32. R. Judah said: It was proclaimed in Sodom, "He who sustains a stranger or a poor and needy person with a morsel of bread is to be burned alive."

Lot's daughter Pelotit was married to one of Sodom's notables. Seeing a poor man languishing in the town square, she felt sorry for him. What did she do? Every day when she went down to draw water, she would put into her pitcher some of every kind of food she had in her house, and thus sustained the poor man. The people of Sodom kept wondering: How does this poor man manage to stay alive? Finally they figured out the reason, and they brought Pelotit out to be burned.

She prayed, "God of the universe, exact justice and judgment in my behalf from the Sodomites." Her cry rose up before the throne of glory. The Holy One said, "I will go down and see whether they have done according to her cry" (Gen. 18:21)—if the people of Sodom have indeed done according to the cry of this young woman, I will turn the city's foundations over to the top and the city's top to the bottom.[3]

33. Sodom had five principal judges: Follower of False Principles, Archliar, Archvillain, Perverter of Justice, and Flayer of Human Beings. As chief judge, Lot's status was higher than that of the others. When he said something that pleased the other judges, they would say to him, "Go further" (Gen. 19:9), take an even higher rank; but when he said something that displeased him, they would say, "The fellow settled among us as a stranger, and he would lay down the law for us!" (ibid.).[4]

34. R. Jeremiah ben Eliezer said: The real prosperity of the Sodomites lasted only fifty-two years, during twenty-five of which the Holy One made mountains tremble because of them and caused quakes because of them, so that they might resolve on penitence—but they did not so resolve. Hence Scripture: "He moved mountains, yet they took no cognizance" (Job 9:5), so that in the end "He overturned them in His anger" (ibid.).[5]

35. "But his wife looked back from behind him, and she became a pillar of salt" (Gen. 19:26)—because, R. Isaac said, she sinned through salt. On the night that the angels visited Lot, Lot said to his wife, "Give these guests a bit of salt." But she replied, "[Besides entertaining guests], is it your wish to introduce into Sodom another vile custom [that of seasoning their food]?" What did she do? She went around among all her neighbors, saying to each, "Give me salt—we have guests," intending thereby to have the townspeople become aware of the presence of guests in her home [and penalize Lot for it]. Hence, "she herself became a pillar of salt."[6]

Abraham's Progeny

36. "So shall thy seed be" (Gen. 15:5). R. Levi said in the name of R. Yohanan: How is God's promise to be understood? By the parable of a man who set out on a journey and traveled through the wilderness a day, two days, three days, up to ten days, without finding either town or wayside inn, either tree or water or any living creature. After traveling ten days,[7] he espied a tree in the distance and thought: There may be water under it. When

---

1. B. Sanh 109b; Num. R. 9:24; Lev. R. 5:2; Gen. R. 42:5; and Rashi, ad loc.
2. Gen. R. 49:6; Yalkut, Va-yera, §18.
3. PRE 25.
4. The two parts of the verse appear to be inconsistent; hence the comment. Gen. R. 50:3.
5. Gen. R. 49:6.
6. Gen. R. 51:5 and 50:4.
7. The ten days allude to the ten generations between Noah and Abraham.

he reached the tree, he found that it indeed stood over a spring. He saw how beautiful it was, how delicious its fruit, how graceful its branches, how tempting its shade. So he sat down and cooled himself in the tree's shade, partook of its fruit, drank at the spring, and felt with pleasure that his spirit was refreshed. When he rose to go, he addressed himself to the tree: Tree, O tree, what blessing can I bestow upon you, and what parting word shall I offer you? That your wood may be fine? It is fine. That your shade be pleasant? It is already pleasant. That your branches be graceful? They are graceful. That your fruit be delicious? It is delicious. That a spring issue from beneath your roots? Such a spring already issues from beneath your roots. That you stand in a desirable spot? You already stand in such a spot. How then shall I bless you? Only that all the seedlings arising from you shall be like you.

So it was when the Holy One created the world. Twenty generations came and went, but no good was found in them. Not a single righteous man rose up among them[1] until after twenty generations. It was then that the Holy One espied Abraham hidden away in Chaldea.

The Holy One said: How is one to know whether he will have the power to stand firm? But after he was cast into a fiery furnace, sanctified God's Name, and stood up to the test, at once the Holy One brought him nearer [to Himself, that is], to the Land of Israel. There Abraham set to and built an inn, where he gave food to wayfarers and brought men beneath the wings of the Presence, making known the glory of the Holy One throughout the world.

Then the Holy One said: Abraham, Abraham, what can I say to you or what blessing can I bestow upon you? That in My Presence you be deemed perfectly righteous? That Sarah your wife be deemed righteous in My Presence? Even in My Presence, both you and Sarah are so deemed. That all the members of your household be deemed righteous? Even in My Presence, they are so deemed. How then shall I bless you? Only that all children who spring from you be like you.[2]

37. "Who would have said unto Abraham that Sarah would give children suck?" (Gen. 21:7). How can it be asserted that Sarah suckled more than one child? R. Levi explained: On the day that Abraham weaned his son Isaac, he made a great feast, but the peoples of the world ridiculed him, saying, "Look at this old man and old woman who have picked up a foundling from the street and say, 'He is our own son,' and now they have the gall to make a great feast in an attempt to establish so preposterous a claim." What did our father Abraham do then? He invited all the notables of that generation, even as our mother Sarah invited their wives. Each woman brought her child with her, but not the wetnurse. A miracle was then wrought for our mother Sarah—her nipples poured out milk like two jets of water, so that she was able to suckle all these children. But people continued to scoff. "Even assuming that Sarah could give birth at the age of ninety, is it conceivable that Abraham, at the age of one hundred, could beget children?" At once the lineaments of Isaac's visage changed and became like Abraham's. Then all the people cried out as one, "Abraham did beget Isaac" (Gen. 25:19).[3]

38. Our mother Sarah was exceedingly modest, so that our father Abraham had to say to her, "This is not a time for modesty. To hallow God's Name, uncover your breast, that all may be aware of the miracles the Holy One has begun to perform." Sarah uncovered her breast, and her nipples poured out milk like two jets of water. Noble ladies came forward to have their children suckled by Sarah, saying, "We do not merit having our children suckled on the milk of such a righteous woman."[4]

39. "And Abraham made a great feast" (Gen. 21:8). R. Judah bar R. Simon said: Not "a great feast" but a feast for great personages—Og and all other great ones like him were there. At that time Og was asked, "Did you not use to say, 'Abraham is like a barren mule and cannot beget a child'?" Nevertheless, when Og looked at Isaac, he was able to reply, "So this gift given to Abraham—what's it worth? Is not the creature a puny thing? Were I to put my finger upon him, I could crush him." The Holy One said to Og, "How dare you belittle My gift? As you live, you will see thousands and myriads issue from his children's children." And it was at the hands of Isaac's descendants that this evil man [Og] was to fall.[5]

40. "God hath given me occasion for joy; everyone that heareth will rejoice with me" (Gen. 21:6). R. Samuel bar R. Isaac was quoted as speculating: If one person—let us call him Reuben—rejoices, why should another person—let us call him Simeon—rejoice with him? So also, if Sarah was remembered [and she conceived], why should others rejoice with her? However, when our mother Sarah was remembered, many other barren women were remembered with her, many sick people were healed, many deaf people gained their hearing, many blind people were given sight, many madmen were cured of their madness—an amnesty was granted to the world.

R. Levi said: [At Isaac's birth] the Holy One added brilliance to the luminaries. Accordingly, when Isaac was born, all—heaven and earth, sun and moon, stars and planets—rejoiced.

"And Abraham called the name of his son . . . Isaac (Yitzhak)" (Gen. 21:3). The name Yitzhak signifies that at his birth Torah's Law went forth (yatza hok) to the world, went forth as God's bounty to the world.[6]

---

1. The first ten generations, from Cain until Noah, were altogether wicked. The next ten, from Noah until Abraham, had not one among them worthy of preparing mankind to receive the Torah and make the world fit to have the Presence abide in it. Mah.
2. Num. R. 2:12; B. Ta 5b; Tde 25 (JPS, pp. 522–23).
3. B. BM 87a.
4. Gen. R. 53:9; Yalkut, Va-yera, §93.
5. Gen. R. 53:10; Deut. R. 1:25.
6. Had Sarah named her child, the name might have signified "laughter" (Gen. 18:12). But since Abraham named him, a serious, not derisive, significance is given to the name. The word hok may mean "law," as well as "portion, gift." Gen. R. 53:7; Yalkut, Va-yera, §92.

41. "Wherefore she said to Abraham: 'Cast out this bondwoman and her son' " (Gen. 21:10). R. Akiva expounded: The verse implies that Sarah saw Ishmael build altars, catch locusts,[1] and offer them with incense to an idol. So Sarah said, "It may be that my son also will learn such practices and be inclined to such worship, and in the end Heaven's Name will be profaned." But Abraham replied, "After bestowing high status upon a person, are we to demean him? After we declared Hagar mistress and had her enter into a role of such importance, are we now to expel her from our house? What will people say of us? Would not Heaven's Name be profaned by our action?" Sarah replied, "Since you say that the Name would be profaned through Hagar's banishment, let Him who is everywhere decide between you and me."

R. Simeon ben Yohai commented: This passage is one of four that R. Akiva expounded but that I do not expound as he did, and what I say appears to me to be more accurate. I say: God forbid that in the household of that righteous man there were ever such goings-on. Is it conceivable that in the household of the one of whom God had said, "For I know him" (Gen. 18:19)—is it conceivable that in his household idolatry was practiced? Rather, Ishmael's "making sport" (Gen. 21:9) [which incensed Sarah and signifies mockery or ridicule] has to do [not with idolatry but] with inheriting Abraham's estate. For after Isaac was born to our father Abraham, everyone rejoiced, saying, "A son is born to Abraham! A son is born to Abraham! He will inherit [two portions in] the world." Ishmael responded with ridicule, "Don't be foolish, utterly foolish—I am the firstborn, and mine is the right to inherit the double portion."[2]

42. R. Azariah said in the name of R. Levi: Ishmael suggested to Isaac, "Come, let us test our mettle in the field." Then Ishmael took a bow and arrows, and shot them in Isaac's direction, pretending that he was merely making sport. When Sarah saw such "making sport," she told Abraham about it.[3]

43. "And Abraham rose up early in the morning . . . and sent her away" (Gen. 21:14). Abraham took a wheeled water tub and tied it to Hagar's loins so that it would be pulled behind her, in order that whenever Abraham wished to see his son Ishmael, he might readily make out the direction in which Hagar and Ishmael had gone.

Presently Ishmael settled in the wilderness of Paran and took for himself a wife from the plains of Moab—her name was Aissa.

At the end of three years, Abraham went to see his son Ishmael in the wilderness of Paran, after first swearing to Sarah that he would not dismount from his camel at the place where Ishmael was living. Abraham reached there at midday, found Ishmael's wife, and asked her, "Where is Ishmael?" She replied, "He and his mother went to bring some fruits and brooms[4] from the wilderness." Abraham said, "Give me a little water and a little bread, for I am weary from the journey through the wilderness." She replied, "No bread, no water." Abraham said, "When your husband Ishmael returns, tell him, "An old man from the land of Canaan came to see you and said to tell you, 'The household of this house is not in good repair.' " When Ishmael returned, his wife gave him the message—whereupon he divorced her. Then his mother sent for a woman from her father's house in the land of Egypt. Her name was Fatima, and Ishmael took her as his wife.

At the end of another three years, Abraham went again to see his son Ishmael, after once more swearing to Sarah that he would not dismount from the camel at the place where Ishmael lived. He reached there at midday, found Ishmael's wife, and asked her, "Where is Ishmael?" She replied, "He and his mother have gone to graze the camels in the wilderness." He said, "Give me a little bread and a little water, for I am weary from the journey through the wilderness." She brought these out and gave them to him. Then Abraham entreated the Holy One in his son's behalf, and Ishmael's house was filled with all manner of good things. When Ishmael came back, his wife told him what had happened. Then Ishmael realized that his father still loved him.[5]

The Binding of Isaac

44. Had the Holy One asked our father Abraham for even the apple of his eye, Abraham would have given it to Him, indeed would have given Him not only the apple of his eye—would have given Him his very soul.[6]

45. "And it came to pass after these things that God tried Abraham" (Gen. 22:1). After what things? According to R. Yohanan, citing R. Yose ben Zimra, after the things Satan had to say. [Following the feast given] upon the "child's having grown and being weaned" (Gen. 21:8), Satan spoke up to the Holy One, "Master of the universe, out of the entire feast that this old man, upon whom You bestowed fruit of the womb at the age of one hundred—out of the entire feast he prepared, could he not have spared, say, one turtledove, one fledgling, as an offering to You?"

The Holy One replied, "Is it not true that Abraham prepared the feast in honor of his son? Still, if I say to him, 'Sacrifice your son to Me,' he will sacrifice him at once." Satan said, "Try him." At once "God tried Abraham."

"And He said: 'Take, I beg thee (na), thy son' " (Gen. 22:2).[7] R. Simeon bar Abba said: The word na can imply only entreaty. The matter may be illustrated by the parable of a king of flesh and blood who had to face many wars,

---

1. Being still very young, those were the only living things he could catch.
2. See Deut. 21:17. Tos Sot 5:6; Gen. R. 53:11.
3. Gen. R. 53:11; PRE 30.
4. Reading with David Luria not temarim ("dates") but retamim ("brooms").
5. PRE 30; MhG Gen. pp. 339–40.
6. Sif Deut., §313.
7. JV: "Take now thy son."

in all of which he had one mighty warrior who invariably achieved victory. In the course of time, he faced a war particularly severe. The king said to the mighty warrior, "I beg you, stand to with me in this war, that mortals should not say, 'The earlier wars were of no substance.' "

Likewise, the Holy One said to Abraham, "I have tried you with many tests, and you have stood up to them all. Now, I beg you, stand to with Me in this test, that it not be said, 'The earlier ones were of no substance.' "

"Take now thy son" (Gen. 22:2). Abraham: "I have two sons [which one do you mean]?" God: "Thine only son" (ibid.). Abraham: "[Both are only sons]—Isaac is the only son I have from his mother, and Ishmael is the only son I have from her who is his mother." God: "The son whom thou lovest" (ibid.). Abraham: "Master of the universe, are there separate compartments in one's inmost self for love? I love both of them." God: "Very well, then—Isaac." Why did God drag out His command to such length? So that Abraham's mind might not be stunned [by such a heartrending demand].

"And offer him up there for a burnt offering upon one of the mountains" (Gen. 22:2). Abraham asked, "Which mountain?" God: "Wherever you see My glory standing and waiting for you."

Abraham meditated in his heart, saying: What am I to do? Shall I tell Sarah? Women tend to think lightly of God's commands. If I do not tell her and simply take off with him—afterward, when she does not see him, she will strangle herself. What did he do? He said to Sarah, "Prepare food and drink for us, and we will rejoice today." She asked, "Why today more than other days? Besides, what is the rejoicing about?" Abraham: "Old people like ourselves, to whom a son was born in our old age—have we not cause to rejoice?" So she went and prepared the food. During the meal, Abraham said to Sarah, "You know, when I was only three years old, I became aware of my Maker, but this lad, growing up, has not yet been taught [about his Creator]. Now, there is a place far away where youngsters are taught [about Him]. Let me take him there." Sarah: "Take him in peace."

"And Abraham rose up early in the morning" (Gen. 22:3). Why early in the morning? Because he said: It may be that Sarah will reconsider what she said yesterday and refuse to let Isaac go. So I'll get up early and go while she is still asleep. Moreover, it is best that no one see us.[1]

"And he [himself] saddled his ass" (Gen. 22:3). Love disregards dignity! How many menservants, how many maidservants did that righteous man have, yet he himself saddled his ass in his eagerness [to do God's will].

"And took two of his young men with him" (Gen. 22:3). These were Ishmael and Eliezer. He said: While I am offering up Isaac, these two will take care of our gear. At once, rivalry set in between Ishmael and Eliezer. Ishmael said, "Now that my father is about to bring his son Isaac as a burnt offering, I, being my father's firstborn, will be heir." Eliezer replied, "But he has exiled you and sent you into the wilderness! Whereas I am the servant who waits on him day and night—I am to be his heir." But the holy spirit replied to both of them, "Neither the one nor the other is to be the heir."

"And rose up, and went" (Gen. 22:3). On the way, Satan ran ahead of Abraham, appeared before him in the guise of an old man, and asked, "Where are you going?" Abraham: "To pray." Satan: "Why should one going to pray have fire and a knife in his hand, and kindling wood on his shoulder?" Abraham: "We may abide there a day or two, and we will have to slaughter an animal, bake bread, and eat." Satan: "Old man, do you think I was not there when the Holy One said to you, 'Take now thy son'? Old man, you are out of your mind. A son who was given you at the age of one hundred—and you are setting out to kill him!" Abraham: "Even so." Satan: "And should He test you even more severely, will you still stand firm?" Abraham: "Yes, even more and more severely." Satan: "But tomorrow He will call you murderer for shedding the blood of your son." Abraham: "Even so."

Seeing that his efforts were in vain, Satan left Abraham and, disguising himself as a young man, stood at Isaac's right and said, "Where are you going?" Isaac: "To study Torah." Satan: "While still alive or after your death?" Isaac: "Is there a man who can study after his death?" Satan: "O hapless son of a hapless mother! How many fasts did your mother fast, how many prayers did she utter until at last you were born! And now this old man has gone mad in his old age and is about to slit your throat." Isaac: "Nevertheless, I shall not deviate from the will of my Maker and from the bidding of my father." Satan: "If so, shall all those fine tunics your mother made [for you] become a legacy for Ishmael, for him who hates your family?[2] Apparently you give no thought [to what would follow upon your death]." As the proverb has it, "If the whole word does not enter [the listener's mind], half of it does." For Isaac turned to his father and said: "Father, listen to what this one is saying to me!" Abraham replied, "Pay no attention to him!"

When Satan saw that neither Abraham nor Isaac heeded what he had to say, he proceeded to turn himself into a wide stream. At once [having to cross the stream], Abraham went down into the water until it reached to his knees and then said to his lads: Follow me. They went down after him. Halfway across the stream, the water came up to his neck. In that instant, Abraham lifted his eyes heavenward and said: Master of the universe, You chose me. You appeared to me, saying: "I am unique and you are unique. Through you shall My Name become known in My world—so bring your son Isaac before Me as a burnt offering." And I did not hold back. As You see, I am occupied with your bidding. But now "I am come into deep waters" (Ps. 69:3). If either I or Isaac were to drown, who will fulfill Your commands, and by whom will the uniqueness of Your Name be proclaimed? The Holy One replied:

---

[1] They may find out what he is about to do and seek to dissuade him.

[2] Or, "All the things done by your mother against Ishmael have been for nought, and he who hates your family will be the heir?" See Gen. R. TA, p. 598, which quotes Joseph B. Schönak, Ha-Mashbir (Jerusalem, 1858).

As you live! My Name shall be proclaimed in the world through you.

The Holy One rebuked the stream and it dried up, so that they found themselves standing on dry land.

What did Satan do? He said to Abraham, "This is what I heard from behind the [heavenly] curtain: 'A lamb will be the burnt offering—Isaac is not to be the burnt offering.' " But such is the punishment of a liar—even when he tells the truth, no one listens. [Hence Abraham gave Satan no heed.]

"Then on the third day Abraham lifted up his eyes, and saw" (Gen. 22:4). Why on the third day? Why not on the first, or on the second? That the nations of the world might not say: God deranged Abraham so that he cut his son's throat.

"And saw the place from afar" (Gen. 22:4). [But since the place was hollowed out], how could it have been seen from afar?[1] The place was originally hollowed out. But when the Holy One decided to cause His Presence to dwell there and to make it His sanctuary, He said: It is not fitting for a king to dwell in a valley, but only on a high and lofty mountain, resplendent in beauty and visible to all. So He beckoned the valley's environs to come together and provide a suitable place for the Presence.

Then Abraham asked Isaac, "Do you see what I see?" Isaac replied, "I see a mountain, radiant in majesty, with a [mysterious] cloud hovering over it." Abraham asked the two lads, "Do you see anything?" They replied, "We see nothing other than stretches of wilderness." Abraham: "O people the like of asses! As the ass sees but does not comprehend, so it is with you. 'Abide ye here, people like the ass' " (Gen. 22:5).[2]

"Abraham took the wood of the burnt offering and laid it upon Isaac his son" (Gen. 22:6), as upon one [condemned] who is made to carry the cross upon his shoulder.

"And Isaac said . . . 'Behold, the fire and the wood, but where is the lamb for the burnt offering?' " (Gen. 22:7). In that instant, fear and dread terror fell upon Isaac, when he saw in Abraham's hand nothing at all fit for an offering. So, suspecting what was intended, he asked, "Where is the lamb for the burnt offering?" Abraham replied, "The Holy One has chosen you." Isaac said, "If He has so chosen, my life is given to Him, but I grieve for my mother." Nevertheless, "they went both of them together" (Gen. 22:8)—one to bind, the other to be bound; one to slaughter, the other to be slaughtered.

"And they came to the place" (Gen. 22:9)—both carrying stones [for the altar], both carrying the fire, both carrying the wood. For all that, Abraham acted like one making wedding preparations for his son, and Isaac like one making a wedding bower for himself.

Then Isaac said, "Father, hurry, do the will of your Maker, burn me into a fine ash, then take the ash to my mother and leave it with her, and whenever she looks at it she will say, 'This is my son, whom his father has slaughtered.' . . . Father, what will you do in your old age [without me]?" Abraham replied, "My son, we know that we can survive you for but a short time. He who comforted us in the past will comfort us until the day we die."

When Abraham was about to begin the sacrifice, Isaac said, "Father, bind my hands and my feet, for the urge to live is so willful that when I see the knife coming at me, I may flinch involuntarily [causing the knife to cut improperly] and thus disqualify myself as an offering. So I beg you, bind me in such a way that no blemish will befall me." So Abraham "bound his son well" (Gen. 22:9). Then Isaac said to Abraham, "Father, don't tell Mother about this while she is standing over a pit or on a rooftop, for she might throw herself down and be killed."

"And he placed him on the alter" (Gen. 22:9). Abraham's eyes were directed at Isaac's, and Isaac's at the heaven of heavens. Tears were flowing from Abraham's eyes, until his entire body was all but afloat in them. He took the knife in order to cut Isaac's throat deeply enough so that a quarter of a log of blood would issue from him.[3] At that instant Satan appeared and shoved Abraham's arm aside, so that the knife fell out of his hand. When he reached out to pick it up, his mouth fell wide open with weeping as a great cry of anguish erupted from him. Then, his eyes blinking frantically, he looked up to the Presence and pleaded in a rising voice, "I lift mine eyes to the mountains; whence will my help come?" (Ps. 121:1). At that, the Holy One appeared above the angels and flung open the firmament. Isaac lifted up his eyes, and, as he beheld the chambers of the chariot, he trembled and shuddered. The ministering angels stood in rows upon rows, crying and weeping, as they said to one another, "Behold, one who is unique is about to slaughter, and one also unique is about to be slaughtered. Master of the universe, the oath 'Thus shall be thy seed' [Gen. 15:5]—what is to become of it?" The Holy One said to the angel Michael, "Why are you standing still? Do not let Abraham go on!" "Then the angel of the Lord called unto him out of heaven, and said: 'Abraham, Abraham,' " (Gen. 22:11), twice, as one who cries out in distress, "What [dreadful] thing are you about to do?"

When Abraham turned his face toward the angel, the angel said again, "What are you about to do? 'Do not lay thy hand upon the lad!' " (Gen. 22:12). Abraham asked, "Who are you?" Michael replied, "I am an angel." Abraham: "When the Holy One told me to offer my son, He Himself spoke to me; so too, if He now wishes something else, He Himself should speak to me."

At once the Holy One flung open the firmament, as well as the thick cloud [covering it], and said, "By Myself I swear" (Gen. 22:16). Abraham replied, "You have sworn, and I too swear that I will not go down from this altar until I say all that I need to say." God: "Say it." Abraham: "Did you not say to me, 'Count the stars . . . so shall thy seed be' (Gen. 15:5)?" The Holy One: "Yes."

---

1. In Gen. 22:2, Moriah is spoken of as "land," presumably not elevated; in 2 Chron. 3:1, it is described as "mount." In the comment that follows, the inconsistency is explained by assuming that Moriah had been lowland, but because God was to appear there, the land (mora yah), in reverence of God, elevated itself to the height of a mountain. See Yalkut, Va-yera, §100, and Zayit Raanan, ad loc.

2. JV: "Abide ye here with the ass." But by a slight change in vowels, the word im ("with") may be read am ("people").

3. The amount of blood required for ritually valid shehitah.

Abraham: "Out of whom?" God: "Out of Isaac." Abraham: "When You commanded me to sacrifice Isaac, I should have replied: Yesterday You told me, 'In Isaac shall thy seed be called' [Gen. 21:12]; now You say to me, 'Offer him there for a burnt offering' [Gen. 22:2]. Nevertheless, I restrained my impulse and did not reply as I should have done. Even so now [I say to You], When Isaac's children shall sin and find themselves in distress, be You mindful on their behalf of the binding of Isaac; let it be reckoned in Your presence as though his ash were in fact heaped upon the altar—be then filled with compassion for his children, forgive them, and redeem them from their distress." The Holy One replied, "You had your say, and now I will have Mine. Isaac's descendants will sin in My very presence, and I will have to judge them on New Year's Day. However, should they implore Me to seek out some merit on their behalf, and to remember on their behalf the binding of Isaac, let them blow in My presence the horn of this creature." Abraham: "The horn of what creature?" God: "Turn around." At once "Abraham lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold a ram" (Gen. 22:13).

R. Eliezer said: The ram came from the mountains, where he had been grazing. R. Joshua differed: An angel brought him from the Garden of Eden, where he had been grazing beneath the tree of life and drinking out of the waters that passed under it, and the fragrance of that ram went forth throughout the world. When was the ram placed in the Garden? During twilight at the end of the six days of creation.

Throughout that day, Abraham saw the ram become entangled in a tree, break loose, and go free; become entangled in a bush, break loose, and go free; then again become entangled in a thicket, break loose, and go free. The Holy One said, "Abraham, even so will your children be entangled in many kinds of sin and trapped within successive kingdoms—from Babylon to Media, from Media to Greece, from Greece to Edom." Abraham asked, "Master of the universe, will it be forever thus?" God replied, "In the end they will be redeemed at [the sound of] the horns of this ram, as is said, 'The Lord shall blow the horn [shofar] when He goes forth in the whirlwinds at Teman [Edom]' " (Zech. 9:4).[1]

46. R. Zechariah said: The ram that had been created [for this purpose] at the twilight [of the sixth day of creation][2] was running to and fro [in its eagerness] to be offered in place of Isaac, but Samael [Satan] kept blocking him in order to make Abraham's [substitute] offering impossible, with the result that both the ram's horns got entangled in the branches of a tree. What did that ram do then? It stretched out its foreleg to tap Abraham's cloak. Abraham looked behind him, saw the ram, extricated him, and brought him as an offering instead of his son.

[At the time Isaac was bound], Satan went to Sarah, appearing to her in the form of Isaac. When Sarah saw him, she asked, "My son, what did your father do to you?" He replied, "My father took me, led me up hills and down into valleys, until finally he brought me up to the summit of a high and towering mountain, where he built an altar, set out the firewood, bound me upon the altar, and grasped a knife to cut my throat. Had not the Holy One said to him, 'Lay not thy hand upon the lad,' I would have been slaughtered. Even before Satan finished his tale, Sarah's soul left her.[3]

47. Our father Abraham was tested with ten trials, and he stood firm in all of them, showing how great was our father Abraham's love [of God].[4]

48. "There was Abraham buried next to Sarah his wife" (Gen. 25:10). R. Samuel bar Nahman said: [At the time of Sarah's funeral], Shem and Eber, walking before her bier, determined that the place next to where she was to be buried was the one intended for our father Abraham, and then they buried her in [that place in Machpelah] in Abraham's twin chamber.[5]

After the Death of Abraham

49. R. Simeon ben Yohai said: Our father Abraham wore a precious stone hanging from his neck that brought immediate healing to any sick person who looked for it; and when our father Abraham departed this world, the Holy One took it and suspended it from the orb of the sun. Hence, said Abbaye, the proverb "As the day advances, illness eases."[6]

50. R. Hanan bar Rava said in the name of Rav: On the day our father Abraham departed from this world, all the notables of the world's nations stood in a line[7] and said: Alas for the world that has lost its leader! Alas for the ship that has lost its pilot.[8]

Isaac, Rebekah, and Their Progeny

51. "Isaac brought her into the tent [and behold, she was like][9] his mother Sarah" (Gen. 24:67). As long as Sarah lived, a cloud [of glory] hovered over the entrance to her tent. After she died, the cloud disappeared. But when Rebekah came, the cloud returned. As long as Sarah lived, her doors were wide open to wayfarers; at her death, such openness ceased. But when Rebekah came, openness returned. As long as Sarah lived, blessing was dispatched into the dough she baked; at her death, such

---

1. Tanhuma, Va-yera, §22–23; Tanhuma B, Va-yera, §46; B. Sanh 89b; PRE 31; P. Ta 2:4, 65d; Yalkut, Va-yera, §101; Va-Yosha (BhM 1:37–38); PR 40:6 (YJS 2:713–21).
2. See above, chap. 2, §67.
3. Tanhuma, Va-yera, §23; Eccles. R. 9:7, §1.
4. Avot 5:3.
5. Gen. R. 62:3.
6. Literally, "As the day rises, the sick man rises." B. BB 16b.
7. The custom followed by those who would offer comfort to mourners.
8. B. BB 91a–b.
9. The meaning, the commentator assumes, cannot be "into his mother Sarah's tent," for the word ha-ohelah, which has the definite article, is not in the construct state.

blessing ceased. But when Rebekah came, the blessing returned. As long as Sarah lived, a lamp was alight [in her tent] from one Sabbath eve to the next; at her death, the light ceased. But when Rebekah came, the light returned.[1] When Isaac saw her following his mother's ways, separating her hallah[2] in ritual cleanness, and cutting up her dough in ritual cleanness, "Isaac brought her into the tent [and behold, she was like] his mother Sarah."[3]

52. "And Isaac was forty years old when he took Rebekah, the daughter of Bethuel the Aramean, of Paddan-aram, the sister of Laban the Aramean, to be his wife" (Gen. 25:20). R. Isaac taught: If Scripture means to tell us no more than that Rebekah came from Aram-naharaim, why add again and again "Aramean"? "The daughter of Bethuel the Aramean," "the sister of Laban the Aramean"—she has already been described as coming from Paddan-aram. But Scripture means to tell us that her father was a cheat,[4] her brother was a cheat, and the people of her town were cheats. Hence, this righteous woman who sprang from their midst—what is she to be likened to? To a "lily among thorns" (Song 2:2).[5]

53. "And the children seemed to be ever on the run within her"[6] (Gen. 25:22). When Rebekah passed synagogues or houses of study, [the unborn] Jacob was scurrying within her in his eagerness to get out; and when she passed houses of idolatry, [the unborn] Esau was scurrying in his eagerness to get out.[7]

54. "And she went to inquire of the Lord" (Gen. 25:22). But were there synagogues or houses of study in those days? Surely she could have gone only to inquire personally of Shem and Eber! Hence Scripture intimates that visiting a sage is like visiting the Presence.[8]

55. "And when the boys grew up" (Gen. 25:27). R. Levi said: [At first] they were like a myrtle and a wild rose growing side by side. But when they grew up, the former yielded its characteristic fragrance (reho) and the latter its thorns (hoho). So, for the first thirteen years, both Jacob and Esau went to school and came home from school. But at the end of the thirteen years,[9] one went to houses of study and the other to shrines of idolatry.[10]

56. "Now Isaac loved Esau, because he provided choice viands for his palate".[11] (Gen. 25:28)—choice meat for Isaac's palate and choice wine for Isaac's palate. "But Rebekah loved Jacob more and more" (ibid.):[12] the more she heard his voice [engaged in study of Torah], the more she loved him.[13]

57. "There was [the cunning of] a trap in his mouth" (Gen. 25:28).[14] Esau knew how to entrap and deceive his father with his mouth, by asking such questions as "How should salt be tithed? How should straw be tithed?"[15]

58. "And Esau came in from the field, and he was faint" (Gen. 25:29). One day, when Esau went out to hunt beasts and birds, he saw a gazelle in front of him and ran after it. Nimrod espied Esau and asked him, "Why do you hunt in my forest? I demand that you meet me on the field of battle." Nimrod then fixed the day for the battle. In the interim, Esau had time to go and seek Jacob's counsel. Jacob told Esau, "As long as Nimrod wears Adam's garments,[16] you cannot defeat him. Induce him to remove them, and then fight him." That is what Esau did. When Nimrod took off Adam's garments, Esau cunningly managed to get hold of them and put them on. Then he rose up and slew Nimrod. That is why he felt faint, as is said, "My soul fainteth as [the soul] of murderers" (Jer. 4:31).[17]

59. "And Esau said to Jacob: 'Stuff me with food' " (Gen. 25:30). R. Zera observed: That wicked man opened his mouth wide, as though he were a camel, and said to Jacob, "I'll keep my mouth open, and you pack it in." "And he did eat and drink, then rose up and came back" (Gen. 25:34), bringing with him a company of ruffians who said, "We will eat what is Jacob's and poke fun at him."[18]

60. "And his eyes were dim from seeing" (Gen. 27:1). R. Eleazar ben Azariah taught: From seeing the evil deeds of wicked Esau. For the Holy One said: Shall Isaac go out into the marketplace and hear people say, "This is that scoundrel's father"? I shall therefore dim Isaac's eyes so that he will stay home.[19]

Or, the phrase "from seeing" is to be explained by the tale of a distinguished man who had a beautiful and well-appointed reception room, next to which his neighbors used to burn stubble and straw, sending smoke in through

---

1. The cloud over the tent is taken to represent modesty; the open doors, hospitality and compassion; blessing in the dough, bliss in the household; and the lamp alight, industry (Moshe Aryeh Mirkin on Gen. R. 60:16, Midrash R. [Tel Aviv, 1956–67], p. 316).
2. The portion of the dough given to priests. See Num. 15:20.
3. Gen. R. 60:16.
4. By a slight transposition, the Hebrew aram ("Aramean") may be read ramai ("rogue, cheat").
5. Gen. R. 63:4; Lev. R. 23:1.
6. JV: "struggled within her." But the word va-yitrotzetzu ("struggled") may also be construed as a form of rutz [rutz] ("run, scurry").
7. Gen. R. 63:6; Yalkut, Toledot, §110.
8. Gen. R. 63:6.
9. Maturity is reached at thirteen years and one day.
10. Gen. R. 63:10.
11. JV: "He did eat of his venison." But be-fiv ("he did eat" [literally, "in his mouth"]) also means "for his palate."
12. In Hebrew the present tense, "she loves," is taken to mean that her love kept growing stronger and stronger. So Yefeh Toar on Gen. R. 63:10.
13. Gen. R. 63:10.
14. JV: "He did eat of his venison." The translation suggested by the commentator is likewise possible. The word tzayid ("venison") also means "trap"; and be-fiv ("he did eat") translated literally is "in his mouth."
15. Although he knew very well that these are not subject to tithing. Rashi on Gen. 25:28.
16. See above, chap. 2, §135.
17. BhM 5:157; PRE 24.
18. Gen. R. 63:12, 14.
19. Gen. R. 65:10; Midrash Avkir.

the window. The man felt constrained to seal the window. Likewise, while Esau's wives worshiped idols, Isaac saw them and was so greatly distressed that at once his eyes grew dim—[his "windows" had to be sealed].

Or: "From seeing"—from the effect of what he saw at his binding. When our father Abraham bound his son upon the altar, the ministering angels wept and tears dropped from their eyes into Isaac's eyes, leaving their mark upon them. And when he grew old, his eyes grew dim.[1]

Isaac's Blessing

61. "And he called his son Esau" (Gen. 27:1). As the nightfall of Passover approached, Isaac called his elder son Esau and said to him, "My son, on this night the entire world, all of it, sings psalms of praise to God; on this night the treasuries of beneficent dews are opened. Make me some savory food and I will bless you while I am still in this world." To this the Holy Spirit retorted, "Eat not the bread of one who is up to no good, and desire not his savory morsels" (Prov. 23:6). Esau went to fetch what Isaac wanted but found himself hindered [by all manner of mishaps; in the interval thus gained] Rebekah said to Jacob, "My son, on this night the treasuries of beneficent dews are opened; on this night angels above utter song. Make some savory food for your father, that he may bless you while he is still in this world." So Jacob went and fetched two kids of the goats.[2]

62. "He called Esau his imposing[3] son" (Gen. 27:1). R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon said: The description of Esau as "imposing" may be understood by the parable of a principality that was recruiting a bodyguard of tall men for its king. A certain woman there had a son, a dwarf, whom she used to call "Tallswift." So she protested, "My son is tall and swift. Why do you not enroll him?" They replied, "In your eyes he may be tall and swift, but in ours he is a dwarf even among dwarfs." Likewise, Esau's father called him "imposing"—"he called Esau his imposing son." His mother called him "imposing"—"Rebekah took the choicest garments of Esau her imposing son" (Gen. 27:15). "Nevertheless," said the Holy One to them both, "if in your eyes he is imposing, in Mine he is small [a dwarf]. 'Behold, among the nations I regard thee [Esau] as small, greatly despised' " (Obad. 1:2).[4]

63. "Make me food that is savory" (Gen. 27:4).[5] Here Isaac is saying, "In the past, I used to relish the pleasures of sight, but now [that I am blind], I can enjoy only the pleasure of taste." Solomon also noted that this is true of blind people: "When food looks appetizing, many can share in the eating of it. What makes it possible for the provider of such food to serve many? Its being seen" (Eccles. 5:10).[6] Hence we learn that the blind [who do not see the food] cannot be fully satisfied [and therefore long for its savor and aroma]. So, too, one who sees a basket empty of food will become even more hungry, unlike one to whom the mere sight of a basket full of food will give some satisfaction.[7]

64. "Upon me thy curse, my son" (Gen. 27:13), [said Rebekah to Jacob]—so R. Abba bar Kahana understood this verse. When a man sins, is it not his mother who is cursed? Even so, Adam was told, "Cursed is the earth[8] on account of thee" (Gen. 3:17). So, too, Rebekah said to Jacob, "Upon me thy curse, my son." But according to R. Isaac, [what Rebekah meant was, "Upon me the responsibility for averting the curse]; it is my duty to go in and tell your father, "Jacob is the righteous one, and Esau is the wicked one." "And Jacob went and fetched [the garments], and brought[9] them to his mother" (Gen. 27:14). Still, [despite his mother's reassurance], he did so reluctantly, bowed down with distress, and weeping.[10]

65. "Because the Lord thy God sent me good speed" (Gen. 27:20). In using God's name, said R. Yohanan, Jacob was like a raven that carries fire into his own nest. For the moment Jacob said, "Because the Lord thy God sent me good speed," Isaac thought to himself: I know that Esau never mentions the Name of the Holy One. Since this one just did, he cannot be Esau, he must be Jacob. Then, when Isaac said to Jacob, "Come near, I pray thee, that I may feel thee, my son" (Gen. 27:21), urine ran down Jacob's thighs, and his heart turned as soft as wax. But the Holy One provided him with two angels, one at his right and one at his left, who supported him by his elbows so that he should not fall.[11]

66. [Why] "Isaac was seized with great terror" (Gen. 27:33) [when Esau returned with the game will be explained in what follows. But to begin with], note that earlier in the passage it is said, "Jacob was yet scarce gone out from the presence of Isaac his father" (Gen. 27:30). How can one go out and the other come in at the same moment [without their seeing each other]? He who is in bright light cannot see one who is in the dark; but he who is in the dark will readily see the one who is in the bright light. Since Esau came in from the outdoors, he could not see Jacob, who was inside the house. Jacob, however, saw

---

1. Gen. R. 65:10; Midrash Avkir.
2. PRE 32.
3. JV: "elder." But gadol in the sense of "elder" is deemed unnecessary, since we already know that Esau was the elder son. Hence, "great, imposing."
4. Gen. R. 65:11.
5. The commentator will endeavor to explain why the patriarch Isaac, who was no glutton, would have asked for food that was savory, aromatic.
6. JV: "When goods increase, they are increased that eat them; and what advantage is there to the owner thereof, saving the beholding of them with his eyes?"
7. "Even without eating, for the mere knowledge that one has something to eat often satisfies him" (Soncino). Gen. R. 65:13.
8. The earth out of which Adam was created may be considered his mother.
9. Each of these three verbs begins with va[y] ("and"), whose sound, suggesting "woe," is taken to intimate that Jacob did his mother's bidding with woeful foreboding.
10. Gen. R. 65:15.
11. Gen. R. 65:19.

Esau from inside the house and hid himself behind the door, and the moment Esau came in, Jacob stepped out. Did Jacob calculate the hours so as to make certain that Esau would not arrive [first] and receive Isaac's blessings? [It was not Jacob but God who did the reckoning.] Because, as soon as Esau went out to hunt, the Holy One dispatched Satan, who prevented Esau from succeeding in his hunt until Jacob had come and received the blessings. How? Esau ran after one gazelle, caught it, tied it up, and left it; then ran after another gazelle, caught it, tied it up, and left it; and so forth, while Satan undid the bonds and shooed the gazelles away, so that each time Esau returned, he did not find any of them. This happened two or three times, thus delaying Esau for hours until after Jacob had come and received the blessings from his father.

When Esau finally entered the house, he called to his father in a rude tone, "Let my father arise and eat of his son's venison" (Gen. 27:31)—"let my father arise," he ordered. Jacob, however, had not spoken in the same tone, but said, "Arise, I pray thee, sit and eat" (Gen. 27:19)—both "I pray thee" and the three verbs implying respectful entreaty, humility, and submissiveness. That wicked Esau, however, said, "Let my father arise and eat," all but saying, "He'd better" [in a curt and peremptory tone].

At that moment, Isaac recognized Esau's voice and, seized with fear, asked Esau, "Who are you?" For when Jacob had come in, the fragrance of the Garden of Eden, a sweet savor, came in with him, and Isaac, feeling refreshed, exclaimed, "See, the smell of my son is as the smell of the field [of Eden] which the Lord hath blessed" (Gen. 27:27), as he proceeded to bless him. But when Esau came in, Gehenna gaped wide before Isaac, so that "Isaac was seized with great terror" (Gen. 27:33). Perturbed in his heart, he said to himself: I see Gehenna with Esau's body kindling the fire therein: "Who is the one to be roasted in it? None other than the hunter [Esau], who has himself become game" (ibid.).[1] [That the verse is to be read thus is suggested by the way Isaac phrased the question "Who is he that hunted the hunt?"[2]—"hunted" would have been sufficient.] However, Isaac's use of the two words suggests that in sheer terror he found himself saying to Esau, "You went out to hunt and will discover that you are the one hunted [you will become game]."[3]

Our Father Jacob When He Left Beersheba

67. "And Jacob went out from Beersheba" (Gen. 28:10).[4] The departure of a righteous man from a city leaves its mark. When a righteous man is in the city, he is its luster, its renown, its glory. Once he leaves, gone is its luster, gone its renown, gone its glory.[5]

"And he got to Haran" (Gen. 28:10).[6] After Jacob reached Haran, he asked himself: Is it possible that I passed by [Moriah], the place where my fathers prayed, and I did not pray? As he was deciding to return, the earth contracted [bringing Moriah to Haran], so that he "encountered the place" (Gen. 28:11) [as it came up to meet him]. After he finished praying, he wanted to return to Haran. But the Holy One said: This righteous man has come to My dwelling place—shall he depart without a night's lodging there? Immediately the sun set.[7]

"Because the sun had set (ki va)" (Gen. 28:11)—read rather kibbah, "extinguished." God extinguished the sun, that is, God caused the sun to set prematurely, so that he might speak with Jacob in privacy. God's action may be understood by the parable of the king's close friend who visited him occasionally. The king would command, "Extinguish the lamps, extinguish the lanterns, because I wish to speak to my friend in privacy."[8]

"And he took of the stones of the place" (Gen. 28:11). Fearful of wild beasts, Jacob put stones around him in a circle, the way a drainpipe encircles a roof [hoping that the enclosure would provide protection]. Then the stones began quarreling among themselves. One said, "Let the righteous one put his head against me," and the other said, "Let him put it against me," until finally the stones coalesced one with the other and became one stone. Hence Scripture could go on to say of those stones, "He took the stone, which he put at his head" (Gen. 28:18).[9]

"And he dreamed . . . and behold, angels of God ascending and descending" (Gen. 28:12). The Holy One showed Jacob the angelic princes of the four kingdoms[10] ascending and descending. But then, "Behold,[11] the Lord stood beside him" (Gen. 28:13). R. Simeon ben Lakish said: Were it not expressly stated in Scripture, we would not dare suggest that when God [comes to protect Israel],[12] He comes as close to them as a man fanning his son.

R. Abbahu said: God's presence in that dream may

---

1. JV: "Who is he then that hath taken venison." But the word efo ("then") is construed to be a form of 'fh (afoh, "bake")—"a body being baked" or "roasted." The identification of the body as Esau's is derived from "that hath taken venison," which is read, "The hunter, namely, Esau, will himself become game," ending up as he will in Gehenna.
   Instead of "I see Gehenna with Esau's body . . . [you will become game]," Leon Nemoy suggests the following translation: "I see Gehenna and Esau kindling the fire therein: 'Who then is the one who has hunted game?' Why the repetition of 'hunted game'? ['Hunted' would have been sufficient.] What Isaac meant was, 'Who then is the hunter who has become game [has been foiled in his hunt by Satan]?' "
2. Such is the literal meaning. JV: "Who is he . . . that hath taken venison?"
3. Tanhuma, Toledot, §11.
4. The text should have stated, "Jacob went to Haran." What need to mention that he left Beersheba? Hence the comment that follows.
5. Gen. R. 68:6.
6. JV: "And he went toward Haran." The commentator assumes that va-yelekh, being opposite to va-yetze ("went out") which precedes it, means not "went toward" but "got to."
7. B. Hul 91b; B. Sanh 95b.
8. Gen. R. 68:10.
9. Gen. R. 68:11.
10. Babylon, Media, Greece, and Rome, the four kingdoms among whom the Jewish people were to be exiled.
11. The word "behold" is construed as intimating the introduction of an element that disrupts the hitherto undisturbed sway of the kingdoms.
12. From the fury of the four kingdoms. Here Jacob is taken to represent the people Israel.

be illustrated by the parable of an infant prince who was sleeping in his cradle while flies were settling upon him. The moment his wetnurse came by and bent over him, they fled. So, too, at first, "Behold, the angels of God ascending and descending on it" (Gen. 28:12). But the moment the Holy One revealed Himself hovering over Jacob, they fled.[1]

68. "The land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it and to thy seed" (Gen. 28:13). R. Isaac said: The verse implies that the Holy One folded up the entire Land of Israel and put it under our father Jacob, as if to say to him that it will be easily conquered by his children.

R. Simeon said in the name of Bar Kappara: God folded it up like a register tablet and put it under Jacob's head, as the saying goes, "Whatever is under your head is yours."[2]

69. "Then Jacob lifted up[3] his feet" (Gen. 29:1). R. Aha said: "Exhilarating news gives healing to a [weary] heart" (Prov. 14:30).[4] As soon as Jacob received the exhilarating news [of God's promise to his progeny], his heart lifted up his feet, causing them to move [at great speed].

"And he asked the [herdsmen]: 'Is Laban at peace [with his employees]?' " (Gen. 29:6).[5] Is there peace between him and you?

"And they replied: 'There is peace' " (Gen. 29:6); but if you wish to engage in chitchat,[6] "Behold, Rachel his daughter cometh with the sheep" (ibid.). As the saying goes, "Women are chatterboxes."

"And it came to pass, when Jacob saw Rachel . . . that Jacob went near, and rolled the stone from the well's mouth" (Gen. 29:10). [He moved it as easily], said R. Yohanan, as one pulls the stopper out of a vial.

"And Jacob kissed Rachel" (Gen. 29:11). All kisses are frivolous, except three: the kiss of homage, the kiss after long separation, and the kiss at parting. The kiss of homage: "Samuel took the vial of oil and poured it upon Saul's head, and kissed him" (I Sam. 10:1); the kiss after long separation: "[Aaron] went and met [Moses] at the mountain of God, and kissed him" (Exod. 4:27); the kiss at parting: "Orpah kissed her mother-in-law" (Ruth 1:14). Also the kiss of kinship, said R. Tanhuma, as when "Jacob kissed Rachel," she being his kinswoman.

"[Jacob] lifted up his voice and wept" (Gen. 29:11). Why did he weep? Because he said: What is said about Eliezer when he went to fetch Rebekah? "The servant took ten camels [of . . . goodly things]," etc. (Gen. 24:10), whereas I have not even one earring or one bracelet.

Another reason for his weeping: He saw that because he kissed Rachel, the herdsmen were whispering among themselves: What, is this one come to bring unchastity back into our midst? For ever since the world was smitten during the generation of the flood, the nations imposed restraint upon themselves with regard to unchastity, as the saying goes, "People of the east hedge themselves in from unchastity."

"And it came to pass when Laban heard," etc. (Gen. 29:13). He reasoned: Eliezer was an insignificant member of Abraham's household. Yet it is written of him, "The servant took ten camels" (Gen. 24:10). This one, who is the household's favorite—how much more and more is he apt to have [to offer me]. But when Laban did not even see a food sack on him, "He embraced him" (Gen. 29:13), [feeling his waist and] thinking: He must have money, and it is in his belt. When he found not a penny, "he kissed him" (ibid.), thinking that perhaps he had pearls and was keeping them safe in his mouth. Only then did he realize that Jacob brought nothing at all. Jacob said: What do you think—that I came laden with wealth? All I have come laden with is the grievous account of what happened to me.[7] "And he told Laban" (ibid.). "In that case," Laban said, " 'surely for thee a mere bone' " (Gen. 29:14).[8] I had intended to treat you like a king, but since you have nothing, I need do no more than toss you a bone. "Nevertheless," Laban went on, " 'art thou expected to serve me for nought?' " (Gen. 29:15). Jacob replied, "Do you suppose that I have come to haggle about money? I have come only because of the two maidens."

"And Laban had two daughters" (Gen. 29:16), who were, so to speak, like two joists reaching from one end of the world to the other.[9] One produced generals and the other produced generals; one produced kings and the other produced kings;[10] Out of one arose lion slayers and out of the other arose lion slayers.[11] Out of one arose prophets and out of the other arose prophets. Out of one arose judges and out of the other arose judges. Out of one arose conquerors of countries and out of the other arose conquerors of countries.[12] Out of one arose apportioners of allotted parts in lands and out of the other arose apportioners of allotted parts in lands.[13]

---

1. Gen. R. 68:6, 68:10–11, and 69:3; B. Hul 91b; Yalkut, Va-yetze, §119.
2. Or: "Possession is nine points of the law." B. Hul 91b; Gen. R. 69:4.
3. One would expect "The feet lifted up Jacob." Saying that "Jacob lifted them" stimulates the comment that follows.
4. JV: "A tranquil heart is the life of the flesh." But besarim ("flesh") can mean "tidings, news."
5. JV: "Is it well with him?" But the commentator is puzzled: Why does Jacob not also inquire about the well-being of Laban's family? Hence he assumes that Jacob, fully aware of Laban's reputation as a trickster, inquires not about Laban's well-being but about his relations with his employees.
6. It may be that, busy as they were with their chores, they wanted to cut the conversation short.
7. Upon Jacob's departure from Beersheba, Eliphaz, a son of Esau, ambushed Jacob and took away all his belongings. See Ginzberg, Legends 1:346.
8. JV: "Surely thou art my bone."
9. The word banot ("daughters") is read bonot ("joists" or "beams"), for through Rachel and Leah the House of Israel, the Jewish people, was built.
10. Out of Leah, David's dynasty and some monarchs of the kingdom of Israel; out of Rachel, Saul, Ish-Bosheth, Jeroboam son of Nebat, Nadab, and the dynasty of Jehu.
11. Out of Leah, David (I Sam. 17:36) and Benaiah (2 Sam. 23:20). Out of Rachel, Samson (Judg. 14:5–6) of the tribe of Dan, descended from Bilhah, who was Rachel's maid.
12. Moses and David from Leah; Joshua and Saul from Rachel.
13. Moses, e.g., who apportioned the land east of the Jordan among two and a half tribes, and Joshua, who apportioned the Land of Israel among the nine and a half tribes. Gen. R. 70:8 and 70:11–15.

70. "Leah had weak eyes" (Gen. 29:17). Rav said: That they were weak was no disgrace to her, but cause for praise. For at the crossroads she used to hear people say, "Rebekah has two sons, and Laban has two daughters—the older daughter should wed the older son, and the younger, the younger son." So she sat at the crossroads asking all passersby, "The older one—what kind of person is he?" and was told, " 'A cunning hunter' [Gen. 25:27], a wicked man, given to robbing people." "And the younger—what kind of person is he?" "A quiet man, dwelling in tents" (ibid.). At this, Leah wept so much that her eyelids seemed to disappear.[1]

71. R. Jonathan said: God's intention was that the birthright should have stemmed from Rachel, for it is said, "These are the generations of Jacob, Joseph" (Gen. 37:2).[2] But through [her prayers for] God's mercy [to spare her from marrying Esau], Leah got ahead of Rachel in the birthright. Nevertheless, because of Rachel's effacing herself, the Holy One restored the birthright to Rachel. And what showed Rachel's capacity to efface herself? The following verse, as will be explained: "And Jacob told Rachel that he was her father's brother" (Gen. 29:12). Was Jacob her father's brother? Was he not in fact a son of her father's sister? However, Jacob [described himself as "her father's brother" after he] asked Rachel, "Will you marry me?" and she replied, "Yes, but my father is a trickster, and you cannot beat him in trickery." Jacob asked, "How would he trick me?" She replied, "I have an older sister, and he will not have me marry ahead of her." It was then that Jacob said, "In trickery, I am your father's brother." She asked, "But is it proper for a righteous man to resort to trickery?" He replied, "Yes, for we read: 'With the pure thou dost show thyself pure, and with the crooked thou dost show thyself wily' " (2 Sam. 22:27). So he gave her certain tokens [by which to identify herself]. But when the wedding night came, Rachel said to herself: Now my sister will be humiliated. So she turned the tokens over to Leah. Hence it is said, "And it came to pass in the morning that, behold, it was Leah" (Gen. 29:25). Are these words to be construed as saying that until morning she was not Leah? No, what is meant is that, because of the tokens Rachel had turned over to her, Jacob did not know until morning that it was Leah.[3]

72. "Jacob . . . said: 'I will serve thee seven years for Rachel thy younger daughter' " (Gen. 29:18). Because I know that the people of your town are tricksters, I make my request thoroughly clear: "I will serve thee . . . for Rachel"—for Rachel, not for Leah—"thy . . . daughter." So that you will not bring some other woman from the marketplace who happens to be named Rachel—the "younger"—do not try to have them exchange names. "Nevertheless, when evening came, Laban took his daughter Leah and brought her to him" (Gen. 29:23). [Thus Jacob's explicit stipulations did not avail him, for, as the saying goes], "Even if you clamp a scoundrel in a carpenter's vise, it will not avail you [he will wriggle out of it].

"And Laban gathered together all the men of the place, and made a feast" (Gen. 29:22). He gathered all the men of the place where he lived and said, "You know how short of water we were. But as soon as this righteous man appeared, water became abundant." They asked, "So what do you have in mind?" He replied, "If you go along, I will trick him and give him Leah instead. But since he loves Rachel much more, he is bound to work for you[4] yet another seven years." They replied, "Do as you wish." He said, "Give me pledges that not one of you will disclose my plan to anyone." They brought the pledges, and Laban used them to buy oil, wine, and meat for the wedding. (For this reason he was dubbed Laban the Aramean, that is to say, the cheat, because he cheated even the people of his own place.) All day long, the people gathered at the feast wished Jacob joy. At dusk [as they continued to do so], Jacob asked, "Why so much congratulation?" They replied, "Your merit conferred a great boon upon us. So we, too, wish to confer a boon upon you." Then, while apparently engaged in nothing other than wishing him well, they yodeled, "Ha-liah; Ha-liah!" [seemingly a cry of joy, but in fact a hint, "It is Leah, it is Leah"].[5] In the evening, having led the bride into the nuptial chamber, the ushers put out the lamps. When Jacob asked, "Why are you doing this?" they replied, "What do you think—that we are as shameless as you?"[6]

All that night Jacob kept calling his bride Rachel, and Leah answered to the name. In the morning, "Behold it was Leah" (Gen. 29:25). Said Jacob to Leah, "What is this, O trickstress and daughter of a trickster? Did I not call you Rachel all night long and you answered to the name?" She replied, "Is there a teacher who has no pupils? Did not your father once call you Esau, and you answered to that name?"[7]

73. "And the Lord saw that Leah was held in disdain" (Gen. 29:31). All held her in disdain—sea rats[8] disdained her, vagrants disdained her, even the [loose] grape-treading women behind the beams [of the winepress] disdained her, saying, "This Leah—she's not in private what she is in the open. She looks like a good woman but really isn't. If she were, she would not have tricked her sister."

R. Hanin said in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: When our father Jacob saw how Leah had deceived him, he made up his mind to divorce her. But after the Holy One visited her with children, he said, "Shall I divorce the mother of these children?"[9]

---

1. She wept at the prospect of being married to Esau. B. BB 123a; Gen. R. 70:16.
2. The implication: that Rachel would give birth to Joseph before Leah gave birth to Reuben.
3. B. Meg 13b; B. BB 123a and Rashi, ad loc.
4. "Shepherds grazed all the livestock together; hence Jacob actually worked for all the owners" (Leon Nemoy).
5. A hint Jacob did not understand.
6. It is deemed indecent for a marriage to be consummated in a lighted chamber.
7. Gen. R. 70:17 and 70:19; Yalkut, Va-yetze, §117.
8. Pirates?
9. Gen. R. 71:2.

74. R. Hinnena bar Isaac said: Rather the threatening mien of the fathers than the conciliatory manner of their descendants. That the threatening mien of the fathers is endurable, we learn from our father Jacob: "Though Jacob, becoming wroth, took up his grievance with Laban, he said no more to Laban than 'What is my sin, that thou hast hotly pursued after me?' " (Gen. 31:36). You might have supposed that such words were a preamble to blows or bruises, but in fact Jacob went on to conciliate his father-in-law with calming words: "Though thou hast rummaged through all my stuff, what single one of all thy household things hast thou found?" (Gen. 31:37). R. Simon pointed out: Usually, when a son-in-law has been living with his father-in-law, is it not likely at the very least that there will be found in his possession some trifle such as a knife? But here, " 'Thou hast rummaged through all my stuff,' and not even a needle or a pin did you find."

On the other hand, that the conciliatory manner of the descendants of the fathers is not endurable, we may learn from David: "David fled from Naioth in Ramah, and came and said before Jonathan: 'What have I done? What is my guilt? And what is my sin before thy father that he seeketh my life?" (1 Sam. 20:1). Thus, though seeking conciliation, David mentioned Saul's murderous intent. But all Jacob said to Laban was, "Thou hast hotly pursued after me" (Gen. 31:36).[1]

Jacob, Esau, and the Angels

75. "And he called the name of that place Mahanaim" (Gen. 32:3). What is the meaning of "Mahanaim"? Two camps. For when Jacob set out for Aram-naharaim, the guardian angels of the Land of Israel protected him and escorted him until he was out of the Land. Then these angels left, and other angels came to escort him. When he returned from Laban, the angels who had been assigned to him continued to escort him as far as the Land of Israel. Once the guardian angels of the Land of Israel became aware that Jacob was coming, they went out [of the Land] to join the escort, as is said, "The angels[2] of God met him [before he crossed the Jordan]" (Gen. 32:2). Thus it came about that two camps [of angels] were standing at Jacob's side—he sent emissaries from both on the mission in his behalf.[3]

76. "And Jacob sent emissaries ahead to Esau his brother" (Gen. 32:4). R. Jonathan said: When anyone seeks to conciliate a king or a ruler, and does not know his ways and usages, let him set before himself this portion of Scripture, and he will learn from it the proper procedure in attempting conciliation and appeasement.[4]

77. "And Jacob sent messengers [i.e., angels] before him to Esau his brother unto the land of Seir . . . saying: 'Thus saith thy servant Jacob' " (Gen. 32:4–5). The Holy One reproached Jacob: Esau was going in another direction, yet you submissively sent word to him, "Thus saith thy servant Jacob" (Gen. 32:5).[5]

R. Judah bar Simon began his discourse with the verse "A righteous man submitting to the wicked is as a fountain that gets muddied, or a spring that becomes polluted" (Prov. 25:26). Still, a righteous man will not remain in submission before the wicked any more than a fountain will remain muddied or a spring polluted [since their waters soon become clear]. Nevertheless, when a righteous man does submit to the wicked, he [for a while at least] is like a muddied fountain or a polluted spring. Hence the Holy One reproached Jacob: Esau was going his own way, and you submissively sent word to him, "Thus saith thy servant Jacob!"

"And Jacob sent" (Gen. 32:4). R. Huna began his discourse with the verse "He that passeth by, and stirreth [memories of] a quarrel no longer in [the adversary's] mind,[6] is like one that taketh a dog by the ears" (Prov. 26:17). He went on to cite R. Samuel bar Nahman's parable of a robber chieftain who was asleep at a crossroads when a man passed and woke him up, saying, "Wake up! In this place a bad thing happened between us. [Remember?]" The robber chieftain jumped up and began beating the man, who cried out, "Look at him—he woke up as evil as ever!" To which the robber chieftain replied, "I was sound asleep, and you woke me up [for no good reason]!" So, too, the Holy One told Jacob: Esau was going his own way, and you, [stirring up memories], send emissaries to him, who are asked to declare, "Thus saith thy servant Jacob."

R. Judah bar Simon began his discourse with the verse "What wilt thou do when He rebuke thee—it is thou who hast taught them [to be raised] against thee, directed them [so to speak] to be against thy head" (Jer. 13:21).[7] Accordingly, the Holy One reproached Jacob: Esau was going his own way, and you sent emissaries to him who were to declare, "Thus saith thy servant Jacob."[8]

78. When Jacob called Esau "my lord," the Holy One said to him: Eight times have you abased yourself in calling Esau "my lord." As you live, I will raise up eight kings out of his descendants before [there will be one king of] your descendants, as is said, "These are the kings that reigned in the land of Edom, before there reigned any king over the children of Israel" (Gen. 36:31).[9]

79. "Then Jacob was greatly afraid and was distressed" (Gen. 32:8). R. Judah bar R. Ilai asked: Are not fear and distress identical? The meaning, however, is that "he was afraid" lest he should be slain "and was distressed" lest he should slay. For he thought: If Esau proves stronger

---

1. Gen. R. 74:10; PRKM, p. 240 (PRKS, p. 267).
2. The Hebrew word mal'akh means both "angel" and "emissary."
3. Tanhuma, Va-yishlah, §3.
4. Lekah Tov, Va-yishlah, beginning.
5. When Esau, heading for Seir, realized that Jacob was afraid of him, he decided to detour in order to take him on. So Yefeh Toar. Gen. R. 75:1.
6. JV: "He that passeth by, and meddleth with strife not his own."
7. JV: "What wilt thou say when He shall set thy friends over thee as head, whom thou thyself hast trained against thee?" But see The Holy Bible with the Confraternity Text (Chicago, 1963), ad loc.
8. Gen. R. 75:1–3.
9. Gen. R. 75:11.

than I, he might slay me, and if I prove stronger than he, I might slay him.[1]

80. "And Jacob sent angels" (Gen. 32:4). Jacob was given two camps of ministering angels. How many angels are in each camp of God? Two thousand myriads, for it is said, "God's mounted angels are twice a thousand myriads (Ps. 68:18).[2] They looked like royal troops—some clad in iron armor, some mounted on horses, some seated in wagons. When Esau met those clad in iron armor, he asked, "To whom do you belong?" They replied, "To Jacob." When he met those mounted on horses, he asked, "To whom do you belong?" They replied, "To Jacob." When he met those seated in wagons, he asked, "To whom do you belong?" They replied, "To Jacob." All these questions and answers are implied in Esau's words "Who has given you the many encampments of troops that I have encountered?" (Gen. 33:8).[3]

81. "Who has given you the many encampments of troops that I have encountered?" (Gen. 33:8). All that night, the ministering angels kept forming themselves into many bands, into many companies. As they attacked Esau's forces, they asked, "To whom do you belong?" When told, "To Esau," they shouted, "Strike, strike! Give it to them!" When told, "We belong to Abraham's grandson," they continued saying, "Give it to them!" When told, "To Isaac's son," they still shouted, "Give it to them!" But when Esau's forces entreated, "We belong to Jacob's brother," the ministering angels called out, "Let them be, they are ours." In the morning, Esau asked Jacob, "Who has given you the many encampments of troops that I have encountered?" Jacob replied by asking, "Did they say anything at all to you?" Esau answered, "[No], but I have been roundly battered by them." [Unaware that angels had been interceding for him], Jacob said, "[But I only sent them to deliver a message], to find favor in the sight of my lord" (Gen. 33:8). "And Esau said: 'I have had enough of battering [messages]! My brother, let that which thou hast remain thine' " (Gen. 33:9).[4]

82. "For to see thy face is like seeing the face of God" (Gen. 33:10). Jacob mentioned God's Name to Esau in order to intimidate him, to frighten him. By what parable may Jacob's mention of God be understood? By the parable of a man who invited his friend to dine with him. When the guest perceived that the host planned to murder him, he said, "This dish tastes like the dish I had in the royal palace." So he knows the king, said the host to himself, and, seized with fear, he did not try to go through with his murderous scheme.

Even so it was with Jacob. As soon as he said to Esau, "For to see thy face is like seeing the face of God," wicked Esau said to himself: Since the Holy One brought him to such honor, I stand no chance against him.[5]

83. "And there wrestled a man with him" (Gen. 32:25). Some say it was the angel Michael, who said to Jacob, "If to me—one of the foremost princes in heaven—if to me you have done what you did, why should you be afraid of Esau?"

R. Tarfon said: Michael had no permission to move from the place where he had been wrestling until Jacob gave him leave—for Michael had to beg, "Let me go, for the day breaketh" (Gen. 32:27). Jacob retorted, "Are you a thief or a gambler, that you fear daybreak?"

Just then, many bands of ministering angels came by and said, "Michael, up with you, for 'the time of singing [God's praise] has come' " (Song 2:12)—meaning: If you do not begin, there will be no [morning] song. Michael began pleading with Jacob, "I beg you, let me go, lest the ministering angels in Aravot [the seventh heaven] incinerate me for delaying the song." Jacob replied, "I will not let thee go, except thou bless me" (Gen. 32:27). Michael then asked, "Who is more beloved—the servitor or the son? I am the servitor and you are the son. Do you require my blessing?" Jacob replied, "Nevertheless." At once Michael said, "Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but Israel" (Gen. 32:29), and went on, "Blessed are you, born of woman, for you entered the palace above and remained alive."

While Jacob and Michael were wrestling, Michael's band of angels were about to put Jacob's life in jeopardy. At that, the Holy One revealed Himself to them. When Michael saw the Holy One, his strength was depleted, as is said, "When he saw that he was unable to prevail against him, he could do no more than touch the hollow of his thigh" (Gen. 32:26). Then the Holy One said to Michael, "Was it seemly for you to cripple my priest?" Michael answered, "Master of the universe, am I not your priest?" God replied, "You are My priest above, while Jacob is My priest on earth." At once Michael summoned Raphael and said, "My comrade, I beg you, stand to with me in my distress, for you are in charge of healing." So Raphael went down and healed Jacob.[6]

84. "Let my lord, I pray thee, pass over before his servant" (Gen. 33:14). Esau suggested to Jacob, "Will you agree that the two of us be partners in your world?"[7] Jacob responded, "[No], 'let my lord, I pray thee, pass through [this world] ahead of his servant.' " Esau asked, "Are you not afraid of my captains, prefects, and commanders?"[8] Jacob replied, " 'I will journey on gently' [ibid.], meekly, very meekly. I will walk as if my face were covered[9] [so that I see nothing]."

"Until I come unto my lord unto Seir" (Gen. 33:14). R. Abbahu said: We went through all of Scripture to and fro, and did not find that Jacob ever went to the mountain

---

1. Gen. R. 76:2.
2. JV: "The chariots of God are myriads, even thousands upon thousands."
3. JV: "What meanest thou by all this camp which I have met?" Gen. R. 75:11.
4. Gen. R. 75:10; Tanhuma Va-yishlah, §3.
5. B. Sot 41b; Gen. R. 45:11.
6. Midrash Avkir.
7. In the rewards of the world-to-come. In return, you will enjoy with me the pleasure of this world.
8. Should you reject your share in this world, you will be at their mercy.
9. Relating le'itti ("gently") to l't ("cover"), as in 1 Sam. 21:10.

of Seir to see Esau. Is it possible that Jacob, the truthful one, would have deceived Esau? So when is Jacob to come to Esau? In the time-to-come, when "liberators shall come up on Mount Zion to wreak judgment on Mount Esau" (Obad. 1:21).[1]

85. "He established a [token] abode outside the city" (Gen. 33:18).[2] The verse implies that Jacob entered on the eve of the Sabbath as the sun was setting. Then, [leaving the city] while it was yet day, [he established his token abode] and thus fixed the Sabbath boundaries.[3] This proves that Jacob observed the Sabbath before it was ordained [on Sinai].[4]

The Portions of Jacob and Esau

86. When Jacob and Esau were in their mother's womb, Jacob said to Esau, "Esau, my brother, our father has two of us, even as there are two worlds before us—this world and the world-to-come. In this world there is eating, drinking, and the give-and-take of business. But with regard to all such activities, the world-to-come is quite different. If it be your wish, you take this world, and I will take the world-to-come." Thus it came about that Esau took this world as his portion, and Jacob took the world-to-come as his.

Now, when Jacob came back from Laban's house and Esau saw that Jacob had wives, children, menservants and maidservants, livestock, and silver and gold, he said to him, "Jacob, my brother, did you not say to me that you would take the world-to-come as your portion and that I would take this world as mine? How, then, did you come to all this wealth—wives, children, money, menservants, and maidservants? Why do you, like me, make use of this world?" Jacob replied, "What few possessions I have are what the Holy One has given me for my use in this world as the need arises." In that instant, weighing the matter in his mind, Esau said to himself: If the Holy One has given him so much of this world, even though it is not his portion, how much more and more will He give him of the world-to-come, which is his portion![5]

Rebekah's Death and Rachel's Burial

87. When Rebekah died, it was asked: Who will walk before her bier? Abraham is dead. Isaac stays at home because his eyes are dim, and Jacob has gone to Paddan-aram. Should wicked Esau walk before her bier, people will say, "A curse on the breast that gave suck to such a one." What did they do? They took her out for burial at night. For this reason, Scripture does not record her death.[6]

"And Rachel died, and was buried on the road to Ephrath" (Gen. 35:19). Why did Jacob see fit to bury Rachel on the road to Ephrath [and not in the cave of Machpelah]? Because our father Jacob foresaw that they who were to be exiled[7] would pass by way of Ephrath. Therefore he buried her there, so that she might beseech mercy for them. Referring to this, Scripture says, "A voice is heard in Ramah,[8] lamentation, and bitter weeping, Rachel weeping for her children" (Jer. 31:15).[9]

The House of Jacob and the House of Esau

88. "And Jacob dwelt" (Gen. 37:1). What precedes this passage? "These are the kings that reigned in the land of Edom. . . . And these are the names of the chiefs that came of Esau" (Gen. 36:31, 40). R. Hunia said: Jacob's decision to dwell in a land near Esau's may be understood by the parable of a man who, while on a journey, saw a pack of dogs and was seized with fear of them. What did he do? He sat down among them.[10] So also, when our father Jacob saw Esau and his chiefs, he too, though afraid of them, settled down among them.

R. Levi said: What Jacob did may be illustrated by the parable of a blacksmith whose forge opened onto the middle of the street, while the workshop of his son, a goldsmith, opened opposite him. Once he saw many, many bundles of thorns being brought into the city. Upset, he exclaimed, "Alas for the town. See what is coming into it!"[11] A clever man who was there called him: "Are you afraid of these? One spark from your forge and one spark from your son's, and all the thorns will go up in flames." So, too, when our father Jacob saw Esau and his chiefs, he was afraid. The Holy One said to him: Are you afraid of these? One spark from you and one spark from your son, and you will consume them, all of them. Thus it is written, "The house of Jacob shall be a fire, and the house of Joseph a flame, with Esau's house like straw to be kindled and consumed" (Obad. 1:18).[12]

---

1. Gen. R. 78:14.
2. JV: "and encamped before the city."
3. Thus he was enabled to go anywhere on the Sabbath within a radius of two thousand cubits from the spot where, prior to the Sabbath, he had made his token abode.
4. Gen. R. 79:6.
5. TdEZ 19 (JPS, p. 494).
6. As, e.g., Sarah's death, which is recorded in Gen. 23:1. Tanhuma, Ki Tetze, §4; PR 12:4 (YJS 1:224).
7. By Nebuchadnezzar.
8. Ramah, near where Jacob buried Rachel, lay north of Jerusalem in the path of the exiles driven toward Babylon. Hebron is south of Jerusalem, and the patriarchs and matriarchs buried there in the cave of Machpelah were out of the way of the exiles going northeast to Babylon.
9. Gen. R. 82:10.
10. Had he fled, the dogs, seeing that he was afraid, would have pursued him.
11. "Alas . . . coming into it"—Gen. R. TA, p. 1005. BR: "Where will all these bundles be put?"
12. Gen. R. 84:5; En Yaakov, B. BB 123a; Yalkut, Obad. §549; Tanhuma, Va-yeshev, §1.

Joseph and His Brothers

89. "Joseph, though only seventeen years old . . . was already a [sophisticated] youth" (Gen. 37:2).[1] He did the things that such youths do: he made eyes at girls, he walked with a swagger, and he styled his hair.

"Now Israel loved Joseph more than all his children" (Gen. 37:3), because Joseph's radiant features were like his.

"And he made him a coat of passim"[2] (Gen. 37:3). The word passim means that the coat's sleeves reached Joseph's wrists (pas).[3] Or, it was so delicate and light that it could be folded up into the palm (pas) of one's hand.

"And Joseph dreamed a dream . . . and he told it to his father, and to his brethren; and his father rebuked him, and said unto him: . . . 'Shall I and thy mother and thy brethren indeed come to bow down to thee?' " (Gen. 37:5 and 37:10). I and your brothers, perhaps. But how can I come with your mother? Your mother is dead. Jacob did not realize that the dream had to do with Bilhah, Rachel's maidservant, who brought up Joseph like a mother.

"But his father kept the saying in mind" (Gen. 37:11). He took a pen and recorded the day, the hour, and the place.[4] Likewise, the Holy Spirit declared: Keep what Joseph reported in mind—it will touch [significantly all of your progeny].

"And Israel said unto Joseph: 'Do not thy brethren graze the flock in Shechem? Go now, and I will send thee unto them.' And he said to him: 'Here am I' " (Gen. 37:13). R. Hama bar Hanina asserted: Whenever our father Jacob recalled this conversation, his innards were slashed by remorse. "You[5] knew that your brothers hated you, and yet you said, 'Here am I!' "[6]

90. "And they saw him from afar" (Gen. 37:18). They said, "Let us sic the dogs on him [so they tear him to pieces]."[7]

"And it came to pass when Joseph was come to his brothers" (Gen. 37:23), he came strutting like a peacock [as was his wont].[8]

"They cast him into the pit—and the pit was empty, there was no water in it" (Gen. 37:24). Empty of water, but full of snakes and scorpions.

"And they sold Joseph to the Ishmaelites" (Gen. 37:28). Is it possible that Joseph, already seventeen years old, saw his brothers selling him, yet remained silent? Indeed not, for he threw himself at the feet of each one of them, imploring them to take pity on him, but not one did. [Later, recollecting Joseph's pleas], the brothers are quoted as saying, "In that we saw the distress of his soul, when he besought us" (Gen. 42:21).[9]

91. R. Tarfon and the elders were sitting in the shade of the dovecote in Yavneh, and the question arose: What is the significance of Scripture's saying, "With their camels bearing spicery and balm and ladanum" (Gen. 37:25)? It is to make known how very much the merit of the righteous helps them. For if this one [Joseph], who was both chosen and beloved, had had to go down with an ordinary caravan of Arabs, would they not have suffocated him with the stench of their camels laden with foul-smelling resin? But for his sake the Holy One arranged that the sacks be full of spices and fragrant balm, so that he should not be suffocated by the stench of the camels and the foul smell of resin.[10]

The Going Down of Judah

92. "Judah went down from his brethren" (Gen. 38:1). It was indeed a going down, for he married a heathen.

"Judah . . . turned in to a man of Adullam" (Gen. 38:1). Judah, the most distinguished in his father's house, took a Canaanite woman! That is why, at Judah's "going down," the Holy Spirit cried out—so said R. Isaac—"[Judah], Israel's glory, had to go down to Adullam!" (Mic. 1:15).[11]

"Judah saw there a daughter of a certain Canaanite" (Gen. 38:2). To illustrate what Judah did, the sages told the parable of a dog who came upon a carcass and smelled it, but did not eat it. Then a lion came upon it and ate it. All the [beasts] then proceeded to berate him: What the dog disdained, the lion ate. So, too, Esau disdained the daughters of Canaan, as is said, "Esau saw the daughters of Canaan were evil" (Gen. 28:8). But Judah, likened to a lion, took one of them, as is said, "He took her" (Gen. 38:2).

Another comment on "Judah went down" (Gen. 38:1). With regard to this verse, Scripture says, "Judah hath dealt treacherously, and an abomination was committed in Israel" (Mal. 2:11). "Judah dealt treacherously" when, [showing Joseph's coat dipped in blood], he said to Jacob, "Know now whether it is thy son's coat" (Gen. 37:32). "An abomination was committed in Israel" when the brothers told Joseph. "Judah hath profaned the holiness of the Lord" (Mal. 2:11)—Judah profaned himself when, going down from among his brothers and his father's house, "he married a woman who worshiped an alien god" (ibid.).

---

1. JV: "Joseph, being seventeen years old . . . being still a lad." But the commentator seems to take na'ar as a nominal form of the stem 'r ("to awake, to become sexually mature"). So Rabbi Julius Kravitz of Tucson, Ariz.
2. JV: "coat of many colors."
3. Long sleeves suggest that Joseph was to do no heavy work.
4. "Though he had rebuked him, that was because he stirred up his brethren's hate, but actually he believed in the dream" (Gen. R., Soncino, p. 778, n. 4).
5. "I"—Gen. R. TA, p. 1014; BR: "You."
6. Gen. R. 84:7–8 and 84:12–13.
7. This comment is based on the second half of the verse: "And before he came near unto them, they conspired against him to slay him."
8. The comment intends to account for the brothers' hardheartedness to Joseph.
9. Gen. R. 84:14, 84:16, and 91:8.
10. Mek, Be-shallah, Va-yehi, 5; Yalkut, Be-shallah, §247.
11. For Judah's "descent" to Adullam began the chain of events leading to the marriage of Judah and Tamar, out of which the Messiah was to spring. See Gen. 38:29 and Ruth 4:18–22.

And how was Judah punished? "To the man that did thus, the Lord cut off Er as well as Oneh" (Mal. 2:12).[1] Er and Onan [his two sons by the Canaanite woman] died.[2]

93. "For My thoughts are not your thoughts" (Isa. 55:8). The Holy One's thoughts are not at all like the thoughts of flesh and blood. How so? The tribe fathers were engaged in selling Joseph, Joseph was engaged in his own work, Jacob engaged with his sackcloth and his fasting, Judah engaged in taking a wife. And the Holy One also was engaged—He was creating the light of Messiah the king. Hence it is written, "Before [Israel] travailed [in servitude], she already had given birth" (Isa. 66:7). Before Pharaoh, the first enslaver, was born, the last redeemer already had his birth.[3]

Joseph in Egypt

94. "Joseph was brought down to Egypt" (Gen. 39:1). Read not, "Was brought down," but, "Brought down,"[4] for he brought down his father and the tribe fathers to Egypt. R. Tanhuma asked: How may what happened be illustrated? By the parable of a heifer upon whose neck her owners tried to place a yoke, but who resisted their efforts. What did the owners do? They took her calf from behind her and dragged it to the place they wanted to have plowed. As the calf was being pulled, it lowed disconsolately. When the heifer heard her offspring lowing, she felt constrained because of her offspring to follow him. Likewise, the Holy One sought to carry out the decree "Know of a surety that thy seed shall . . . serve them" (Gen. 15:13), and so He brought about the cause of all that was to happen, until finally Jacob and his family felt constrained to go down to Egypt, there to discharge the obligation [of living in the servitude] imposed on them.[5]

95. "Potiphar . . . an Egyptian bought him of the hand of the Ishmaelites" (Gen. 39:1). R. Levi observed: A slave buys, the son of a bondmaid sells, and a freeborn son becomes slave to both.[6]

96. "The Lord made all that he did to prosper in his hand" (Gen. 39:3). Whenever Joseph served his master spiced wine, the master would ask, "What have you poured me?" When Joseph replied, "Spiced wine," the master would say, "But I want bitter wine"—and it became bitter wine. When the master said, "I want mulled wine," it became mulled. The same happened with water—indeed, with each and every thing, as is said, "The Lord made all that he did to prosper in his hand." When his master became aware of it, he turned over all the keys to Joseph, so that Joseph was able to say, "My master has no concern about anything that is in the house" (Gen. 39:8). When Joseph found himself so comfortably situated, he began to eat and drink well, to frizz his hair, and to say, "Blessed be He who is everywhere, who helped me forget my father's house." Then the Holy One said to Joseph: Your father is mourning for you in sackcloth and ashes, and you eat and drink well, and frizz your hair—you pampered brat! As you live, I shall sic a she-bear on you. At once, "it came to pass that his master's wife cast her eyes upon Joseph" (Gen. 39:7). A parable of a strong man who stood in the marketplace, made eyes at the women, kept combing his hair, walked with a swagger, and said, "How fit I am, how well endowed I am—how strong! how handsome!" He was told, "If you are so strong and so fit, here is a bear—try to overpower it."[7]

97. Joseph was seventeen, with all the charm of his youth, and each and every day his mistress, Potiphar's wife, endeavored to entice him by various wiles. Each and every day she would wear three different outfits—the garments she wore in the morning she did not wear at noon, and those at noon she did not wear as the sun was setting. Why all this? So that he might gaze at her.

On one occasion a group of Egyptian women gathered [in Potiphar's house], eager to see Joseph's beauty. What did Potiphar's wife do? She took citrons, placed them before the women, and gave each of them a knife. Then she summoned Joseph and had him stand before them. As they peeled the citrons, at the same time gazing at Joseph's beauty, they cut their fingers. Then Potiphar's wife said: You, who saw him only for one instant, are thus overcome; how much more and more am I, who see him all the time.

And though each and every day she sought to entice him with her wiles, he nevertheless stood fast against his impulse.[8]

98. A Roman noblewoman asked R. Yose: Is it possible that Joseph, at seventeen, with all the hot blood of youth, could act with such self-restraint? R. Yose brought out the book of Genesis and began reading to her the story of Reuben and Bilhah, and the story of Judah and Tamar, and said: If Scripture does not cover up for these, who were adult and still under their father's authority, how much less likely is it that Scripture would cover up for one who was a minor and on his own![9]

Joseph before Pharaoh

99. "But there was none that could interpret them unto Pharaoh" (Gen. 41:8). R. Joshua of Sikhnin said in the name of R. Levi: They did interpret them, but Pharaoh

---

1. JV: "May the Lord cut off to the man that doeth this him that calleth and him that answereth." By not translating the two nouns, the play on words that follows is made possible.
2. See Gen. 38:7 and 38:10. Gen. R. 85:1; Tanhuma B, Va-yeshev, §9; MhG Gen., pp. 642–44.
3. Ibid. Perez, child of Judah and Tamar (Gen. 38:29), and ancestor of David (Ruth 4:18–22), thus of the Messiah, had his birth before the birth of the pharaoh who was to subject Israel to slavery.
4. A slight change in vowels makes possible the reading suggested.
5. Tanhuma, Va-yeshev, §4; Yalkut, Va-yeshev, §145.
6. Potiphar was Pharaoh's slave; the Ishmaelites were descendants of Hagar, a bondmaid. Gen. R. 86:3.
7. Tanhuma, Va-yeshev, §8; Gen. R. 86:5.
8. Tanhuma, Va-yeshev, §5.
9. Gen. R. 87:6.

did not like what they said. For example, they said: The seven fat cows mean that you will beget seven daughters; the seven lean cows mean that you will bury seven daughters. Or: The seven full ears of corn mean that you will conquer seven principalities; the seven thin ears that seven principalities will rebel against you.

What was the purpose of all of this? So that Joseph would come at the end and be raised to high rank. For the Holy One said: If Joseph were to come right away and interpret the dream, he would not receive the recognition that should be his. The magicians would say to Pharaoh, "Had you asked us, we would at once have interpreted the dream for you in the same sense." Therefore He waited for the magicians to wear themselves out in their attempts and to exhaust Pharaoh's spirit, until Joseph would come and restore it.[1]

100. R. Hiyya bar Abba stated in the name of R. Yohanan: When Pharaoh said to Joseph, "Without thee shall no man lift up his hand or his foot" (Gen. 41:44), his astrologers said to him, "Will you set over us a slave whose master bought him for twenty pieces of silver?" He replied, "I see traits of royalty in him." They said, "If so, he should know the world's seventy languages." "Very well," said Pharaoh, "I'll test him tomorrow."

During the night [the angel] Gabriel came and taught Joseph the seventy languages, so that in the morning, whatever language Pharaoh spoke, Joseph replied in the same language. But then Joseph began talking to Pharaoh in the holy tongue, and Pharaoh did not understand what Joseph was saying. Pharaoh said, "Teach me [this language]." Joseph tried to teach it to him, but Pharaoh could not learn it. Pharaoh said, "Swear to me that you will not reveal this."[2] So Joseph swore to him.

Subsequently, when Joseph said to Pharaoh, "My father made me swear, saying, 'In the land of Canaan, there shalt thou bury me' " (Gen. 50:5), Pharaoh urged him, "Go ask to be released from your oath."[3] Joseph replied, "Very well, but then I will also ask to be released from the oath I swore to you." And so, reluctantly, Pharaoh said to Joseph, "Go up and bury thy father, according as he made thee swear (Gen. 50:6).[4]

101. "And Joseph went out from the presence of Pharaoh, and went throughout all the land of Egypt" (Gen. 41:46). Whenever he went into a marketplace, he used to see the different peoples clustered in many, many groups, in many, many companies, each speaking in their own tongue, and he could understand what each was saying. And when he rode in his chariot and passed through Egypt's entire domain, young Egyptian women used to climb walls and throw golden rings at him, hoping that he might look up and see the beauty of their appearance, as is said, "Joseph was a young man full of grace. . . . Young women used to climb over walls to have him gaze at them" (Gen. 49:22).[5]

102. "Young women used to run on top of walls" (Gen. 49:22). You find that when Joseph went forth to rule over Egypt, royal princesses used to peer at him through lattices and throw bracelets, necklets, earrings, and finger rings, hoping that he might lift up his eyes and look at them. Nevertheless, he did not do so.[6]

Joseph's Brothers in Egypt

103. "And Jacob said to his sons: 'Why should you make yourselves conspicuous?' " (Gen. 42:1).[7] My sons, you are all mighty men and you are all handsome. Do not all enter together by the same gate. Do not stand together in the same place, that the evil eye may have no power over you.[8]

104. "Joseph's brethren went down" (Gen. 42:3). Scripture should have said, "Jacob's sons." Why "Joseph's brethren?" Because in the beginning they did not treat him like a brother, for they sold him into servitude, but in the end they regretted what they had done. Every day they would say, "When shall we be going down into Egypt to bring our brother back to his father?" And when their father told them to go down to Egypt, they were all as one in their resolve to bring him back.

R. Judah bar Simon said: Joseph knew that his brothers had come down to Egypt to buy food. How did he know? He had guards stationed at all the gates and instructed them, "Take note of everyone who enters to buy food—record his name and his father's name, and each evening bring me your records." They did so. When Jacob's sons came, as each one entered by a different gate, his name and the name of his father were recorded. In the evening, when the guards brought the lists to Joseph, one had the entry "Reuben son of Jacob," another, "Simeon son of Jacob," and so on.

Joseph ordered, "Shut all storehouses, but leave one storehouse open." Then he gave the brothers' names to the official in charge of that one storehouse, saying to him, "When these men come to buy food, seize them and dispatch them to me."

Three days passed, but they did not come. So Joseph sent [a company of] mighty men to look for them in the marketplace, supplying the men with personal descriptions of the brothers. Joseph's men set out and found the brothers in the harlot's district, going from one street to another, from one alley to another. What were the brothers doing

---

1. Gen. R. 89:6.
2. That he did not know Hebrew. A king was supposed to know every tongue.
3. In Jewish law, only proper authorities can release a man from his oath. Pharaoh did not want Joseph to leave Egypt to bury his father.
4. B. Sot 36b.
5. JV: "Joseph is a fruitful vine. . . . Its branches run over the wall." But ben ("vine") also means "young man"; porat ("fruitful") is associated with the Aramaic apiryon ("treading gracefully"); banot ("branches") can also mean "young women"; tzaadah ("run over") also means "climb" and "armlets"; and shur ("wall") is construed in a dual sense, "wall" and "gaze." See Rashi on Gen. 49:6. PRE 39.
6. Gen. R. 98:18.
7. JV: "Why do you look one upon another?"
8. Ten such brothers together would expose them to the evil eye. Tanhuma, Mi-ketz, §8; Gen. R. 91:6; Yalkut, Mi-ketz, §148.

in the harlot's district? They figured: Our brother Joseph, being handsome, may have been set up [as a male harlot] in a harlot's stall. So Joseph's men seized them and brought them before Joseph.

"And when Joseph saw his brethren, he knew them . . . but they knew him not" (Gen. 42:7–8). The sages said: Because they had beards when he left them, "Joseph knew his brethren" (Gen. 42:8). But "they knew him not" (ibid.), because he had yet no sign of a beard when they left him.

"He made himself appear as a non-Jew[1] (va-yitnakker) unto them" (Gen. 42:7). He acted like a non-Jew, in that [seemingly resorting to divination][2] he took his goblet, tapped it, and said to them, "I see in the goblet that you are spies." They replied, "We are upright men" (Gen. 42:11). He said, "If you are upright men, why did you not enter through the same gate?" They: "Our father commanded us, 'Do not enter through the same gate.' " He: "Then what business had you being all together in the street of the harlots? Were you not afraid of the evil eye?" They: "We had lost something and were searching for it there." He: "What was it that you lost? [You are lying!] I see in my goblet that two of you have destroyed the great city of Shechem [which I believe is what you intend to do here]." They: "Who were the two?" He again tapped the goblet and said, "Simeon and Levi." Seized with trembling, the brothers blurted out, "We, thy servants, are twelve brethren" (Gen. 42:13). He: "Where are the other two?" They: "One, the youngest, is this day with our father, and the other is we know not where" (ibid.). He: "Bring your youngest brother unto me, so that your words may be verified" (Gen. 42:20). He then seized Simeon, bound him before their eyes, and said, "This one will stay in prison until you bring me the youngest." Why did he bind Simeon? Because it was Simeon who had pushed him into the pit; and also because Joseph wished to separate him from Levi, lest the two devise a plot against him. Simeon then said to his brothers, "What you did to Joseph, are you now about to do to me?" They: "What can we do? Shall the people of our household die of famine?" He: "Do what you will. As for me, let me see who can throw me into prison!"

At that, Joseph sent word to Pharaoh, "Dispatch seventy strongmen from your personal guard, for I have found brigands whom I wish to put in fetters." Pharaoh dispatched them, and Joseph's brothers were watching attentively to see what Joseph would do. He ordered the strongmen, "Throw this man into prison, and be sure to put fetters on his legs." But when some of them came near him, Simeon shouted at them, and as they heard the shout, they fell flat on their faces so hard that their teeth were broken. Now, Manasseh, Joseph's son, was seated in front of his father. So his father said, "Up with you!" Manasseh jumped up, knocked Simeon out with one blow, and threw him into prison, where he put fetters on his legs.

"You may think," Simeon said to his brothers, "that this was an Egyptian kind of blow. It wasn't! It had the kind of knockout punch we are familiar with in Father's house." When Joseph's brothers learned this, a great fear came over them.

They went back to their father and related all that had befallen them. When their father asked, "Where is Simeon?" they replied, "That man, the lord of the land, seized him as a hostage, to force us to bring our youngest brother." Jacob said, "Me have ye bereaved of my children; Joseph is not, and Simeon is not, and ye will take Benjamin away?" (Gen. 42:36). Then "Reuben spoke unto his father, saying: 'Thou shalt slay my two sons, if I bring him not to thee' " (Gen. 42:37). Jacob replied, "You foolish firstborn, are not your sons my sons also?" Judah then counseled his brothers: Let the venerable old man be until the last morsel of bread is gone.

"And it came to pass, when they had eaten up the corn" (Gen. 43:2), Judah spoke up: "Father, should Benjamin go with us, he may be seized; then again, he may not. But if he does not go with us, all of us are sure to die. It is better that you disregard the uncertain and go by the certain." Jacob asked, "Who will stand surety for him?" Judah replied, "I will be surety for him" (Gen. 43:9). So Jacob sent Benjamin with them.[3]

105. "God Shaddai (Almighty) give you mercy" (Gen. 43:14). Why did Jacob see fit to invoke "God Shaddai" when he blessed his sons? He used this name to indicate that more than enough afflictions had come upon him. While he was yet in his mother's womb, Esau strove with him. When he fled from Esau to Laban, he spent twenty years there in many kinds of distress. After he left, Laban pursued him in order to slay him. As soon as he was delivered from Laban, Esau came and sought to slay him, and because of Esau he had to give up a huge tribute [of cattle, camels, and so on]. After he extricated himself from Esau, the distress with Dinah befell him. After he extricated himself from that distress, there was the distress of Rachel[']s death]. After such a chain of distress, he wanted a little repose, but then there befell him the distress of Joseph, the distress of Simeon, and the distress of Benjamin. That is why Jacob invoked "God Shaddai[4] (Almighty)," as if to say: May He who said to heaven and earth, "Enough (dai)!" say also to my affliction, "Enough (dai)!"

The brothers brought Benjamin and presented him to Joseph. "And he lifted up his eyes and saw Benjamin his brother, his mother's son" (Gen. 43:29), and rejoiced at the sight of him, because he saw in him the very likeness of his mother.

Then Joseph asked, "Is this your younger brother of whom you spoke unto me?" (Gen. 43:29). They replied, "Yes." He invited them to dine with him. Now he wanted to have Benjamin seated next to him but did not know how to go about it. So he picked up his goblet and pre-

---

1. JV: "But made himself strange."
2. Divination is foreign to Jewish belief.
3. Gen. R. 91:6; Yalkut, Va-yeshev, §148; Tanhuma, Mi-ketz, §8; Tanhuma, Va-yiggash, §4.
4. Shaddai is read: She[amar] dai ("He who said, 'Enough' ").

tended to divine by tapping and sniffing it. Finally he said, "Judah, who is king, shall sit at the head of the table; Reuben, who is firstborn, next to him"; and so on with the others, until only Benjamin was left. Then he said, "I have no mother, and Benjamin, whose mother died when giving birth to him, has no mother. I had a brother who was separated from me, and he had a brother who was separated from him. Therefore let him come and rest his head next to mine."[1] Hence it is said, "And they sat before him, the firstborn according to his birthright, and the youngest according to his youth" (Gen. 43:33).

"And portions were taken unto them" (Gen. 43:34). Of the portions brought to the meal, Joseph gave each of the brothers his portion and, of course, gave Benjamin his. Then Joseph took his own portion and gave it to Benjamin. Asenath[2] also took her portion and gave it to Benjamin. Then Ephraim and Manasseh likewise took their portions and gave them to Benjamin, so that Benjamin now had five portions. Hence, "Benjamin's portion was five times as much as any of theirs" (Gen. 43:34).[3]

106. "And the goblet was found in Benjamin's sack" (Gen. 44:12). The [indignant] brothers pummeled Benjamin's shoulders, saying, "O thief, son of a she-thief! You have disgraced us. You are a true son of your mother—even so did your mother disgrace our father."[4]

On account of the blows struck on Benjamin's shoulders [for an offense he did not commit], he won the privilege of having the Presence dwell "between his shoulders" [that is, in his territory]—for Benjamin is spoken of as "the beloved of the Lord" (Deut. 33:12). [And Scripture goes on to say that] "God shieldeth him all the day, for He dwelleth [with him because of his humiliation at the pummeling] between his shoulders" (ibid.).[5]

Joseph Makes Himself Known to His Brothers

107. "Then Judah came near unto him" (Gen. 44:18). R. Samuel bar Nahman said in the name of R. Jonathan: While Judah and Joseph were arguing with each other, the ministering angels said to one another: Let us go down and watch a bull and a lion[6] trying to gore each other. Ordinarily, a bull fears the lion, but here bull and lion are at it, trying to hoist each other.

R. Yohanan said: When Joseph seized Benjamin and said to his brothers, "He in whose possession the goblet was found shall be my slave" (Gen. 44:17), Judah became enraged and roared in a voice so loud that it was heard a distance of four hundred parasangs, so that even Hushim son of Dan [who was hard of hearing] heard it. He sprang up out of the land of Canaan and rushed to Judah's side, and, with the two roaring together, the land of Egypt was almost turned upside down.

R. Joshua the Levite said: The other brothers, when they saw that Judah was enraged, were likewise filled with rage and stamped their feet on the earth, making furrows in the ground under them.

When Joseph saw the signs of Judah's rage, he was seized with trembling and said to himself: Woe is me! He may kill me! What were these signs? Blood oozed out of Judah's right eye. Some say that he wore five coats of mail over five sets of clothing. He had a single bristle on his chest, and whenever he became enraged, that bristle turned so hard that it pierced through all he wore. Furthermore, when he wished to stoke his rage, he would fill his belt bag with pea-sized pellets of brass, grab some, put them into his mouth, and grind them down with his teeth as his fury mounted.

In saying, "My lord asked his servants," etc. (Gen. 44:19), Judah argued with Joseph: "From the very beginning, you intended to frame us. From how many countries have people come to Egypt to buy food? Did you ask any of them the kinds of questions you asked us, as though we had come to wed your daughter or you to wed our sister? Nevertheless, we concealed nothing from you." Joseph retorted, "Judah, why do you act as spokesman for your brothers, when I see in the goblet that you have brothers older than you?" Judah replied, "My brothers bear no responsibility for Benjamin, whereas I—my innards are twisted like a rope with anguish." Joseph: "Why?" Judah: "Because I stood surety for him." Joseph: "Why did you not feel it necessary to stand surety for your other brother at the time you sold him to the Ishmaelites for twenty pieces of silver and inflicted pain upon your aged father by telling him that 'without doubt Joseph has been torn in pieces by a beast of prey' [Gen. 37:33]? That brother did no harm to you, while this one sinned, for he stole the goblet. So tell your father, 'The rope has followed the bucket into the well.' " When Judah heard this, he broke out into sobs and cried in a loud voice, "How shall I go up to my father, if the lad be not with me?" (Gen. 44:34).

Then Joseph said, "Come, let us discuss the matter calmly. State what you have in mind and set forth your plea in an orderly fashion."

At that, Judah said to Naphtali [in an aside], "Go and see how many districts there are in Egypt." Naphtali leaped out,[7] bounded back, and reported, "Twelve." Judah then said to his brothers, "I will smash three of them, each of you will take one, and we shall not leave a man alive among them." His brothers replied, "Judah, Egypt is not Shechem. If you destroy Egypt, you destroy the whole world." At this, "Joseph could not refrain himself . . . and he cried, 'Cause every man to go out from

---

1. In antiquity, men reclined on couches at dinner.
2. Joseph's wife. See Gen. 41:50.
3. Tanhuma, Va-yiggash, §5; Tanhuma B, Mi-ketz, §12; Gen. R. 92:5.
4. See Gen. 31:30–35.
5. Or: "He dwells amid his slopes"; the mountain on which the Temple stood is in the territory assigned to the tribe of Benjamin.
   "R. Yose said: May my portion be with one who is suspected unjustly. You can readily see this in the experience of Benjamin, who was suspected of doing something he had not done. What did he win? The privilege of the Presence in his portion" (see MhG Gen., p. 746; B. Shab 11a–b; B. MK 18b). Tanhuma, Mi-ketz, §10.
6. Joseph is described as "a firstling bull" (Deut. 33:17), and Judah is spoken of as "a lion's whelp" (Gen. 49:9).
7. Naphtali is described as a "hind let loose" (Gen. 49:21).

me' " (Gen. 45:1), thus putting himself in great danger, for if his brothers had decided to slay him, no creature in the world would have known who did it. Nevertheless, Joseph said to himself: It is better that I be slain than that I put my brothers to shame in front of the Egyptians.

As soon as the Egyptians left, Judah again confronted Joseph: "You swore by the life of wicked Pharaoh, and I swear by the life of my righteous father—if I draw my sword out of its sheath, I will fill Egypt with corpses." Joseph replied: "If you pull the sword out of its sheath, I will wrap it around your neck." Judah: "If I open my mouth, I will swallow you." Joseph: "If you dare open your mouth, I will plug it with a rock." Judah then asked Joseph, "What are we to tell our father?" Joseph: "I already told you. Tell him, 'The rope has followed the bucket.' " Judah said, "You pass a judgment upon us based on lies." Joseph replied, "Lies to liars—no judgment is as full of lies as the sale of your brother." Judah: "The fire that burned Shechem[1] is rekindled within me." Joseph: "It is rather the fire you unjustly intended for Tamar your daughter-in-law, and I will quench it."

In that instant, Judah's rage flared up, and he kept putting pellets of iron into his mouth and spitting them out as dust, saying, "Now I will go out and dye all the districts of Egypt with blood." Joseph replied, "You have always been dyers, for you dyed the coat of your brother with blood and told your father that 'without doubt Joseph was torn in pieces' " (Gen. 37:33).

Sensing that the brothers were at one in their resolve to destroy Egypt, Joseph said to himself: I had better make myself known to them, to prevent Egypt's destruction. And so Joseph spoke up: "Did you not say that this one's brother is dead? The fact is, I bought him. I will call him, and he will come to you."[2] He proceeded to call, "Joseph son of Jacob, come to me! Joseph son of Jacob, come to me and speak to your brothers who sold you." The brothers turned their eyes to the four corners of the chamber. Joseph asked them, "Why are you looking this way and that? I am Joseph, your brother." Instantly their souls flew out of them, and they could say nothing in reply. But the Holy One performed a miracle in their behalf, and their souls were restored to them. Then Joseph said, " 'Behold, your eyes see, and so can the eyes of my brother Benjamin, that it is Joseph that speaketh unto you' [Gen. 45:12], for I speak the sacred tongue." Still they did not believe him. Why not? Because he left them beardless, and now he stood before them with a beard on his face.

When they did recognize him, they wanted to slay him. But an angel came down and flung them apart to the four corners of the chamber.

In that instant Judah let out a mighty roar, so loud that all walls in Egypt collapsed, all pregnant women miscarried, Joseph fell off his seat, Pharaoh rolled off his throne, and all the strongmen who had been standing in Joseph's presence had their faces twisted around backward, and their teeth fell out.

When Joseph perceived that his brothers felt such deep shame, he said to them, " 'Come near to me, I pray you.' And they came near" (Gen. 45:4), each of them kissing Joseph and weeping over him.[3]

Jacob's Going Down to Egypt

108. R. Hiyya bar Abba said in the name of R. Yohanan: By rights, Jacob should have gone down into Egypt in chains of iron.[4] But his merit availed him, as is said, "Because of My love for [Jacob], I drew [Israel] with cords, with bands of love. Thus I was to [Israel] as one that lifteth up the yoke from the jaws of animals, making it easier for [Israel] to sustain [the burden of servitude]" (Hos. 11:4).[5]

109. [Of Jacob's going down to Egypt], R. Berekhiah, citing R. Judah bar Simon, told a parable: An attempt was made to drag a cow to the slaughterhouse, but she refused to move. What was done? Her young one was pulled ahead of her, and she, reluctantly, unwillingly, followed. So, too, Jacob should have gone down to Egypt in shackles, with an iron collar about his neck. But the Holy One said: Shall I have my firstborn son go down in such disgrace? Even if I induce Pharaoh to bring him down personally, I will not have Jacob's going down turned into a public spectacle. Instead, I shall draw Jacob's son in front of him, and then [on his own, albeit] reluctantly, unwillingly, Jacob will quietly follow.

[Another interpretation: "With Joseph, He was brought down to Egypt" (Gen. 39:1)]:[6] Joseph brought down the Presence with him into Egypt.[7]

The Death and Burial of Jacob

110. "And Jacob called unto his sons, and said: 'Gather yourselves together, that I may reveal to you . . .' " (Gen. 49:1). What Jacob was about to reveal to his sons was when the time of redemption was to come. But the Presence departed from him.[8] So he said, "Could it be, God forbid, that my bed has produced an unfit son—as happened to Abraham, my father's father, out of whom sprang Ishmael, or as happened to my father Isaac, out of whom sprang Esau?" His sons assured him of their steadfastness: " 'Hear, O Israel [our father], the Lord is our God, the Lord alone' [Deut. 6:4]. Just as in your heart there is only

1. Gen. 34.
2. Gen. 38.
3. Tanhuma, Va-yiggash, §4; Tanhuma B, Va-yiggash, §8; Gen. R. 93:7; Yalkut, Va-yiggash, §151.
4. Since it was the beginning of Israel's servitude.
5. JV: "I drew them with cords of a man, with bands of love; and I was to them as they that take off the yoke on their jaws, and I fed them gently." Literally, the last clause may also be read: "I extended [strength] to them, making it possible to sustain the burden." B. Shab 89b.
6. JV: "And Joseph was brought down to Egypt."
7. A conclusion drawn from the assertion "The Lord was with Joseph" (Gen. 39:2). Gen. R. 86:2.
8. The Presence departed because the exact time of redemption is hidden knowledge and not to be revealed to mortals. But Jacob feared that the Presence departed because one of his sons was unfit to be told.

the One, so in our hearts there is only the One." Then our father Jacob pronounced for the first time the benediction "Blessed be the Name whose glorious kingdom is forever and ever."

Hence—it is reported in the name of R. Samuel—every day, morning and evening, Jews say, "In the cave of Machpelah [where you are at rest], 'Hear, O Israel [our father].' What you commanded us we still practice: 'The Lord is our God, the Lord alone.' "[1]

111. "And they came to a threshing floor for brambles" (Gen. 50:10).[2] But is a threshing floor ever used for brambles? R. Abbahu explained: The verse implies that, as a threshing floor is fenced by a hedge of brambles, so was Jacob's coffin encompassed by crowns. For sons of Esau, of Ishmael, and of Keturah also came. They came, so it is taught, to wage war [against the sons of Jacob]. But when they saw Joseph's crown hung upon Jacob's coffin, they all took off their crowns, and they, too, hung them upon Jacob's coffin. It is taught that thirty-six crowns were thus hung upon Jacob's coffin, encompassing it.[3]

When they came to the cave of Machpelah, Esau appeared and sought to prevent Jacob's burial in it, saying, "This cave has room for only four couples.[4] Since Jacob buried Leah in his place, the plot that remains is mine." Jacob's sons replied, "But you sold your portion to our father." Esau retorted, "Even if I did sell my claim as firstborn [to an additional portion in my father's estate], did I sell also the original single portion due me as an heir?" They said, "You sold that also." Esau: "Show me the bill of sale." They: "The bill of sale is in Egypt. Who will go and bring it from there? Let Naphtali go—he is as swift as a hind."

It so happened that Hushim son of Dan, who was hard of hearing, was standing there. When he asked, "What's going on?" he was told, "This one is holding us up until Naphtali returns from Egypt." Hushim asked, "And until Naphtali returns from Egypt, is my father's father to lie shamefully unburied?" So he seized a club and struck Esau on the head so hard that his eyes fell out of their sockets and dropped at Jacob's feet. At that, Jacob opened his eyes and smiled. Hence Scripture's assurance that "the righteous man will rejoice when he seeth revenge; he will bathe his feet in the blood of the wicked" (Ps. 58:11).

At that moment Rebekah's prophecy "Why should I be bereaved of you both in one day?" (Gen. 27:45) was fulfilled.[5]

112. "And when Joseph's brethren saw that their father was dead, they said, 'It may be that Joseph bears a grudge against us' " (Gen. 50:15). What did they see that made them afraid? As they were returning from burying their father, they saw that Joseph turned off the road and went to look at the pit into which his brothers had cast him. Upon seeing this, they said, "He still bears a grudge in his heart. Now that our father is dead, he will make his hatred of us felt." But in fact Joseph's motive was a pious one—he wanted to utter a blessing for the miracle wrought for him in that place.[6]

113. "And he comforted them, and spoke persuasively to them" (Gen. 50:21). R. Eleazar taught: What Joseph had to say was indeed persuasive. He said: If ten lamps could not extinguish one, how is one lamp to extinguish ten?[7]

---

1. B. Pes 56a; Gen. R. 98:4.
2. JV: "of Atad," a place-name. But since it occurs nowhere else, the commentator explores atad in its literal meaning of "brambles."
3. Joseph's crown, twelve crowns of the sons of Ishmael (Gen. 25:13–15), and twenty-three crowns of the chiefs of Esau (Gen. 36:15–18). See Rashi, ad loc.
4. For Adam and Eve, Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Rebekah. As for the fourth place, the one next to Leah, Esau claimed that it should be reserved for him.
5. B. Sot 13a.
6. Tanhuma, Va-yehi, §17; Gen. R. 100:8; Lekah Tov, ad loc.
7. B. Meg 16b.

CHAPTER FOUR

ISRAEL IN EGYPT AND THE DEPARTURE FROM EGYPT

The Servitude in Egypt

1. "I found Israel like grapes in the wilderness, I saw your fathers as the first ripe in the fig tree at her first season" (Hos. 9:10). R. Yudan said: At first a fig tree's fruit is picked one by one, then two by two, then three by three, until the figs ripen so abundantly that baskets and shovels have to be used to gather them. So, too, at the beginning, "Abraham was one, and he inherited the Land" (Ezek. 33:24). Then two: Abraham and Isaac. And after that, three: Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Until finally, "the children of Israel were fruitful, and increased abundantly, and multiplied, and waxed exceeding mighty" (Exod. 1:7).[1]

2. "Now there arose a new king over Egypt" (Exod. 1:8). Rav and Samuel differed in their explanations of the verse. One said that he was actually a new king; the other, that new decrees were issued by him.[2] But if so, how can the verse go on to say, "Who knew not Joseph" (ibid.)? Because it seemed as though he was not aware that Joseph ever existed.

The sages asked: Why then is he called a new king? Was he not the same pharaoh? What happened was that the Egyptians said to Pharaoh, "Come, let us attack this people." He replied, "You are idiots. To this day we are eating what one might say belongs to them—how can we [even think of] attacking Joseph's people? But for Joseph, we would not have survived." When Pharaoh refused to listen to them, they deposed him from his throne for three months, until he said to them, "I agree to whatever you wish." Then they restored him. Hence, "There arose a new king" [signifies that Pharaoh was forced to issue new decrees].[3]

3. "Who knew not Joseph." When Joseph died, the Israelites, saying, "Let us be like the Egyptians," abolished the covenant of circumcision. After they did this, the Holy One turned the love the Egyptians had for them into hatred, as is said, "He turned their heart to hate His people, to deal craftily with His servants" (Ps. 105:25).[4]

4. "Come, let us deal craftily with him" (Exod. 1:10). The text does not say "with them," but "with him," which implies, so asserts R. Hama son of R. Hanina, that Pharaoh said, "Come, let us deal craftily with Israel's deliverer."

How shall we afflict Israel? [asked the Egyptians]. Shall we afflict them by fire? But Scripture says [that, in retribution], "the Lord will come with fire" (Isa. 66:15) and "by fire will the Lord contend" (Isa. 66:16). Shall we afflict Israel with the sword? But the verse continues, "And by His sword against all flesh" (ibid.). Come then, let us afflict Israel with water, for the Holy One has already sworn that He would not bring another flood upon the world, as is said, "I have sworn that the waters of Noah should no more go over the earth" (Isa. 54:9). What the Egyptians did not know was that He would indeed not cause floodwaters to go over the entire earth, but that He might bring them upon a single people. Or, He might not cause such waters to go over even a single people, but conceivably a people may go and fall into the waters. Thus Scripture: "The Egyptians fled at the sea's approach; but the Lord hurled the Egyptians into the sea" (Exod. 14:27). In connection with what happened to the Egyptians, R. Eleazar construed Scripture as saying, "In the thing that [the Egyptians] cooked up" (Exod. 18:11)[5]—in the very pot where the Egyptians cooked up their mischief against the Israelites, they themselves were cooked.[6]

5. "And they embittered their lives with harsh labor . . . and in all sorts of work in the fields" (Exod. 1:14). What is implied by "in all sorts of work in the fields"? After finishing their work in mortar and bricks, the Israelites would return to their homes to rest. Then an Egyptian would come and say, "Go out and gather greens for me in the garden patch," "Split this log for me," "Fill this cask for me from the river." Hence: "In all sorts of work in the fields."

What does Scripture mean by "With all the tasks that they ruthlessly imposed upon them" (Exod. 1:14)? That the Egyptians imposed men's work upon women and women's work upon men. Thus, a man would be told, "Up, and bake," and a woman would be told, "Fill this cask, split this log. Go to the patch and fetch some greens."[7]

6. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said: Why were the Egyptians compared to maror?[8] To teach you that, just as maror is soft as it begins to grow and hard at the end, so were the Egyptians soft and mild at the beginning,[9] but tough and hard in the end.[10]

---

1. Gen. R. 46:1; Yalkut, Hos., §525.
2. After all, Scripture does not say that the old king died.
3. B. Sot 11a; Exod. R. 1:8.
4. Exod. R. 1:8.
5. Literally, "In the thing wherein they dealt proudly (zaddu)." But zaddu can also mean "cooked up."
6. B. Sot 11a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
7. Tanhuma, Va-yetze, §9.
8. Chicory or horseradish.
9. Offering payment for work done.
10. B. Pes 39a.

7. "Therefore they did set over him" (Exod. 1:11)—not "over them," but "over him." In the school of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon it was taught: The use of "over him" implies that [to con Israelites into believing that Pharaoh himself worked at making bricks] a brick-mold was brought and hung around the neck of Pharaoh, and whenever an Israelite complained that he was too delicate for such work, he was asked, "Are you more delicate than Pharaoh?"[1]

8. "And the Egyptians made the children of Israel serve with parekh."[2] R. Eleazar said: The word means "with gentle speech (peh rakh)." After Pharaoh said, "Let us act craftily," he gathered all Israel and, affecting gentleness, said, "I beg you, as a special favor, work alongside me today." Then Pharaoh picked up a basket and a shovel, and everyone who saw him pick up the basket and shovel and work at the making of bricks did likewise. Thus it came about that Israelites worked to the fullness of their strength and with great eagerness alongside Pharaoh. But when it grew dark, he stationed taskmasters over the Israelites and said, "Reckon up the number of bricks." After the taskmasters counted them, the Israelites were told, "This is to be the number you are to provide me each and every day."[3]

9. "Every boy that is born ye shall throw into the Nile" (Exod. 1:22). R. Hanan said: What did the chaste and virtuous Israelite women do? They took their infants and hid them in holes [in their houses]. So the wicked Egyptians would take their own young children, bring them into the homes of the Israelites, and pinch their young until they cried. When the Israelite infants in their hiding places heard the Egyptian children cry, they cried with them. Then the Egyptians would seize the Israelite infants and cast them into the Nile.

At that time the Holy One said to the ministering angels: Descend from My Presence and look at the children of My beloved Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob being thrown into the river. The ministering angels rushed headlong down from His Presence and, standing up to their knees in the water, caught the children of Israel in their arms and set them upon rocks. Then out of each rock the Holy One brought forth nipples, which suckled the Israelite children.[4]

10. R. Avira expounded: Israel was redeemed from Egypt on account of the righteous women of that generation. When they went to draw water, the Holy One for their sake caused so many small fish to be scooped up into their pitchers that only half of what they drew up was water and the other half fish. They would then heat two pots, one with hot water and the other with fish, both of which they brought to their husbands in the field. There the women washed their husbands, anointed them, fed them, and gave them to drink. Then, lying secluded between mounds in the fields, they responded to their men. After that, they returned to their homes. When the time for giving birth came, they went into the fields and gave birth under an apple tree,[5] as is said, "Under an apple tree I roused thee; there thy mother was in labor with thee, there was she in labor and brought thee forth" (Song 8:5). Then from the heights of heaven the Holy One sent an angel, who cleansed the infants and massaged their bodies as a midwife does to make a child look beautiful. Then He selected for each of them two breast-shaped stones, one filled with honey and the other with oil, as is said, "And He made him suck honey out of the crag, and oil out of the flinty rock" (Deut. 32:13). When the Egyptians became aware of these infants, they came to slay them. But then another miracle occurred, for the infants were swallowed up by the ground. At that, the Egyptians brought oxen and plowed the area where they had disappeared. But as soon as the Egyptians left, the infants burst forth out of the ground like grass in the field. As the infants grew up, they came running to their homes in flocks.

Later, when God revealed Himself at the Red Sea, these infants, [now grown up], were the first to recognize Him, for they said, "This is my God" (Exod. 15:2).[6]

11. In Egypt, the Israelites gathered to dwell as a group, all of them becoming as one, and they convenanted to act with loving-kindness toward one another; to be loyal to the covenant of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; not to forsake the language of the house of their father [Jacob]; and not to adopt the language of Egypt, because it might lead them to idolatry.

And when Israel in Egypt continued to circumcise their sons, the Egyptians would say to them, "Why do you circumcise your sons? Will they not in no time at all be flung into the river?" Israel replied, "We will circumcise them nevertheless. You do with them as you wish—he who is to die will die, he who is to be slain will be slain, and he who is destined to live will live."[7]

12. "And the king of Egypt spoke to the Hebrew midwives" (Exod. 1:15). Who were the midwives? A woman and her daughter, that is, Jochebed and Miriam. So said R. Samuel bar Nahmani. Miriam was then only five years old, but she would accompany her mother and attend zealously to all her needs.[8]

"[Miriam was called] Puah" (Exod. 1:15) because she defied (hophiah) Pharaoh, all but thumbing her nose at him, saying, "Woe to this man when God comes to settle with him." Pharaoh, filled with rage, was about to have her put to death. [But Jochebed, who was called] Shiphrah (ibid.) because she used to smooth over (meshapperet) her daughter's impudence, conciliated Pharaoh by saying, "Need you pay attention to her? She is only a child and doesn't know a thing."

---

1. B. Sot. 11b; Exod. R. 1:10.
2. JV: "with rigor." But peh means "mouth," and rakh, "soft."
3. B. Sot 11b; Tanhuma B, Be-haalotekha, §23.
4. Song R. 2:15, §2; TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 43.
5. The commentator assumes that giving birth under an apple tree was made necessary out of fear of the Egyptians.
6. B. Sot 11b; Exod. R. 1:12.
7. TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 123.
8. She did not act as a midwife, but merely advised her mother.

"But they kept the men-children alive" (Exod. 1:17).[1] The praise of the midwives here goes beyond the praise given them in the first part of the verse. Not only did they not do what Pharaoh told them, they even dared to do deeds of kindness for the children they saved. In behalf of poor mothers, the midwives would go to the houses of rich mothers and collect water and food, which they gave to the poor mothers and thus kept their children alive.[2]

The Birth and Growing Up of Moses

13. "And there went a man from the house of Levi" (Exod. 2:1). Did Amram, the man referred to in the verse, go anywhere? No! Nowhere, so taught R. Judah bar Zevina, but Amram went and acted upon his daughter's advice. He, as is well known, was the most eminent man of his generation. Aware that Pharaoh had decreed, "Every son that is born ye shall cast in the river" (Exod. 1:22), he said, "We labor in vain," and was the first to divorce his wife. At that, all the others divorced their wives. Then his daughter said to him, "Father, your decree is more cruel than Pharaoh's, for Pharaoh has decreed only against the males, while you decree against both males and females. Pharaoh decreed only concerning this world, while you decree concerning both this world and the world-to-come.[3] Now, since Pharaoh is a wicked man, there is doubt whether his decree will or will not be fulfilled; but since you are a righteous man, your decree is sure to be fulfilled." At once he went and took back his wife, and so did all the others.

"And he took" (Exod. 2:1). Scripture does not say, "He restored," but "He took," implying, said R. Judah bar Zevina, that he took her back in a formal wedding ceremony, seating her in a bridal litter, Miriam and Aaron dancing before her, while the ministering angels sang, "The mother of children will [again] rejoice" (Ps. 113:9).[4]

14. As Rabbi Judah [I, the Patriarch] was once expounding Scripture, the congregation became drowsy. Wishing to rouse them, he said: A certain woman in Egypt brought forth sixty myriad infants at one birth. A disciple, named R. Ishmael son of R. Yose, was there, and he asked: Who was that woman? R. Judah replied: It was Jochebed, who gave birth to Moses, deemed equal to sixty myriads of Israel.[5]

15. "She took for him an ark of bulrushes, and daubed it with bitumen and pitch" (Exod. 2:3). It is taught: The bitumen was inside and the pitch outside, in order that the infant who was to grow up so righteous should not be made to smell the bad odor.[6]

16. "And his sister stood afar off" (Exod. 2:4). What is meant by the statement that Miriam stood afar off? Rav explained that Miriam had prophesied, "My mother is destined to give birth to a son who will save Israel from Egypt." And so, when Moses was born and the house, all of it, was flooded with radiant light, Miriam's father stood up and kissed her on the head, saying, "My daughter, your prophecy is fulfilled!" But after Moses was put into the river, her father tapped her on her head and whispered sadly, "My daughter, what is to become of your prophecy?" Hence the verse is to be read, "And his sister pondered over what would be done to him afar off"—pondered over the ultimate outcome of her prophecy in a time far off.[7]

17. "And she sent her handmaid" (Exod. 2:5).[8] When her handmaids saw that Pharaoh's daughter wished to save Moses, they said to her, "Our lady, in the world's practice, when a king issues a decree, even if the whole world does not obey it, his own children and the members of his household do obey it. Yet you would violate your father's decree!" At that, Gabriel came down and smote them to the ground [leaving the princess but one handmaid].[9]

18. "Shall I go and call thee a nurse of the Hebrew women?" (Exod. 2:7). Why of the Hebrew women? The question proves that Moses had already been taken around to ever so many Egyptian women to nurse him, but he rejected them all, for the Holy One said: Shall the mouth that will speak with Me suck anything unclean?[10]

19. "And she brought him unto Pharaoh's daughter," etc. (Exod. 2:10). Pharaoh's daughter used to kiss and hug Moses, loved him as if he were her own son, and would not allow him out of the royal palace. Because he was so handsome, everyone was eager to see him, and whoever saw him could not turn his eyes away from him. Pharaoh also used to kiss and hug him, and Moses used to grab Pharaoh's crown and put it on his own head. The magicians of Egypt sitting there said, "We fear this one who grabs your crown and puts it on his own head may be the one, as we have been saying, who will take your kingdom away from you." Some of the magicians suggested that he be slain, others that he be burned alive. But Jethro, who sat among them, said, "This child has yet no understanding. Why not test him? Place before him a vessel with a gold piece and a burning coal in it. If he reaches for the gold, he has understanding, and you may slay him. But if he reaches for the coal, he has no understanding, and a sentence of death is not called for." The items were brought at once. Then, as Moses put forth his hand to grab the gold, Gabriel came down and shoved it to the side, so that

---

1. Since it was already stated that the midwife did not do what Pharaoh ordered them to, why add these words? Hence the comment that follows.
2. Exod. R. 1:13 and 1:15.
3. "The drowned babes would live again in the Hereafter; but unborn children are denied such bliss" (Sot, Soncino, p. 60, n. 4).
4. B. Sot 12a; Exod. R. 1:19.
5. Song R. 1:15, §3.
6. B. Sot 12a.
7. B. Sot 12b–13a; Exod. R. 1:22; Mek, Be-shallah, Shirata, end.
8. The commentator's implied question: Does the verse signify that a royal princess had but one handmaid?
9. B. Sot 12b; Exod. R. 1:23.
10. From the breasts of a woman who worships idols. B. Sot 12b; Exod. R. 1:25.

Moses not only seized the coal but also put the hand with the coal into his mouth and burned his tongue. As a result he became slow of speech and slow of tongue.[1]

Moses Goes Forth to His Brethren

20. "And he went out unto his brethren, and he looked on their burdens" (Exod. 2:11). How did he feel as "he looked on"? As he looked on their burdens he wept, saying, "Woe is me for your servitude! Would that I could die for you!" Since no work is more strenuous than that of handling clay, Moses used to shoulder the burdens and help each worker.

R. Eleazar son of R. Yose the Galilean said: He saw heavy burdens put upon small people, and light ones upon big people; men's burdens upon women, and women's burdens upon men; the burden that an old man could carry on a youth, and that of a youth on an old man. So he would from time to time step away from his retinue and rearrange the burdens, making believe that his intention was to be of help to Pharaoh.[2] The Holy One said: You left your own concerns and went to look with compassion at the distress of Israel, behaving like a brother toward them. So, I, too, will leave those on high and those below, and speak [only] with you.

Another comment on "He looked on their burdens." He saw that they had no rest whatever. So he said to Pharaoh, "When a man has a slave and the slave does not rest at least one day during the week, the slave will die. These are your slaves. If you do not let them rest one day during the week, they will surely die." Pharaoh replied, "Go and do with them as you say." So Moses went and ordained the Sabbath day for them to rest.[3]

21. "And he saw an Egyptian" (Exod. 2:11). Who was this Egyptian? The father of the blasphemer, "whose mother was Israelite and whose father was Egyptian" (Lev. 24:10). The verse in Exodus goes on: "Beating a Hebrew"—the Hebrew was the husband of Shelomith, the daughter of Dibri.[4]

What preceded the Egyptian's beating the Hebrew? [The account that follows will explain]: The taskmasters were Egyptian but the foremen were Israelite, one taskmaster over ten foremen, and one foreman over ten Israelites. The taskmasters used to go around early in the morning to the foremen's homes to get them out to work at cockcrow. Once an Egyptian taskmaster saw an Israelite foreman's wife, Shelomith, the daughter of Dibri, who was beautiful—free of any blemish—and he cast his eye upon her. So the next day at cockcrow, he went to that foreman's home and quietly said to him, "Go, gather your team of ten men." Then he hid himself behind the staircase. The moment the husband left, the Egyptian got into the bedchamber and defiled the woman. It so happened that the husband turned back and saw the Egyptian as he was leaving the house. The husband reentered his house and asked his wife, "Did the Egyptian touch you?" She replied, "Yes, but I thought it was you!"

When the taskmaster became aware that the husband had found him out, he put the husband back to heavy labor and beat him all day, saying, "Work harder, work harder," trying to kill him.

"And he saw what had happened and what was now happening (Exod. 2:12).[5] Through the holy spirit, Moses saw what the Egyptian had done to the Hebrew in his home and what he intended to do to him in the field, and said: It is not enough for this wicked one that he defiled the wife—he is also determined to kill the husband.

"And when he saw that there was no man" (Exod. 2:12)—saw that there was no one who would be zealous for God and slay the Egyptian—"he smote the Egyptian" (ibid.). Taking a shovel used for mixing clay, [he split the Egyptian's skull] so that his brain spilled out.[6]

22. "And . . . he smote the Egyptian, and hid him in the sand" (Exod. 2:12). Moses said to the Israelites present, "You are to be like sand. When sand is taken from here and put over there, it makes no sound; even so, let not a word [about what I did] issue from your mouth.[7]

23. "Thinkest thou to kill me, as thou didst kill the Egyptian? And Moses . . . said: 'Surely the thing is known' " (Exod. 2:14). For Moses had been meditating in his heart: Wherein have Israel sinned, that they should be enslaved more than any other nation? But upon hearing one of the quarreling men say right out what he, Moses, had done, he said to himself: "Now the thing is known"—now I know why Israelites are enslaved—talebearing is rife among them. How can they ever be worthy of deliverance?[8]

24. "Now when Pharaoh heard" (Exod. 2:15). For Dathan and Abiram [the two Israelites who had been quarreling] at once rose up and informed on Moses. Whereupon "he sought to slay Moses" (ibid.). Pharaoh sent for a sword that had no equal and had him struck with it ten times upon his neck,[9] but Moses' neck became like a marble pillar, and the sword did him no harm.

"Then Moses fled from the face of Pharaoh" (Exod. 2:15). Said R. Yannai: Is it possible for a man to escape from a king? Yes, for after Moses was seized, taken to the scaffold, and tied up, had the sword laid upon his neck, and was condemned to be beheaded, an angel disguised in the form of Moses descended from heaven. So they seized the angel, while Moses escaped. R. Joshua ben Levi said: As for all the counselors who sat before Pharaoh

---

1. Exod. R. 1:26.
2. Moses' staff did not realize that he was a Hebrew.
3. Exod. R. 1:27–28; Lev. R. 37:2. "The passage in the Sabbath Amidah 'Moses rejoiced in the gift of his portion' is taken as a reference to the joy he felt when God ordained the day he had chosen as the day of rest for all" (Exod. R. 1:28 [Soncino, p. 35, n. 3]).
4. See Lev. 24:11.
5. JV: "He looked (koh ve-khoh) this way and that way." But koh ve-khoh—literally, "here and there"—may also be construed as the commentator does.
6. Exod. R. 1:28–29; Lev. R. 32:4; Tanhuma, Shemot, §9, and Emor, §24.
7. Tanhuma, Shemot, §9.
8. Exod. R. 1:30.
9. Possibly taking the letter yod (10) in va-yevakkesh ("he sought") as intimating that the sword struck Moses ten times. Yefeh Toar.

at that time—some became mute, some deaf, some blind, some lame. When Pharaoh asked the mute, "Where is Moses?" they could not speak. When he asked the deaf, they did not hear; the blind, they did not see; the lame, they were unable to walk.[1]

Moses in Midian

25. "Now the priest of Midian had seven daughters" (Exod. 2:16). Does not the Holy One hate idolaters? Yet He apparently allowed Moses to find refuge with an idolater. The fact is that Jethro had been a priest for idolatrous worship but then realized that it had no substance, rejected it, and thought of turning to God in penitence even before the arrival of Moses. So he summoned his townsmen and said, "I have been ministering to you until now. But I am grown old. Choose another priest for yourselves." And then and there he brought forth all the paraphernalia used in that worship and turned it over to his townsmen. They excommunicated him immediately, declaring that no man should keep him company or work for him; and when he asked the shepherds to tend his flock, they would not hear of it. That is why his daughters had to go out to tend it: "And the shepherds came and drove them away" (Exod. 2:17).

Jethro's daughters said, "An Egyptian delivered us" (Exod. 2:19). Was Moses an Egyptian? Of course not. He was a Hebrew, but his dress was Egyptian.

A parable provides another explanation for the reference to an Egyptian in the daughters' account of their deliverance: A man was bitten in the foot by a lizard and ran to immerse his feet in water. When he got to the river, he saw a child drowning in it; he stretched out his hand and pulled him out. The child said, "But for you, I would now be dead." The man replied, "It was not I who saved you. It was the lizard who bit me and from whom I was fleeing—it was he who saved you." So, too, when Jethro's daughters said to Moses, "May you grow in strength—you saved us from the shepherds," Moses replied, "It was the Egyptian whom I slew—he saved you." That is why, in speaking to their father, Jethro's daughters mentioned an Egyptian, meaning: "Who caused this man Moses to come to our aid? The Egyptian whom he had slain."[2]

The Groaning of the Children of Israel and the Mission of Moses

26. "The king of Egypt died" (Exod. 2:23). These words really mean that he became leprous, for a leper is regarded as dead. Thus, when Miriam became a leper, Moses prayed, "Let her not be as one dead" (Num. 12:12).[3] [On account of Pharaoh's leprosy], "the Israelites groaned" (Exod. 2:23). Why did they groan? Because the magicians of Egypt said to Pharaoh: There is no cure for you unless we slay a hundred and fifty Israelite children in the evening and a hundred and fifty in the morning, and you bathe twice daily in their blood. When the Israelites heard this decree, they began to groan and lament.

"And God heard their moaning" (Exod. 2:24). R. Akiva said: Pharaoh's executioners used to suffocate Israelites by immuring them in the walls of buildings. These would cry out from the structure, from its walls, and the Holy One heard their moaning.[4]

27. "Now Moses was tending the flock" (Exod. 3:1). The Holy One tested Moses by means of the flock, as our masters explained: When Moses our teacher was tending Jethro's flock in the wilderness, a lamb scampered off, and Moses followed it, until it approached a shelter under a rock. As the lamb reached the shelter, it came upon a pool of water and stopped to drink. When Moses caught up with it, he said, "I did not know that you ran away because you were thirsty. Now you must be tired." So he hoisted the lamb on his shoulder and started walking back with it. The Holy One then said: Because you showed such compassion in tending the flock of a mortal, as you live, you shall become shepherd of Israel, the flock that is Mine.[5]

28. "And God called unto him out of the midst of the bush" (Exod. 3:4). The Holy One said to Moses: Do you not sense that I live in distress whenever Israel find themselves in distress? Just look at the place out of which I speak to you—out of a thornbush. I—if one dare attribute such words to God—fully share in their distress, as implied in the words "In all their affliction, He is afflicted" (Isa. 63:9).[6]

29. "And Moses was tending the flock . . . and the . . . Lord appeared unto him in a flame of fire out of the midst of a bush" (Exod. 3:1–2). R. Simeon ben Yohai said: When the Holy One revealed Himself from the heights of heaven, why did He choose to speak to Moses out of a thornbush? Because of all bushes in the world, the thornbush is the most apt to inflict harm. Whenever a bird flies into it, the bird cannot emerge unscathed, for many parts of its body will be ripped open. So, too, for Him who is everywhere, the task of aiding anyone to emerge free and unscathed out of slavery in Egypt was more delicate by far than out of any other slavery in the world. No manservant or maidservant, other than Hagar, had ever before emerged out of Egypt free and unscathed.[7]

Another comment: "Out of the midst of a thornbush." R. Yose said: Why out of a thornbush? It is characteristic of a thornbush that when a man sticks his hand into it, he is not injured, because the sharp ends of its thorns are

---

1. Exod. R. 1:31; Song R. 7:5, §1; Mek, Yitro, Amalek, 1.
2. Exod. R. 1:32; Tanhuma, Shemot, §11.
3. Had Pharaoh actually died, Scripture would have said, "The king of Egypt died, a new king arose, and the children of Israel groaned." As the text reads now, it is difficult to understand why the king's death should have caused Israel's groaning, unless, as the comment that follows suggests, the attempts to heal the stricken king brought on the slaughter of young children.
4. Exod. R. 1:34; PRE 48.
5. Exod. R. 2:2.
6. Exod. R. 2:5.
7. To reassure Moses, who feared that being freed from Egypt (the thornbush) was impossible, God appeared in the thornbush in a flame of fire, by way of saying that the fire of freedom for Israel will nevertheless burst forth.

pointed downward; but when he attempts to draw his hand out of the bush, the thorns will fasten on to it. Likewise, when the Israelites first entered Egypt, they were well received, being told, "The land of Egypt is open before thee; in the best of the land make thy father and thy brethren to dwell" (Gen. 47:6). But when they wanted to leave, the Egyptians fastened on to them, as when Pharaoh said, "I will not let Israel go" (Exod. 5:2).[1]

30. A heathen asked R. Joshua ben Korhah: Why did the Holy One see fit to speak to Moses out of a thornbush and not out of another kind of tree? He replied: Had he spoken to Moses out of a carob tree or out of a sycamore tree, you would have asked me the same question; but to dismiss you with no reply is not right. So I will tell you why. To teach you that no place on earth, not even a thornbush, is devoid of the Presence.[2]

31. "The bush burned with fire, and the bush was not consumed" (Exod. 3:2). Why did the Holy One show Moses such a symbol? Because Moses had thought to himself that the Egyptian might consume Israel. Therefore the Holy One showed Moses a fire burning in a thornbush which was nevertheless not consumed, saying to him: As the thornbush, though burning, is not consumed, so the Egyptians will be unable to consume Israel.[3]

32. "Moses Moses" (Exod. 3:4). Here the Hebrew text provides no stop equivalent to a comma between the two occurrences of the name Moses.[4] Why not? This question may be answered by the parable of a man overloaded by an excessively heavy burden, who cries out all in one breath, "Somebody somebody, come quickly, take this load off me!"[5]

33. R. Joshua the Priest bar Nehemiah said: When God revealed Himself to Moses, Moses was but a novice in prophecy. The Holy One said: If I reveal Myself to him in a thunderous voice, I will terrify him; if in a whisper, he will take little note of prophecy. What did God do? He revealed Himself in the voice of Moses' father, whereupon Moses answered, "Here am I. What does my father wish?" God said, "I am not your father. I am the God of your father. In My need to win you over, I addressed you in a familiar voice so that you would not be afraid."[6]

34. "And Moses hid his face" (Exod. 3:6). R. Joshua ben Korhah said: Moses did not act properly in hiding his face, for had he not done so, the Holy One would have revealed to him what is above and what is below, what had been and what is destined to be. Therefore, when subsequently Moses did want to see it all, saying, "Show me, I pray Thee, Thy glory" (Exod. 33:18), the Holy One chided him, saying: When I came to show you [My] face, you hid yours. Now I am telling you that "man shall not see Me and live" (Exod. 33:20). When I wished to have you see Me, you did not wish it—now, when you wish to see Me, I do not wish it.

But R. Hoshaia Rabbah differed: Moses acted properly in hiding his face. The Holy One said to Moses: Since you showed Me respect by hiding your face when I came to show you My face, as you live, you will be seeing Me on the mountain forty days and forty nights. You will neither eat nor drink, but will be feasting upon the splendor of the Presence, as is said, "Moses knew not that the skin of his face sent forth beams [of splendor]" (Exod. 34:29).[7]

35. "And Moses said to God: 'Who am I that I should go to Pharaoh?' " (Exod. 3:11). Moses was saying to the Holy One—so asserted R. Nehorai—You say to me: Go and bring Israel out. How can I manage it with so many people to take care of? Where can I shelter them from the heat in summer and from the cold in winter? Whence can I provide food and drink? How many midwives are there among them? How many pregnant women? How many infants? What food have You prepared for their midwives? What delicacies have You prepared for those who are pregnant? How many parched grains and nuts have You prepared for the little ones? The Holy One replied: You will understand from the parched bread Israel will take with them out of Egypt, bread that will suffice them for thirty days, how I intend to provide for them.[8]

36. "I am forever I am" (Exod. 3:14).[9] The Holy One said to Moses: Go tell Israel, I am He who is with you in this servitude, and I am also He who will be with you during servitude under other kingdoms. Moses replied: Master of the universe, sufficient unto the hour is its own affliction.[10] [Why call to mind affliction yet to come?] The Holy One said: Very well, just tell them, "I-am hath sent me unto you" (Exod. 3:14).[11]

37. "And thou shall take in thy hand this rod" (Exod. 4:17). The rod that was created at twilight [on creation's sixth day] was handed to Adam in the Garden of Eden. Adam handed it to Enoch, Enoch to Shem, Shem to Abraham, Abraham to Isaac, Isaac to Jacob; Jacob took it to Egypt and handed it to his son Joseph. When Joseph died, all his household effects were moved and deposited in Pharaoh's palace. Now, Jethro was one of Pharaoh's magicians. When he saw the rod and the signs on it, he coveted it in his heart and took it, brought it to his place, and planted it in the garden by his house. No man could

---

1. Mek RSbY, p. 1.
2. Exod. R. 2:5; Song R. 3:10, §2.
3. Exod. R. 2:5.
4. Unlike other instances where a name, such as Abraham or Jacob, occurs twice, separated by a mark equivalent to a comma. See Gen. 22:11 and 46:2; 1 Sam. 3:10.
5. Exod. R. 2:6.
6. Exod. R. 3:1.
7. Ibid.
8. Though parched bread appeared to be the only food available, the entire multitude miraculously subsisted on it until the manna came down. Exod. R. 3:4; Song R. 1:7, §1.
9. The Hebrew for "I am that I am" is very difficult, and many translations have been suggested. This one takes asher ("that") in the sense of "confirm, make abide"; hence, "forever."
10. Cf. Matthew 6:34.
11. B. Ber 9b.

come near it until Moses arrived in the land of Midian, entered the garden of Jethro's house, saw the rod, made out the signs on it, stretched forth his hand, and took it. When Jethro saw this, he said: This man is destined to redeem Israel from Egypt. That is why he gave his daughter Zipporah to Moses as his wife.[1]

Moses Returns to Egypt

38. "And Moses went" (Exod. 4:18). Where did he go? To get his wife and children. Jethro asked him, "Where do you propose to take them" Moses: "To Egypt." Jethro: "Those who are in Egypt wish to get out, and you would take your family there?" Moses: "Soon Israel will go out and stand at Sinai to hear from the mouth of the Holy One, 'I am the Lord thy God' [Exod. 20:2]; should not my children, like the others in Israel, hear this?" So Jethro said to Moses, " 'Go in peace' [Exod. 4:18]—go in peace, enter Egypt in peace, and come back in peace."[2]

39. "Go, return to Egypt" (Exod. 4:19). R. Reuben said: When the Holy One told Moses in Midian, "Go, return to Egypt," the command was divided into two distinct voices and assumed two personae. Moses heard one voice saying in Midian, "Go, return to Egypt"; while Aaron [in Egypt] heard the other voice saying, "Go into the wilderness to meet Moses" (Exod. 4:27). Hence, "God thundereth miraculously [in two places] with His voice" (Job 37:5).[3]

40. "And Moses took his wife and his sons" (Exod. 4:20). At that very time [the Holy One] said to Aaron, "Go into the wilderness to meet Moses" (Exod. 4:27). Aaron went to meet him, embraced him, and kissed him, saying, "Moses, where have you been all these years?" Moses: "In Midian." Aaron: "Who are the little ones and the woman with you?" Moses: "My wife and children." "Where are you taking them?" "To Egypt." Aaron: "We are worrying about those already there, and now we shall also have to worry about these." Immediately [Moses] said to Zipporah, "Go back to your father's house." Scripture later refers to this act in saying, "After [Moses] had sent her away" (Exod. 18:2).[4]

Moses before Pharaoh

41. "And afterward Moses and Aaron came" (Exod. 5:1). What happened to the elders of Israel, who are not included [as having come with Moses and Aaron], even though the Holy One had said to Moses, "Thou shalt come, thou and the elders of Israel, unto the king of Egypt" (Exod. 3:18)? The elders started out to go with them—so taught our masters—but they kept themselves at some distance from Moses until, one by one, or even two by two, they managed to slip away, so that when Moses and Aaron reached Pharaoh's palace, not one of the elders was there, as implied in "And afterward Moses and Aaron came." Question: Where were the elders? They had slipped away. The Holy One said to them: Is this what you have done? As you live, I shall requite you. When did the requital take place? When Moses and Aaron went up with the elders to receive the Torah, the Holy One turned the elders back: "Unto the elders He said: 'Tarry ye here' " (Exod. 24:14).

"And they said to Pharaoh: 'Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel: Let My people go' " (Exod. 5:1). R. Hiyya bar Abba asserted: That day was Pharaoh's reception day for vassals, when all kings from east and west came to honor him, bringing gifts of crowns with which to crown him cosmocrator—monarch of all the world, king over all other kings. After the kings had crowned him, Moses and Aaron were still standing at the door of Pharaoh's palace. His servants came in and reported, "Two old men are standing at the gate." Pharaoh: "Let them come up." Now, in Pharaoh's palace there were four hundred doors, and at each and every door there were lions, bears, and other wild beasts, and until these were fed meat, no mortal could enter any of the doors. But when Moses and Aaron came, all the wild beasts gathered around them, licking their feet, and proceeded to accompany them until they reached Pharaoh's presence. When Moses and Aaron stationed themselves in Pharaoh's presence, all the kings saw that the two seemed like ministering angels, the height of their stature like that of cedars of Lebanon, the orbs of their eyes like the radiant spheres of Venus, their beards like bunches of dates, the splendor of their visage like the splendor of the sun, their hands holding the sapphire rod of God upon which was inscribed the Explicit Name, and the utterance of their mouths like a flame of fire. Seeing that, the fear of the two fell upon all of the kings, every one of them, and a shaking and a trembling, a shudder of awe seized each of them, so that they removed the crowns from their heads and bowed down to Moses and Aaron. All the while Pharaoh sat and looked at Moses and Aaron, expecting that they too wished to crown him and present their paeans of praise.[5] But they did not even salute him.

Pharaoh asked, "Who are you?" They: "The ambassadors of the Holy One." Pharaoh: "What do you seek?" They: "Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel: 'Let My people go,' " etc. (Exod. 5:1). At this, Pharaoh became angry, saying, " 'Who is the Lord, that I should hearken unto His voice to let Israel go?' [Exod. 5:2]. Has He not sense enough to send me a crown, and you who come to me with mere words [expect me to hearken to Him]? 'I know not the Lord; moreover, I will not let Israel go' " (ibid.).[6] Then he added, "But wait, I shall search my records." And then he went into his archives and brought out a list of divinities, which he proceeded to read: "The god of Moab, the god of Ammon, the god of Zidon" [and so forth]. Finally he decreed, "You see, I looked for the

---

1. PRE 40; Yalkut, Shemot, §170.
2. Exod. R. 4:4.
3. Exod. R. 5:9.
4. Mek, Be-shallah, Amalek, 3 (La 2:167–68).
5. So David Luria. Others: "credentials," as ambassadors from one more vassal.
6. First he said, "Who is the Lord?" implying doubt, and then, "I know not the Lord," implying certainty. Mah.

name of your God in my archives, and did not find it."

R. Levi said: Pharaoh was like a priest's servant who was an utter fool. When the priest happened to leave the city, the servant went to look for his master in a burial ground, blubbering to the people standing there, "Have you seen my master here?" When asked, "Who is your master?" he replied, "So-and-so, the priest." They retorted, "World's biggest fool that you are! Does one look for a priest in a burial ground?"[1] So, too, Moses and Aaron said to Pharaoh, "Utter fool that you are! Are the living to be sought among the dead? The divinities in your records are dead. But our God is a living God, the King of the universe."

Pharaoh asked, "Is He young or old? How old? How many cities has He subdued? How many provinces has He conquered? How long is it since He ascended the throne?" They replied, "Our God—His strength and might fill the universe. He was before the world was created, and He will be after the world's end. He formed you and gave you the breath of life." Pharaoh: "What are His notable deeds?" Moses and Aaron: "He stretched forth the heavens and laid the foundations of the earth; His voice hews out flames of fire; He splits mountains and shatters rocks. His bow is fire, His arrows flame, His spear a torch, His shield clouds, His sword lightning. He forms mountains and hills; He covers heaven with clouds; brings down rain and dew; makes grasses grow, fruits to be succulent; answers those about to give birth; fashions the embryo in its mother's womb and brings it forth into the air of the world; He removes kings and sets up kings."

Pharaoh replied, "From the very outset you have spoken lies. I am lord of the universe. I created myself as well as the Nile." Then and there he gathered all the sages of Egypt and asked them, "Have you ever heard the name of the God of these two?" They replied, "We did hear that He is a 'son of the wise, son of ancient kings' [Isa. 19:11], [but no more]." At that, Pharaoh told Moses and Aaron, "Your God—I have no idea who He is. 'Who is the Lord, that I should hearken to His voice?' " (Exod. 5:2).[2]

The Brutality of the Enslavement

42. "And the foremen of the Israelites . . . were flogged" (Exod. 5:14). Pharaoh appointed Egyptian taskmasters over the Israelite foremen, and these foremen were appointed over the rest of the people. After Pharaoh had commanded the taskmasters, "Ye shall no more give the people straw" (Exod. 5:7), the taskmasters came and counted the bricks. Whenever the tally was short, the taskmasters flogged the foremen, who surrendered themselves to be flogged for the sake of the people in their charge. Refusing to turn over to the taskmasters the names of those who fell short, they said: We prefer to submit to the lash, rather than have the people in our charge fall into the hands of the taskmasters.

Therefore, when the Holy One said to Moses, "Gather for Me seventy men" (Num. 11:16), Moses replied, "Master of the universe, I do not know who is worthy and who is not." God said, "The foremen who had been set over them thou wilt know as worthy to be elders of the people" (Num. 11:16)[3]—the same foremen who surrendered themselves to be flogged because of the tally of bricks are to come and receive this distinction.[4]

43. "Be off now to your work! No straw shall be issued to you" (Exod. 5:18). After that, the Israelites had to gather stubble in the wilderness and tread clay into the stubble; the coarse stubble pierced their heels, mingling their blood with the clay. Even Rachel, the daughter of Shutelah's son,[5] although about to give birth, had to tread the clay by the side of her husband, with the result that the infant emerged from its mother's womb and fell into and was engulfed by the mix of the brick-mold. At that moment the angel Michael descended, took that brick-mold [with the dead infant], and brought it up before the throne of glory. That very night the decree of punishment against Egypt was issued.[6]

44. "To put a sword in their hand to slay us" (Exod. 5:21). R. Judah the Levite son of R. Shallum taught that the people said to Moses: To what may we be compared? To a lamb that a wolf has come to snatch. Though the shepherd runs after the lamb to save it from the mouth of the wolf, the lamb, pulled this way by the shepherd and that way by the wolf, is torn apart. So, too, Israel said, "Moses, between you and Pharaoh, we are being pulled to death."[7]

45. R. Eliezer son of R. Yose said: Once, during a visit to Alexandria in Egypt, I came upon a learned elder who said to me: Come, let me list for you what my ancestors did to yours—they drowned some in the sea, they slew some by the sword, they crushed some in buildings.[8] It was because of these afflictions that Moses was punished. For Moses had the presumption to say, "Since I came to Pharaoh to speak in Thy Name, it has gone worse with this people; and Thou hast shown no capacity to deliver Thy people" (Exod. 5:23). Then the Holy One told Moses: Alas for those who are gone and are no longer. How many times did I reveal Myself to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob as "God Almighty," yet they did not question My ways. They did not say, "How do You justify Your attribute 'Almighty' "? I commanded Abraham, "Arise, walk through the land in the length of it and in the breadth of it; for I will give it unto thee" (Gen. 13:17). Yet when he sought a place to bury Sarah and could not find one until he purchased one for four hundred silver shekels, he still did not question My ways. I told Isaac, "Sojourn in this land, and I will be with thee, and will bless thee" (Gen.

---

1. A priest may not defile himself by contact with the dead. Lev. 21:1.
2. Exod. R. 5:14; Tanhuma, Va-era, §5; Yalkut, Shemot, §172.
3. JV: "Whom thou knowest to be elders of the people; and officers over them."
4. Tanhuma B, Be-haalotekha, §25.
5. Of the tribe of Ephraim. See Num. 26:36.
6. PRE 48.
7. Exod. R. 5:21.
8. By using them as bricks; when an Israelite did not provide his tally of bricks, one of his infants was immured in the wall.

26:3). Yet when his servants sought water to drink and found it only after engaging in a dispute [for, as Scripture says, "The herdsmen of Gerar did dispute with Isaac's herdsmen, saying, 'The water is ours' " (Gen. 26:20)], he too did not question My ways. I assured Jacob, "The Land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it" (Gen. 28:13). Yet when he sought a place to pitch his tent and could not find one until he bought it for a hundred pieces of money, he also did not question My ways. None of them challenged My attribute "Almighty." But you—at the very beginning you wanted to know by what right [in view of Israel's affliction] did I speak of Myself as "Almighty" and now have dared say to Me, "Thou hast shown no capacity to deliver Thy people." Therefore, "now shalt thou see what I will do to Pharaoh" (Exod. 6:1)—you will see the warfare against Pharaoh, but you will not see the war against the thirty-one kings.[1]

46. "And the king of Egypt said unto them: Lammah" (Exod. 5:4).[2] What is meant by lammah? "You, Aaron and Moses, are good for nothing (le-mah), and what you say amounts to nothing (le-mah). 'Get back to the chores assigned to you' " (ibid.). Since the tribe of Levi, as R. Joshua ben Levi taught, was exempt from servile work, Pharaoh said to Moses and Aaron, "Because you are exempt from such work, you [having little to do] say, 'Let us go and sacrifice to our God' [Exod. 5:3]. Get back to the household chores that are yours."[3]

47. "Let heavier work be laid upon the men" (Exod. 5:9). When the entire verse is read, it tells us that the Israelites possessed scrolls that contained assurances that the Holy One would redeem them. The Israelites took delight in reading them from one Sabbath to the next, for at that time they were still allowed to rest on the Sabbath. But now Pharaoh said to the taskmasters, " 'Let heavier work be laid upon the men, and make them keep at it [even on the Sabbath], so that they will not delight (yish'u) in lying words' [ibid.]—let them not divert themselves and rest on the Sabbath day."[4]

The Signs and the Plagues

48. "And Aaron cast down his rod before Pharaoh. . . . Then Pharaoh also called[5] for the wise men and the sorcerers" (Exod. 7:10–11). In that instant, Pharaoh began ridiculing Moses and Aaron, all but cackling in triumph like a mother hen as he said to them, "So these are the signs of your God! In the world's practice, people bring merchandise to a place that needs it. But who in his right mind would bring fish brine to Apamea or fish to Acco? Don't you know that every kind of sorcery is available in my domain?" He had children brought from school and had them do the same kind of tricks. He even called his wife and said to her, "Look what these Jews did to make me appear ridiculous," and she also did the same.

"For they cast down every man his rod" (Exod. 7:12). The Egyptian sorcerers Yohani and Mamre[6] asked Moses, "Would you carry straw to Afarayim?"[7] Moses replied, "People do say, To Herbtown carry herbs."[8]

49. "A dullard venteth all his rage" (Prov. 29:11). These words apply to Pharaoh, who scoffed at the Holy One, imagining that what Moses and Aaron had done was the work of witchcraft, and therefore called all the members of his household to do likewise. At that time the Holy One said: "If Aaron's serpent were to swallow up the serpents of the Egyptians, there would be nothing remarkable in that, for a serpent usually swallows another serpent. Therefore, let the rod that turned serpent first resume its original form and only then swallow the serpents of the Egyptians.

"But Aaron's rod swallowed up their rods" (Exod. 7:12). R. Eleazar said: A double miracle occurred. For the verse implies that the rod resumed its original form and swallowed the serpents of the Egyptians. When Pharaoh beheld this, he was amazed and said to himself: What will happen if Aaron should now say to his rod, "Swallow up Pharaoh and his throne"? It would at once swallow me up.

R. Yose son of R. Hanina said: In addition, another great miracle happened to that rod, for although it swallowed up all the rods that had been cast down, enough to make ten heaps, still that rod did not become any thicker, and all who saw it recognized it as Aaron's rod.[9]

50. "And Pharaoh's heart was hardened" (Exod. 7:14). The sages asked: How is the hardening of Pharaoh's heart to be understood? By a story: A lion and all kinds of beasts, including a fox, were about to sail on a ship. The ass was collecting the fare for the journey, saying to each animal, "Pay me the fare." The fox said to the ass, "How brazen-faced you are! You know that the king of beasts is with us, yet you demand the fare." The ass replied, "After I take it from the king, I will put it back in his treasury." [Upon hearing these words], the lion ordered, "Bring the ship to." He then got off, ripped the ass apart, and told the fox, "Lay out the parts of this fool's carcass for me [to feed]." The fox laid them out. But when he saw the ass's heart, he ate it up. When the lion came back and saw all the parts cut up, he asked, "Where is the fool's heart?" The fox replied, "My lord king, he had no heart. If he had had one, he would not have presumed to collect the

---

1. Moses would not be permitted to enter the Promised Land and witness its conquest. See Josh. 12:24. B. Sanh 111a.
2. JV: "Wherefore." But since Moses and Aaron had already told Pharaoh the reason they wanted to go, why should he ask, "Wherefore?" Hence lammah is construed not as a question but as a reproach.
3. Exod. R. 5:16.
4. Exod. R. 5:18.
5. There may be a play on va-yikra ("called") and mekarker ("cackle").
6. The two chief Egyptian sorcerers (B. Men 85a), also referred to as Jannes and Jambres (EJ 9:1277).
7. Josh. 19:19. "Carry coals to Newcastle?"
8. Such a place becomes a specialized market town, and purchasers are likely to be found there. So, said Moses, people come to Egypt from everywhere to watch feats of magic and are likely to be impressed by mine, which are better than yours. Exod. R. 9:6–7; B. Men 85a; Tanhuma B, Va-era, §12.
9. Exod. R. 9:7.

fare from the king." So, too, if wicked Pharaoh had a heart,[1] he would not have said to the King who is King of kings, "Pay me my due [paeans of praise]."[2]

51. "Behold God is so great in power—hence, who dare give instructions as He does?" (Job 36:22).[3] The custom of the world is that when a man wishes to bring sudden evil upon his enemy, he will maneuver to catch him unawares. God, however, warned Pharaoh before each and every plague that it was coming, to give him an opportunity to repent.[4]

52. "And the Lord said unto Moses: 'Say unto Aaron' " (Exod. 7:19). R. Tanhum taught: Why were the waters not smitten by Moses himself? Because the Holy One said to Moses: It is not proper that the waters that protected you when you were cast into the river should now be smitten by you. As you live, they shall be smitten by none other than Aaron.[5]

53. Why did God begin by bringing the plague of blood upon the Egyptians? Because Pharaoh and the Egyptians worshiped the Nile. Therefore the Holy One said to Moses, "Go, and in their very presence smite their gods," in accord with the saying "When idols are smashed, their priests are abashed." God will not punish a people until He first punishes its gods.

"Over their rivers" (Exod. 7:19): wherever there was water, it turned into blood. "And over all its bodies of water" (ibid.): even water that was in a kettle turned into blood. Even what an Egyptian spit out of his mouth turned into blood, as is said, "And there shall be blood throughout all of Egypt" (ibid.).

R. Avun the Levite said: The Israelites became rich from the plague of blood. How did that happen? If an Egyptian and an Israelite dwelled in a house where there was a vat full of water, and the Egyptian went to fill a kettle from it, the water turned into blood, but the Israelite would continue to drink water from the same vat. When the Egyptian said to him, "Give me some water with your own hand," and was given water, it still turned into blood. Even if he said, "Let us both drink from one vessel," the Israelite drank water, but the Egyptian drank blood. It was only when the Egyptian bought water from the Israelite for money that he was able to drink water, and this is how the Israelites became rich.[6]

54. R. Berekhiah asked: What is meant by the phrase "The waters . . . turned themselves" in the verse "And because all the waters that were in the river turned themselves, all were turned into blood" (Exod. 7:20)? He explained the phrase with the parable of a slave flogged by his master; after being flogged on the stomach, he turned himself over,[7] [was flogged again, and] thus was flogged over all of his body. So it was with the Nile, which turned its waters upside down in the hope that the plague would not affect it; but it was of no avail, for all of it turned into blood.[8]

55. The Holy One brought the plagues upon Egypt with the tactics of warrior kings. What does a king of flesh and blood do when a city rebels against him? He sends troops to encircle it. Then he shuts off its water conduits. If its people submit, he desists. But if not, he brings loud noises upon them to confuse them. If they submit, he desists. But if not, he shoots arrows at them. If they submit, he desists. But if not, he sets savage units against them. If they submit, he desists. But if not, he deprives them of their source of food.[9] If they submit, he desists. But if not, he flings burning naphtha upon them. If they submit, he desists. But if not, he catapults stones at them. If they submit, he desists. But if not, he arrays multitudes [of scalers of walls] against them. If they submit, he desists. But if not, he puts them in prison. If they submit, he desists. But if not, he slays the notables among them.

So, too, at the beginning, the Holy One shut the Egyptians' water conduits: "He turned their rivers into blood" (Ps. 78:44). Since they did not submit, He brought loud noises to confuse them—frogs, whose croaking was very hard for the Egyptians to endure; for, entering the Egyptians' innards, they kept up their "co-ax, co-ax." Since they did not submit, He shot arrows at them—gnats, which penetrated the bodies of the Egyptians like arrows. Since they did not submit, He brought savage units against them—swarms of wild beasts. Since they did not submit, He deprived them of their source of food—by sending murrain, of which their cattle died. Since they did not submit, He flung burning naphtha at them—skin boils. Since they did not submit, He catapulted stones at them—hail. Since they did not submit, He sicced multitudes [of wall scalers] on them—locusts. Since they did not submit, He put them in prison—darkness. Since they still did not submit, He slew the notables among them: "The Lord smote all the first in rank"[10] (Exod. 12:29).

All that the Egyptians planned against the Israelites, the Holy One brought upon their own persons. The Egyptians intended Israelites to draw water for them. So "He turned their rivers into blood" (Ps. 78:44). The Egyptians intended Israelites to carry wares for them. So He brought frogs, which chewed up those wares. The Egyptians intended Israelites to till the soil for them. So He made the soil swarm with gnats. The Egyptians intended Israelites to carry their young children about in the manner of tutor escorts. So He sent against the Egyptians wild beasts—lions, wolves, leopards, bears, and serpents. For example, an Egyptian with five sons would customarily put them

---

1. The heart was presumed to be the seat of understanding.
2. See above, chap. 4, §41. Yalkut, Va-era, §182.
3. JV: "Behold, God doth loftily in His power; who is a teacher like unto Him?"
4. Exod. R. 9:9.
5. Exod. R. 9:10.
6. See "And afterward shall they come out with great substance" (Gen. 15:14). Tanhuma B, Va-era, §14; Exod. R. 9:10.
7. To gain relief.
8. Exod. R. 9:11.
9. Literally, "wreaks destruction [upon their source of food]."
10. JV: "all the firstborn." However, in limiting the lethal extent of the plague, the commentator endeavors to diminish the impression that God is unbelievably cruel.

under the care of an Israelite, who would escort the five in the street. A lion would snatch one, a wolf another, a bear another, a leopard another, and a fiery serpent still another, so that the Israelite would come back to the house of the Egyptian alone. The Egyptian would ask, "Where are my children?" and the Israelite would reply, "Sit down, and I will give you an accounting—a lion took one, a wolf another, a bear another, a leopard another, and a fiery serpent still another." The Egyptians intended that Israelites tend their cattle. So He sent murrain upon their cattle. The Egyptians intended that Israelites serve as bath attendants for them. So He brought boils upon them. The Egyptians intended to stone the Israelites. So He brought hail upon them. The Egyptians intended that Israelites be their vintagers. So He brought locusts, which consumed their vines. The Egyptians intended to put them in prison. So He brought darkness upon them. The Egyptians intended to slay them. So "the Lord smote all their first in rank" (Exod. 12:29). The Egyptians intended to drown them in water. So He "hurled Pharaoh and his host into the Red Sea" (Ps. 136:15).[1]

56. "And the frogs[2] came up, and covered the land of Egypt" (Exod. 8:2). R. Akiva said: It was only one frog, but it bred so rapidly that it filled the entire land of Egypt. R. Eleazar ben Azariah said to him: Akiva, what business have you with Aggadah? Leave your attempts at homiletical interpretation and turn to Negaim[3] and Ohalot.[4] True, at the beginning there was only one frog, but this one croaked for the others, and they came in swarms.[5]

57. "The Nile shall swarm with frogs, which shall go up and come into thy house . . . and into thine ovens, and into thy kneading troughs" (Exod. 7:28). Whenever an Egyptian woman was kneading dough, or heating her oven with bread inside, frogs would come and settle on the dough and devour it, or hop into the oven, cool it,[6] and get at the bread.

R. Aha said: From the phrase "And upon thee" (Exod. 7:29), the inference may be drawn that when an Egyptian drank water and a drop fell on his chest, the drop would burst apart and become a frog.

R. Yohanan said: Wherever there was a little earth and a drop of water touched it, it would become a frog.[7] Hezekiah Berabbi said to R. Yohanan: But according to your line of interpretation, noblemen's palaces made of marble and massive piers could not have been affected. The fact is, as Scripture tells us, the frog coming up from the deep would say to the marble, "Make room for me, that I may come up [into the palace] and do the will of my Maker." At that, the marble split apart and the frog came up, took hold of the nobleman's private parts, and mutilated them.[8]

58. "But when Pharaoh saw that there was respite," etc. (Exod. 8:11). This is just like the wicked: when they are in trouble, they affect humility; but as soon as they have respite, they return to their perversity.[9]

59. "And the Lord said unto Moses: 'Say unto Aaron: Stretch out thy rod, and smite the dust of the earth' " (Exod. 8:12). [Aaron, not Moses, was told to smite the earth], for, according to R. Tanhum, the Holy One said to Moses: It is not proper that the earth, which protected you when you slew the Egyptian,[10] should now be smitten by you.[11]

60. "There was . . . fire flashing continually amidst the hail" (Exod. 9:24). A miracle within a miracle! R. Judah said that vials made of hail and filled with fire came down, yet the frozen water did not quench the fire nor did the fire consume the frozen water. R. Nehemiah said: Fire and hail, mingling, were made to work together. R. Judah's explanation, said R. Hanan, brings to mind the pomegranate, whose seeds are visible through its pulp; while R. Nehemiah's explanation, R. Hanan went on to say, brings to mind a crystal lamp in which water and oil work together to keep the flame of the wick burning.[12]

The interaction of the water and the oil may be illustrated by the parable of two fierce legions that were bitter rivals. When the time came for the king to wage war, what did he do? He made peace between them, and they both marched out and executed the king's orders together. So, too, fire and hail are bitter rivals, yet when the time came to wage war against Egypt, the Holy One made peace between them, and together they smote the Egyptians. Hence the verse is to be read, "There was fire flashing up within the hail," so that when an Egyptian sat down, he was scorched by hail, and when he stood up, he was scorched by fire.[13]

61. "Behold, tomorrow at this time[14] I will cause it to rain a very grievous hail" (Exod. 9:18). Zavdi ben Levi said: Moses scratched a mark on a wall and said: When the sun reaches this mark tomorrow, the hail will descend.[15]

62. R. Yohanan taught: When the locusts came, the Egyptians, endeavoring to find some joy in their plight,

---

1. Tanhuma, Bo, §4.
2. The word for "frogs" is in the singular in the Hebrew text.
3. A treatise dealing with laws concerning suspected leprosy.
4. A treatise dealing with laws concerning staying under the same roof with a ritually unclean object. The two treatises, which are very difficult, are, according to R. Eleazar, appropriate subjects for R. Akiva's keen mind.
5. B. Sanh 67b.
6. By their natural coldness.
7. He interprets "their land swarmed with frogs" (Ps. 105:30) as suggesting that the land itself—the earth—turned into frogs.
8. Exod. R. 10:2–3.
9. Exod. R. 10:6 and 12:7; Tanhuma B, Va-era, §22.
10. The earth "protected" Moses because he hid the Egyptian in it. See Exod. 2:12.
11. Exod. R. 10:7.
12. The oil, being lighter than the water, floats on its surface and feeds the burning wick.
13. Exod. R. 12:4; Num. R. 12:8; Song R. 3:11, §1.
14. The word ka-et ("at this time") implies "at exactly the same time." Cf. Gen. R. 33, end.
15. Exod. R. 12:2.

said: Let us gather the locusts, pickle them, and put them up in casks. The Holy One retorted sharply: Scoundrels, do you expect to find any joy in the plague I bring upon you? Immediately "the Lord turned an exceeding strong sea wind" (Exod. 10:19)—the westerly wind—"which took up the locusts," etc. (ibid.). What is signified by the words that follow: "There remained not one locust" (ibid.)? That even those that had been pickled in the Egyptians' pots and casks took wing and fled.[1]

63. "And there was a thick darkness" (Exod. 10:22). R. Avdimi said: The darkness was twice and twice again thicker [than the darkness of any other night, so that] "no one was able to move from his place for three days" (Exod. 10:23). During those three days, he who was seated could not stand up, he who was standing could not sit down, and he who was lying down could not raise himself up.

During the three days of darkness, the cover of thick cloud made it dark for the Egyptians but gave light to the Israelites, so that Israelites were able to enter the houses of the Egyptians and see all that they had. Subsequently, when the Holy One said, "Tell the people that each man shall borrow of his neighbor," etc. (Exod. 11:2), Israelites would enter the houses of Egyptians and say [each man to his neighbor], "Lend me the vessel you have." If the Egyptian replied, "I do not have such a vessel," the Israelite would say, "I know that you have it—it is in such-and-such a place." The Egyptian would then say to himself: If [in saying they merely wish to borrow] the Israelites are lying [and are in fact planning to appropriate the vessels], they could have filched these vessels during the days of darkness, when we would not have been aware of it.[2]

64. "But all the children of Israel had light in their dwellings" (Exod. 10:23). Scripture does not say, "In the land of Goshen," but, "In their[3] dwellings," to show that wherever a Jew entered, light entered with him and illuminated for him what was in casks, chests, and hidden depositories.[4]

65. Why did the Holy One bring darkness upon the Egyptians? Because there were transgressors in Israel who had patrons among the Egyptians, lived in their midst in affluence and honor, and were therefore unwilling to leave Egypt. The Holy One said: If in the sight of all I bring a plague upon them also and they die, the Egyptians will say, "Just as plagues have befallen us, so has a plague befallen them."[5] For this reason, He brought darkness upon the Egyptians for three days, so that the Israelites could bury their [disloyal] dead without their enemies seeing what they were doing.[6]

66. "When Thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world learn righteousness" (Isa. 26:9). Our masters taught: The plagues that the Holy One brought upon the Egyptians were the means of establishing peace for them. How so? There had been a dispute between the Ethiopians and the Egyptians, the Egyptians claiming, "Our borders extend to here," and the Ethiopians claiming, "No, our borders extend to here." But when the frogs came, they made peace between them, for the frogs entered only Egyptian territory, and thus the fields that did not belong to the Ethiopians were clearly identified.[7]

67. How may Pharaoh's actions be illustrated? By the parable of a swineherd who found a ewe lamb and put her among his swine. When its owner sent word, "Give me back my ewe lamb," the swineherd replied, "No lamb of yours is with me." Then the owner asked [the other herdsmen], "Tell me, where does the swineherd water his herd?" When he was told, he stopped up the springs [the swineherd used]. Again he sent word to the swineherd, "Return my ewe lamb," and again came the reply, "No lamb of yours is with me." The owner then inquired [of the herdsmen], "Tell me, where does he stall his animals?" When told, he tore down the swineherd's folds and sent word once more, "Return my ewe lamb." Once more came the reply: "No lamb of yours is with me." The owner then inquired, "Tell me, where do his beasts feed?" When told, he burned all the grass that the swineherd had and again sent word, "Return my ewe lamb." The reply again was: "No lamb of yours is with me." The owner then asked, "Let me know which school his son attends." The owner went and took the swineherd's son into his own custody, and once again sent word, "Return my ewe lamb." This time the reply was: "Here is your lamb." The owner took it and then detained the swineherd as he had his son. The swineherd protested, "Now that your lamb is no longer in my possession, why do you detain me? What of yours do I still hold?" The owner replied, "I claim all that she gave birth to, and also the worth of her shearings all the time that she was in your possession." At this, the swineherd began to shout, "Would that I had not given back the lamb at all! People would then have said, 'He stood by his [original] word and did not give up the ewe lamb—evidently her owner was only seeking a pretext to slay him!' "

The owner is the King, King of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He; the ewe lamb is Israel; the swineherd, Pharaoh. When Israel came down to Egypt, Pharaoh subjected them to forced labor. Then the Holy One told Moses, "Say to Pharaoh, 'Let My people go, that they may serve Me.' " When Moses went and said that to Pharaoh, he replied, "Who is the Lord, that I should hearken to His voice?" (Exod. 5:2). Moses reported to the Holy One, "Pharaoh said, 'Who is the Lord?' and refuses to set the people free." God then asked, "Whence do the Egyptians drink?" Moses: "Out of the Nile." God: "Turn it into blood." When the Egyptians sought to drink and found no water, God again sent word, "Let My people go." But Pharaoh refused. Then God asked, "Where do his cattle feed—is it not in the wilderness?" He then sent [fiery] hail upon him, breaking all his trees and burning every-

---

1. Exod. R. 13:7; Tanhuma, Va-era, §14.
2. Exod. R. 14:3; Tanhuma, Bo, § 3; Yalkut, Bo, §186.
3. The word "their" is taken to refer to the dwellings of Egyptians.
4. Exod. R. 14:3.
5. Proving that the plagues did not come from God, but were natural phenomena.
6. Exod. R. 14:3; Mek, Be-shallah, Va-yehi, beginning (La 1:175).
7. Exod. R. 10:2 and 13:4.

thing. Next He visited him with locusts, which devoured every green sprout; He also took His rod and broke the neck of all his beasts. God visited all these plagues upon him, but he still refused to set Israel free. Finally He took Pharaoh's son and imprisoned him. Only then did Pharaoh say to the Israelites, "Up, depart!" Then he immediately [changed his mind and] pursued them, but he was seized and detained as his son had been,[1] as it says, "He . . . hurled Pharaoh and his host in the Red Sea" (Ps. 136:15).[2] Pharaoh began to wail, "Would that I had not let them go! For then people would have said, 'See, here is a man who stood by his word; for even though he set them free, the Owner has slain him.' "[3]

Events Preceding the Exodus

68. "Speak na in the ears of the people, and let them ask every man of his neighbor . . . objects of silver and objects of gold" (Exod. 11:2). In the school of R. Yannai it is taught: The word na implies entreaty. Thus the Holy One said to Moses, I beg you, go and say to Israel: Please, ask the Egyptians for objects of silver and objects of gold, so that the righteous Abraham should not complain, "The one promise—'They shall serve them, and they shall afflict them' [Gen. 15:13]—God did fulfill for my children; but the other promise—'Afterward they shall come out with great substance' [Gen. 15:14]—He did not fulfill for them." The Israelites replied to Moses, "If only we ourselves could get out!" Their reply may be illustrated by the story of a man in prison who was told: Tomorrow you will be released from prison and be given plenty of money. The man replied: Please, just let me go free today, and I will ask for nothing more.[4]

69. "And he called for Moses and Aaron by night" (Exod. 12:31). Pharaoh went around to all the doorways of his servants, rousing each one of them out of his home, then walked with his servants into every street, asking, "Where is Moses? Where does he live?" Now, the Israelite children made fun of him, asking him, "Pharaoh, where are you going?" He replied, "I am looking for Moses." They would say, "He lives here. No, he lives here," thus making sport of him, until finally Pharaoh succeeded in locating Moses and said to him, "Rise up, get you forth from among my people." Moses replied, "Are we thieves, that you expect us to get out during the dark of night? Thus has the Holy One commanded us: 'None of you shall go out of the door of his house until the morning' [Exod. 12:22]—we will not go out except with heads held high, in the sight of all Egypt."[5]

The Spoils of Egypt

70. R. Judah said in the name of Samuel: Joseph gathered and brought to Egypt all the silver and gold in the world, as is said, "Joseph gathered up all the silver that was found in the land of Egypt [and in the land of Canaan]" (Gen. 47:14). Here we are told only concerning the treasures of Egypt [and of Canaan]. But how do we know that he also gathered the treasures of other countries? Because Scripture says, "And all the countries came into Egypt . . . to buy corn" (Gen. 41:57). When the Israelites left Egypt, they brought the silver and gold out with them, as is said, "And they emptied Egypt" (Exod. 12:36), turning it, according to R. Assi, into a fort empty of provisions; according to R. Simeon ben Lakish, into a pond empty of fish.[6] The treasure remained [in the Land of Israel] until the time of Rehoboam, son of Solomon, when Shishak, king of Egypt, came up against Jerusalem and took it from Rehoboam, as is said, "Shishak . . . took away the treasures of the house of the Lord, and the treasures of the king's house" (1 Kings 14:26). Then Zerah, king of Ethiopia, took it from Shishak. Asa came, took it from Zerah, king of Ethiopia, and sent it to Hadadrimmon the son of Tabrimmon. Then came the Ammonites and took it from Hadadrimmon the son of Tabrimmon. Next Jehoshaphat came and took the treasure back from the Ammonites.[7] It remained in the Land until the time of Ahaz, when Sennacherib came and took it from Ahaz. Then came Hezekiah, who took it from Sennacherib, and it remained in the Land until Zedekiah, when the Chaldeans came and took it from Zedekiah. Then came the Persians, who took it from the Chaldeans; the Greeks, who took it from the Persians; the Romans, who took it from the Greeks. And the treasure is still in Rome.[8]

Joseph's Coffin

71. "And Moses took the bones of Joseph with him" (Exod. 13:19). The sages taught: Pause and consider how beloved were commandments to Moses our teacher—while Israel, all of them, were occupied with spoils, he was occupied with performing commandments.

But how did Moses know where Joseph was buried? It is said: Serah daughter of Asher, who was of Joseph's generation, was still living. Moses went to her and asked, "Do you know where Joseph is buried?" She replied, "The Egyptians made a metal coffin for him, which they sank into the Nile, in order that its waters might be blessed thereby. Then, too, the magicians and the sorcerers told Pharaoh, 'Do you wish that this people should never leave

---

1. Just as his firstborn was killed in Egypt, so was he drowned in the Red Sea.
2. "There is no explicit statement in Exodus that Pharaoh was actually drowned, hence the quotation from Psalms" (Exod. R., Soncino, p. 243, n. 3).
3. Exod. R. 20:1.
4. B. Ber 9a–b.
5. Tanhuma B, Bo, §19.
6. Both comments take va-yenatzelu to mean "they emptied." But R. Assi, regarding the lamed as interchangeable with dalet, also takes the verb to be a form of tzvd, hence metzudah ("fort"), while R. Simeon relates the verb to metzulah ("deep," "pond"). In either case, the despoiling amounted to "emptying."
7. See 2 Chron. 20.
8. B. Pes 119a and En Yaakov, ad loc.

Egypt? If they do not find the bones of Joseph, they will never be able to leave.' "

Then Moses went to the bank of the Nile and called out, saying: Joseph, Joseph, the time in which the Holy One swore to redeem Israel has come, as has the time of the oath you had Israel swear.[1] Give honor to the Lord, God of Israel. The Presence is waiting for you. Israel are waiting for you. If you show yourself, well and good. If not, we shall be released from the oath you made our forebears swear. Immediately, Joseph's coffin began bubbling upward, rising out of the depths as though no heavier than a reed, and Moses took it.

R. Nathan said: Joseph was buried in the royal sepulchers. Moses went and stood by these sepulchers, saying: Joseph, the time in which the Holy One swore to redeem Israel has come, as has the time for the oath you had Israel swear. If you show yourself, well and good. If not, we shall be released from the oath you made our forebears swear. At that, Joseph's coffin began to shake. Moses took it and carried it with him.

During all the years that Israel were in the wilderness, the arklike coffin of Joseph and the Ark of the Presence moved side by side. When passersby asked, "What is the significance of these two arks?" they were told, "This one is the coffin of a mortal, and that one is the Ark of the Presence." "But is it proper that a corpse move side by side with the Presence?" Israel replied, "The corpse in this ark fulfilled all that is written in that Ark."[2]

72. "The bones of Joseph" (Exod. 13:19). The significance of taking the bones back to Canaan may be understood by the parable of thieves who entered a wine cellar, took a flask of wine, and drank it. The owner of the cellar looked in on them and said, "I hope you found the wine satisfying—fragrant and sweet. But now that you have drunk the wine, put the flask back in its place!" So did the Holy One say to the tribe fathers, "You sold Joseph—now return his bones to their rightful place."[3]

The Exodus from Egypt

73. The children of Israel were redeemed from Egypt because of four meritorious acts: they did not change their names, they did not change their language, they did not reveal their secrets,[4] and they did not abandon circumcision.[5]

74. "God . . . bringeth out the prisoners ba-kosharot"[6] (Ps. 68:7). R. Akiva said: He brought Israel out during a month when it was most suitable to go out—not in Tammuz, because of the heat, nor in Tevet, because of the cold, but in Nisan, when it is most suitable to set out on a journey, the sun being not too oppressive nor the cold too severe. And should you say, Why not Tishri?—that month begins the rainy season.[7]

75. "Egypt was glad when they departed" (Ps. 105:38). R. Berekhiah told the parable of a fat man riding an ass. The ass kept wondering: When will this fellow get off me? And the man kept wondering: When can I get off this ass? When he did get off, the man was glad and the ass was glad. And we do not know which was the more glad [but you might say that the ass was the more glad]. So with Israel in Egypt. As the plagues came down on the Egyptians, the Egyptians kept wondering: When will Israel leave Egypt? and the Israelites too kept wondering when the Holy One was going to redeem them. After they went forth and were redeemed, the former were glad and the latter were glad. But we did not know which was the more glad until David came and said, "Egypt was glad when they departed." [Then we knew that the Egyptians were the more glad.][8]

76. "And it came to pass (va-yehi) when Pharaoh had let the people go" (Exod. 13:17). R. Levi told the parable of a man who had a field that contained a sprawling heap of barren rocks; he sold it for a trifle. The purchaser removed the heap and found running water underneath. He planted rows and rows of vines in the field, planted all kinds of spices in it, planted pomegranates in it—for all of these he put up stakes. He also built a tower in it,[9] wherein he placed a keeper. Whoever passed by the field praised it. When the one who sold the field passed by and saw that it was full of all kinds of good things, he said: Woe is me (oy li) that I gave up such a field! Woe is me (oy li) that I let such a wonderful field out of my hand!

Even so, Israel in Egypt were no more than a heap of barren rocks. But after they left Egypt, they became like a flourishing orchard of pomegranates. At whatever time people saw Israel, they praised them. When Pharaoh perceived them so transformed, he raised his voice in grief: Woe to (oy lo) that man—me—who let go of such a people. "And there was (va-yehi) woe after Pharaoh had let the people go.[10]

77. It is taught in the school of R. Ishmael: To what may Israel when leaving Egypt be compared? To a dove who fled from a hawk and was about to enter a cleft in a rock when she came upon a serpent nesting there. If she enters the cleft, the serpent will hiss at her threateningly. If she turns back, the hawk stands outside ready to seize her. What did the dove do? She began to cry and beat her wings, so that the owner of the cote would come and deliver

---

1. Gen. 50:25.
2. B. Sot 13a; Mek, Be-shallah, Va-yehi, 1; Deut. R. 11:7; Tanhuma, Be-shallah, §2.
3. Gen. R. 85:3.
4. At the beginning Moses told Israel in secrecy that they would leave with many of Egypt's possessions (Exod. 3:21–22). No Israelite betrayed this secret.
5. MTeh 114:4; TdE, p. 123.
6. JV: "into prosperity." But ba-kosharot may be taken to be a form of kosher ("suitable").
7. Num. R. 3:6.
8. MTeh 105:11.
9. Symbolic of the Temple.
10. Exod. R. 20:5; Mek, Be-shallah, Va-yehi, 2 (La 1:197–98). The story is based on the phonetic similarity in Hebrew of "woe is me (to him)" and "and there was."

her. Israel at the Red Sea were in a similar plight. They could not go down into the sea, because the sea had not yet split. Nor could they go back, because Pharaoh had already drawn near. What did they do? "They were sore afraid; and the children of Israel cried out unto the Lord" (Exod. 14:10). At once, "the Lord delivered Israel that day" (Exod. 14:30).[1]

78. "And the heart of Pharaoh and of his servants was turned," etc. (Exod. 14:5). Only a little while before, "Pharaoh's servants said unto him: 'How long shall this man [Moses] be a snare unto us? Let the men go' " (Exod. 10:7). But now, "the heart of Pharaoh and of his servants was turned, and they said: 'What is this we have done?' " (Exod. 14:5). [Distraught by what had happened], they said: If we had been plagued and not let them go, it would have been enough. Or if we had not been plagued and let them go, and they had not taken our treasures, it would have been enough. As it is, we were plagued, we let them go, and our treasures have been taken! By what parable may the Egyptians' distress be illustrated? By that of a man who said to his slave, "Get me a fish from the market." The slave went and brought him a foul-smelling fish. The man said, "I order you to eat the fish, or receive one hundred lashes, or pay me one hundred maneh." The slave replied, "I will eat the fish." He began to eat, but before he could finish it, he said, "I will take the lashes." After receiving sixty lashes, he could take no more and cried out, "I will pay the hundred maneh." The result: He ate [most of] the fish, received [most of] the lashes, and still paid the hundred maneh. The same thing happened to the Egyptians: They were plagued, they let Israel go, and their treasures were taken.[2]

79. [R. Nehemian said that Ezekiel reproached those prophets in Israel who "have not gone up into the breaches, nor repaired the walls for the House of Israel, to stand in the battle, in the day of the Lord" (Ezek. 13:5). But be it noted], Moses could say "unto the people: 'Fear ye not' " (Exod. 14:13). For to whom may Moses our teacher be compared? To a faithful shepherd the entire fence of whose sheepfold collapsed as it was growing dark. He got busy and succeeded in repairing three of its sides. But a breach remained on the fourth side; and since there was no more daylight left to complete the repair, he himself stood in the breach. When a lion came, he confronted him. When a wolf came, he confronted him.[3]

80. "The angel of God, who had been going ahead of the Israelite host, now moved and followed behind them" (Exod. 14:19). To understand what the angel of God did, consider the parable of a man walking on the road and making his son walk in front of him. When brigands attempting to capture the son came up in front, the father pulled his son from in front of him and put him behind. When a wolf came up behind, the father pulled his son from behind and put him in front. When brigands came up in front while a wolf came up behind, he took the son into his arms. When the son began to suffer from the heat, the father spread his cloak over him. When he was hungry, he fed him; when he was thirsty, he gave him to drink. So too did the Holy One: When the sea was in front of Israel and the Egyptians behind, He took them into His arms—"taking them upon His arms" (Hos. 11:3). When they began to suffer from the sun, He spread His garment over them, as is said, "He spread a cloud for a screen" (Ps. 105:39). When they were hungry, He fed them: "Behold, I will cause to rain bread from heaven for you" (Exod. 16:4). When they were thirsty, He gave them water to drink: "He brought forth streams from a rock" (Ps. 78:16).[4]

81. "And it came between the camp of Egypt and the camp of Israel; and there was the cloud [of fire] and the darkness" (Exod. 14:20)—the cloud [of fire] upon Israel and the darkness upon the Egyptians. The Egyptians, being placed in the dark, could see the Israelites in the light and shot arrows and catapulted stones at them. But the cloud and the angel shielded the Israelites.

Likewise, Scripture says, "How I bore you on eagles' wings" (Exod. 19:4). How is the eagle different from all other birds? All other birds carry their young between their feet, because they are afraid of birds flying above them. But the eagle is afraid only of man, who might shoot an arrow at him. [Therefore the eagle carries his young upon his wings], saying, "I would rather have the arrow lodge in me than in my young."[5]

The Splitting of the Red Sea and the Plunder at the Sea

82. It is taught that R. Meir said: When the Israelites stood at the Red Sea, the tribes were vying with one another, one saying, "I will be first to go down into the sea," and the other saying, "I will be first to go down into the sea." As they stood there wrangling, the tribe of Benjamin sprang forward and went down first into the sea. At that, the princes of Judah began hurling stones at them. For this reason, righteous Benjamin won the privilege of becoming host for the Almighty [in the Holy of Holies], as is said, "He dwelleth between his shoulders" (Deut. 33:12).[6] R. Judah said to R. Meir: That is not quite the way it happened. In fact, one tribe said, "I will not be the first to go into the sea"; and another tribe also said, "I will not be the first to go into the sea." While they were standing there deliberating, Nahshon the son of Amminadab [of the tribe of Judah] sprang forward and was the first to go down into the sea. Because it was Nahshon who

1. Song R. 2:14, §2; Mek, Be-shallah, Va-yehi, 3 (La 1:211).
2. Mek, Be-shallah, Va-yehi, 2 (La 1:195).
3. Ruth R., proem 5.
4. Mek, Be-shallah, Va-yehi, 5 (La 1:224–25); Tanhuma, Be-shallah, §10.
5. Mek, Be-shallah, Va-yehi, 5 (La 1:226–27); Mek, Yitro, Ba-hodesh, 2 (La 2:202–3); Yalkut, Yitro, §276.
6. That is, the Presence, the Holy of Holies, is to be in the territory of Benjamin. The phrase "between his shoulders" may perhaps have been construed: "Because of the blows sustained by his shoulders from the stones thrown at him."

sprang forward, Judah was to obtain [a site that was sacred, as well as] royal dominion in Israel, as is said, "Judah became His sanctuary, Israel his dominion" (Ps. 114:2).[1] For what reason, accordingly, did Judah come to have God's sanctuary [in his territory] and obtain dominion over Israel? Because "the sea saw [him] and fled" (Ps. 114:3).[2]

In the meantime, Moses was standing and praying at greath length. So the Holy One said to him, "My beloved are on the verge of drowning in the sea, and you spin out lengthy prayers before Me." Moses spoke up to God, "But Master of the universe, what else can I do?" God replied, "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward. And lift up thy rod," etc. (Exod. 14:15ff.).

83. "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward" (Exod. 14:15). According to R. Eliezer, the Holy One said to Moses: There is a time to be brief and a time to be lengthy. My children are in great distress, the sea is enclosing them, the enemy is in pursuit, and you stand here praying away! "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward."[3]

84. "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward" (Exod. 14:15). R. Hama bar Hanina said in his father's name: God's command to Moses may be explained by the parable of a shepherd who was leading his sheep across a river when a wolf came up to attack the sheep. What did this experienced shepherd do? He took a large he-goat and threw it to the wolf, saying, "Let him wrestle with this one until we cross the river, and then I will return to recover it."

So, too, when Israel departed from Egypt, the angel Samael arose to accuse them, saying to the Holy One: Master of the universe, until now they have been worshiping idols—would You split the sea for such as these? What did the Holy One do? He turned Job over to him; even though Job was one of Pharaoh's counselors,[4] yet "he was wholehearted and upright" (Job. 1:1). And God said to Samael, "Behold, he is in thy hands" (Job 2:6).[5] The Holy One reckoned: While Samael is busy with Job, Israel will go down into the sea and come up, and then I will save Job. Then, the Holy One said to Moses: Moses, I turned over Job to Satan. Now is the time for you to "speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward."[6]

85. "And the children of Israel went into the midst of the sea upon the dry ground" (Exod. 14:22). [How is it possible?] If they went into the sea, why does it say, "Upon the dry ground"? And if they went "upon the dry ground," then why does it say, "Into the midst of the sea"? Hence you learn that the sea was not split for them until they stepped into it, indeed until the waters reached up to their very noses.[7] Only then did the passage become dry land.

In a discourse, R. Nehorai said: When an Israelite woman was walking through the sea, leading her son by the hand, and he began to weep, she had merely to reach out her hand, pluck an apple or a pomegranate from the sea, and give it to him, for "He led them through the depths as [He was to do later] through the wilderness" (Ps. 106:9)—as they were to lack nothing in the wilderness, so also they lacked nothing in the depths.[8]

86. When the Holy One was about to drown the Egyptians in the sea, Uzza, heavenly prince of Egypt,[9] rose up and prostrated himself before the Holy One, saying: Master of the universe, You created the world by the measure of mercy. Why then do You wish to drown my children? The Holy One gathered the entire heavenly household and said to them: You be the judge between Me and Uzza prince of Egypt. At that, the heavenly princes of the other nations began to speak up in behalf of Egypt. When Michael[10] perceived this, he gave the sign to Gabriel, who in one swoop darted down to Egypt, where he pulled out a brick with its clay enclosing a [dead] infant who had been immured alive in the structure. He then came back, stood before the Holy One, and said: Master of the universe, thus did the Egyptians enslave Your children. Whereupon the Holy One sat in judgment over the Egyptians in accord with the measure of justice and drowned them in the sea.

In that instant the ministering angels wished to utter song before the Holy One, but He rebuked them, saying, "The works of My hands are drowning in the sea, and you would utter song in My presence!"[11]

87. The verse "The horse together with his rider hath He thrown into the sea" (Exod. 15:1) implies that the horse was tied to the rider even as the rider was tied to the horse, and that together they were thrown into the air, then down into the deep, and were not separated one from the other.[12]

88. "The horse and his rider hath He thrown (ramah) into the sea" (Exod. 15:1). The waves of the sea appeared in the form of mares; the Egyptians rode lusty stallions, which kept running after the apparitions of the mares until they were thrown into the sea to drown. When an Egyptian would say to his stallion, "Yesterday I had to pull you to

---

1. Except for Benjamin's tiny stretch of land upon which the Holy of Holies stood, the site where the Temple was erected, as well as the rest of the land, belonged to and was ruled by descendants of the tribe of Judah.
2. For the sake of clarity, the words "Because it was Nahshon . . . and fled (Ps. 114:3)" are transposed from below to the end of this paragraph. B. Sot 36b–37a; Mek, Be-shallah, Va-yehi, 6 (La 1:233–35).
3. Exod. R. 21:8.
4. That he was Pharaoh's counselor is mentioned as justification for God's action. Otherwise, it would have been unjust to make Job suffer in order to save Israel. Etz Yosef ((Exod. R., Soncino, p. 269, n. 1).
5. "Since Job was an upright man, Samael would have a hard task to triumph over him, just as the wolf would have with the he-goat in the parable" (Exod. R., Soncino, p. 269, n. 2).
6. Exod. R. 21:8.
7. As a way of testing their faith.
8. Hence, though they "went into the midst of the sea," it was as though they were "upon the dry ground," finding everything there. Exod. R. 21:10.
9. Each nation has its own heavenly prince or guardian angel.
10. Israel's heavenly prince.
11. Midrash Avkir; B. Sanh 39b.
12. Mek, Be-shallah, Shirata, 2.

the Nile to water you, and you were reluctant to follow me; but now you are about to sink me in the sea," the lusty stallion replied, "[I can't help myself.] Look what (re'eh mah) is in the sea."[1]

89. R. Yose the Galilean expounded: When Israel came out of the sea, they gazed upward to chant their song. But how were all of them—even the infant lying upon his mother's knees and the suckling feeding at his mother's breast—able to do so? When they saw the Presence, the infant raised his neck, the suckling let go of his mother's nipple, and all said, "This is my God, and I will glorify Him" (Exod. 15:2).

It is taught that, according to R. Meir, even fetuses in their mothers' wombs chanted the song. But were they [being in the womb] able to see [the Presence]? Yes, said R. Tanhum, the wombs became as transparent as glass, and so even the fetuses were able to see the Presence.[2]

90. "Then sang Moses and the children of Israel" (Exod. 15:1). R. Avin the Levite said: When Israel stood up to chant the song at the sea, Moses did not let them chant it by themselves, but like a teacher who recites a portion in Scripture with a child when he is young, so did Moses recite it with Israel—"then sang Moses and the children of Israel," they being like a child who repeats after his teacher. But after forty years [in the wilderness], Israel grew up and on their own proceeded to chant the Song of the Well, as is said, "Then sang Israel" (Num. 21:17).[3]

91. R. Huna said: Israel of that generation, having little faith, said: Even as we are coming up on the one side, so the Egyptians are probably coming up on the other side. So the Holy One ordered the prince of the sea, "Spew forth the Egyptians onto dry land." "But," the prince of the sea dared reply, "Master of the universe, is there any other servant whose master first gives him a gift and then takes it back from him?" "I will give you," God replied, "one and a half times their number." Again the prince of the sea spoke up: "Master of the universe, dare any servant claim a debt from his master?"[4] God said, "Let the brook of Kishon be surety for Me." At once the sea spewed forth the Egyptians, casting them onto dry land, and Israel came and saw them, as is said, "Israel saw the Egyptians dead upon the seashore" (Exod. 14:30).

What is alluded to in "One and a half times their number"? [The following]: Of Pharaoh it is written, "He took six hundred chosen chariots" (Exod. 14:7); but of Sisera it is written that he "gathered . . . nine hundred chariots of iron" (Judg. 4:13). When Sisera came to fight Israel, he advanced against them with iron staves. The Holy One brought forth the stars out of their orbits against Sisera's men, and as the stars of heaven descended upon them, the iron staves they held began heating up, and Sisera's men had to go down to cool themselves in the brook of Kishon. Then the Holy One said to the brook of Kishon, "Go and fulfill the pledge given in your name." At once the brook swept them out and cast them into the sea, as is said, "The brook Kishon swept them away, that ancient brook" (Judg. 5:21). What is meant by "That ancient brook"? The brook that was declared surety in ancient times.

In that instant the fish in the sea opened their mouths and exclaimed, "The faithfulness of the Lord endureth forever" (Ps. 117:2).[5]

92. "Israel saw the Egyptians dead" (Exod. 14:30). What did the children of Israel do to them? Each man in Israel took his dog, went down, and, placing his foot upon an Egyptian's neck, said to his dog, "Eat of this hand, which used me as a slave. Eat of these bowels, which had no mercy on me."[6]

93. "And Moses made Israel move on from the Red Sea" (Exod. 15:22). He had them move against their will, for they were not ready to leave the shore. Why not? Because when Israel left Egypt, Pharaoh, together with all those hosts, set out to pursue them. What else did he do? As he set out in pursuit of Israel with his chariots and horsemen, he adorned all the horses with precious stones and pearls. When they reached the sea and the Holy One drowned them, all these precious stones and pearls floated on the surface and were cast on shore, so that every day Israelites would come down and gather them. That is why they did not wish to move from there. Moses, perceiving this, said, "Do you think that the sea will continue to bring up precious stones and pearls for you every day?" So, against their will, Moses had them move on.[7]

---

1. Exod. R. 23:14; Song R. 1:9, §6.
2. B. Sot 30b–31a; P. Sot 5:6, 20c.
3. Yalkut, Hukkat, §263.
4. So what chance have I to get back the bodies I am now forced to give up?
5. B. Pes 118b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
6. Mteh 22:1.
7. Tanhuma B, Be-shallah, §16.

CHAPTER FIVE

ISRAEL IN THE WILDERNESS

From Egypt into the Wilderness

1. "As a lily among thorns, so is My love among the maidens" (Song 2:2). R. Eliezer applied the verse to the deliverance from Egypt: Just as a lily placed among thorns is difficult for its owner to pluck, so was the deliverance of Israel difficult for the Holy One, as is said, "Hath God ever assayed to go and take Him a nation from the midst of another nation?" (Deut. 4:34).

[No, Israel was not like a lily among thorns], R. Joshua said in the name of R. Hanan: Scripture does not say here, "A nation from the midst of a people," or, "A people from the midst of a nation," but, "A nation from the midst of a nation," for these were uncircumcised even as the others were uncircumcised, these let their forelocks grow[1] even as the others let their forelocks grow, these wore garments made of fibers of diverse seed even as the others wore garments made of fibers of diverse seed. Accordingly, God's measure of justice alone would not have demanded Israel's deliverance from Egypt.[2]

2. "Thou didst pluck up a vine out of Egypt" (Ps. 80:9). R. Tanhuma bar Abba asked: "Why is Israel compared to a vine? Consider what owners of a vine, seeking to improve it, do. They pluck it from its place and replant it elsewhere, and there it flourishes. So, too, when the Holy One sought to make Israel known throughout the world, what did He do? He plucked them out of Egypt and brought them into the wilderness, and there they began to thrive; there they received the Torah and their name went forth throughout the world.[3]

The Manna

3. "Moses said: 'It is the Lord who will give you flesh to eat in the evening, and bread in the morning to the full' " (Exod. 16:18).[4] R. Aha bar Jacob said: At first Israel were like hens randomly pecking away in a heap of refuse, until Moses came and fixed definite mealtimes for them.[5]

4. The disciples of R. Simeon ben Yohai asked him: Why did the manna not come down for Israel just once a year? He replied: Let me answer you with the parable of a mortal king who had a son. When the king provided him with his sustenance once a year, the son visited his father only once a year. When the father began to provide him with his sustenance daily, the son had to call on his father every day. So it was with Israel. If an Israelite had, say, four or five children, he would worry, saying: Perhaps the manna will not come down tomorrow, and all my children will die of hunger. And so [because the manna was coming down daily] the Israelites were compelled to direct their hearts to their Father in heaven [every day].

Another reason [for daily manna]: They were able to eat it while it was still warm.

Still another reason [for daily manna]: To lighten the burdens that had to be carried during the journey.[6]

5. Manna is described in Scripture as "bread," as "honey," and as "oil." How are the differing descriptions to be reconciled? Young men tasted in it the taste of bread, old people the taste of honey, and infants the taste of oil.[7]

6. It is written, "When the dew fell in the camp in the night, the manna fell upon it" (Num. 11:9); it is also written, "The people shall go out and gather," etc. (Exod. 16:4); and it is also written, "The people went about to and fro to gather it" (Num. 11:8). How are the three statements to be reconciled? For the righteous, it came right down to the doors of their tents; ordinary people had to go out and gather it; but the wicked had to go about to and fro to gather it.

Manna is also described as "bread" (Exod. 16:4) and as "unbaked dough" (Num. 11:8), and Scripture also says, "They ground it" (ibid.). How reconcile the differing descriptions? Well, the righteous received it as [baked] bread, ordinary Israelites as unbaked dough, and the wicked as grain yet to be ground in a hand mill.[8]

7. Our rabbis taught: "Each [Israelite] ate the bread of the mighty" (abbirim) (Ps. 78:25), the same kind of bread, so said R. Akiva, as [mighty] ministering angels eat. When these words were reported to R. Ishmael, he said: Go and say to Akiva: Akiva, you are mistaken. Do ministering angels really eat bread? Did not Moses [after being in heaven] say, "I ate no bread" (Deut. 9:18)? How then should one interpret "bread of abbirim"? Read rather "bread of evarim," bread that was directly absorbed by the two hundred and forty-eight parts (evarim) of the body.[9]

---

1. Deemed an act of idolatry.
2. God's mercy had to be joined to His justice. Song R. 2:2, §2.
3. Exod. R. 44:1.
4. Manna in the morning and quails in the evening.
5. B. Yoma 75b.
6. B. Yoma 76a.
7. Since bread was difficult for old people and infants to chew. Exod. R. 25:3.
8. B. Yoma 75a.
9. Hence, there was no waste matter. B. Yoma 75b and En Yaakov, ad loc.

8. "And the taste of it was the taste of a cake (leshad) baked with oil" (Num. 11:8) R. Abbahu said: [Read not leshad, "cake," but shad, "breast"].[1] Hence, just as an infant, whenever he touches the breast, finds many flavors in it, so it was with manna. Whenever Israel ate it, they found many flavors in it.

Some read leshad as le-shed, "of a demon"—even as the demon changes himself into many shapes, so manna changed into many flavors.[2]

9. "Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies" (Ps. 23:5). Issi ben Judah said: "The manna that came down for Israel piled up to such a height that all kings of the east and the west could see it.[3]

10. "And as the sun waxed hot, it melted" (Exod. 16:21). When the sun shone upon the manna, it began to melt and formed rivulets which flowed into the Great Sea. Harts, gazelles, roebuck, and all kinds of other animals would come and drink from the rivulets. The nations of the world would then hunt these animals, eat them, and, tasting in them the taste of the manna that came down for Israel, say, "Blessed is the people who have it so" (Ps. 144:15).[4]

11. It is taught that R. Yose said: Just as a prophet can tell Israel what might be hidden in holes and clefts, so would the manna reveal to Israel what was hidden in holes and clefts. How so? When two men came before Moses with a lawsuit, one saying, "You stole my slave," the other saying, "You sold it to me," Moses would say to both of them: Judgment will be pronounced tomorrow.[5] The next day, if the slave's measure of manna was found in the house of the claimant, it was clear that the respondent had stolen him; if it was found in the house of the respondent, it was clear that the claimant had sold the slave to him.[6]

12. "He subjected thee to the hardship of hunger when He gave thee manna to eat" (Deut. 8:3). R. Hananiah and R. Jonathan asked Menahem the Baker: Can this verse possibly intimate that the manna the Holy One gave to Israel was food that left them hungry? How did Menahem answer them? He set before his questioners two cucumbers, one whole and the other crushed, and asked, "How much is the whole one worth?" "Two silver zuz." "And how much the crushed one?" "One silver zuz." "But is not the crushed cucumber just as large as the whole one?" asked Menahem, and then, answering his own question, said, "Even as a man derives enjoyment from the taste of food, so he derives enjoyment from the appearance of food.[7]

1. Interpolated by Bah.
2. B. Yoma 75a.
3. B. Yoma 76a.
4. Mek, Be-shallah, Va-yassa, 5 (La 2:117).
5. See Jer. 21:12.
6. B. Yoma 75a.
7. Though the manna had all kinds of flavors, it always looked the same, and so those who ate it did not have the pleasure of seeing the different foods that they tasted in the manna. Eccles. R. 5:10, §1. See also above, chap. 3, §63.

The Well

13. R. Yohanan said: The well used to water all kinds of garden herbs, all kinds of seeds for planting, and all varieties of trees. You can see for yourself that it was so, for after Miriam died and the well stopped watering plants, the people said, "This is no longer a place of seed, of figs, or of vines" (Num. 20:5).[8]

14. The well that was with Israel in the wilderness had extraordinary properties. It resembled a rock the size of a beehive, from which, as out of a narrow-necked jug,[9] water coming out in a trickle shot high up into the air like a geyser. The well rolled up mountains with Israel and went down into valleys with them. Indeed, wherever Israel encamped, the well rested close by on an elevated spot opposite the entrance to the Tent of Meeting. The princes of Israel would come and walk around the well with their staves as they chanted the song "Spring up, O well, sing ye unto it" (Num. 21:17). At that, the waters welled up, rising high like a lofty pillar; and each of the princes, digging [into the ground] with his staff, channeled water toward his tribe and toward his family, as is said:

> The well, which the princes dug,
> Which the nobles of the people delved,
> With maces, with their own staffs
> (Num. 21:18).

Thus the well flowed in all directions throughout Israel's camp, watering all the surrounding wasteland. It branched out into streams so large that Israelites would seat themselves in small boats and go visiting one another. [There was no need to row], for a man who went upstream on the camp's right side would [as the current reversed itself][10] return downstream on the right side; and so it was with the man who set out on the camp's left side. Even the overflow of drinking water spilled on the ground became a wide river, which coursed toward the Great Sea and, upon its return, brought back from there all the things in the world that were desirable.[11]

Clouds of Glory

15. "And the Lord went before them by day in a pillar of cloud to guide them," etc. (Exod. 13:21). How many clouds of glory encompassed Israel in the wilderness? Seven clouds: one at each of the four sides; one above them; one beneath them; and the one that advanced before

8. Song R. 4:12, §3.
9. The Hebrew pakh is a narrow-necked clay vessel, known in Greek as an oinochoe.
10. According to popular belief, through underground tunnels. So Rashi and Targum on Eccles. 1:7.
11. Tos Suk 3:11–13; Num. R. 1:2.

them, raised every lowland, lowered each highland, and thus turned them all into level ground. As that cloud advanced, it also killed snakes and scorpions, and swept and sprinkled the road before them.[1]

Amalek's War

16. "Is the Lord among us, or not? Then came Amalek" (Exod. 17:7–8). R. Levi said: What parable applies here to Israel? The parable of a child who was perched on his father's shoulders [in the marketplace]. Each time the child saw a desirable object, he said to his father, "Buy it for me," and his father bought it for him the first time, the second time, and the third time. While they were walking, the child saw his father's friend and asked him, "Have you seen my daddy?" The father spoke sharply to his son, "Silly boy, you are riding astride my shoulder, whatever you want I buy for you, and yet you ask this man, 'Have you seen my daddy?' " What did the father do then? He dropped him from his shoulder, and a dog came by and bit the son.

So, too, as soon as Israel went out of Egypt, seven clouds of the Holy One's glory encompassed them. They asked for manna, and the Holy One sent it down for them; for quail, and He brought it to them. After He had given them all that they wanted, they began to have doubts, demanding to know, "Is the Lord among us, or not?" (Exod. 17:7). The Holy One said to them: [You doubt My Presence in your midst?]. As you live, I shall make you aware of it. Look, here comes a dog to bite you! And who was the dog? Amalek, for the very next verse says, "Then came Amalek" (Exod. 17:8).[2]

17. R. Levi said in the name of R. Simeon ben Halafta; With what may Amalek be compared? With a fly greedy to get at an open wound. Just so, Amalek, the dog, was panting to get at Israel.[3]

18. "And it came to pass, when Moses held up his hand, that Israel prevailed" (Exod. 17:11). But did the hands of Moses actually wage war or win victories? Not actually; what the text means is that so long as Israel turned their thoughts upward and submitted their hearts to their Father in heaven, they prevailed. Otherwise, they fell.[4]

19. "But Moses' hands were heavy; and they took a stone, and put it under him, and he sat thereon" (Exod. 17:12). Did Moses have no cushion or bolster to sit on? Of course, but Moses said: When Israel are deep in distress, I must be in it with them.[5]

20. "Remember what Amalek did unto thee . . . how he cooled thee"[6] (Deut. 25:17–18)—made you appear lukewarm before other nations. What Amalek did may be understood by the parable of a pool of scalding water into which no living creature dared to descend. Then a worthless fellow came along and jumped right into the pool, so that even though he was scalded, he made it appear lukewarm in the eyes of others. So, too, when Israel went out of Egypt, and the sea was split before them and the Egyptians drowned in it, fear of them fell upon all the nations of the earth, as is said, "Then were the chiefs of Edom affrighted. . . . Terror and dread falleth upon them," etc. (Exod. 15:15–16). But after Amalek came and waged war against Israel, though he got the scalding he deserved from them, still he made Israel appear lukewarm in battle in the eyes of the nations of the earth.[7]

21. "Remember what Amalek did unto thee by the way, as ye came forth out of Egypt" (Deut. 25:17). R. Levi said: Like a highwayman, he came upon you from the wayside. In this connection, the parable is told of a king who had a vineyard, which he enclosed with a fence and in which he put a dog who was a vicious biter. The king said: If anyone comes and breaches the fence, the dog will bite him. Some days later, the king's own son came and breached the fence, and the dog bit him. Afterward, whenever the king wished to remind his son of his sin in breaching the vineyard fence, he would ask him, "Do you remember how the dog bit you?" So, too, whenever the Holy One wished to remind Israel of their sin at Rephidim in demanding to know, "Is the Lord among us, or not?" (Exod. 17:7), He would say to them, "Remember what Amalek did unto thee" (Deut. 25:17).[8]

22. "Amalek dwelleth in a land south [of the Land of Israel]" (Num. 13:29). Why then did the scouts begin their account of the peoples living in the Land with a reference to Amalek [who did not live in it? It was to remind Israel of the punishment that might once more befall them]. What parable illustrates the spies' mention of Amalek? The one of a child who, having misbehaved, was beaten with a strap. Whenever people wanted to intimidate him, they reminded him of the strap with which he was beaten. Even so, [the scouts' mention of] Amalek, Israel's painful strap, [was to serve as a reminder and a warning].[9]

23. "The hand of Amalek is against the t'ron' of the Lor' "[10] (Exod. 17:16). R. Levi said in the name of R. Hama bar Hanina: The Name of God will not be complete and the throne of the Lord will not be whole as long as Amalek's seed remains in the world. Only after

---

1. Mek, Be-shallah, Va-yehi, §1; Num. R. 1:1, §2.
2. Tanhuma B, Yitro, §4; Exod. R. 26:2; PRKM, p. 33 (PRKS, p. 40).
3. Tanhuma B, Ki Tetze, §12; PRKM 3:8 (PRKS, p. 51).
4. B. RH 29a.
5. B. Ta 11a.
6. JV: "how he met thee." But krk [korkha] ("how he met thee") may be associated with the stem kr [kar] ("cold").
7. Tanhuma, Ki Tetze, §9; Tanhuma B, Ki Tetze, §13; PRKM 3:10 (PRKS, p. 52).
8. Tanhuma, Ki Tetze, §9; Tanhuma B, Ki Tetze, §12; PRKM 3:9 (PRKS, p. 51).
9. Tanhuma B, Shelah, §18; Num. R. 16:18.
10. The defective spelling of the words "throne" and "Lord" is an attempt to reproduce in English the defective spelling of the Hebrew: the words, which should be written kisse YHVH, are written kes Yah.

the seed of Amalek is blotted out from the world will the throne of the Lord be whole and the Name of God complete.[1]

24. "Write this for a memorial in the book" (Exod. 17:14). The sages of yore say: Throughout all generations there obtains the rule that the scourge with which Israel is smitten will in the end itself be smitten. All mankind should learn proper conduct from what happened to Amalek, who came to harm Israel, and the Holy One erased him from life in this world as well as from life in the world-to-come, as is said, "I will utterly blot out" (ibid.). Likewise, every nation and every kingdom that set out to harm Israel God always judges according to this rule.[2]

The Giving of Torah

25. R. Isaac said: Israel were worthy of receiving the Torah immediately upon leaving Egypt. But the Holy One said: Because of their servitude in clay and bricks, My children's look of good health has not yet come back, and therefore they cannot receive the Torah at once. God's delay in giving the Torah may be illustrated by the parable of a king's son who had just got up from his sickbed. His tutor said: Let your son go back to school. The king replied: My son's look of good health has not yet come back, yet you say, "Let him go back to school!" Let my son be indulged for two or three months with good food and drink, so that he may fully recover—then he can go back to school. Likewise, the Holy One said: My children's look of good health has not yet come back—they have just been released from slaving with clay and bricks—shall I now give them the Torah? Let My children be indulged for two or three months—with the manna, with the waters of the well, with the quail—then I will give them the Torah.[3]

26. R. Joshua ben Levi said: When Israel left Egypt, there were among them men crippled by heavy labor, for as they worked in clay and bricks, now and then a stone, dropping from the structure, would break a man's arm or sever his leg. Hence the Holy One said: It is not right that I give My Torah to cripples. What did He do? He beckoned to the ministering angels, and they came down and healed them.[4]

27. [As to the consequences of Israel's refusal to accept the Torah], Resh Lakish said: Why is it written, "And there was evening, and there was morning, the sixth day" (Gen. 1:31)? What is the significance of using the definite article?[5] Singling out the "sixth day" by means of the definite article shows that the Holy One stipulated with the preceding works of creation, saying to them: If Israel accept the Torah [on the sixth day of Sivan], you will continue to exist; if not, I will return you to desolation and chaos.[6]

28. "As a lily among thorns" (Song 2:2). R. Azariah, citing R. Judah son of R. Simon, illustrated the verse by the parable of a king who had an orchard planted with a row of fig trees, a row of grapevines, a row of pomegranate trees, and a row of apple trees. The king turned this orchard over to a keeper and went away. After a while the king came back and looked into the orchard to see how it had done, and found it overgrown with thorns and thistles. He summoned woodcutters to raze it, but as he looked again at the thorns, he noticed among them a rose-colored lily. He took hold of it and breathed in its fragrance, and his spirit was calmed. Then the king said: Because of this lily, let the entire orchard be spared.

Likewise, the whole world, all of it, was created only for the sake of the Torah. But after twenty-six generations,[7] when the Holy One looked closely at His world to ascertain what it had done, He found it [muddy] water within [muddy] water[8]—the generation of Enosh, water within water;[9] the generation of the flood, water within water; the generation of the dispersion of mankind, water within water.[10] He summoned destroyers to raze the world, but then he noticed there a rose-colored lily—Israel. He took hold of it and breathed in its fragrance—He gave Israel the Ten Commandments. When he heard their response, "We will do and we will hearken" (Exod. 24:7), His spirit was calmed.

The Holy One then said: Because of a lily, an orchard was spared. Because of Torah and of Israel, let the world be spared.[11]

29. "The Lord came unto Sinai; after having [first] risen at Seir unto the people thereof, then having shined forth at Mount Paran,[12] He came unto the myriads holy, at His right hand a fiery law for them" (Deut. 33:2).[13] When he who is everywhere revealed Himself to give the Torah to Israel, He revealed Himself not only to Israel but to all the other nations as well. At first God went to the children of Esau. He asked them: Will you accept the Torah? They said right to His face: What is written in it? He said: "Thou shalt not murder." They replied: Master of the universe, this goes against our grain. Our father, whose "hands are

---

1. Tanhuma B, Ki Tetze, §18.
2. Mek, Be-shallah, Amalek, 2.
3. Eccles. R. 3:11; §2; Song R. 2:5, §2.
4. Tanhuma, Yitro, §8.
5. The preceding days are referred to as "a second day," "a third day," and so on, with the indefinite article.
6. B. Shab 88a.
7. In the generation when the Torah was given.
8. Wicked people in a wicked environment. For a further explanation of "water within water," see below, part 3, chap. 1, §15, n.o.
9. It was partly wiped out by water. See Gen. R. 23:6 on Gen. 4:26.
10. Also inundated in part. See Gen. R. 38:10.
11. Lev. R. 23:3; Song R. 2:2, §3.
12. Seir is a reference to Edom, and Paran to Ishmael.
13. JV: "The Lord came from Sinai, and rose from Seir unto them. He shined forth from Mount Paran, and He came from the myriads holy, at His right hand was a fiery law unto them." Here the commentor attempts to solve the meaning of God's peregrinations; he is also baffled by the strange statement that God came from Sinai, whereas in truth He came to Sinai. Accordingly, the commentator takes the proposition mi (usually rendered "from") as meaning rather "the place or region in or at which a thing is" (see Gesenius, Lexicon, p. 584; cf. Gen. 12:8). The "myriads holy" are the myriads of Israel.

the hands of Esau" (Gen. 27:22), led us to rely only on the sword, because his father told him, "By thy sword shalt thou live" (Gen. 27:40).[1] We cannot accept the Torah.

Then He went to the children of Ammon and Moab, and asked them: Will you accept the Torah? They said right to His face: What is written in it? He said: "Thou shalt not commit adultery." They replied: Master of the universe, our very origin is in adultery, for Scripture says, "Thus were both the daughters of Lot with child by their father" (Gen. 19:36). We cannot accept the Torah.

Then He went to the children of Ishmael. He asked them: Will you accept the Torah? They said right to His face: What is written in it? He said: "Thou shalt not steal." They replied: Master of the universe, it is our very nature to live off only what is stolen and what is got by assault. Of our forebear Ishmael, it is written, "And he shall be a wild ass of a man: his hand shall be against every man, and every man's hand against him" (Gen. 16:12). We cannot accept the Torah.

There was not a single nation among the nations to whom God did not go, speak, and, as it were, knock on its door, asking whether it would be willing to accept the Torah.

At long last He came to Israel. They said, "We will do and hearken" (Exod. 24:7). Of God's successive attempts to give the Torah, it is written, "The Lord came unto Sinai; after having [first] risen at Seir unto the people thereof, then having shined forth at Mount Paran, He finally came unto the myriads holy, at His right hand a fiery law for them" (Deut. 33:2).[2]

30. "Why do you scurry about and contend, ye mountains that are crookbacked?"[3] (Ps. 68:17). R. Yose the Galilean said: When the Holy One came to give the Torah to Israel on Sinai, the mountains scurried about, striving with one another, one saying, "The Torah should be given on me," and another, "It should be given on me." Mount Tabor came from Beth-elim, and Mount Carmel from Apamea, one saying, "I have been summoned," and another saying, "I have been summoned." Finally, the Holy One said, "Why do you scurry about and contend, ye mountains that are crookbacked?" You are, to be sure, lofty mountains, but you are crookbacked, blemished, since idolatry has been practiced at the top of each one of you. But Sinai—idolatry has never been practiced upon it—Sinai is "the mountain which God has desired for His abode" (ibid.).[4]

31. Whence did Sinai come? R. Yose taught: Out of Mount Moriah—the place where our father Isaac had been bound as a sacrifice—Sinai plucked itself as a priest's portion is plucked out of the dough.[5] For the Holy One said: Since their father Isaac was bound upon this mount, it is fitting that his children receive the Torah upon it.[6]

32. "And they stood under the mount" (Exod. 19:17).[7] R. Avdimi bar Hama said: The verse implies that the Holy One overturned the mountain upon them, like an inverted cask, and said to them: If you accept the Torah, it is well; if not, your grave will be right here.[8]

33. R. Simai expounded: When Israel hastened to say, "We will do," before saying, "We will hearken,"[9] sixty myriads of ministering angels came down and fastened two crowns upon each and every one in Israel, one as a reward for saying, "We will do," and the other as a reward for saying, "We will hearken." But when Israel sinned,[10] a hundred and twenty myriads of destroying angels came down and removed the crowns, as is said, "The children of Israel were stripped of their ornaments from Mount Horeb" (Exod. 33:6).[11]

R. Eliezer said: When Israel hastened to say, "We will do," before saying, "We will hearken," a divine voice went forth and exclaimed: Who has disclosed to My children this secret, which only the ministering angels make use of? For they are told, "Bless the Lord, ye angels of His, that do what He saith, [and then] hearken to the voice of His Word" (Ps. 103:20)—first they are described as "doing," and then as "hearkening [obeying]."[12]

34. R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Yohanan: When the Holy One gave the Torah, no bird chirped, no fowl flew, no ox lowed, not one of the ofannim[13] stirred a wing, not one of the seraphim said, "Holy, holy, holy!" The sea did not roar, creatures did not speak—the whole world was hushed into breathless silence; it was then that the voice went forth: "I am the Lord thy God" (Exod. 20:2).[14]

35. "I am the Lord thy God." Because the Holy One appeared to them at the Red Sea as a mighty man waging war,[15] at Sinai as a pedagogue teaching Torah, in the days of Solomon as a young man, and in the days of Daniel as an aged man full of mercy, the Holy One said: Because you see Me in many guises, do not imagine that there are many gods—for I am He who was with you at the Red Sea, I am He who was with you at Sinai, I am the same everywhere. "I am the Lord thy God."[16]

36. "His mouth is most sweet" (Song 5:16). It is said in the name of R. Yohanan: The moment Israel at Sinai heard

---

1. Here not BR but the text in PRF is followed.
2. Sif Deut., §343; PR 21 (PRF, p. 99b; YJS 1:417).
3. JV: "Why look ye askance, ye mountains of peaks." But in the comment that follows, teratzedun ("look askance") will be construed as portmanteau for rvtz [rutz] ("run, scurry") and dvn [dun] ("contend, strive").
4. Gen. R. 99:1.
5. On hallah, the priest's share of the bread, see Num. 15:20.
6. MTeh 68:9; BhM 5:72–73.
7. The translation is literal. JV: "And they stood at the nether part of the mount."
8. B. Shab 88a; AZ 2b.
9. Exod. 24:7.
10. Through the golden calf.
11. That is, what they had received at Mount Horeb.
12. B. Shab 88a.
13. "Wheel-angels." See Ezek. 1:16.
14. Exod. R. 29:9.
15. Exod. 15:3.
16. Yalkut, Yitro, §286; Mek, Be-shallah, Shirata, 4.

the word "I," their souls left them, as is written, "My soul left me when He spoke" (Song 5:6). At once, the Word returned to the Holy One and said: Master of the universe, You are ever alive and enduring, the Torah is ever alive and enduring, yet You are sending me to the dead?—they are all dead! So, for Israel's sake, the Holy One went back and sweetened [made soft] the Word, as is said, "The voice of the Lord is powerful, the voice of the Lord is stately" (Ps. 29:4), which, as R. Hama bar Hanina explained, means that the voice of the Lord was powerful for young men and had measured stateliness for the aged. [In agreement with R. Hama bar Hanina], R. Levi said: Had it been written, "The voice of the Lord is in His strength," the world could not have stood it. Hence Scripture says, "The voice of the Lord is fitted to the strength" (Ps. 29:4),[1] that is to say, to the strength of each and every person—the young, according to their strength; the aged, according to their strength; the little ones, according to their strength; the sucklings, according to their strength; the women, according to their strength.

R. Simeon ben Yohai, however, taught: The Torah that the Holy One gave to Israel was the one who helped restore their souls to them. She pleaded before the Holy One for mercy on their behalf, saying: Is there a king who gives his daughter in marriage and slays the courtier whom she is to wed? The entire world rejoices for my sake, yet Your children [Israel, to whom I am being given], are dying! At that, their souls returned. "The Law of the Lord is perfect, it restores souls" (Ps. 19:8).

Another exposition of "His mouth is most sweet" (Song 5:16): [The Holy One was] like a king who spoke so harshly to his son that the latter fell into a faint. When the king saw that he had fainted, he began to hug him, kiss him, and speak softly to him, saying, "What is it with you? Are you not my only son? Am I not your father?" So, too, as soon as the Holy One said, "I am the Lord thy God," then and there Israel's souls left them. When they died, the angels began to hug them and kiss them, saying to them, "What is it with you? Be not afraid—'ye are children of the Lord your God' " (Deut. 14:1). At the same time, the Holy One repeated the Word softly for their sake as He said, "Are you not My children, even as I am the Lord your God? You are My people. You are beloved unto Me." He kept speaking gently to them until their souls returned.[2]

37. "Thus thou shalt say to the house of Jacob" (Exod. 19:3)—that is, to the women, meaning that God said to Moses: Tell them those essentials that they can understand; "and tell the children of Israel" (ibid.)—that is, the men, meaning: You may tell them also specific details of precepts, which they [unlike women] can understand.

Another explanation: Why did He mention the women first? Because they are prompt in fulfilling commandments.

Still another explanation: In order that they might lead their children to the study of Torah.[3]

38. R. Joshua ben Levi said: With each and every word that issued from the mouth of the Holy One, the entire world, all of it, was filled with the fragrance of spices. But if the first word filled the world, where did the fragrance of the second word go? Out of His treasuries the Holy One brought forth a wind, which carried each fragrance along in orderly succession.

R. Joshua ben Levi said also: At each and every word that issued from the mouth of the Holy One, the souls of Israel departed, as is said, "My soul departed when He spoke" (Song 5:6). But if their souls departed at the first word, how could they receive the next word? He brought down the dew, with which He will in time resurrect the dead, and restored Israel to life.

R. Joshua ben Levi said further: At each and every word that issued from the mouth of the Holy One, the Israelites recoiled a distance of twelve mil[4] and the angels moved from back [to Sinai], as is said, "Hosts of angels[5] flee, they flee" (Ps. 68:13). Read not yiddodun ("they flee") but yedaddun ("they move").[6]

39. Hananiah son of R. Joshua's brother said: Just as in the sea there are ripples and wavelets between each major wave, so between each of the Ten Commandments there were Torah's unwritten minutiae, as well as all of Torah's letters.[7]

40. "For who is there of all flesh, that hath heard the voice of the living God speaking out of the midst of the fire, as we have, and lived?" (Deut. 5:23). Come and see how the voice went forth to all of Israel, to each and every one in keeping with his particular capacity—to the elderly in keeping with their capacity, to young men in keeping with their capacity, to the little ones in keeping with their capacity, and to the women in keeping with their capacity. R. Yose bar Hanina said: If you are astounded at such an assertion, then draw the relevant inference from the manna, which came down for Israel varying in taste, in keeping with each Israelite's particular need—to young men it tasted like bread, to the elderly it tasted like wafers made with honey, to sucklings it tasted like milk from their mother's breast, to the sick it tasted like fine flour mingled with honey, while for the heathen it tasted as bitter as linseed. Now, if the manna, which was all of the same kind, changed into so many kinds to provide for the particular need of each individual, was it not possible for the voice, in which there is such divine strength, to vary according to the capacity of each individual, so that no harm should befall him? Hence Job said, "God thundereth marvelously with His voice" (Job 37:5).[8]

---

1. Literally, "The voice of the Lord is in strength," a deviation from normal syntax, which would require suffixing the appropriate personal pronoun—e.g., "Jacob lifted his feet" (Gen. 29:1), not simply "lifted feet"—whenever a part or an attribute of the body is mentioned. Cf. Tanhuma, Shemot, §25.
2. Song R. 5:16, §3; Exod. R. 5:9 and 29:4.
3. Exod. R. 28:2.
4. A mil is about 1,620 yards.
5. MT: "Kings of armies."
6. B. Shab 88b.
7. That is, all the details of the Oral Law, as well as the six hundred and thirteen precepts. P. Shek 6:1, 49d.
8. Exod. R. 5:9.

41. At Sinai, when the Holy One gave the Torah to Israel, He manifested marvels upon marvels for Israel with His voice. How so? As the Holy One spoke, the voice reverberated throughout the world. At first Israel heard the voice coming to them from the south,[1] so they ran to the south to meet the voice there. It shifted to the north, so they ran to the north. Then it shifted to the east, so they ran to the east; but from the east it shifted to the west, so they ran to the west. Next it shifted to heaven. But when they raised their eyes toward heaven, it seemed to rise out of the earth. Hence Israel asked one another, "But wisdom, where shall it be found? And where is the place of understanding?" (Job 28:12).

"And all the people perceived the thunderings" (Exod. 20:15). Since there was only one voice, why "thunderings" in the plural? Because God's voice mutated into seven voices, and the seven voices into seventy languages, so that all the nations might hear it.[2]

42. R. Yohanan asked; What is implied in "The Lord gave the word: great was the company of those that published it" (Ps. 68:12)? That each and every word that issued from the mouth of the Almighty divided itself into seventy languages. Accordingly, citing the verse "As a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces" (Jer. 23:29), the school of R. Ishmael taught: Just as a hammer that strikes a rock causes sparks to fly off in all directions, so each and every word that issued from the mouth of the Holy One divided itself into seventy languages.[3]

43. R. Yohanan said also: Each and every word that issued from the Holy One was transmuted into seventy languages. R. Joshua ben Levi said: As when a man strikes an anvil and causes sparks to fly off in all directions. R. Yose bar Hanina said: As when a man strikes a rock with a hammer and causes chips to fly off in all directions, so, too, did "the great company of those that published it."[4]

44. It is taught: "Remember" and "observe" were spoken in one utterance, something that is beyond the human mouth to articulate or the human ear to absorb.[5]

45. "And God spoke all these words, saying"[6] (Exod. 20:1). God can do all kinds of things at one and the same time—He can put to death and bring to life at one and the same time. He can wound and heal at one and the same time. If there is a woman giving birth; people going down to the sea, traveling through deserts, or being kept in prison—though one is in the east and another in the west, one in the north and another in the south—He can hear them all at one and the same time.[7]

46. "And God spoke all these words, saying" (Exod. 20:1). R. Isaac said: At Mount Sinai the prophets of each and every generation received what they were to prophesy, for Moses told Israel, "But with him that standeth here with us this day before the Lord our God, and also with him that is not here with us this day" (Deut. 29:14). He did not say, "That is not standing here with us this day," but, "That is not here with us this day," a way of referring to souls that are destined to be created. Because as yet these had no substance, Moses did not use the word "standing" for them. Still, even though they did not as yet exist, each one received his share of the Torah. Nor were the future prophets the only ones who received at Sinai the prophecy they were to utter. The sages who were to rise in each and every generation—each and every one of them also received at Sinai the wisdom he was to utter.[8]

47. When the Holy One gave the Torah to Israel, His voice traveled from one end of the world to the other, and in their palaces all kings of the nations were seized with trembling, yet they were constrained to chant a song in praise of God. All of them gathered themselves about the wicked Balaam and asked, "What is this loud tumult we hear? Is another flood coming upon the world?" Balaam replied, "The Holy One has already sworn that He will not bring another flood upon the world." "Perhaps," they asked further, "He will bring not another flood of water but a flood of fire?" Balaam reassured them: "He has already sworn that He would not destroy all flesh." "What, then," they asked, "is this loud tumult we hear?" Balaam replied, "The Holy One has a precious thing in His treasury that had been stored with Him nine hundred and seventy-four generations before the world was created,[9] and now He wishes to give it to His children, as is said, 'The Lord giveth strength to His people' " (Ps. 29:11). The kings of the nations, all as one, immediately exclaimed, "May the Lord bless His people with peace" (ibid.).[10]

48. As soon as Israel accepted the Torah, the Holy One invested them with some of the splendor of His own majesty. What precisely did He invest them with? Crowns, according to R. Yohanan; weapons, according to R. Simeon ben Yohai, upon which God's Explicit Name was engraved—as long as these weapons were in their hands, the angel of death had no power over them.[11]

49. R. Joshua ben Levi taught: When Moses went up on high, the ministering angels dared say to the Holy One:

---

1. When facing east, the south is on the right side, the side where the Torah was given. Hence the commentator begins with the south.
2. The Torah is intended for all nations—it is not to remain Israel's sole prerogative. Exod. R. 5:9; Tanhuma B, Shemot, §22.
3. B. Shab 88b.
4. Ibid., as cited in Yalkut, Ps., §695.
5. In Exod. 20 the fourth commandment begins with the words "Remember the Sabbath day," whereas in Deut. 5 it begins with "Observe." B. RH 27a.
6. "All these words, saying," being regarded as redundant, is construed as implying that at one and the same time God can do even things mutually opposed.
7. Exod. R. 28:4.
8. Exod. R. 28:6.
9. The Torah was to have been given at the end of a thousand generations. But God advanced the time and gave it during the twenty-sixth generation from Adam. See TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 9.
10. B. Zeb 116a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
11. Exod. R. 51:8.

Master of the universe, what business does one born of woman have in our midst? God replied: He came to receive the Torah. They argued: This precious thing, which has been stored with You for nine hundred and seventy-four generations before the world was created, You are about to give to mere flesh and blood? "O Lord, our Lord, how glorious is Thy Name in all the earth! Let Thy majesty continue to be celebrated above the heavens. . . . What is man that Thou shouldst be mindful of him, and the son of man that Thou shouldst think of him?" (Ps. 8:2 and 8:5). Then the Holy One said to Moses: Let you be the one to reply to the ministering angels. Moses spoke right up: Master of the universe, I fear that they will consume me with the fiery breath of their mouths. God said: Take hold of the throne of My glory and reply to them. Moses spoke up again: The Torah You are about to give me—what is written in it? "I am the Lord thy God, that brought thee out of the land of Egypt" (Exod. 20:2). Then, turning to the angels, he asked: Did you go down to Egypt? Were you enslaved to Pharaoh? What need have you for the Torah? What else is written in it? "Ye shall have no gods that others worship" (Exod. 20:3)—do you live among nations who worship idols? What else is written in it? "Thou shalt not take the Name of the Lord thy God in vain" (Exod. 20:7)—are there business dealings among you [that might lead to swearing a false oath]? What else is written in it? "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy" (Exod. 20:8)—do you do the kind of work that requires you to rest? What else is written in it? "Honor thy father and thy mother" (Exod. 20:12)—do you have father or mother? What else is written in it? "Thou shalt not murder, thou shalt not commit adultery, thou shalt not steal" (Exod. 20:13)—is there rivalry among you, is the impulse to evil within you?

At that, the angels conceded to the Holy One, for at the psalm's end, they said once more, "O Lord, our Lord, how glorious is Thy Name in all the earth," although they did not add [as before], "Let Thy majesty continue to be celebrated above the heavens."[1]

Then each of the angels came to be favorably disposed toward Moses and gave him a token of his favor, as is implied by what was said to him: "Thou hast ascended on high; thou hast taken the prize [of Torah]; thou hast received gifts [to compensate for the angels' calling thee] a mere man [a groundling]" (Ps. 68:19). Even the angel of death turned over his secret to Moses, for later, after the plague had begun, it is said of Moses that he told Aaron to "put on the incense and make atonement for the people" (Num. 17:12); and Scripture goes on to say, "And he stood between those who were about to die and those who were to remain alive" (Num. 17:13). How would Moses have been able to distinguish between the two, had not the angel of death made him a gift of the secret?[2]

50. R. Simeon ben Lakish said: The Torah given to Moses was written with black fire upon white fire, sealed with fire, and swathed with bands of fire. While writing it, Moses wiped off the reed on his hair—thus he received the radiance that was to emanate from his countenance.[3]

51. R. Joshua ben Levi said: After Moses had come down from the Holy One's Presence, Satan appeared and asked Him bluntly: Master of the universe, where is the Torah? He answered: I gave it to the earth. Satan went to the earth and asked: Where is the Torah? The earth replied, "God understandeth the way thereof, and He knoweth the place thereof" (Job 28:23). He then went to the sea, which replied, "It is not with me" (Job 28:14). Finally he went to the deep under the earth, which replied, "It is not in me" (ibid.). So he returned and said to the Holy One: Master of the universe, I searched for it throughout the world, but did not find it. God said, "Go to the son of Amram." Satan went to Moses and asked, "Where is the Torah the Holy One gave you?" Moses replied, "Who am I that the Holy One should have given the Torah to me?" The Holy One asked: Moses, are you a liar? Moses replied: Master of the universe, You had hidden away a precious thing in which You took delight every day—shall I now claim credit for myself about it? The Holy One said to Moses: Since you make so little of yourself, the Torah shall be called by your name—"remember ye the Torah of Moses My servant" (Mal. 3:22).

R. Joshua ben Levi said also: When Moses went up on high, he found the Holy One busy joining crowns to the letters [of the Torah,[4] and Moses remained respectfully silent]. Finally, God asked, "Moses, where you come from, were you not taught to extend greetings?" Moses replied, "May a servant presume to greet his master?" "Nevertheless," said God, "you should have encouraged Me [by saying something]." Presently [during a later ascent] Moses cried out [without being reminded], "May the power of the Lord increase!" [Then he added], "Is not this what You told me to do?" (Num. 14:17).[5]

52. R. Hanina ben Agil asked R. Hiyya son of R. Abba: Why does it not say in the first version of the Ten Commandments, "That it may go well with thee," while in the second version there is such a promise?[6] He replied: Before asking me why "That it may go well with thee" is not mentioned in the first version, you should ask me whether such a promise does or does not occur in the second version—the fact is, I do not know whether it occurs or not.[7] Go to R. Tanhum bar Hanilai, who visits regularly with R. Joshua ben Levi, an expert in Aggadah. When he went to him, R. Tanhum said: From R. Joshua ben Levi, as it happens, I never heard anything on this matter. But Samuel bar Nahum told me, "Because [the Tablets containing the Commandments' first version] were

---

1. That is, they conceded that the Torah need not remain in heaven.
2. B. Shab 88b–89a.
3. P. Shek 6:1, 49d; Yalkut, Berakhah, §951.
4. The crowns (tagin) are three small strokes that are added on the top of certain letters. See JE, s.v.
5. B. Shab 89a.
6. In Deut. 5:16, it is stated, "That thy days may be prolonged, and that it may go well with thee."
7. No halakhic point was involved in this text. Hence R. Hiyya could not recall its exact wording.

destined to be broken,[1] [the promise of well-being does not occur in them]. But even if they were destined to be broken, how would that eventuality affect the promise of well-being?" R. Ashi explained: Well-being would then, God forbid, have altogether ceased in Israel.[2]

53. In the way of the world, when a king of flesh and blood issues a decree, it may or may not be obeyed; and even if you find that it is obeyed, it may be so only while he is living but not after his death. However, Moses our teacher issued many decrees and introduced many enactments—and these abide forever and ever and ever.[3]

54. Come and see that the way of the Holy One is not like the way of human beings. The way of a human being: when he sells a valuable object to his fellow,[4] the seller grieves, while the buyer rejoices. Not so the Holy One. When He gave up the Torah to Israel, He rejoiced: "I have given you a good purchase;[5] forsake not My teaching" (Prov. 4:2).[6]

55. A certain Galilean expounded in the presence of R. Hisda: Blessed be He who is everywhere, who has given the three-fold Torah[7] to a three-fold people[8] through a third[born][9] on the third day[10] in the third month.[11]

Nadab and Abihu

56. "Unto Moses He said: 'Come up unto the Lord, thou, and Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu' " (Exod. 24:1). The verse intimates that Moses and Aaron walked first, followed by Nadab and Abihu, then by all of Israel. [Treading, so to speak, on the heels of Moses and Aaron], Nadab said to Abihu, "When will these two old men die, so that you and I may lead this generation?" The Holy One said to them, " 'Boast not thyself of tomorrow' [Prov. 27:1]—We shall see who will bury whom." As R. Papa, quoting a common proverb, put it: Many a young ass has died and had its hide turned into saddlecloths for its dam's back.[12]

1. Exod. 32:19.
2. Had the promise of well-being been inserted in the first version of the Ten Commandments, such well-being might have ceased altogether after the Tablets containing that version were broken. B. BK 54b–55a.
3. Moses' own decrees and enactments deal with such matters as the public reading of Scripture and the division of priests into rotas or watches. B. Shab 30a.
4. When forced to do so by poverty.
5. JV: "Good doctrine." But lekah ("doctrine") may in postbiblical Hebrew also mean "purchase."
6. By praising it, God showed He was pleased that He made the "sale." B. Ber 5a.
7. Pentateuch, Prophets, and Writings.
8. Israel was made up of priests, Levites, and Israelites.
9. Moses was born after Aaron and Miriam.
10. The third day after separation from their wives. Exod. 19:11.
11. In Sivan. B. Shab 88a.
12. B. Sanh 52a; Lev. R. 20:10.

The Sin of the Golden Calf

57. "And when the people saw that Moses delayed (boshesh) to come down from the mount" (Exod. 32:1). "Six hours (ba'u shesh) of the day[13] have passed," they said, "and Moses has not yet come down, even though when he went up on high he promised, 'After forty days, at the beginning of the day's sixth hour, I will be back.' "

At the end of forty days, there gathered forty thousand [of the mixed multitude][14] that had come up with Israel, together with two of Egypt's magicians, whose names were Jannes and Jambres[15]—it was they who performed all those acts of witchcraft in Pharaoh's presence, as is said, "They also, the magicians of Egypt, did in like manner with their secret arts" (Exod. 7:11). All of them gathered against Aaron and said, "Moses will not come down again." Aaron and Hur responded, "Any moment he will be coming down from the mount." But the mixed multitude paid no attention to them.

Some say that Satan came and brought confusion to the minds of the people. Satan began by asking, "Where is Moses your teacher?" "He went up on high." "But the sixth hour of the day is here." The people paid no attention to him. "He is dead," [Satan said]. They still paid no attention to him. Finally he showed them a likeness of Moses' bier suspended in the air between heaven and earth. Then the people pointed with their fingers, saying, "This is indeed Moses, a mere man" (Exod. 32:1).

Hur stood up and rebuked them: "You stiff-necked people! Do you not remember how many miracles he performed in your behalf?" But the people rose up and slew him.

Then they gathered against Aaron and said, "If you make a god for us, well and good; but if not, we will do to you what we did to Hur."

When Aaron saw how things stood, he was afraid and attempted to distract them with subterfuges. Thus he said, "Break off the golden rings, which are in the ears of your wives" (Exod. 32:2), a difficult request to execute, since the wives were likely to balk. Indeed, when the men went to their wives [they did balk, but for a different reason]—they defied them, saying, "God forbid that we should make an idol and betray the Holy One, who wrought such miracles and mighty deeds in our behalf." So, since the wives refused, "all the [men among the] people broke off the golden rings which were in their ears (Exod. 32:3)[16]—their own ears.

When the men brought the golden rings—so said R. Jeremiah—Aaron raised his eyes toward heaven and said, " 'Unto Thee I lift up my eyes, O Thou that art enthroned in the heavens' [Ps. 123:1]. You know all thoughts—it is against my will that I am about to do this." But as he threw the gold rings into the fire, the magicians came and 13. Twelve noon—thus, six hours have passed of the fortieth day, the day Moses promised he would be back.

14. See Exod. 12:38.
15. See JE 7:71.
16. In this verse, the wives are not mentioned.

worked their secret arts. Some say it was Micah (the one who was nearly crushed to death in a building, where he had been immured in lieu of bricks,[1] and who was saved by Moses)—it was this Micah who took a tablet upon which was written, "Rise up, O bullock," and threw it into the pit among the golden rings. Then a bull-calf emerged, lowing as it leaped about. Whereupon the people said, "This is thy God, O Israel" (Exod. 32:4).

"And when Aaron saw this, he built an altar before it" (Exod. 32:5). The people wanted to build it with him. But he said, "Allow me to build it by myself. It is not in keeping with the respect due to the altar that others build it with me." Aaron's intent: In the time it will take me to build the altar by myself, I hope Moses will come down. But after he finished building it, Moses still had not come down, so he announced, "Tomorrow shall be a feast to the Lord" (Exod. 32:5), saying to himself: Let the "happening" be deferred until tomorrow.

At that moment the ministering angels began to lament, "They forgot God their savior, who had done great things in Egypt" (Ps. 106:21). And the holy spirit moaned, "They soon forgot His works" (Ps. 106:13).[2]

58. "And the Lord spoke unto Moses: 'Go, get thee down' " (Exod. 32:7). By way of rebuke, the Holy One said to Moses, "This is a downgrading for you." Moses asked, "My Master, what is my offense?" God replied, "Thy people have dealt corruptly" (Exod. 32:7). Moses asked, "Are they my people? 'They are Thy people and Thine inheritance that Thou didst bring out by Thy great power' [Deut. 9:29]. But wherein did they sin?" God: "They exchanged their glory for the likeness of an ox" (Ps. 106:20). Moses spoke up: "Master of the universe, this calf would be just right to assist You." The Holy One: "How can he assist Me?" Moses: "You cause the winds to blow, and he might bring down rain; You cause the sun to shine, and he might do the same with the moon; You cause trees to grow, and he might make [smaller] plants sprout." God: "Like them, even you, Moses, seem to be led astray by the calf!" Moses: "so—the thing isn't much. It eats grass, and at any time may be slaughtered [like any other calf]. 'Why, then, should Thy wrath wax hot against Thy people?' " (Exod. 32:11).[3]

59. "Go, get thee down" (Exod. 32:7). According to R. Isaac, when the Holy One said to Moses, "Go, get thee down," Moses' face grew dark. In the greatness of his distress, he became as one blind and so did not know which way to go down. The ministering angels, saying, "This is the time to slay him," were indeed about to slay him.[4] But the Holy One was aware of what they planned. And what did He do? It is said in the name of R. Abba bar Aibu that the Holy One opened a wicket door under His throne of glory and said, "Go, get thee down."

In the name of R. Judah bar Ilai, it is said: When Moses was about to get down, the angels came to slay him. What did he do? He took hold of the throne of the Holy One, and the Holy One spread His mantle over him, so that they should not harm him.[5]

60. "Go, get thee down" (Exod. 32:7). The Holy One said to Moses: Go, Moses, get you down from your greatness.[6] It was only because of Israel that I bestowed such greatness upon you. But now that Israel have sinned, what need have I of you? At that, Moses' strength was so depleted that he did not have strength to utter even a single word. But when God said to him, "Let Me be, that I may destroy them" (Deut. 9:14), Moses reasoned: So the outcome depends on me! At once he rose up and prayed vigorously as he pleaded for mercy. A parable: A king of flesh and blood became angry at his son and beat him severely. Now, the king's friend, seated in the king's presence, was afraid to utter even one word [in demurral]. But when the king said [to his son], "Were it not for my friend who is seated in my presence, I would slay you," the friend said: So the outcome depends on me! At once he rose up and rescued the son.

"And now let Me be" (Exod. 32:10). R. Abbahu said: Were Scripture not so explicit, it would have been impossible to say such a thing. For the verse implies that, like a man who grabs hold of his fellow by his garment, Moses, if one dare say it, grabbed hold of the Holy One and brazenly said to Him: Master of the universe, I will not let You be until You pardon and forgive Israel.[7]

61. "Now therefore let Me alone, that My wrath may wax hot against them, and that I may destroy them" (Exod. 32:10). Does the verse imply that Moses was physically holding the Holy One, so that He had to say, "Let Me alone"? How may the matter be understood? By a parable of a king who became angry at his son and brought him into a chamber for punishment. There, as he began preparing himself to beat him, he kept shouting loudly, "Let me alone, that I may beat him!"—so loudly that he could be heard outside the chamber. The son's tutor, standing in the reception room, said to himself: The king and his son are [alone] inside the chamber. Why does the king keep shouting, "Let me alone," unless he wants me to come in and plead on behalf of his son? That is why he keeps shouting, "Let me alone." Likewise, when the Holy One said to Moses, "Now therefore let Me alone," Moses reasoned: Because the Holy One wishes me to plead on Israel's behalf, that is why He said, "Now therefore let Me alone." At once he began to beseech mercy in their behalf—"Moses besought the Lord his God" (Exod. 32:11). During the time Moses besought God, said R. Hiyya, he left no corner in heaven upon which he did not prostrate himself.

"Moses . . . said: 'Oh, this people have sinned a great sin' " (Exod. 32:31). Moses made it appear, said R. Isaac, as though he were angry at Israel. When the Holy

---

1. See above, chap. 4, §26, and below, part 1, chap. 6, §33–35.
2. Tanhuma, Ki Tissa, §19; Tanhuma B, Ki Tissa, §13; B. Shab 89a; Exod. R. 41:7.
3. Tanhuma, Ki Tissa, §22; Exod. R. 43:6.
4. Angry as they were at Moses for taking the Torah away from heaven.
5. Exod. R. 42:4.
6. Moses' going down is thus construed not as a physical but as a symbolic descent.
7. B. Ber 32a.

One saw Moses' anger, He said: Moses, shall two faces be boiling with anger? Shall you and I both be angry at Israel? Both faces should not be boiling with such anger! Rather, when I pour hot, you must pour cold; and when you pour hot, I will be pouring cold. Moses responded: Master of the universe, now I know that You love Your children and are only looking for a person who will plead in their behalf.[1]

62. "Why doth Thy wrath wax hot against Thy people that Thou hast brought forth out of the land of Egypt?" (Exod. 32:11). Why did Moses [in the course of his plea] see fit to mention the going out from Egypt? Because Moses was pleading: Master of the universe, whence did You bring them? Was it not out of Egypt, where they worship calves?[2] The aptness of Moses' plea will be understood, said R. Huna in the name of R. Yohanan, by the parable of a sage who opened a perfume shop for his son in the street of harlots. The street plied its trade, the perfume business plied its trade,[3] and the lad, like any young male, plied his natural inclination—he strayed into depraved ways. When the father came and caught him with a harlot, he began to shout, "I'll kill you!" But the sage's friend was there, and he spoke up. "You yourself ruined your son, and now you are yelling at him! You ignored all other occupations and taught him to be a perfumer; you ignored all other streets and deliberately opened a shop for him in the street of harlots." Likewise, Moses said: Master of the universe, You ignored the entire world and deliberately enslaved Your children in Egypt, where the inhabitants worship calves; and so Your children learned from the Egyptians, and now have even made a calf for themselves. Therefore Moses said, "That Thou hast brought forth out of the land of Egypt"—bear in mind from what kind of place You brought them forth.[4]

63. They taught at R. Yannai's school: Moses protested to the Holy One, saying, "It is the silver and gold that You showered upon Israel that led them to make the calf. A lion does not roar over a heap of straw, but he goes wild in his delight over a heap of [freshly killed] flesh." [In illustrating Moses' protest], R. Oshaia told another parable: A man had a heifer that was lean but of large build [so that its appetite was huge]. When he fed it tasty vetches, the heifer, [in sheer delight, inadvertently] kicked him. So the man said: What led you to kick me, if not the tasty vetches that I fed you?[5]

In explaining Moses' protest, R. Hiyya bar Abba told in the name of R. Yohanan still another parable: A man had a son whom he bathed, anointed, gave ample food and drink, and hung a purse about his neck. Then he set him down at the door of a brothel. How could the young man do other than sin?

R. Samuel bar Nahmani taught in the name of R. Jonathan: How do we know that in the end the Holy One, reversing Himself, admitted to Moses that He was wrong? Because God said, "I . . . multiplied unto her silver and gold, which [I should have known] they would use for Baal" (Hos. 2:10).[6]

64. "Remember Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, Thy servants, to whom Thou didst swear by Thine own self" (Exod. 32:13). According to R. Eleazar, Moses spoke right up to the Holy One: Master of the universe, had You sworn to them by heaven and earth, I would have said, Just as heaven and earth shall cease, so Your oath may cease. But You have sworn by Your great Name; even as Your great Name shall live and endure forever and ever and ever, so must Your oath endure forever and ever and ever.

"And all this Land that I have spoken of" (Exod. 32:13). R. Samuel ben Nahmani pointed out that the verse does not read, [as one might have expected], "That You have spoken of." Hence he concluded that Moses actually dared say to the Holy One, "Master of the universe, [the inviolable oath concerning Israel's inheriting the Land], which You commanded me, 'Go tell Israel in My Name,' I went ahead and told in Your Name. Now what am I going to say to them?"

"Because the Lord had no ability (yekholet)" (Num. 14:16). Note that here Scripture does not say, "Was not able" (yakhol).[7] R. Eleazar explained that Moses said to the Holy One, "Now the nations of the earth will be saying, He has grown feeble like a female, and He has no ability to deliver them [out of the wilderness]." The Holy One asked Moses, "Son of Amram, have they not already seen the miracles and mighty acts you performed in Israel's behalf at the Red Sea?" Moses replied, "Master of the universe, they may still say, 'He could stand up against one king but has no ability to stand up against the thirty-one kings [of Canaan].' "

R. Yohanan said: How do we know that in the end the Holy One, reversing Himself, conceded to Moses that he was right? Because, later, "the Lord said: 'I have pardoned according to thy plea' " (Num. 14:20). The phrase "according to thy plea"—actually "pleas" in the plural,[8] as noted in the school of R. Ishmael—refers to Moses' plea [for God's forbearance (Num. 14:17–18) as well as his earlier plea] that God preserve His reputation (Num. 14:16). God thus admitted that the nations of the world would indeed have mocked Him as having grown feeble.

Happy is the discipline whose Master, when conceding to him, adds in the very next verse, "But in very deed, I live" (Num. 14:21), which, Rava said in the name of R. Isaac, intimates that the Holy One said to Moses: Moses, your words have kept Me alive [helped preserve My reputation].[9]

65. When the Holy One gave Moses the Tablets, they carried themselves [as though weightless]. But when he

---

1. Exod. R. 42:9; Deut. R. 3:11; Yalkut, Ki Tissa, §392.
2. So Israel made for itself a calf.
3. Since harlots use perfume.
4. Exod. R. 43:7.
5. Fodder so good that human beings eat it in emergencies.
6. B. Ber 32a.
7. The ordinary form, which is masculine; yekholet, the form used, is feminine.
8. Not dbrk [devarkha] ("thy word") but dbryk [devarekha] ("thy words"), a spelling that, according to Rudolf Kittel's Biblia Hebraica (Leipzig, 1909), occurs in many manuscripts of Scripture.
9. B. Ber 32a.

descended and approached the camp, and saw the calf, the writing on the Tablets flew off, and the Tablets became heavy in the hands of Moses, as is said, "When Moses' anger waxed hot, he had to cast the Tablets out of his hands" (Exod. 32:19).[1]

66. It is taught: When Moses ascended on high, he found the Holy One sitting and writing down His attribute "long-suffering." Said Moses, "Master of the universe, [I presume this means] long-suffering toward the righteous?" He replied, "Even toward the wicked." Moses exclaimed, "The wicked—let them perish [at once]." God replied, "You will find in good time that you need My willingness to suffer the wicked." When Israel sinned [with the golden calf], God said to Moses, "Did you not say, 'Long-suffering toward the righteous [only]'?" Moses spoke up, "Master of the universe, did You not assure me then that it applies to the wicked also?" Hence Moses prayed, "Great be the Lord's power of long-suffering, as Thou hast spoken" (Num. 14:17).[2]

67. "And he would return into the camp," etc. (Exod. 33:11).[3] According to R. Abbahu, the Holy One said to Moses, "Now it will be said, 'Since the Master is angry and the disciple is angry, what will become of Israel?' So, if you restore your tent to its place [in the camp], well and good; but if not, Joshua the son of Nun, your disciple, will serve in your stead."[4]

68. "Nevertheless, on any day that I visit retribution, I will visit upon them this sin of theirs" (Exod. 32:34). R. Isaac said: No retribution comes upon the world without its fraction[5] of retribution for [the sin of] the first calf. The fact is, said R. Yudan in the name of R. Assi, there is no generation that does not receive a particle [of retribution] for the making of the golden calf.[6]

The Tabernacle and Its Vessels

69. "The pattern of the Tabernacle" (Exod. 25:9). R. Levi said: When the Holy One said to Moses, "Make the Tabernacle for Me," Moses might simply have brought four poles and stretched skins over them to form the Tabernacle. Since he did not do so, we may infer from the verse cited below that while Moses was on the mount, the Holy One showed him red fire, green fire, black fire, and white fire, and said to him: Make the Tabernacle for Me. Moses asked the Holy One: Master of the universe, where [on earth] am I to get red fire, green fire, black fire, and white fire? The Holy One replied, "After the pattern, which is shown thee in the mount" (Exod. 25:40).[7]

70. "And thou shalt make the boards for the Tabernacle" (Exod. 26:15). Where did the boards come from? Jacob our father had planted them. When he came down to Egypt, he said to his sons: My sons! You are destined to be redeemed from here, and when you are redeemed, the Holy One will tell you that you are to make a Tabernacle for Him. Rise up and plant cedars now, so that when He tells you to make a Tabernacle for Him, these cedars will be on hand. So Jacob's sons set to planting cedars, doing just what he had told them. Hence Scripture speaks of "the boards," the boards their father had arranged should be on hand.[8]

71. Even as the stars are above, so the Tabernacle's clasps were here below, a parallel that proves, according to R. Hiyya bar Abba, that the Tabernacle's golden clasps looked like stars fixed in the firmament.[9]

72. "This is how the lampstand was made" (Num. 8:4). When Moses came up on the mount and the Holy One [commanded him] concerning the lampstand, he was baffled how he was to make it. The Holy One said: I will make [a pattern of] it in your presence. What did the Holy One do? He showed him white fire, red fire, black fire, and green fire, and out of these He made the lampstand, its cups, its calyxes, its petals, and the six branches. Then He said to him, "This is how the lampstand is made," implying that, with His finger, the Holy One showed Moses the details of the making of the lampstand.[10]

73. "These seven, which are the eyes of the Lord, that run to and fro through the whole earth" (Zech. 4:10)—the seven lamps of the lampstand correspond to the seven planets, which range over the whole earth.[11]

74. "When thou lightest the lamps" (Num. 8:2). Israel said to the Holy One: Master of the universe, are You asking us to give You light? You are the light of the world, light dwells with You, and You ask us to provide light in "front of the lampstand"? (ibid.). Hence, "it is for Thee to light my lamp" (Ps. 18:29). The Holy One replied: It is not that I need your help. Still, I want you to give Me light, even as I have given you light [during your wanderings]. A parable will explain God's answer. A sighted man and a blind man were walking on the way. The sighted man said to the blind man, "When we enter the house, please kindle this lamp and give me light. The blind man replied, "Out of your kindness, when I was on the road, you supported me, and until we came to the house, you accompanied me, and now you say, 'Kindle the lamp and

---

1. Thus Moses' act was not one of petulant anger. Tanhuma, Ki Tissa, §26.
2. B. Sanh 111a–b.
3. Because of his anger at Israel, Moses pitched his tent outside the camp.
4. B. Ber 63b.
5. "Literally, 'a twenty-fourth part of the overweight of a litra.' By 'the overweight' is meant the slight addition that is made to tip the scales in the direction of the weights" (Sanh, Soncino, p. 694, n. 1).
6. B. Sanh 102a; Exod. R. 43:2, Eccles. R. 9:11, §1.
7. The Tabernacle was to be made in the colors of these fires, not out of fire itself. PRKM 1:3.
8. Tanhuma, Terumah, §9.
9. PRKM 1:3.
10. Tanhuma B, Shemini, §11.
11. Tanhuma, Be-haalotekha, §5.

give me light!' Will you be good enough to explain why?" The sighted man replied, "The reason I asked you to give me light is to relieve you of any obligation to me for having accompanied you on the road. Hence, I said to you, 'Give me light.' "[1]

75. R. Avina said [that God added]: The orb of the sun is only one of My servants, and when it goes forth into the world, [its direct light is so intense that] no creature can feed its eyes on it—do I then require your light? Lightning is a thing generated from the fire above, and its light dazzles the world from end to end—do I then require your light? As R. Aha stated, "That which the Lord desireth is, for His righteousness' sake, to make Torah great and glorious" (Isa. 42:21). I have come, says God, for no other purpose than to endow you [to whom Torah was given] with the merit [of observing her precepts].

R. Berekhiah said: Consider the eyeball—a man sees not through the white of it, but through the black. So, said the Holy One, if out of darkness I created light for you, do I require your light?

Another comment: A mortal lights a lamp from another lamp that is already kindled. Can he possibly light a lamp out of darkness? Yet of God it is said, "And darkness was on the face of the deep" (Gen. 1:2), followed immediately by, "And God said: 'Let there be light' " (Gen. 1:3). If out of darkness I brought forth light, do I require your light? I only told you to kindle lamps in order to elevate you—"continually to elevate through the lamp"[2] (Exod. 27:20).[3]

76. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: Bezalel [Betzalel] was so called on account of his wisdom. When the Holy One said to Moses: Go and tell Bezalel to make me the Tabernacle, Ark, and vessels,[4] Moses went and reversed the order, saying, "Make an Ark, vessels, and the Tabernacle." Bezalel countered, "Moses our teacher, as a rule a man first builds a house and then brings his vessels into it; but you say, 'Make me an Ark, vessels, and the Tabernacle?' The vessels I make—where am I to put them? Perhaps the Holy One said to you, 'Make the Tabernacle, Ark, and vessels?' " Moses replied, "You may well have been in the shadow of God (betzel el), and so you know!"[5]

77. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: Bezalel knew how to combine the letters by which heaven and earth were created.[6]

78. R. Hanina ben Pazzi said: No tribe was greater than the tribe of Judah, and none more lowly than the tribe of Dan. Hence the Holy One commanded: Let Dan come and be associated with Judah, that he be not despised and that the other not become arrogant toward him, for in the eyes of Him who is everywhere, the great and the small are alike. Bezalel came from the tribe of Judah and Oholiab from Dan—hence, the latter was to be associated with the former [in the building of the Tabernacle].[7]

79. "And there was woe (va-yehi)[8] on the day that Moses had made an end of setting up the Tabernacle" (Num. 7:1). Woe on the day Moses brought his task to an end? However, the matter may be understood by the parable of a king who had a quarrelsome wife. Once the king said to her, "Make me a purple cloak," and she proceeded to work on it. All the time she was busy with it, she did not grumble. When the work was finished, she brought it to the king. He saw it and liked it, but began to say, "Woe, woe!" His wife asked, "What is this, my lord? I went to great trouble to fulfill your wish, and now you say, 'Woe, woe' "? He replied, "The work is good and suits me well. But as long as you were busy with the work, you did not fly into a temper and did not nag me. Now that you are free, I am afraid that you will begin to rile me again."

Likewise, the Holy One said: As long as My children were busy with the Tabernacle, they did not grumble at Me. Now they will begin to nag Me again. "Va-yehi on the day that Moses had made an end"—there was woe on the day the building of the Tabernacle came to an end.[9]

80. "These are the accounts of the Tabernacle" (Exod. 38:21). Moses said: I know that Israel are grumblers. So I will give them an accounting of all the work of the Tabernacle. He then proceeded to give them such an account—"these are the accounts of the Tabernacle"—giving them an accounting for each and every item, whether gold, silver, or brass, that was used in the Tabernacle, in order of their use: "The silver of them that were numbered of the congregation was a hundred talents, and a thousand seven hundred and three score and fifteen shekels. . . . And the hundred talents of silver were for casting" . . . (Exod. 38:25 and 38:27). As he was going on with his accounting, he forgot to mention the one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five shekels that he used to make hooks for the pillars. Since these hooks were not visible [he forgot to mention them]. So he stood there perplexed; he said to himself: Now Israel will think they have found good cause for saying that I took the silver. So he proceeded to go over each and every item in the work. At that, the Holy One enlightened his eyes, so that, as he raised them, he saw that the silver had been made into hooks for the pillars. Then in a loud voice he began a reply to the anticipated reproach: "And of the thousand seven hundred seventy and five shekels he made hooks for the pillars" (Exod. 38:28). Then Israel were pacified. What brought about their change of heart? The fact that Moses sat down and gave an accounting—"these are the accounts of the Tabernacle" (Exod. 38:21).

---

1. Num. R. 15:5.
2. JV: "Cause a lamp to burn continually."
3. Lev. R. 31:8; Num. R. 15:7.
4. This is the order in Exod. 31:7.
5. B. Ber 55a.
6. Ibid. "The Kabbalah assigns mystic powers to the letters of the Hebrew alphabet" (Ber, Soncino, p. 336, n. 6).
7. Exod. R. 40:4.
8. Play on the syllable va[y] in va-yehi ("And it came to pass"), which in Aramaic means "woe."
9. Tanhuma, Naso, §12.

Now, why did he feel he had to give an accounting? The Holy One trusted him, as is said, "He is trusted in all My house" (Num. 12:7). Why then did he give an accounting? Because he heard the scoffers of the generation talk behind his back, as is said, "And it came to pass, when Moses went out . . . that the people looked after Moses" (Exod. 33:8). And what were they saying? Eyeing him with contempt from behind, one would say to the other: Look at his [beefy] neck! Look at his [fat] thighs! He stuffs himself with what belongs to us and guzzles what is ours. And the other would reply: Stupid! A man appointed over the work of the Tabernacle, over talents of silver and talents of gold whose weight and number are too great to measure—what do you expect? That he would not enrich himself?

When Moses heard this talk, he said: As you live, when the work of the Tabernacle is finished, I will give you an accounting. When it was finished, he said, "These are the accounts of the Tabernacle" (Exod. 38:21).[1]

81. The Roman general Contricos questioned Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai: "At the collection of the money,[2] you count two hundred and one kikkar[3] and eleven maneh,[4] for Scripture states, 'A beka for every man, that is, half a shekel after the shekel of the Sanctuary' [Exod. 38:26], whereas when the money was given,[5] you find only one hundred kikkar, for it is written, 'And the hundred talents of silver were for casting,' etc. [Exod. 38:27]. Moses your teacher was either a thief, or a swindler, or a bad arithmetician. He spent a half, held back a half, but did not return a complete half."[6] R. Yohanan replied, "Moses our teacher was a trustworthy treasurer and a good arithmetician, only the sacred maneh was double the common."[7]

The Roman general questioned Rabban Yohanan further: "In the detailed record of the numbering of the Levites, you find the total is twenty-two thousand, three hundred,[8] whereas in the sum total you find only twenty-two thousand. Where did the remaining three hundred go?" He replied, "The remaining three hundred were [Levite] firstborn, and a firstborn cannot cancel the holiness of another firstborn."[9]

Israel's Journey and Encampment in the Wilderness

82. How did Israel's journeying in the wilderness proceed? A sign would appear in the cloud for Moses when it was about to move. When he saw by this sign that the cloud was about to move, he would say, "Rise up, O Lord, and let Thine enemies be scattered" (Num. 10:35). Then the cloud moved. As the cloud moved, all made preparations for the journey and began loading their utensils. Whoever had an animal would load the utensils on it, and the cloud would take on the rest. After all the utensils were loaded, the trumpets sounded and Judah, led by his standard, set out: first Judah's prince, and then his tribe. The other tribes followed in the same order—"every man to his own standard, according to the emblems" (Num. 2:2). Each prince had his own emblem and his own standard of a color corresponding to the tribe's precious stone on the breast of Aaron. (It was from these that the governments of the world learned to provide themselves with flags of different colors.) Thus, each tribe had its prince and its standard, whose color corresponded to the color of the tribe's stone in the breastplate and the ephod. Reuben's stone being ruby, the color of his standard was red, and embroidered on it as its emblem were mandrakes.[10] Simeon's being chrysolite, his standard was of a green color; the town of Shechem[11] was embroidered on it. Levi's[12] stone being sardonyx, the colors of his standard were equal fields of white, black, and red; embroidered on it were the Urim and Tummim.[13] Judah's stone being turquoise, the color of his standard was something like that of the sky; embroidered on it was a lion.[14] Issachar's stone being sapphire, the color of his standard was [blue-] black, like stibium; and embroidered on it were the sun and the

---

1. Tanhuma, Pekudei, §7.
2. When every Israelite was asked to give half a shekel.
3. "A weight of silver or gold, a talent. Now a kikkar contains sixty maneh, a maneh has twenty-five sela or holy shekels, therefore we have one thousand and five hundred shekels in one kikkar. Six hundred and three thousand five hundred and fifty half-shekels collected from the people make three hundred and one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five shekels. Divide one thousand and five hundred into this, we have two hundred and one kikkar with the remainder of two hundred and seventy-five shekels, i.e., eleven maneh" (Bekh, Soncino, p. 24, n. 2).
4. A weight in gold or silver of twenty-five common shekels (Bekh, Soncino, p. 24, n. 3).
5. When Moses rendered the account to the Israelites (Bekh, Soncino, p. 24, n. 5).
6. "For a complete half would have been one hundred and a half kikkar and five and a half maneh, and he only returned one hundred kikkar. And although Scripture says: 'And of the thousand seven hundred seventy and five shekels he made hooks,' and consequently he returned more than a half, the general did not mention this verse, for he wanted to catch him with words" (Bekh, Soncino, p. 24, n. 7).
7. "There were therefore one hundred and twenty maneh in a kikkar. The hundred kikkar were therefore really two hundred, and the remaining kikkar and eleven maneh were the one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five shekels mentioned, from which hooks were made" (Bekh, Soncino, p. 24, n. 8).
8. "The families of Gershom numbered seven thousand and five hundred, the families of Kohath numbered eight thousand and six hundred, and the families of Merari numbered six thousand and two hundred, making a grand total of the families of the Levites of twenty-two thousand and three hundred" (Bekh, Soncino, p. 23, n. 7).
9. Since the Levite firstborn has to free his own person from the necessity of being ransomed, he cannot very well serve as ransom for an Israelite firstborn. See Num. 3:39. B. Bekh 5a.
10. "And Reuben went in the days of wheat harvest, and found mandrakes in the field" (Gen. 30:14). See Gen. R. 72:5.
11. His courage and strength were fully displayed in his attack on the inhabitants of Shechem. See Gen. 34:25ff.
12. "Perhaps the reference to Levi should, with R. Behayye, be deleted, since he was not included among the twelve tribes [David Luria]" (Num. R., Soncino, p. 29, n. 4).
13. See Deut. 33:8.
14. In his final blessings, Jacob likened Judah to a lion. Gen. 49:9.

moon.[1] Zebulun's stone being an opal, the color of his standard was white,[2] with a ship embroidered on it. Dan's stone being a jacinth, the color of his standard was similar to sapphire, and embroidered on it was a serpent.[3] Gad's stone being an agate, the color of his standard was neither white nor black, but a blend of black and white; on it was embroidered a camp of tents.[4] Naphtali's stone being an amethyst, the color of his standard was like clarified wine of a not very deep red; embroidered on it was a hind.[5] Asher's stone being a beryl, the color of his standard was like the clear color of that precious stone [aquamarine] with which women adorn themselves; embroidered on it was an olive tree.[6] Joseph's stone being an onyx, the color of his standard was jet black; the embroidered design on it, for the two princes of Ephraim and of Manasseh, was [a symbol of] Egypt. On the standard of Ephraim there was also embroidered a bullock.[7] On the standard of Manasseh there was also embroidered a wild ox.[8] Benjamin's stone being a jasper, the color of his standard was a combination of the colors of all twelve stones; embroidered on it was a wolf.[9] Hence the meaning of the phrase "according to the emblems" is that each prince had an emblem that identified his standard.

Thus did Israel proceed—with the clouds over them. Now and then a beam of light would issue from one of the clouds, by which they knew in which direction they were to journey. When [it was God's] wish that they encamp, the cloud that was above the Tabernacle, in the center of Israel's camp, halted. Then the Levites would set up the Tabernacle first, before the camps of the several tribes arrived. When they did arrive, they would halt, and each one would encamp in the place assigned to it, with the clouds of glory hovering above them. Such was the distinction of Moses that the cloud of the Presence did not come down upon the Tabernacle until Moses said, "Come to rest, O Lord, upon the ten thousands of the families of Israel" (Num. 10:36).

When Israel journeyed, the Ark preceded them, and from between its staves sparks of fire would issue, which burned serpents and scorpions, and slew Israel's enemies.

What was the form of Israel's encampment? They were encamped around the Tabernacle in a circle whose perimeter was four thousand cubits. Moses, Aaron and his sons, and their families were to the east of the Tent of Meeting. The well, which was near the tent of Moses at the entrance to the court of the Tabernacle, indicated to the tribes where they were to encamp. How did the well do it? In this way: After the hangings for the court of the Tabernacle were put in place, the twelve princes stationed themselves at the well and uttered the song "Spring up, O well." At that, its waters would spring up and presently form many streams. At first, only one stream encircled the camp of the Presence [i.e., of the Tabernacle]. Out of this one stream, four streams flowed toward the four corners of the court of the Tabernacle, where they joined, thus encompassing the entire camp of the Levites, as well as coursing in between the areas to be occupied by the Levite families. Each of these areas—squares of dry land circling the camp of the Presence—was thus set apart for occupancy.

Then a larger stream encompassed the perimeter of Israel's entire camp. Its waters formed themselves into a number of streams, which flowed between every two tribes, encompassing them inside and out, marking off throughout the area squares of dry land, thus indicating the boundaries of each tribe. The stream made all kinds of good things to grow for Israel. Their cattle grazed just beyond the encampment—the cloud that spread over Israel separated them from their cattle. Because of the cloud's radiance of blue, the streams sparkled with the reflection of dawn, of the moon, and of the sun. Hence the peoples of the world, sighting them from many mil away, would extol them, saying, "Who is this shining like the dawn, beautiful as the moon, clear as the sun?" (Song 6:10).[10]

83. R. Judah bar Ilai taught: Two Arks journeyed with Israel in the wilderness—one in which the Torah was placed, and the other in which the Tablets broken by Moses were placed.[11] The one in which the Torah was placed was kept in the Tent of Meeting; the other, containing the broken Tablets, would come and go with them.

But the sages said: There was only one Ark; one time, in the days of Eli, it went forth and was captured.[12]

The Scouts

84. "Send thou men" (Num. 13:2). These words are to be considered in the light of what Scripture says elsewhere: "The stouthearted are bereft of sense . . . and none of the men of might could lift a hand" (Ps. 76:6). The words "bereft of sense" and "none . . . could lift a hand" apply to Moses and Aaron, who sent out the scouts. When these came and spoke slander about the Land, no one knew what to do—even Moses and Aaron could not, so to speak, lift a hand.

"Moses sent them to scout the land of Canaan, and said unto them: 'Get you up here into the southland, and go up into the mountains' " (Num. 13:17). Such is the way

---

1. The descendants of Issachar were astronomers and experts in calculation.
2. "Like silver, symbolical, according to R. Bechaye, of their great wealth. . . . They were merchants and seafaring traders" (Num. R., Soncino, p. 29, n. 8).
3. "Dan shall be a serpent in the way" (Gen. 49:17).
4. "Gad, a troop shall troop upon him" (Gen. 49:19).
5. "Naphtali is a hind let loose" (Gen. 49:21).
6. "As for Asher, his bread shall be fat" (Gen. 49:20).
7. The words "his firstling bullock" (Deut. 33:17) are applied to Joshua, of the tribe of Ephraim, who was first in rank and power.
8. "His horns are the horns of the wild ox" (ibid.) is applied to Gideon, who came from that tribe.
9. "Benjamin is a wolf that raveneth" (Gen. 49:27).
10. Num. R. 2:7; Tanhuma, Be-midbar, §12; Yalkut, Pekudei, §426; Yalkut, Be-midbar, §686.
11. Another tradition identifies the second ark as containing the bones of Joseph. See above, chap. 4, §71.
12. P. Shek, 1:1, 49c; Yalkut, 1 Sam. §101.

of traders—they show the inferior wares first, and then display the best.[1]

85. "And see . . . what the Land is" (Num. 13:18). "Look carefully," Moses said, "at the Land—one land rears strong men, and another weaklings; there is a land that increases its population, and another that diminishes it."

"And the people that dwelleth therein, whether they are strong or weak" (Num. 13:18). How are you to tell their strength? If they dwell in open camps, they are strong, since they seem to rely on their own strength. But if in fortresses, they are weak, and their spirits timorous.

"Is the soil rich or poor?" (Num. 13:20). Are the fruits of the soil light in weight, or rich, heavy? [To help determine the quality of the fruit], Moses told the scouts, "Examine the stones and pebbles of the soil—if they are granitelike, the fruits are heavy, succulent;[2] but if they are [brittle] like earthenware, the fruits are poor, shriveled.

86. "And they went up into the south, but he came unto Hebron" (Num. 13:22). One would have expected the text to say, "They came." However, according to Rava, "he came" implies that Caleb dissociated himself from the counsel of the scouts and went off [to Hebron] to prostrate himself on the graves of the patriarchs and to plead: My fathers, beseech mercy in my behalf, that I may be delivered from the counsel of the scouts. As for Joshua, Moses had already sought mercy in his behalf, as is said, "On behalf of Joshua the son of Nun, Moses cried out Yehoshua" (Num. 13:16),[3] which means: Yah yoshia, "May the Lord save you from the counsel of the scouts." As for the fulfillment of Caleb's prayer, Scripture says, "Caleb . . . had another spirit within him" (Num. 14:24).[4]

87. "And they came unto the valley of Eshkol and cut down," etc. (Num. 13:23). They did not wish to take any of the fruit of the Land of Israel. But Caleb drew his sword and, as he ran ahead of them [into the Land], said, "If you will not take it, then either you will have to kill me or I shall kill you." Otherwise, they would not have taken any of it.

"And they went and came unto Moses and unto Aaron. . . . And they told him, and said: 'We came unto the Land . . . surely it floweth with milk and honey. . . . Howbeit the people are fierce' " (Num. 13:26–28). Such is the way of those who speak slander: they begin by speaking well of one and end by speaking ill.

"And moreover we saw [giants] the children of Anak there" (Num. 13:28). As the scouts went up [into the south], so said R. Berekhiah the Priest Berabbi, they found there the three sons of Anak: Ahiman, Sheshai, and Talmai.

Why was the first called Ahiman? Because he used to boast, "O my brothers (ahai), who (man) dare come against me?" Sheshai? Because he was strong as marble (shaish). Talmai? Because as he walked he made furrows (telamim) in the earth. The sons of Anak? Because they were so tall that it seemed as though they wore the sun as a decorative chain about their necks (maanikim).

When the scouts saw the three, they were afraid. At once they went and said, "They are stronger than He"[5] (Num. 13:31), thus, as Resh Lakish interpreted it, casting insults at Him above; or, as R. Hanina bar Papa interpreted it, saying that even the Master of the house would be unable to fetch His belongings thence.[6]

88. "A land that eateth up the inhabitants thereof" (Num. 13:32). Rava expounded: The Holy One said: Certain occurrences, which I intended for the scouts' safety, they took to signify the Land's undesirability. What occurrences? When the scouts came into a city, pestilence had consumed its notables, and the people of the city were so occupied with burying them that no one paid any attention to the scouts.[7] Some say: Job had died, and all the people were occupied with his funeral. But the scouts, interpreting these occurrences in a bad sense, described the Land as one "that eateth up the inhabitants thereof." Thus, they gave an evil report even of the miraculous timing of these occurrences that the Holy One had brought about for their benefit.[8]

89. "And we were in our own eyes as grasshoppers, and so were we in their eyes" (Num. 13:33). The Holy One said to the scouts: You don't know what you have just let your mouths utter. I am ready to put up with your saying, "We were in our own eyes as grasshoppers." But I do take offense at your asserting, "And so were we in their eyes." Could you possibly know how I made you appear in their eyes? How do you know but that in their eyes you were like angels?

R. Mesharsheya said: The scouts were liars. As to "We were in our own eyes as grasshoppers"—sure enough [being cowards, they knew it]; but how did they know that "so we were in their eyes"?

Moreover [the scouts were not only liars but also fools]. Because when [a city's inhabitants] provided the funeral meal for the mourners, they served it under [tall] cedar trees. At the sight of such a gathering, the scouts scampered high up in the trees and sat there [hiding]. There they heard the people saying [jokingly]: Up in the trees we espy human beings as tiny as grasshoppers.[9]

90. "And Caleb stilled (va-yahas) the people concerning Moses" (Num. 13:30). That is, said Rabbah, Caleb won

---

1. The rocky and arid Negev, or southland, was the Land of Israel's least desirable part. Num. R. 16:2 and 16:12; Yalkut, Shelah, §742.
2. Num. R. 16:12; Tanhuma, Shelah, §6. A hard-rock subsurface retains water.
3. JV: "And Moses called Hoshea the son of Nun Joshua [Yehoshua]."
4. B. Sot 34b.
5. JV: "stronger than us." But mimmennu ("than us") may also mean "than He."
6. B. Sot 34b–35a; Num. R. 16:14, 16:17, and 16:11.
7. Who thus came and went in safety.
8. B. Sot 35a; Tanhuma, Shelah, §7.
9. Ibid.

them over (hesitam) with what he had to say. For Caleb had seen Joshua attempt to speak to the people, and they responded by insulting him, saying, "How dare this gelding[1] speak to us?" Hence Caleb decided: If I attempt to speak to them [as Joshua did], they will hurl another insult at me and shut me up. So he said to them, "Is this the only thing that Amram's son has done to us?"[2] Thinking that Caleb was about to speak in disparagement of Moses, they became silent. Then he said to the people, "Did he not bring us out of Egypt? Did he not split the Red Sea for us? Did he not bring down manna for us? So, even if he were to say, 'Make ladders and go up to heaven,' should we not obey him?"[3]

91. "And all the congregation lifted up their voice, and cried" (Num. 14:1). When the scouts returned from reconnoitering the Land, they scattered at once among the several tribes, each scout to his own tribe. There each scout flung himself into every corner of his house, crying and weeping, as one who has just had a death in his family. When his sons and daughters came and asked, "Sir, what ails you?" he made believe, as he stood up, that he was about to collapse, yet managed to say, "Alas, alas, I grieve for you, my sons, my daughters, my daughters-in-law. How the Amorites will abuse you! How they will lord it over you! How can anyone face the Amorites [much less resist them]?" Then all—the sons, daughters, daughters-in-law—began to sob loudly. When the neighbors heard the sobbing, they too began to weep—thus each family made its weeping heard by the next, until throughout the tribe there was nothing but weeping.

At the same time, each of his fellow scouts brought his family to weeping, until the sixty myriads [of Israel] became a single company, all of them sobbing, so that the sound of their weeping reached on high.[4]

92. Rabbah said in the name of R. Yohanan: That night was the night of the ninth of Av, concerning which the Holy One said: Now they give themselves to weeping without cause—so, throughout the generations, I will make [this very night] an occasion for weeping for them![5]

"But all the congregation bade stone them with stones, even as the glory of the Lord appeared" (Num. 14:10). According to R. Hiyya bar Abba, the verse implies that they took stones and threw them also at Him above.

"These men that did bring up an evil report of the Land died by the plague before the Lord" (Num. 14:37). R. Simeon ben Lakish said: They died an unnatural death. According to R. Hanina bar Papa, R. Shela of Kefar Temarta construed the verse to imply that the tongue of each spy grew so long that it reached down to his navel, and worms crawled out of his tongue into his navel and from his navel into his tongue.[6]

The Controversy of Korah and His Company

93. "Now Korah . . . took men . . . and they assembled themselves together against Moses. . . . 'All the congregation are holy, every one of them, and the Lord is among them; wherefore then lift ye up yourselves?' " etc. (Num. 16:1 and 16:3). What is written directly before this passage? "Instruct them to make for themselves . . . fringes . . . and to attach to the fringe at each corner a thread of blue" (Num. 15:38). Korah jumped up and asked Moses, "If a cloak is entirely blue, what is the law? Should it be exempt from the obligation of fringes?" Moses replied, "It is still subject to such obligation." Korah retorted, "The blueness of a cloak entirely blue cannot free it from the obligation, yet four blue threads can do so?" He went on, "If a house is full of Torah scrolls, what is the law? Should it be free from the obligation of having a mezuzah?" Moses replied, "It is still under the obligation of having a mezuzah." Korah snapped back, "The entire Torah cannot exempt a house, but the two sections[7] in a mezuzah exempt it? These things—you have not been commanded concerning them, you are just making them up."

The sages said that Korah was a man of great subtlety and one of the bearers of the Ark. When Moses commanded "that they put with the fringe of each corner a thread of blue" (Num. 15:38), Korah instantly ordered that two hundred and fifty cloaks of blue be made, in which the two hundred and fifty heads of the Sanhedrin who rose against Moses were to wrap themselves. Then Korah made a feast for them, before which they wrapped themselves in their blue cloaks. When Aaron's sons came to receive their dues, the breast and the shoulder,[8] the two hundred and fifty rose against them, saying, "Who told you that you entitled to take these? Was it not Moses? We will give nothing. He who is everywhere said no such thing." When the priests who were thus repulsed went back and told Moses, he tried to pacify the people [assembled at Korah's feast], but they rose against him also.[9]

94. When the Holy One said to Moses, "Take the Levites from among the children of Israel, and cleanse them; and thus thou shalt do unto them, to cleanse them. . . . let them cause a razor to pass over all their flesh" (Num. 8:6–7), Moses had it done at once to Korah. Then Korah's wife

---

1. Joshua was childless. So, since he had no children to conquer the Land, what right did he have to offer counsel? So Rashi. The difficult resh ketiah [BR: rosh katua] ("gelding") may also be rendered "head-chopper" (N. Bronznick, Leshonenu 41 [1977]: 3). Joshua, being a cruel man, the scouts charged, was not concerned about the frightful loss of lives.
2. He hoped that the ambiguously phrased question would lead the people to suppose that, like them, he was against Moses.
3. B. Sot 35a and En Yaakov, ad loc; Tanhuma, Shelah, §10.
4. Yalkut, Shelah, §743.
5. Weeping over the destruction of both Temples and over other calamities in the life of Israel.
6. "Measure for measure. They had sinned with their tongues, therefore their tongues grew long. . . . Hence Scripture says that they died by 'the' plague and not by 'a' plague. The words 'before the Lord' mean that they died by that plague which befitted them, in keeping with the norms 'before the Lord,' who metes out measure for measure." Rashi on Num. 14:37. B. Sot 35b.
7. Deut. 5:4–9 and 11:13–21.
8. Of the animals that had been slaughtered for the feast. See Lev. 7:31ff.
9. Num R. 18:3; Tanhuma, Korah, §2.

said to him, "Look at what else Moses has been doing. He had himself made king, his brother he made high priest, his nephews deputy high priests. When heave offering is brought, he says, 'That belongs to the priest.' When tithe is brought, and you, as Levites, take it, as is proper, he says to you, 'Give one portion out of ten to a priest.' As if this were not bad enough, he now has your hair cut off—the fact is, he is making sport of you, because he despises you; for some reason, he cast his eyes in envy upon your hair." Korah replied, "But he has done the same to himself." Said his wife, "Since every kind of eminence is his, he is applying the principle of 'Let me die with the Philistines' [Judg. 16:30]; [he is willing to be deprived of his own hair, so long as others are thus deprived]."

Korah, [his hair cut off], went around among the Israelites, and at first they did not recognize him. When he was asked, "Who did this to you?" he replied, "Moses. Moreover, I was seized by my arms and legs, and swung back and forth, and then told, 'Now you are clean.' Presently Aaron, the brother of Moses, was brought in. Moses had him decked out like a bride and seated in the Tent of Meeting!"

At that, Moses' enemies began to incite Israel against him, saying, "Moses is king, his brother Aaron high priest, his sons deputy high priests. Heave offering goes to the priest, twenty-four special gifts go to the priest,[1] heave offering of the first tithe goes to the priest." Then, we are told, "they assembled themselves together against Moses" (Num. 16:3).

Korah was a scorner and spoke in scorn against Moses and Aaron. What did he do? He assembled all the congregation and in their presence began to speak words of scorn, saying, "In my neighborhood there was a widow, and with her were her two fatherless daughters. The widow had only one field, and when she was about to plow, Moses said to her, 'Thou shalt not plow with an ox and an ass together' [Deut. 22:10]. When she was about to sow, Moses said to her, 'Thou shalt not sow thy field with two kinds of seed' [Lev. 19:19]. When she was about to reap the harvest and to stack the sheaves, Moses said to her, 'Thou shalt not harvest the gleanings, the overlooked sheaves, and the corners of the field' [cf. Lev. 19:9; Deut. 24:19]. When she was about to bring the harvest into the granary, Moses said to her, 'Give heave offering, first tithe, and second tithe.' She submitted ot the law and gave them to him. What did the poor woman do then? She sold the field and bought two sheep, so that she might clothe herself in the wool shorn from them and profit by the production of lambs. As soon as the sheep brought forth their young, Aaron came and said to the widow, 'Give me the firstling males, for this is what the Holy One said to me: "All the firstling males that are born of thy herd and of thy flock thou shalt sanctify unto the Lord thy God" ' [Deut. 15:19]. Again she submitted to the law and gave the firstling males to Aaron. When the time for shearing arrived, she sheared her two sheep. Then Aaron came again and said to the widow, 'Give me the first portion of the shearing, for the Holy One said, "You shall give him . . . the first shearing of your sheep" [Deut. 18:4]. She said, 'There is no strength in me to withstand this man; behold, I will slaughter the sheep and eat them.' After she slaughtered them, Aaron came once more and said to her, 'Give me the shoulder, the jaws, and the maw.' The widow said, 'Even after I have slaughtered my sheep, I am still not free of his demands; behold, I devote my sheep to the Sanctuary.' But Aaron said to her, 'In that case, they belong entirely to me, for thus said the Holy One, "Everything devoted in Israel shall be thine" ' [Num. 18:14]. Aaron picked up the sheep, went his way, and left her weeping—her and her two daughters. This is what happened to the poor woman. All such [evil] things Moses and Aaron do on their own; but they hang the blame on the Holy One!"

On, the son of Peleth, was saved by his wife, who said, "What will you get out of it? Either Moses remains master and you a follower, or Korah becomes master and you are still no more than a follower." On asked, "But what can I do? I have taken part in the deliberations, and I have sworn loyalty to Korah." "Stay home," she said, "and I will save you." Then she plied him with wine [until he was drunk], put him to bed [within their tent], and seated herself at its entrance. She then loosened her hair, so that whoever of Korah's company came [to summon On] and saw her had to withdraw.[2] In the meantime, Korah and his company were swallowed up.

Thus, "A wise woman buildeth her house" (Prov. 14:1) may be applied to the wife of On, the son of Peleth; and "The foolish woman plucketh it down with her own hands" (ibid.) to the wife of Korah.[3]

95. "Do this: Take ye censers . . . and put fire therein . . . and it shall be that the man whom the Lord doth choose, he shall be holy" (Num. 16:6–7). What did Moses have in mind in speaking thus? He meant: In the religions of idolaters, there are many false divinities, many evil rites, and many would-be priests who need not gather in a single edifice [to worship]. We, on the other hand, have only God, one Torah, one law, one altar, and one high priest. Yet you—all two hundred and fifty of you—are seeking the one high priesthood![4]

96. "And Moses said unto Korah: '. . . Is it not enough for thee that the God of Israel hast set thee apart? . . . Truly, it is against the Lord that thou and all thy company have banded together' " (Num. 16:8–11). Moses tried to win Korah over with this argument and others, yet nowhere will you find that Korah gave an answer. Clever as he was in his wickedness, Korah thought: If I answer Moses, I know that, being resourceful, he will certainly overwhelm me with his arguments, so that I might find myself reconciled with him against my will. It is better

---

1. In the Temple, ten, such as offerings, part or entire; in Jerusalem, four, such as firstlings and firstfruits; in the provinces, ten, such as the first of the shearing, heave offering, money for redeeming a firstborn, and so on. See Tos Hal 2:7.

2. It is immodest to look upon a married woman with her hair down.

3. B. Sanh 109b–110a; MTeh 1:15; Tanhuma, Korah, §3; Num. R. 18:4.

4. Tanhuma B, Korah, §11; Num. R. 18:8.

for me not to respond. When Moses saw that he could do nothing with Korah, he parted from him.[1]

97. "So they, and all that appertained to them, went down alive into Sheol" (Num. 16:33)—the opening of the earth adjusted itself to the girth of each person. Beginning at a man's soles, it opened slightly to admit the feet, widened for the legs, the thighs, and the abdomen, and then finally narrowed again for the neck. Korah and his company sank slowly bit by bit, and, as the earth was suffocating them, they kept crying in anguish: Moses is the truth, and his Torah is truth.[2]

98. "So they, and all that appertained to them, went down . . . into Sheol" (Num. 16:33). Our masters said: Even if they had clothes at a washerman's, these came rolling over and over, and were swallowed up with Korah and his company.[3]

99. R. Berekhiah said in the name of R. Helbo: Their very names vanished from the scrolls where they were recorded. R. Yose bar Hanina added: Even a needle borrowed by an Israelite from one of them was swallowed up with them.[4]

The Waters of Meribah

100. "And Moses and Aaron gathered the assembly together before the rock" (Num. 20:10). Moses and Aaron were walking with all Israel behind them, and whenever Israel saw a rock, they would halt and stand around it.

Now, there is no generation without its scoffers. And so the scoffers who happened to be near Moses and Aaron would say, "Don't you know that the son of Amram used to be Jethro's shepherd, and shepherds are expert in locating water? This being so, he wants to drag us to a place where he knows there is water and then say to us, "Look, I brought forth water for you," and thus deceive us. If that is indeed so, let him bring forth water from the rock we are at."

In fact, the Holy One had instructed Moses, "Out of any rock they wish, bring forth water for them." But Moses had his face turned forward, thinking that Israel behind him were following him, whereas actually they were standing in many groups at different rocks. When he said, "Come with me, that I may bring forth water for you," they [each group standing near a different rock] replied, "We want water from this one, [from this one], and if you fail to bring it forth from the rock we are at, we do not want it from any other rock." Moses' face paled with wrath, and he swore that he would indeed bring forth water, but only from the rock of his own choice.[5]

101. "And Moses lifted up his hand, and smote the rock with his rod twice" (Num. 20:11). After he smote it once, water began to trickle from the rock drop by drop. The people said [mockingly], "Son of Amram, is this water only for sucklings or infants just weaned from mother's milk?" At that, Moses lost his temper and smote the rock a second time, and so much water came forth that it swept everything before it.[6]

Litigious [Impertinent, and Suspicious] Persons

102. "How can I myself alone bear your litigiousness?"[7] (Deut. 1:12). So litigious were they that when one of them perceived his opponent in a lawsuit about to prevail, he would say: I have more witnesses to bring and further evidence to cite; tomorrow I shall demand a retrial, with more judges added to the panel. Such is meant by Scripture's "your litigiousness."

"And the burden of your impertinence?" (Deut. 1:12). They were so impertinent that when Moses left his tent early in the morning, they would say, "What made Amram's son leave so early? He is probably not on good terms with his family." On the other hand, when he was late in going out, they would say, "Why is Amram's son late? What do you think he is up to? Probably hatching schemes and designing plots against us!"[8]

103. "These are the words [of rebuke] that Moses spoke beyond the Jordan [for what they had done] in the desert" (Deut. 1:1). He rebuked them, Scripture implies, for what they had done in the desert—they used to grab their young children, toss them into the bosom of Moses, and say: Son of Amram, what rations did you prepare for these little ones? What sustenance did you provide for them?[9]

Aaron

104. "Oh that thou wert as my brother" (Song 8:1). Like what kind of brother? From the beginning of the world's creation until the present, you find brothers who hate each other—Cain hated Abel and slew him, Ishmael hated Isaac and sought to slay him, Esau hated Jacob, and the tribe fathers hated Joseph. Like what kind of brother, then? Like Moses and Aaron—of them it is said, "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity" (Ps. 133:1). Each loved the other, each cherished the other. Thus, when Moses was given the kingship and Aaron the high priesthood, not only was neither brother envious of the other, but each rejoiced in the distinction accorded to the other. You can see for yourself that it was so. For you find that when the Holy One told Moses, "Come now therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh" (Exod. 3:10), Moses replied, "O Lord, make someone else Thy messenger" (Exod. 4:13). Can you suppose Moses held back because he did not wish to go? Not at all. He spoke

1. Num. R. 18:9.
2. Yalkut Reuveni, Num. 16:31.
3. Num. R. 18:13.
4. P. Sanh 10:1, 28a.
5. Yalkut, Hukkat, §763.
6. Tanhuma, Hukkat, §9; Tanhuma B, Hukkat, §30.
7. JV: "your cumbrance."
8. Sif Deut., §12.
9. Sif Deut., §1; Yalkut, Devarim, §790.

as he did only out of respect for Aaron. For Moses said to himself: Before I appeared, my brother Aaron prophesied to Israel in Egypt for eighty years. (And the proof that Aaron prophesied to Israel in Egypt? The verse [in which Eli, a descendant of Aaron, is told], "I revealed Myself to the house of thy forebear, when they were in Egypt in bondage to Pharaoh's house; and at the same time I chose him out of all the tribes of Israel to be My priest" [1 Sam. 2:27–28].) So Moses said to God: Aaron has been prophesying to Israel during all those years—am I now to enter my brother's domain, and he be made to grieve?

That is the real reason why Moses did not wish to go. So the Holy One said to him: Aaron will not be disturbed because of what I ask you to do. Not only will he not grieve, he will even rejoice, as you will find out when he goes forth to meet you, as is said, "Behold, he cometh forth to meet thee; and when he seeth thee, he will rejoice in his heart" (Exod. 4:14)—not merely in [the words of] his mouth, but also in his heart; indeed, even more in his heart than in his mouth. When God told him this, Moses consented to go.

R. Simeon ben Yohai said: The heart that rejoiced in the distinction accorded to his brother deserved to wear the Urim and Tummim.

"And he went, and met him at the mountain of God, and kissed him" (Exod. 4:27). These words are to be considered in the light of the verse "Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other" (Ps. 85:11). In this verse, "mercy" alludes to Aaron, who is referred to in the words "And of Levi he said: 'Thy Tummim and thy Urim be with Thy merciful one' " (Deut. 33:8); "truth" alludes to Moses, of whom God said, "He is trusted in all My house" (Num. 12:7); "righteousness" refers to Moses, who "executed the righteousness of the Lord" (Deut. 33:21); and "peace" refers to Aaron, of whom God said, "He walked with Me in peace and uprightness" (Mal. 2:6).

Thus the verse "Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other" (Ps. 85:11) alludes to Moses and Aaron.[1]

105. Moses used to say, "Let the law pierce the mountain."[2] But Aaron loved peace, pursued peace, and made peace between man and man, as is said, "The law of truth was in his mouth, and unrighteousness was not found in his lips; he walked with Me in peace and uprightness, and did turn many away from iniquity" (Mal. 2:6).[3]

106. "It is like the precious oil . . . coming down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard," etc. (Ps. 133:2). Our masters taught: Two drops of oil like pearls hung from Aaron's beard. It is further taught—so said R. Papa—that when Aaron spoke, they [did not fall off, but] rolled up and nestled in the roots of his beard.[4]

1. Tanhuma, Shemot, §27–28; Tanhuma, Shemot, §24–25.
2. "The law must prevail, even if it involves great loss or difficulty. The Latin equivalent of this principle is 'Fiat justitia ruat coelum' (Let justice prevail, even if the heavens fall)" (Leon Nemoy).
3. B. Sanh 6b.
4. B. Hor 12a.

Aaron's Death

107. "The mount of the mount" (Num. 20:22)[5]—that is, a mount on top of another mount, like a small apple on top of a large apple. For even though the cloud that went before Israel leveled heights and raised valleys, nevertheless the Holy One left this mount on top of a mount as a token to remind Israel of the miracles the Holy One had performed for them. For in order that Israel not become weary from going up and down mountains, the Holy One left no mountain standing in the wilderness. There were, however, important exceptions: even though the cloud turned the wilderness into a plain, it always left one elevated area for the Tabernacle to encamp on. And it also left these three mountains standing: Mount Sinai for the Presence, Mount Nebo as a burial place for Moses, and the mount on the mount as a burial place for Aaron.[6]

108. When Aaron's time came to depart from this world, the Holy One said to Moses, "Go tell Aaron of his impending death." So Moses rose early in the morning and went to Aaron. As soon as he called out, "Aaron, my brother," Aaron came down and asked, "What made you come here so early today?" Moses replied, "During the night I meditated on a matter in Scripture which I found distressing, and so I rose early and came to you." "What was the matter?" Aaron asked. "I do not remember, but I know it was in the book of Genesis. Bring it and we'll read it." They took the book of Genesis, read each and every section in it, and said about each one of them, "The Holy One wrought well, created well." But when they came to the creation of Adam, Moses asked, "What is one to say of Adam, who brought death to the world, so that I, who prevailed over the ministering angels, and you, who held back death[7]—are not even you and I to have a like end? After all, how many more years have we to live?" "Not many," Aaron answered. Moses continued talking, until finally he mentioned to him the precise day when death was to come. At that moment, Aaron's bones felt the imminence of his own demise. So he asked, "Is it because of me that you found the matter in Scripture so distressing?" Moses answered, "Yes."

At once Israel noticed that Aaron's height had diminished, even as Aaron said, "My heart doth writhe within me; and the terrors of death are fallen upon me" (Ps. 55:5). Moses asked, "Is dying acceptable to you?" Aaron: "Yes." Moses: "Then let us go up to the mount on the mount." At that, the three—Moses, Aaron, and Eleazar—went up in the sight of all Israel.

Had Israel known that Aaron was going up to die, they would not have allowed it but would have besought mercy in his behalf. However, they thought that the Divine Word had summoned him.

When the three reached the top of the mount, a cave opened up for them. In it they found a burning lamp and

5. JV: "Mount Hor"; Hebrew: hor ha-har.
6. Tanhuma B, Hukkat, §37.
7. See above in this chapter, §49, and Num. 17:12–13.

a couch, both wrought by Heaven. Then Aaron proceeded to remove his garments one by one, and Eleazar donned them, until finally a celestial cloud enveloped Aaron's body.

Moses said to Aaron, "Just think, Aaron, my brother, when Miriam died, you and I attended her. Now that you are about to die, I and Eleazar are attending you. But I—when I die, who will attend me?" The Holy One said to Moses, "As you live! I will attend you."

Then Moses said to Aaron, "My brother, go up [and lie] on this couch," and he went up. "Stretch out your arms," and he stretched them out. "Shut your eyes," and he shut them. "Close your mouth," and he closed it. At once the Presence came down, and as it kissed him, his soul departed. Then, as Moses and Eleazar kissed him on his cheeks, the cloud of glory rose up and covered him. The Holy One commanded them, "Go hence." The moment they left, the cave was sealed.

As Moses and Eleazar were coming down, all Israel stood waiting apprehensively to see Aaron, because he loved peace and pursued peace. When they realized that while three had gone up, only two had come down, Satan began circulating among Israel, trying to incite all of them against Moses and Eleazar. Israel split into three groups holding differing views: one said, "Moses slew Aaron because he was envious of him"; another, "Eleazar slew him, wishing to inherit the high priesthood"; and the third, "Aaron died by the will of Heaven."

The people seized Moses and Eleazar, and demanded, "Where is Aaron?" Moses replied, "The Holy One has hidden him away for life in the world-to-come." The people said, "We do not believe you. It may be that he said something that did not suit you, and you imposed the death penalty on him." And they were about to stone Moses and Eleazar. What did the Holy One do? He beckoned to some angels, who opened the cave and brought forth Aaron's bier, which then floated in the air, while other angels intoned praise before it. Thus all Israel saw Aaron, as is said, "All the congregation saw that Aaron was dead" (Num. 20:29). And what did the angels intone? "He entereth into peace, as he resteth on his couch" (Isa. 57:2).[1]

109. "They wept for Aaron thirty days, even all the House of Israel" (Num. 20:29); whereas for Moses only men wept, because he rendered judgment strictly according to the truth and used to rebuke people besides. But Aaron never said to a man or to a woman, "You have acted offensively." More! He sought peace, as is said, "He walked with Me in peace and uprightness" (Mal. 2:6). What is meant by the words that follow in the verse: "And did turn many away from iniquity" (ibid.)? These words teach that when Aaron would walk along the road and meet a wicked man, he greeted him warmly. The next day, when that man was about to go and commit a transgression, he would say to himself: Woe is me, how could I ever raise my eyes and face Aaron? I would be too embarrassed by the man who greeted me so warmly. The result: That wicked man would refrain from further transgression.

Likewise, when two men quarreled, Aaron would go, sit with one of them, and say, "My son, look how your friend beats his breast and tears his hair out as he says, 'Woe is me, how can I raise my eyes and face my friend? I would be too embarrassed, for it is I who acted offensively toward him.' "

Aaron would sit with him until he removed all rancor from his heart. Then Aaron would go and say the same thing to the other man. Later, when one met the other, they would hug and kiss each other. Hence it is said, "They wept for Aaron . . . even all the House of Israel."[2]

The Miracles in the Valley of Arnon

110. "Spring up, O well, sing ye unto it" (Num. 21:17). What were the miracles in the valley of Arnon [that inspired Israel to sing, "Spring up, O well"]? A man could stand on top of a mountain on one side of the valley and speak to a friend seven miles away on top of a mountain on the other side. Now, the road [to the Promised Land] ran down to the valley [between these two mountains] and then ascended, for Israel's path lay through several valleys on their way [to the Land]. At that spot, endless armies of all the nations assembled, some of them taking up positions within the valley. The mountain on one side of the valley was riddled with caves, while facing these caves in the mountain on the other side of the valley there were numerous rocks projecting breastlike formations.

The armies entered the caves, figuring: When Israel go down into the valley, our men positioned there will confront them, while here, our men high up in the caves will strike them from the rear, and so we shall slay them all.

However, when Israel reached that spot, the Holy One did not make it necessary for them to go down into the valley, for He beckoned to the mountains [and they came together], the "breasts" of one mountain entering into the opposite caves of the other, so that all within the caves were killed. Moreover, the two mountains brought their summits close to each other, forming a road so level that it was impossible to tell one mountain from the other.

This valley formed the boundary between the Land of Israel and the land of Moab. The mountain in the land of Moab, containing the caves, did not move, while the mountain from the Land of Israel, with its pointed rocks resembling breasts, moved and locked with the mountain facing it. Why was it the one to move? Because it belonged to the Land of Israel. The mountain's eagerness to move may be understood by the parable of a maidservant who, on seeing her master's son coming toward her, leaped forward in her eagerness to welcome him.[3]

After the rocks had entered the caves and crushed all the mighty warriors in them, the well came down into the valley,[4] and, as its water swelled, it drowned the armies stationed there, even as the Red Sea had drowned the

---

1. Yalkut, Hukkat, §764.

2. ARN 12; Yalkut, Hukkat, §764.

3. The maidservant is the mountain, the master is God, and the son Israel.

4. It had remained intact, although the tops of the mountains had come together.

Egyptians. Israel passed over the top of the mountains without being aware of these miracles. The Holy One said: I will now let the children of Israel know how many hosts I destroyed for their sake. So the well, flowing down into the caves, flushed out skulls, arms, and legs in unending profusion. Subsequently, when Israel returned to look for the well, they saw it in the midst of the valley shining like the moon, still bringing up the limbs of the warriors. Then Israel, standing over the valleys, sang a song about the well: "Spring up, O well, sing ye unto it."[1]

Og, King of Bashan

111. When Moses and the children of Israel came to the border of Edrei, Moses said, "Let us encamp here, and tomorrow at dawn we shall breach Edrei and subdue it." They got up at dawn, when the eye can take in very little, and were about to attempt to breach Edrei. Just then Moses raised his eyes and saw Og sitting on the wall with his feet reaching down to the earth. Moses said, "I know not what I see, unless these people have built another wall in the night." The Holy One said to him, "Moses, what you see is Og." Moses was afraid, but the Holy One said to him, " 'Fear him not' (Num. 21:34)—I will cause him to fall before you." Israel then proceeded to wage war against him.

Og said: How large is the camp of Israel? Three parasangs in circumference. I will pluck up a mountain three parasangs in circumference, hurl it upon them, and kill them. He went and plucked up a mountain three parasangs in circumference and carried it on his head. But the Holy One sent ants, which bored holes in it, so that it slipped down around his neck. He tried to pull it up, but since his teeth began jutting out from both sides of his mouth, he could not pull it past them.

How tall was Moses? Ten cubits.[2] So he took an ax ten cubits long, jumped ten cubits into the air, struck Og on his ankles, and killed him.

It is taught that Abba Saul said: I used to be a gravedigger. Once I chased a deer, which entered the thighbone of a corpse. I pursued the deer for three parasangs, but I neither caught up with the deer nor reached the end of the thighbone. When I returned the way I came, I was told, "The thighbone was part of the corpse of Og, king of Bashan."[3]

Balaam

112. "And Moab said unto the elders of Midian" (Num. 22:4). What brought the elders of Midian to Moab? When the Moabites saw Israel victorious in a way that transcended human experience, they said: Their leader grew up in Midian. Let us find out from the Midianites what his powers are. The elders of Midian reported: His power is only in his mouth.[4] So the Moabites said: We, too, shall come against them with a man whose power is in his mouth.

"And Moab said unto the elders of Midian." But do you not find Midianites generally fighting Moabites, and the hostility between them of long standing? A parable of two dogs who always fought each other will answer the question. When a wolf attacked one of them, the other thought: If I do not come to his aid, the wolf will kill him today, and tomorrow he will have a go at me. Reasoning thus, Moab joined with Midian. As the proverb has it: The weasel and the cat, though natural enemies, make a joint meal on the fat of their luckless prey.

"God said to Balaam: 'Thou shalt not go with them [Balak's messengers]' " (Num. 22:12). So he said, "If so," I shall curse the people of Israel from here.' " When God replied, "Thou shalt not curse the people" (ibid.), Balaam said, "I shall bless them." God replied, "They do not need your blessing, 'for they are blessed' " (ibid.). There is a proverb: To the wasp we say, "Neither your honey nor your sting."

"And God came upon Balaam, who said unto Him: 'I have prepared seven altars,' " etc. (Num. 23:4). The Holy One said to him, "O wicked one, what are you doing?" He replied, "I have prepared seven altars." Balaam was like the moneychanger who gave false weights. The chief of the market, becoming aware of it, asked the moneychanger, "Why are you cheating by giving false weights?" The latter replied, "I have already taken care of you with a gift sent to your home." So, too, Balaam. When the holy spirit spoke sharply to him, saying, "Villain, what are you doing?" he replied, "I have [already] prepared seven altars."

"So the Lord put a thing in the mouth of Balaam" (Num. 23:5). The "thing," said R. Eleazar, was an angel;[5] a hook lock, said R. Jonathan.

R. Yohanan said: From the blessings uttered by that wicked man you learn what he had really intended. He wished to say to them that they are to have neither synagogues nor houses of study, [but he was forced to utter], "How goodly are thy tents,[6] O Jacob" (Num. 24:5). He wished to say that the Presence is not to rest upon them, [but he was forced to utter], "And thy Tabernacles,[7] O Israel" (ibid.). He wished to say that their kingdom is not to endure, [but he was forced to utter], "As valleys are they stretched out" (Num. 24:6). That they are to have neither olive trees nor vineyards, [but he was forced to utter], "As gardens by the riverside" (ibid.). That their fragrance is not to go forth, [but he was forced to utter], "As aloes planted of the Lord" (ibid.). That they are to have no kings of stature, [but he was forced to utter], "As cedars beside the waters" (ibid.). That they are to have no king who is the son of a king,[8] [but he was forced to utter], "He shall pour water out of his buckets"[9] (Num. 24:7). That their kingdom is not to rule over other nations, [but he was forced to utter], "And his seed shall be in

---

1. Tanhuma B, Hukkat, §47; Num. R. 19:25.
2. About fifteen feet.
3. Deut. R. 1:24; Yalkut, Devarim, §810; B. Ber 54b; B. Nid 24b.
4. Prayer and intercession.
5. To curb his speech.
6. "Tents" is a metaphor for synagogues.
7. The Tabernacle symbolizes the Divine Presence.
8. That, because of civil war, there are to be no dynasties.
9. That each king shall be the descendant of his predecessor.

many waters" (ibid.). That their kingdom is not to be strong, [but he was forced to utter], "And his king shall be higher than Agag" (ibid.). That their kingdom is not to inspire awe, [but he was forced to utter], "And their kingdom shall be exalted" (ibid.).

R. Abba bar Kahana differed: All the blessings Balaam [was forced to utter] did in fact turn into curses,[1] except for the curse on synagogues and houses of study,[2] as is said, "But the Lord thy God turned the curse into a blessing for thee, because the Lord thy God loved thee" (Deut. 23:6). Note that the verse reads, "The curse," but not, "The curses" [i.e., Balaam's other curses].

"For from the top of the rocks I see him" (Num. 23:9). The verse tells you how great was that wicked man's hatred—from his blessings you may surmise what his real thoughts were. To whom may he be compared? To a man about to cut down a tree. If not an expert woodsman, he will cut down the branches, one by one, and soon grow weary; but an experienced woodsman first of all exposes the roots and then chops down the whole tree in one blow. So, too, that wicked one said: Why curse each tribe separately? I'll go for the roots and thus chop down all the tribes in one blow. But when he attempted to strike at the roots, he found them unyielding, as implied in his admission "From the top of the rocks[3] I see him [Israel, the patriarchs' progeny, as unyielding]." A rock that rests only on the surface is easily pulled up. Not the rocks [who are the patriarchs]—they, as well as their progeny, are held fast by layers of earth which reach all the way to the deep.

"Behold (hen),[4] a people that dwells apart" (Num. 23:9)—the word hen [spelled hn] in Greek means "one" ["unique"]. Israel's uniqueness is intimated by the numerical values of the letters in hn—the epithet given to Israel in this verse—which cannot be combined in the manner that such numerical values of letters in epithets given to other nations can.[5] You can see this for yourself. When you examine all the letters in the alphabet, you will find that each of them has a mate [with which the number 10 or 100 may be formed], except the letters he and nun in hn, the epithet for Israel; these two letters have no such mates. Thus the letter alef (1) together with tet (9) adds up to 10. The letter bet (2) together with het (8) also adds up to 10. And just as alef (1) + tet (9) and bet (2) + het (8) add up to 10, so gimmel (3) + zayin (7) and dalet (4) + vav (6) [add up to 10]. But the he (5) cannot be mated in this way [since it has no mate except itself to make 10]. Likewise, in another series of combinations, the letters yod (10) + tzade (90) and kaf (20) + pe (80) and lamed (30) + ayin (70) and mem (40) + samekh (60)—[each adds up to 100]. But the nun (50) cannot be mated in this way.[6]

113. "And now behold, I go unto my people; come, and I will counsel thee," etc. (Num. 24:14). Balaam said to Balak, "The God of these people hates fornication, and [as it happens] these people are very fond of linen garments.[7] Listen, I have useful counsel for you. Make tents partitioned by hanging draperies and put harlots inside—old ones in the front part and young ones in the rear, and let them sell linen garments. So, all the way from snow-capped Hermon [in the north] to Beth-ha-yeshimot [in the south], Balak erected such tents and placed harlots inside—old ones in front and young ones in the rear. Whenever an Israelite ate, drank, and became mellow, and went out for a stroll in the marketplace, an old harlot would say to him, "Aren't you interested in linen garments?" She would offer them at the going price, while the young harlot in the rear of the tent offered them for less. After two or three sales, the young harlot would say, "You are now like one of the family. Sit down and select any other garment you desire." Near her, there would be a cooler filled with Ammonite wine, which is strong and stimulates the body to lascivious thoughts. Then she would say, "Will you have a cup of wine?" After he drank, his passion aroused, he would say, "Yield to me." At that, the harlot would take her idol from her bosom and say "[First] worship this." He: "But I am a Jew." She: "What difference does that make? You need do no more than uncover yourself." (He did not know that was the way the idol was worshiped.) "What is more, I will not satisfy you until you reject the Torah of Moses your teacher."[8]

The Daughters of Zelophehad

114. "Then drew near the daughters of Zelophehad," etc. (Num. 27:1). When the daughters of Zelophehad heard that the Land was about to be divided among the tribes—but only for males, not for females—they gathered to take counsel. They decided that the mercies of flesh and blood are not like the mercies of Him who is everywhere. Flesh and blood is apt to be more merciful to males than to females. But He who spoke and the world came into being is different—His mercies are for males as well as females, His mercies being for all: "The Lord is good to all, and His tender mercies are over all His works" (Ps. 145:9).

"Give unto us a possession" (Num. 27:4). R. Nathan said: Women's tenacity is stronger than men's. The men of Israel [being willing to give up the Land], said,[9] "Let us make a captain and let us return to Egypt" (Num. 14:4). But Israel's women insisted, "Give unto us a possession."[10]

---

1. What Balaam had in mind was eventually fulfilled.
2. Unlike other boons, such as kingship, which Balaam did not wish Israel to retain, synagogues and houses of study never disappeared.
3. The phrase "the top of the rocks" is taken to refer to the patriarchs, as, e.g., in the verse "Look unto the rock whence ye were hewn" (Isa. 51:1). In this passage, the patriarchs are spoken of as "Israel's tough roots," the sight of which persuaded Balaam that his proceeding against Israel would prove futile.
4. The form hen is a demonstrative adverb less widely used than hinneh.
5. Thus, the concluding part of Num. 23:9 is read not, "Shall not be reckoned among the nations," but, "The letters in its name will not be combined in the way letters in the names of other nations may be combined."
6. The nun has no mate—only itself—to make 100. Num. R. 20:18–19; B. Sanh 105a–b; Tanhuma B, Balak, §19; Tanhuma, Balak, §12; Yalkut, Balak, §768.
7. Having grown accustomed to them in Egypt. Samuel Edels.
8. B. Sanh 106a; P. Sanh 10:2, 28d.
9. Or, "Women's tenacity is stronger than men's. The men of Israel, [willing to give up freedom], said . . ." So Leon Nemoy.
10. Sif Num., §133.

115. "And they stood before Moses" (Num. 27:2). Each of the five daughters presented one of the five pleas. The first said, "Our father died in the wilderness" (Num. 27:3). The second said, "He was not one of the faction, Korah's, that banded together against the Lord" (ibid.). The third: "But he died in his own sin" (ibid.)—[he gathered wood on the Sabbath day]. The fourth: "He had no sons" (ibid.). The fifth: "Why should our father's name be lost to his family?" (Num. 27:4).[1]

116. It is taught: The daughters of Zelophehad were exceedingly wise, knew well how to expound Scripture, and were perfectly virtuous. They were exceedingly wise, since they chose to speak at the right time; for just then, so stated R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, Moses our teacher was engaged in interpreting the section on levirate marriage. So they said, "If in levirate marriage our status is like that of sons,[2] give us—as to a son—a possession. If not,[3] let our mother be subjected to levirate marriage. At once "Moses brought their cause before the Lord" (Num. 27:5).

The daughters also knew well how to expound Scripture, for they said, "If our father had a son, we would not have spoken;[4] or even if that son had a daughter, we would not have spoken."[5]

They were also perfectly virtuous, since they married only men who were worthy of them.[6]

117. "And the Lord spoke unto Moses, saying: 'The plea of Zelophehad's daughters is just' " (Num. 27:6–7)—this indeed is the law. The Holy One went on, "Did you not say to the people, 'Any cause that is too difficult for you ye shall bring unto me, and I shall hear it' [Deut. 1:17]? Now you find a law you did not know set forth by women!" A parable of a moneychanger who said to his apprentice, "If sela are brought to you to be changed into small coins, change them; but if pearls are brought [to be appraised and sold], bring them to me." When a bead of glass was brought to the apprentice, he took it to his master. But his master had to consult someone else about it.

R. Simeon ben Lakish differed: Moses our teacher did know this law, but first the women came before the chiefs of tens, who said, "This, being a case concerning inheritance, is not in our jurisdiction; it belongs to our superiors." Then the women came to the chiefs of fifties, who, seeing that the chiefs of tens had shown them deference, said, "We, too, have those who are superior to us in knowledge." A like reply was given by the chiefs of hundreds, the chiefs of thousands, and the princes. All answered the same way, because they were unwilling to adjudicate the case before their superiors did. So the daughters of Zelophehad went to Eleazar, who told them, "There is Moses our teacher. [Go to him]." They, together with all the aforementioned dignitaries, appeared before Moses. When Moses realized that each dignitary had shown deference to his superior, he said: If I tell them the law, I shall be snatching eminence not properly mine. So he said, "I, too, have a superior." Hence, "Moses brought their cause before the Lord" (Num. 27:5).[7]

The War with Midian

118. "Avenge the children of Israel of the Midianites" (Num. 31:2).[8] These words make known the exellence of Israel's leaders, who refuse to depart from the world until they wreak vengeance for Israel, which is also simultaneously the vengeance of Him who spoke and the world came into being.[9]

119. "And Moses sent them" (Num. 31:6). The Holy One had told Moses, "Avenge," meaning, you yourself are to do it. Yet he sent others! However, since he was highly regarded in the land of Midian, he thought: It is not right for me to cause distress to a people who have been good to me. As the proverb puts it: Do not cast a stone into the cistern from which you drank.[10]

120. "They also put Balaam son of Beor to the sword" (Num. 31:8). What was Balaam doing there? He came to take his reward for the twenty-four thousand Israelites he caused to die.[11] As people say, "When the camel demands horns, he gets his ears lopped off."[12]

R. Jonathan said: At the time Phinehas went to war against Midian, all his troops went with him. The instant wicked Balaam saw Phinehas, he made his two arms as firm as stone tablets and [using them for wings] flew off, rising heavenward. The instant Phinehas saw him, he also few off, rising behind Balaam until he found him standing before the throne of glory about to prostrate himself in supplication. At that, Phinehas showed Balaam the high priest's plate, upon which is written, "Holy unto the Lord," and Balaam instantly fell [down to earth]. Phinehas then seized him and brought him to Moses, where he was tried and condemned to death.[13]

---

1. Yalkut, Pinhas, §773.
2. Like the existence of a son, the existence of a daughter also obviates levirate marriage, since the deceased father was not childless.
3. If, in the matter of inheritance, daughters are not to be treated like sons, as legal issue of the deceased father.
4. "This plea shows that they knew the exposition of Num. 27:8, according to which a daughter has no claim where there is a son. See B. BB 110a" (BB, Soncino, p. 490, n. 16).
5. Knowing that a son's daughter has preference over the daughter of the deceased. See B. BB 115b; BB, Soncino, p. 491, n. 1.
6. They married the sons of their uncles. See Num. 36:11; B. BB 119b; Yalkut, Pinhas, §773.
7. Tanhuma, Pinhas, §8–9; Num. R. 21:12.
8. In the same verse, Moses is told, "Afterward shalt thou be gathered unto thy people."
9. Sif Num., §157.
10. Num. R. 22:4.
11. These were victims of the plague, caused by Israel's lechery resulting from Balaam's scheme. See Num. 25:9 and above in this chapter, §113.
12. So, too, Balaam demanded a reward and lost his life.
13. B. Sanh 106a; Num. R. 22:5; Yalkut, Mattot, §785.

Israel's Provisioning in the Wilderness

121. R. Eliezer asked R. Simeon, saying to him, "When the children of Israel went out of Egypt, did weavers' gear go out with them?" R. Simeon replied, "No." "Then how did they clothe themselves during those forty years?" R. Simeon replied, "With garments that the ministering angels gave them." "But did not their garments wear out?" "Have you not read that Moses said to Israel in the wilderness, 'Thy raiment waxed not old upon thee' (Deut. 8:4)?" "But did not the little ones among the children of Israel grow up?" "Go out and learn from the snail: all the while that he grows, his shell grows with him!" "But did not the garments require washing?" "The cloud of fire cleansed their garments and made them white." "But were not the garments scorched in the process?" "Go out and learn from the amiant,[1] which is cleansed only by fire." "But did not the children of Israel get vermin?" "Since worms and maggots had no power over dead bodies in Israel, how much less did they have over living bodies of Israel!" "But since the children of Israel did not change their garments, did they not reek with sweat?" "The well of living waters brought up varieties of plants and spices for the children of Israel, and they rolled in these, so the fragrant smell of them was carried from world's end to world's end."

When Israel saw how the Holy One led them, made their garments white, and refreshed them in the wilderness, they began to sing in praise as they said, "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures" (Ps. 23:1–2).[2]

122. "And I have led you forty years in the wilderness" (Deut. 29:4). The Holy One asked Israel, "Have I been as a wilderness unto Israel?" (Jer. 2:31), have I led you as though you were in a wilderness? In the way of the world, when a king of flesh and blood goes forth into a wilderness, does he do so in order to find quiet or fine food and drink such as he finds in his own palace? No. Yet you were slaves in Egypt, and I brought you forth from there, caused you to be sheltered under clouds of glory, appointed three redeemers for you—Moses, Aaron, and Miriam, ever ready to serve you. The clouds of glory were seven in number: one above you, one below you, four at the four points of the compass; and the seventh in front of you smote serpents and scorpions, leveled hills and valleys, burned thorns and thistles, and caused smoke to go up. Seeing the smoke, all kings of the east and of the west said, "Who is this that cometh up out of the wilderness, like columns of smoke?" (Song 3:6). I caused manna to come down for you, the well to spring up for you, even brought you quails. Have I then been a wilderness unto Israel? Have I guided you as in a wilderness? Or would you say that "it has been for you a land of thick darkness" (Jer. 2:31)? Have I not Myself given light for you in the dark that beset you?

In the way of the world, when a man receives a guest, he will slaughter a calf for him the first day and hens the second day; he will cook pulse the third day; but on the fourth day he will give the guest something less delicious, and even less so on succeeding days. Thus, the first day is not at all like the last day. Do you suppose the Holy One also acted in this way? Hence Scripture says, "These forty years the Lord thy God hath been with thee" (Deut. 2:7)—the last day as much as the first.[3]

The End of the Forty Years in the Wilderness

123. During all the years that Israel was in the wilderness, on the eve of every ninth of Av, Moses sent a herald throughout the camp to proclaim, "Go out and dig graves, go out and dig graves!" and the people went out and dug graves, in which they spent the night. In the morning, the herald went out and announced, "Let those who are alive separate from the dead!" The living then stood up and found themselves some fifteen thousand short.[4] [And so it continued year after year in this way] until Israel was sixty myriads short. In the last of the forty years, they did the same thing and, upon finding that they were all still alive, said: Perhaps we have erred in calculating the new moon.[5] So, to make sure [they had the right date], they did the same thing the night of the tenth, each one spending it in the grave he had dug. In the morning, all of them again stood up alive. Then, to make quite sure, they did the same thing the night of the eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth of the month. Finally, when they saw that not one of them had died, they said: It appears that the Holy One has removed the harsh decree from over us. They declared that day a festival. Accordingly, the sages taught: Israel had no days more festive than the fifteenth of Av and the Day of Atonement.[6]

124. For forty years the Holy One made Israel go in a roundabout way through the wilderness, saying, "Should I now lead them on a straight route, each one will take possession of a field or a vineyard and regard himself as not obligated to study Torah. I shall therefore lead them by way of the wilderness, where they will eat manna, drink the waters of the well, and so [give themselves to the study of] Torah, which will then be inculcated in them." Moreover, when the Canaanites heard that Israel was about to enter the Land, they burned the newly planted seeds, uprooted trees, cut down saplings, demolished buildings, and stopped up wells. The Holy One said: I promised Abraham to bring his children into a land full of good things. So I shall detain them for forty years in the wil-

---

1. A variety of asbestos, with flexible filaments.
2. Deut. R. 7:11; MTeh 23:4; PRKM 11:21.
3. Deut. R. 7:9; Yalkut, Be-midbar, §683.
4. One-fortieth of the adults died each year.
5. So that the night they spent in the graves was not the night ushering in the ninth of Av.
6. On these days young people used to gather in vineyards for formal courtship (Ta 4:8). P. Ta 4:10, 69c; Lam. R., proem 33; Midrash Sam. 32:5.

derness, until the Canaanites get busy and repair what they have damaged.[1]

125. "When you enter the Land and plant" (Lev. 19:23). When her chicks are tiny, the mother hen gathers them together and places them beneath her wings, warming them and grubbing for them. But once they are grown up, if one of them attempts to get near her, she pecks at its head and says, "Go grub in your own dunghill!" So also, during the forty years that Israel were in the wilderness, manna fell, the well came up for them, quails were at hand for them, clouds of glory encircled them, and the pillar of cloud led the way before them. But once Israel were about to enter the Land, Moses said, "Let everyone pick up his hoe, go out, and plant his own saplings."[2]

126. "These are the stages of the children of Israel" (Num. 33:1). The listing of the stages may be understood by a parable. A king had a son who was sick. He took him to a distant place to have him cured. On their way back, the father began listing the stages of the journey: Here we slept, here we were chilled, here you had a headache. Likewise, the Holy One said to Moses: List for Me all the places where Israel caused Me anxiety. Hence: "These are the stages."[3]

The Prophecy of Moses

127. "There hath not arisen a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses" (Deut. 34:10). It is taught: All the prophets looked into a glass that was dim, as is said, "By the ministry of the prophets I appear dimly" (Hos. 12:11).[4] But Moses our teacher looked through a glass that was translucent, for of him it is said, "The similitude of the Lord doth he behold" (Num. 12:8).[5]

Fifty gates of understanding were created in the world, and at Sinai all but one was opened to Moses, of whom it is said, "Thou hast made him but little lower than God" (Ps. 8:6).[6]

128. "And Moses said unto the Lord" (Exod. 19:23). How may the give-and-take between Moses and the Lord be illustrated? By the parable of a cave situated at the edge of the sea. The sea rises and fills it. Henceforth, the waters of the sea flow freely into the cave, and the waters of the cave into the sea. So, too, [was the give-and-take between Moses and the Lord]: "The Lord said unto Moses," "Moses said unto the Lord," "The Lord said unto Moses."[7]

129. "And I will draw upon the spirit which is on thee, and put it upon them" (Num. 11:17). Since the spirit of the prophecy in the elders was drawn from Moses, do you suppose that his prophecy was at all diminished? In no way! To what may Moses be compared at that moment? To a lamp that is alight—though many lamps are lit from it, still, its own light is not at all diminished. So it was with Moses. Though many prophets drew upon his prophecy, Moses' own prophecy was not at all diminished, as is said, "There hath not arisen a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses" (Deut. 34:10).[8]

130. "Moses, Moses" (Exod. 3:4). He was Moses before God had spoken to him, and [the same] Moses after God had spoken to him.[9]

131. How did Moses come to have rays of splendor [emanate from his countenance]? When Moses wrote the Torah [in fiery letters], so said R. Judah bar Nehemiah, a small tongue of fire was left on the reed, which Moses brushed against his head. From that spark, rays of splendor were wrought for him.[10]

Eldad and Medad

132. "But there remained two men in the camp" (Num. 11:26). Some say: Eldad and Medad remained in the camp [as commoners, not elders], because they drew blanks from the urn. For when the Holy One said to Moses, "Gather unto me seventy of the elders of Israel" (Num. 11:16), Moses asked himself: How shall I do it? If I choose six out of each tribe, there will be [seventy-two], two more than required; if I choose five out of each tribe, there will be [sixty], ten fewer than required. If, on the other hand, I choose six out of ten tribes and five out of two tribes, I shall [have seventy but also] cause jealousy among the tribes. What did he do? He selected six men [out of each tribe] and brought seventy-two slips, on seventy of which he wrote the word "elder," leaving the remaining two blank. Then he shook them up, deposited them in an urn, and said, "Come and draw your slips." To each who drew a slip bearing the word "elder," he said, "Heaven has already consecrated you." But to him who drew a blank, he said, "He who is everywhere does not want you; so what can I do for you?" But R. Simeon said: On their own, Eldad and Medad chose to remain in the camp. For when the Holy One ordered Moses, "Gather unto Me seventy of the elders of Israel" (Num. 11:16), Eldad and Medad said to themselves: We are not worthy of such distinction. The Holy One said, "Because you have humbled yourselves, I will add to your distinction even greater distinction." How did He add to their distinction? All [other prophets] prophesied [for a while] and then ceased, but Eldad and Medad kept on prophesying without cease. What did they prophesy? They announced, "Moses will die, and Joshua will bring Israel into the Land."[11]

---

1. Tanhuma, Be-shallah, §1.
2. Lev. R. 25:5.
3. Tanhuma B, Mas'e, §3.
4. They imagined they saw the deity, but in fact did not. Rashi.
5. Moses saw a similitude, but he knew that no mortal eye could see God Himself.
6. B. Yev 49b; B. Ned 38a. Ps. 8 is construed as referring to Israel in the wilderness and to Moses.
7. Exod. R. 45:3; Tanhuma B, Ki Tissa, §14.
8. Tanhuma B, Be-haalotekha, §28; Sif Num., §93.
9. As meek as ever. Num. R. 14:21.
10. Tanhuma B, Ki Tissa, §20.
11. The phrase "in the camp" is now construed as meaning "concerning what would happen to the camp of Israel"—that quail would be swept from the sea into the camp and that not Moses but Joshua would lead Israel's camp into the Land. So Samuel Edels. B. Sanh 17a.

133. "Moses said to him: 'Dost thou think I am jealous because of my self-esteem?' " (Num. 11:29).[1] [I am not jealous of Eldad and Medad because they are prophesying.] But I am jealous of you, Joshua. Would that my children were like you. Would that all Israel were like you.[2]

Moses and Joshua

134. "Moses spoke unto the Lord, saying: 'Let the Lord, the God of the spirits of all flesh, set a man over the congregation' " (Num. 27:15–16). The verse proclaims the excellence of the righteous: even when about to depart from the world, they set aside their own needs and occupy themselves with the needs of the community.

"Let the Lord, the God of the spirits of all flesh." When Moses saw that his sons were not worthy to succeed him in the dignity of his office, he wrapped himself in his tallit and, standing up in prayer before the Holy One, said: Master of the universe, let me know who shall come and go [in leadership] before the people. "Let the Lord, the God of the spirits of all flesh, set [the right] man over the congregation." Master of the universe, the disposition of every one of them is revealed to You—the disposition of one is not at all like the disposition of another. After I depart from them, when You will be setting another leader over them, I beg you, set over them a leader who will put up with each and every man according to his particular disposition. So, in saying, "Let the Lord, the God of the spirits of all flesh, set [the right] man over the congregation," Moses asked: Will the man You set over the congregation have within himself the spirits of sixty myriads, so that he will be able to converse with each man according to his particular disposition? The Holy One replied: Moses, you have made a proper request. So I shall show you all the judges and all the prophets whom I will set up over My children from this time until the dead shall be brought back to life. For, as R. Simon said, the verse "He showed him all the earth" (Deut. 34:1) means: He showed him that Joshua would rise up in his stead, and Joshua would turn over his authority to Othniel, as will all subsequent leaders to their successors. Then the Holy One said to Moses: Each of these I showed you has one disposition and one spirit. But as to what you asked for earlier, at the end of time there will be a person within whom, to be sure, there will be but one spirit, yet it will have the capacity to bear the weight of the spirits of all men—that person is the Messiah.

"A man over the congregation, who may go out before them, and who may come in before them" (Num. 27:17)—that he not act like others, who have their legions go forth while they themselves remain in their homes; "who may lead them out, and who may bring them in" (ibid.)—that he not lead them out in myriads and bring them back in thousands, or lead them out in thousands and bring them back in hundreds.

[Moses went on]: "That the congregation of the Lord be not as sheep that have no shepherd" (Num. 27:17). To whom may Moses be compared? To a faithful shepherd. When the owner of the flock said to him, "Remove yourself from my flock," he replied, "I will not remove myself until you tell me whom you will set as shepherd in my place."

"The Lord said to Moses: 'Single out' [Num. 27:18]—one you trust; 'single out' one who has been tested by you: 'Joshua the son of Nun' [ibid.]. You know how long Joshua has served you, how much honor he accorded you, how he came early and stayed late in your meeting place, arranging the benches and spreading the mats. 'A man in whom there is spirit' [ibid.], one who will know how to face up to the spirit of everyone. Let him take on authority, to confirm the verse 'Whoso keepeth the fig tree shall eat the fruit thereof' " (Prov. 27:18).[3]

135. Then Moses said to Joshua: The people I am putting in your cave are not yet goats but only kids, not yet sheep but only lambs. Hence, "go follow the tracks of the lambs, and graze thy kids by the shepherds' tents" (Song 1:8).[4]

136. "And thou shalt put of thy honor upon him" (Num. 27:20)—"of thy honor," but not "all thine honor." Hence the elders of that generation used to say, "The countenance of Moses was like that of the sun, but the countenance of Joshua is merely that of the moon. What a fading of glory! What a comedown."[5]

The Death of Moses

137. "And the Lord said unto Moses: 'Behold, thy days approach that thou must die' " (Deut. 31:14). These words are to be considered in the light of the verse "Though his excellency mount up to the heavens, and his head reach unto the clouds; yet he shall perish. . . . They that have seen him shall say: 'Where is he?' " (Job. 20:6–7). To whom does this verse refer? To none other than [to him who nears] the day of death. Even if a man should make himself wings like a bird and go up to heaven, once his time comes to die, his wings will be broken and he will fall down.

The words "though his excellency mount up to the heavens" apply particularly to Moses, who went up to heaven, whose feet trod on thick clouds, who became like the ministering angels, who spoke with the Holy One face to face, who received the Torah from His own hand—yet when his time came, the Holy One said, "Behold, thy days approach that thou must die!" (Deut. 31:14).

When Moses realized that the decree [of death] had been sealed against him, he drew a small circle around himself, stood in it, and said, "Master of the universe, I

---

1. JV: "Art thou jealous for my sake?"

2. See Sif Num., §96 (ed. H. S. Horovitz [Frankfurt am Main, 1917], p. 96). Text emended as suggested in a note, ad loc. Gershom and Jonathan, Moses' sons, were less than mediocre, whereas prophets were among the descendants of Joshua.

3. Yalkut, Pinhas, §776; Sif Zuta, Pinhas, §16; Yelammedenu.

4. ARN 17.

5. B. BB 75a.

will not budget from here until You void that decree." At the same time, he donned sackcloth—indeed, wrapped himself in it—strewed ashes upon himself, and persisted in prayer and supplications before the Holy One, until heaven and earth—indeed, all things made during the six days of creation—were shaken, so that they said, "Perhaps the intention of the Holy One to remake His world is about to be executed. A divine voice came forth and said: As yet, the Holy One's intention to remake His world is not about to be executed. But the words "in whose hand is the soul of every living thing" (Job 12:10) [are in force and apply even to Moses].

What did the Holy One do then? He had it proclaimed at every gate of every firmament that Moses' prayer be not accepted nor brought up to His presence, because the decree concerning him had been sealed.

Still, as the sound of Moses' prayer to Him above grew even stronger, the Holy One summoned the ministering angels and commanded them: Go down in haste, bolt all the gates of every firmament—for Moses' prayer was like a sword, ripping and tearing, and nothing could stop it.

In that instant, Moses said to the Holy One, "Master of the universe, known and revealed to You is the trouble and pain I suffered on account of Israel, until they came to believe in Your Name. How much pain I suffered because of them, until I inculcated among them the Torah and its precepts! I said to myself: As I witnessed their woe, so will I be allowed to witness their weal. Yet now that Israel's weal has come, You tell me, 'You shall not go over this Jordan' [Deut. 3:27]. Thus Your Torah, which asserts, 'In the same day thou shalt give him his hire' [Deut. 24:15], You manifestly turn into fraud. Is such the reward for forty years of labor that I labored until Israel became a holy people loyal to their faith?" The Holy One replied, "Nevertheless, such is the decree that has gone forth from My Presence!" Then Moses said, "Master of the universe, if I am not to enter the Land alive, let me enter dead, as the bones of Joseph are about to enter." The Holy One replied, "Moses, when Joseph came to Egypt, he did not deny his identity.[1] He declared openly, 'I am a Hebrew.' But when you came to Midian, you denied yours."[2]

Then Moses said, "Master of the universe, if You will not let me enter the Land of Israel, allow me to remain [alive] like the beasts of the field, who eat grass, drink water, and thus savor the world—let me be like one of these." At that, God replied, "Enough. Speak no more to Me of this matter" (Deut. 3:26).

But Moses spoke up again, "Master of the universe, if not [like a beast of the field], then let me become like a bird that flies daily in every direction to gather its food and in the evening returns to its nest—let me be like one of these." The Holy One replied again, "Enough."

When Moses saw that his prayer was not heeded, he went to implore heaven and earth, saying: Entreat mercy in my behalf. They replied: Before entreating mercy for you, we should entreat mercy for ourselves, for it is said, "The heavens shall vanish away like smoke, and the earth shall wax old like a garment" (Isa. 51:6). He then went to implore the sun and the moon, and said: Entreat mercy in my behalf. But these replied: Before entreating mercy for you, we should entreat mercy for ourselves, for it is said, "The moon shall be confounded and the sun ashamed" (Isa. 24:23).

Then he went to implore the stars and the planets, and said: Entreat mercy in my behalf. But these replied: Before entreating mercy for you, we should entreat mercy for ourselves, for it is said, "All the host of heaven shall molder away" (Isa. 34:4).

Then he went to implore the mountains and the hills, and said: Entreat mercy in my behalf. But these also replied: Before entreating mercy for you, we should entreat mercy for ourselves, for it is said, "The mountains will depart, and the hills be removed" (Isa. 54:10).

Then he went to implore the sea and cried: Entreat mercy in my behalf. The sea replied: Son of Amram, why is this day different from former days? Are you not the same son of Amram who came to me with your rod, smote me, split me into twelve paths, when I could not withstand you because the Presence was proceeding at your right? What's happened to you now? As the sea reminded Moses of what he was able to do in his younger years, he cried out in anguish, "Oh that I were as in the months of old" (Job 29:2). [O sea], at the time I stood over you, I was a king in the world, but now, though I prostrate myself, no heed is given me.

Then Moses went to the angel of the Presence[3] and implored: Entreat mercy in my behalf, that I not die. The angel replied: Moses my master, of what avail is this effort? For I have heard from behind the curtain above that your prayer in this matter will not be heard.

Moses put his hands on his head and lamented and wept, as he said: To whom am I to go now to entreat mercy in my behalf? In that instant the Holy One was filled with anger at Moses, so that Moses was constrained to remind God that He had described Himself as "the Lord, the Lord, God, who is merciful and compassionate" (Exod. 34:6). Whereupon the holy spirit was assuaged.

Then the Holy One said to Moses: Moses, I have sworn two oaths: one concerning Israel—after they did that deed[4]—that I would destroy them from the world; and the other that you are to die and not enter the Land. The oath I had sworn concerning Israel, I set aside at your plea when you entreated Me, "Pardon, I pray Thee" (Num. 14:19); and now you entreat once again that I set aside My oath to comply with your plea "Let me go over, I pray Thee" (Deut. 3:25). You seize the well's rope at both ends—do you not?[5] If you wish to have "Let me go over, I pray Thee" fulfilled, you must nullify "Pardon, I pray

---

1. Joseph told the chief butler, "I was stolen away out of the land of the Hebrews" (Gen. 40:15).

2. So that Jethro's daughters, reporting to their father, said that an Egyptian helped them (Exod. 2:19).

3. Metatron.

4. Made the golden calf.

5. The rope for a well has two ends—as one comes up, the other goes down. But when a man holds both ends of the rope, he can neither lower nor raise the bucket.

Thee"; or if you wish to have "Pardon, I pray Thee" fulfilled, then nullify "Let me go over, I pray Thee." When Moses our teacher heard this, he said: Master of the universe, let Moses and a thousand like him perish, but let not a fingernail of one person in Israel be hurt.

Nevertheless, Moses said to God: Master of the universe, shall the feet that went up to the firmament, the face that confronted the Presence, the hands that received the Torah from Your hand—shall these now lick dust?

The Holy One replied: Such was My thought [from the very beginning], and such must be the way of the world: each generation is to have its own interpreters of Scripture, each generation is to have its own providers, each generation is to have its own leaders. Until now it had been your portion to serve Me, but now your disciple Joshua's portion to serve has come.

Moses said to the Holy One: Master of the universe, if I must die [to vacate my post] for Joshua, let me be his disciple [in my remaining hours]. The Holy One replied: If that is what you wish to do, go and do it.

So Moses rose early to be at Joshua's doorway, where Joshua sat and interpreted Scripture. [In order to hide his identity] Moses stooped and put his hand over his heart [thus covering his face with the crook of his arm]. At the same time, Joshua's eyes were veiled [by God], making him unable to see Moses, so that Moses would be humiliated and come to be reconciled to his dying.

In the meantime, when people came to Moses' doorway to study Torah and asked, "Where is our teacher Moses?" they were told, "He rose early and went to Joshua's doorway." They went and found him at Joshua's doorway—Joshua seated and Moses standing. They said to Joshua: What has come over you, that you allow our teacher Moses to stand while you sit? When Joshua's eyes were again clear and he recognized Moses, he rent his garments, cried out, and wept: My master, my master! My father, my father!

Then the people said to Moses, "Moses our teacher, teach us Torah." He replied, "I no longer have the authority." They: "We will not leave you." Then a divine voice came forth and commanded the people, "Be willing to learn from Joshua." With that, the people submitted to the command to sit and learn from Joshua's mouth.

Joshua sat at the head, Moses at his right, and Aaron's sons at his left, while Joshua taught in Moses' presence. At that session, the tradition of wisdom was taken away from Moses and given to Joshua.

When they went out, Moses walked at Joshua's left, and as they entered the Tent of Meeting, the pillar of cloud came down and formed a partition between the two. After the cloud departed, Moses went over to Joshua and asked, "What did the Word say to you?" Joshua replied, "When the Word used to reveal itself to you, did I know what it said to you?"

In that instant, Moses cried out in anguish and said, "Rather a hundred deaths than a single pang of envy. Master of universes, until now I sought life. But now my soul is surrendered to You."

After Moses became reconciled to his dying, the Holy One spoke up, saying: " 'Who will rise up for Me in behalf of evildoers?' [Ps. 94:16]. Who will rise up in Israel's behalf at the time of My anger? Who will stand up for them during My children's warfare [with enemies]? Who will entreat mercy in their behalf when they sin before Me?"

At that time Metratron came and, prostrating himself before the Holy One, sought to comfort Him: Master of the universe, Moses during his life was Yours, and when dead he will still be Yours. The Holy One replied: Let Me tell you a parable. I am like a king who had a son. Day after day the son so provoked his father that the father wished to slay him. But his mother kept saving him from the father's hand. Then, when the mother died, the king wept on and on without cease, so that finally his servants asked, "Our lord king, why are you weeping so disconsolately?" He replied, "I weep not only for my wife; I weep for her and for my son as well. Many times when I became angry at him and wished to slay him, his mother would save him from me."

So it is with Me, the Holy One said to Metratron. I weep not only for Moses; I weep for him and for Israel as well. Many times when they provoked Me and I was angry at them, it was he who stood in the breach before Me to turn back My anger.

In that instant, the Holy One said to Gabriel: Go forth and bring the soul of Moses. Gabriel replied: He who is equal in importance to sixty myriads—how can I bear to watch him dying?

Then the Holy One said to Michael: Go and bring the soul of Moses. Michael replied: I was his teacher, and he my pupil. How can I bear to watch him dying?

Then the Holy One said to Samael: Go and fetch the soul of Moses. Now, the angel Samael, chief of all satanic spirits, had long been awaiting the soul of Moses, as he kept saying, "When will the instant arrive in which Moses is to die, so that I might come down and snatch his soul from him? When will Michael weep, while I fill my mouth with laughter?" He immediately clothed himself with anger, girded on his sword, wrapped himself in ruthlessness, and went forth to encounter Moses. Samael found him seated and writing the Ineffable Name in a scroll. The radiance of his appearance was like the radiance of the sun's visage; indeed, Moses looked like an angel of the Lord of hosts.

Samael was so frightened by the sight of Moses that trembling seized him, so that he found himself unable to open his mouth to say anything, until Moses asked Samael, "Evil one, what are you doing here?" "I have come to take away your soul." "Who sent you?" "He who created all beings." "Go away. I want to praise the Holy One—'I shall not die, but live, and declare the works of the Lord' " (Ps. 118:17). Samael: "Moses, why do you vaunt yourself? The Lord has those who would praise Him—'The heavens declare the works of the Lord' " (Ps. 19:2). Moses: "I shall silence them, and I will voice His praise—'Give ear, O ye heavens, and I will speak; and let the earth hear the words of my mouth' " (Deut. 32:1). Samael: "The souls of all the world's inhabitants are placed under my authority." Moses: "But I have power greater than that of all the world's inhabitants." Samael: "Wherein is your power?" Moses: "I, Amram's son, at the age of three prophesied that out of flames of fire I would receive the Torah; [at that age] I entered the palace of a king and took his crown from his head.[1] At eighty I performed signs and wonders in Egypt, and in the sight of all Egyptians brought forth sixty myriads; split the [Red] Sea into twelve paths; ascended to, and broke a path in, heaven; took hold [of the throne of glory]; and engaged in strife with angels, until I prevailed over heaven's retinue and had them disclose their secrets to the children of men.[2] I spoke with the Holy One face to face, received the fiery Torah from His right hand, and taught it to Israel. I waged war against Sihon and Og, two giants of the peoples of the world, struck them with the rod in hand, and slew them. I made the sun and the moon stand still in the zenith of the world. Who among the world's inhabitants could have done such things? Away, get out of my sight! I won't give you my soul!"

Samael went back and reported to the Almighty. The Holy One commanded once more: Go, bring the soul of Moses.

Samael straightaway drew his sword from its sheath and stood over Moses. At that, Moses became angry at him, took the rod upon which God's Ineffable Name was graven, and struck Samael with all his might, until Samael fled from him. With God's Ineffable Name in his hand, Moses pursued Samael until he [overtook him], plucked a radiant beam from between his own eyes, and blinded the eyes of Samael.

But a divine voice came forth and said, "The time has come for you to depart from the world." Moses pleaded with the Holy One, "Master of the universe, for my sake, remember the day when You revealed Yourself to me at the bush; for my sake, remember the time when I stood on Mount Sinai forty days and forty nights. I beg You, do not hand me over to the angel of death."

Again a divine voice came forth and said, "Fear not, I Myself will attend you and your burial."

Moses pleaded, "Then wait until I bless Israel. On account of the warnings and reprimands I heaped upon them, they never found any ease with me." Then he began to bless each tribe separately, but when he saw that time was running short, he included all the tribes in a single blessing.[3]

Then he said to Israel, "Because of the Torah and its precepts, I troubled you greatly. Now, please forgive me."

They replied, "Our master, our lord, you are forgiven." In their turn they said to him, "Moses our teacher, we troubled you even more, we made your burden so heavy. Please forgive us." Moses replied, "You are forgiven."

Again a divine voice came forth: "The moment has come for you to depart from this world." Moses replied, "Blessed be His Name! May He live and endure forever and ever!" Then he said to Israel, "I implore you, when you enter the Land, remember me and my bones, and say, 'Alas for the son of Amram, who had run before us like a horse, yet his bones fell in the wilderness.' "

Again a divine voice came forth and said, "Within half a moment you are to depart from the world."

Moses lifted both his arms, placed them over his heart, and called out to Israel, "Behold the end of flesh and blood." Moses arose and washed his hands and feet, and thus became as pure as a seraphim.

Then, from the highest heaven of heavens, the Holy One came down to take the soul of Moses, and with Him the three ministering angels, Michael, Gabriel, and Zagzagel. Michael laid out his bier, Gabriel spread a fine linen cloth at his head, while Zagzagel spread it at his feet. Michael stood at one side and Gabriel at the other. Then the Holy One said to Moses, "Moses, close your eyes," and he closed his eyes. "Put your arms over your breast," and he put his arms over his breast. "Bring your legs together," and he brought his legs together. Then the Holy One summoned Moses' soul, saying, "My daughter, I had fixed the time of your sojourn in the body of Moses at a hundred and twenty years. Now your time has to come to depart. Depart. Delay not."

She replied, "Master of the universe, I know that You are God of all spirits and Lord of all souls. You created me and placed me in the body of Moses one hundred and twenty years ago. Is there a body in the world more pure than the body of Moses? I love him, and I do not wish to depart from him."

The Holy One exclaimed, "Depart, and I will take you up to the highest heaven of heavens, and will set you under the throne of glory, next to the cherubim and seraphim."

In that instant, the Holy One kissed Moses, and took his soul with that kiss.

At that, the holy spirit wept and said, "There hath not arisen a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses" (Deut. 34:10).

The heavens wept and said, "The godly man is perished out of the earth" (Mic. 7:2).

The earth wept and said, "The upright among men is no more" (Mic. 7:2).

The ministering angels wept and said, "He executed the righteousness of the Lord" (Deut. 33:21).

Israel wept and said, "And His ordinances are with Israel" (Deut. 33:21).

These as well as those said together, "Let him enter in peace and rest on his couch" (Isa. 57:2).[4]

138. It is taught: "So Moses the servant of the Lord died there" (Deut. 34:5). Is it possible that Moses, while still alive, would have written, "So Moses . . . died"? The truth is, Scripture up to this passage was written by Moses; from this passage on, Scripture was written by Joshua son of Nun. Such is the opinion of R. Judah—some say, of R. Nehemiah. But R. Simeon said to R. Judah: Is it possible that the Torah scroll is short of even a single letter? If it were short, how could Moses have commanded, "Take this book of Torah" (Deut. 31:26)?[5] Rather, the

---

1. See above, chap. 4, §19.
2. See above in this chapter, §49.
3. See Deut. 33:27–29.
4. Deut. R. 7:10 and 11:10; Tanhuma, Va-et'hannan, §6; Yalkut, Va-et'hannan, §821.
5. If he had not finished writing the Torah, he would not have referred to it as "the book of Torah."

meaning is that, up to this passage, the Holy One dictated, and Moses repeated the words and wrote them out, but from this passage on, the Holy One dictated, and Moses [without repeating the words][1] wrote them down with tears in his eyes.[2]

139. It is taught that R. Eliezer the Elder said: Over an area of twelve by twelve mil, the dimension of the camp of Israel, a divine voice kept reverberating, "Moses is dead—Israel's great scribe!"[3]

140. Moses died on the seventh of Adar, and he was born on the seventh of Adar.[4]

Moses' Burial Place

141. "And he was buried in the valley in the land of Moab over against Beth-peor" (Deut. 34:6). R. Berekhiah commented: Although Scripture thus provides one clue within another about its location, nevertheless [it goes on to say], "No man knoweth of his sepulcher" (ibid.). The wicked kingdom of Rome once dispatched a request to the military garrison at Beth-peor: "Locate the spot where Moses is buried." When the soldiers stood on high ground, the spot seemed to them to be below; when they stood on low ground, it seemed to them to be above, fulfilling the words, "No man knoweth of his sepulcher to this day."[5]

142. R. Hama bar Hanina asked: Why was the sepulcher of Moses hidden from the eyes of mortals? and answered: Because it was revealed and known to the Holy One that the Temple was to be destroyed and Israel banished from their Land; hence [the spot was hidden], lest at that time Israel should come to the sepulcher of Moses and stand there, weeping and beseeching Moses, saying, "Moses our teacher, rise up for prayer in our behalf." Then Moses would rise and nullify the decree [of banishment]. For after their death, the righteous are even more beloved by God than while alive.[6]

---

1. Because of his grief.
2. B. BB 15a; B. Men 30a.
3. B. Sot 13b and En Yaakov, ad loc.; Sif Deut., §357.
4. B. Meg 13b.
5. B. Sot 13b–14a.
6. B. Sot 13b and En Yaakov, ad loc.

CHAPTER SIX

JUDGES, KINGS, AND PROPHETS

The Chosen Land

1. R. Simeon ben Yohai began his discourse with the verse "He stood, and measured the earth" (Hab. 3:6). That is, the Holy One took the measure of all peoples and found no people other than Israel worthy of receiving the Torah. The Holy One took the measure of all generations and found no generation other than the generation of the wilderness worthy of receiving the Torah. The Holy One took the measure of all mountains and found no mountain other than Sinai worthy of having the Torah given on it. The Holy One took the measure of all cities and found no city other than Jerusalem worthy of having the Temple built within it. The Holy One took the measure of all lands and found no land other than the Land of Israel worthy of being given to Israel.[1]

Joshua

2. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: When Moses our teacher was about to depart for the Garden of Eden, he said to Joshua: Ask me about any matters of law about which you are in doubt. Joshua replied: My master, have I ever left you, even for as little as one hour, and gone elsewhere? Have you not in fact written of me, "His servant Joshua the son of Nun departed not out of the Tabernacle" (Exod. 33:11) [where I studied Torah constantly]? At that, Joshua's mental strength grew so weak[2] that he forgot three hundred laws and found himself in doubt concerning seven hundred other matters of law. The people of Israel [frustrated by Joshua's confusion] were all but ready to slay him. So the Holy One said to him: It is impossible to teach you right now, but go and distract the people with warfare. Hence; "And it came to pass after the death of Moses . . . Joshua commanded: . . . Prepare you victuals, for within three days ye . . . go in to possess the Land" (Josh. 1:1 and 1:10–11).[3]

3. R. Simeon ben Gamaliel said: Before Israel's entry into the Land, Joshua sent three proclamations to the [inhabitants of the] Land of Israel: He who wishes to leave, let him leave; he who wishes to capitulate, let him capitulate; he who wishes to wage war, let him wage war. The Girgashites left and went to Africa; the Gibeonites capitulated;[4] the thirty-one kings waged war and fell in battle.[5]

4. "And Joshua the son of Nun sent out of Shittim two spies heresh[6] (Josh. 2:1). Who were they? They were, so taught our rabbis, Phinehas and Caleb, who went and, risking their lives, succeeded in their mission. But what is the meaning of heresh? R. Judah said: They carried carpentry (harash) tools, pretending to be carpenters. R. Nehemiah, however, said: They pretended to be makers of earthenware (heres) and hawked their wares, crying, "Here are pots (heres)! Whosoever wishes, let him come and buy!" Why did they do this? In order that the Canaanites might not become aware of their real identity.

But R. Simeon ben Yohai taught: The word heresh is to be taken literally as "deaf." For Joshua said to Phinehas and Caleb: Make believe you are deaf, and you will find out their secrets. R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: By pretending to be deaf, you will find out their true character.[7]

5. The verse "The waters . . . stood, and rose up in one heap" (Josh. 3:16) implies that the waters stacked up in heaps upon heaps to a height of more than three hundred mil, so that all the kings of the east and of the west beheld them.[8]

6. "Israel hath sinned" (Josh. 7:11). When the Holy One said to Joshua, "Israel hath sinned," Joshua asked, "Who is the one who has sinned?" The Holy One replied, "Do you expect Me to be an informer? Cast lots, and find out." Joshua went and cast lots, and the lot fell on Achan. Achan said to Joshua, "Are you making charges against me on the strength of a lot? Cast the lot between yourself and Eleazar the High Priest, and it will surely fall on one of you."

In that instant, Joshua looked at the twelve precious stones among the stones in the ephod that was on the breast of the high priest and saw that the brilliance in the stone of Judah's tribe had dimmed. (Such was the way of the breastpiece of judgment: whenever a tribe performed a precept, its stone grew in brilliance and it's light was intensified; but whenever a tribe committed a transgression, its stone dimmed.) When Joshua perceived this, he said, "My son, give, I pray thee, glory to the Lord, the God of Israel" (Josh. 7:19). At once Achan answered, "Of a truth, I have sinned" (Josh. 7:20).[9]

7. When Joshua said, "Sun, stand thou still upon Gibeon" (Josh. 10:12), the sun responded, "You say to me, 'Stand still'? How dare a youngster open his mouth and say to his elder, 'Stand still'? I was created on the fourth

---

1. Lev. R. 13:2; Yalkut, Hab. §543.
2. Because he was so certain of himself.
3. B. Tem 16a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
4. Josh. 9:1–18.
5. Josh. 12:7–24; P. Shev 6:1, 36c.
6. JV: "secretly."
7. Num. R. 16:1; Ruth R. 2:1; Yalkut, Josh., §7.
8. B. Sot 34a.
9. All the loot taken at Jericho was proscribed for the Lord. But Achan stole for himself a fine mantle, shekels of silver, and a wedge of gold, thus violating the proscription. Tanhuma, Va-yeshev, §2.

day and you on the sixth, and yet you say to me, 'Stand still'!" Joshua answered the sun, "You upstart slave! Are you not a mere chattel of one of my forebears? Did not my forebear Joseph see you as a slave in the dream in which he reported, 'Behold, the sun and the moon and eleven stars bowed down to me' (Gen. 37:9)?" At once "the sun stood still, and the moon stayed" (Josh. 10:13).[1]

8. The Land of Israel was divided only by lot and by the command of the Urim and Tummim. How could it be done by both?[2] [In the following manner]: Eleazar wore the Urim and Tummim, while Joshua and all Israel stood before him. An urn containing the names of the twelve tribes and another urn containing the outlines of their boundaries were placed before him. At the prompting of the holy spirit [in the Urim and Tummim], Eleazar would declare: The name "Zebulun" is coming up from the first urn, and with his name, the boundary lines of Acco are coming up from the second urn. Then he dipped into the urn containing the names of the tribes, and Zebulun came up in his hand; he dipped into the urn containing the boundaries, and the boundaries of Acco came up in his hand. Again at the prompting of the holy spirit [in the Urim and Tummim], Eleazar would declare: "Naphtali" is coming up, and with his name the boundary lines of Gennesar.[3] Then he dipped into the urn containing the names of the tribes, and "Naphtali" came up in his hand; he dipped into the urn containing the boundaries, and the boundaries of Gennesar came up in his hand. The procedure was the same for each of the other tribes.[4]

9. Joshua was deeply concerned with Israel's well-being, so he provided roads and highways for them.[5]

10. [On his entry into the Land], Joshua laid down ten stipulations:[6] that cattle be permitted to pasture in [private] woods; that wood may be gathered by all in [private] fields; that [fodder] grasses may be gathered anywhere, with the exception of a field where Greek hay is growing;[7] that everyone be permitted to cut off plantings from all trees everywhere except from branches left on the stumps of olive trees; that a spring, though private, may be used by the people of the town, even if it first emerged [after the division of the Land];[8] that it be permitted to fish with an angle in the Sea of Tiberias,[9] provided there be no setting out of reed barriers [to confine the fish] that cause boats to slow down; that it be permitted to ease oneself at the back of a fence even in a field full of saffron;[10] that it be permitted to use paths in private fields until the time when the second rain is expected;[11] that it be permitted to turn off the road [into private fields] to avoid walking on the road's hardened lumps of clay; that he who loses his way in the vineyards may force his way through [the vines] when going up a hillside or when coming down; and that an unidentified corpse, which anyone who finds is obligated to bury,[12] acquires [the right of burial] on the spot [where it is found].[13]

[To return to the stipulation about fishing in the Sea of Tiberias. Our masters taught: On Israel's entry into the Land], it was the tribes of Israel [not Joshua] who stipulated that there be no setting out of reed barriers that cause boats to slow down and that fishing be permitted [not only with an angle but also] with small nets and traps.[14]

11. "And his fame was in all the Land" (Josh. 6:27). Joshua's coinage became current in the world. What was stamped on it? A bullock on one side and a wild ox on the other.[15]

12. "And they buried him in the border of his inheritance . . . on the north of the mountain of Gaash" (Josh. 24:30). It is said in the name of R. Joshua ben Levi: We have gone through all of Scripture and did not find a place called Gaash. What then is meant by "the mountain of Gaash"? That at the time of Joshua's death Israel were so preoccupied (nitgaashu) that they failed to pay him the honor due him.[16] The land of Israel had just been divided among the tribes, who were completely taken up both by details of the division and by the use they planned to put the land to. Thus, one was occupied with his field, another with his vineyard, still another with his olive trees, and still another with his household chores, so that they were negligent in paying Joshua the honor due him. The Holy One was about to cause the earth, all of it, to quake under its inhabitants. What, then, R. Judah asked in the name of Rav, is meant by "the mountain fo Gaash"? That the mountain began to quake, and [had it continued], it would have slain them.[17]

In the Days When the Judges Judged

13. "And it came to pass in the days when the judges were judged" (Ruth 1:1).[18] Woe unto the generation that judges its judges, and woe unto the generation whose

1. Tanhuma B, Ahare, §14; Yalkut, Josh., §10; Gen. R. 6:9 and 84:11.
2. If by lot, what need for the Urim and Tummim? If by the Urim and Tummim, what need for the lot?
3. Gennesar or Gennesaret, from the Hebrew Kinneret, is a district in Galilee named after the lake of the same name.
4. B. BB 122a.
5. B. Er 22b.
6. Not ten but eleven stipulations will be listed. However, the first two—pasturing cattle and gathering wood—may be deemed to be related.
7. Since Greek hay benefits from the grasses.
8. A provision for the continuing accessibility of water.
9. Even though the whole of it was the possession of Naphtali.
10. Even though feces injure the delicate plant.
11. The seventeenth of Marheshvan. After that day, the seedlings begin to sprout. Walking over them would injure them.
12. Even a high priest who is forbidden under all other circumstances to come into contact with the dead.
13. The owner of the property may not protest.
14. B. BK 80b–81b; Tos BK 8:17.
15. When Joshua's forebear Joseph was blessed, the bullock and the wild ox were mentioned (Deut. 33:17). Gen. R. 39:11.
16. Scripture makes no reference to a period of mourning following Joshua's death.
17. The several comments exploit the meanings implicit in gaash ("to quake, rage."). Ruth R. proem 2; B. Shab 105b; Yalkut, Josh., §35; Yalkut, Prov., §959.
18. JV: "And it came to pass in the days when the judges judged."

judges are in need of being judged. When a judge would say, "Remove the toothpick from between your teeth," the man would reply, "Remove the beam from between your eyes."[1]

14. "Slothfulness casteth into a deep sleep, and the soul given to deceiving[2] shall suffer hunger" (Prov. 19:15). At that time, Israel were deceiving the Holy One, many worshiping idols and only a few worshiping the Holy One. Therefore the Holy One starved them of the holy spirit, as is said, "And the word of the Lord was rare in those days" (1 Sam. 3:1).[3]

15. When Israel entered their Land, the members of the Great Sanhedrin, which Moses, Joshua, and Phinehas son of Eleazar had left with Israel, should have bound ropes as strong as iron around their loins, should have rucked up their garments above their knees and gone about to all the towns in Israel, spending one day in Lachish, one day in Hebron, one day in Jerusalem, and so forth in all places in Israel, teaching proper conduct for a year, or two, or even three, until Israel had settled down in their Land, so that the Name of the Holy One would have been hallowed. But they did not do so. Instead, when they entered the Land, each member of the Sanhedrin went to his own vineyard and to his own olive grove, saying, "Ah! It is for the good of my soul!"[4]

16. What parable applies to Israel in the days when the judges ruled? The parable of a mortal king who acquired houses, menservants, and maidservants. He had brought up some of the servants at his table from the time they were six years old, some from the time they were five, some from the time they were four, some from the time they were three, some from the time they were two, some from the time they were one. All of them ate what the king ate; all of them drank what the king drank. After he had brought them up, he built houses for them, planted vines, trees, and shrubs for them, and instructed them: Take care of these shrubs, these vines, these trees. But after they had eaten and drunk, they proceeded to uproot the vines, chop down the trees, hack down the shrubs, and break up the houses. When the king came and found what they had done, he lowered his opinion of them, saying: They are still behaving like schoolchildren. What shall I do with them? He summoned them and flogged them. But they repeated their offense again and again. So also, in the days when the judges ruled, were Israel regarded in the eyes of their Father in heaven: each time they befouled themselves with their deeds, He turned them over to [alien] kingdoms for punishment. When they changed their ways and repented, the Holy One forgave them right away and redeemed them.[5]

17. "Now these are the nations which the Lord left, to try Israel by them" (Judg. 3:1). By what parable may the verse be understood? By the one of a king who planted a vineyard in which there were both cedars and thorns. The king went and cut down the cedars [to make room for vines] but left the thorns. His servants demurred: Our lord king, you left untouched the thorns which catch hold of your garments, but you cut down the cedars! The king replied: Had I cut down the thorns, with what would I have hedged in my vineyard? Likewise, Israel is the Holy One's vineyard, as is said, "The vineyard of the Lord of hosts is the House of Israel" (Isa. 5:7). When He brought them into the Land, He cut down the cedars there, as is said, "I destroyed the Amorite before them, whose height was like the height of cedars" (Amos 2:9). But I left the Amorites' progeny "to try Israel by them," so that Israel would be impelled to keep the Torah.[6]

18. "And the children of Israel again did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, and served the Baalim, and the Ashtaroth, and the gods of Aram, and the gods of Zidon, and the gods of Moab, and the gods of the children of Ammon, and the gods of the Philistines; and they forsook the Lord, and served Him not" (Judg. 10:6). Since Scripture says, "They forsook the Lord," do I not learn from it that they served Him not? Why then go on to say, "They served Him not"? R. Eleazar explained that the Holy One said: My children responded to Me even less than a lupine, which, when boiled seven times, becomes sweet and is eaten for dessert.[7]

The Prophetess Deborah

19. "Deborah, a prophetess . . . judged Israel" (Judg. 4:4). With regard to this verse, R. Berekhiah had four sayings: Woe unto the living who need help from the dead; woe unto the strong who need help from the weak; woe unto the seeing who need help from the blind; woe unto the generation that has to be led by a woman.[8]

20. "Now Deborah, a prophetess, the wife of Lappidoth, she judged Israel at that time" (Judg. 4:4). What was the special character of Deborah that qualified her to prophesy about Israel and to judge them? Was no Phinehas son of Eleazar still alive at that time? In the school of Elijah it was taught: I call heaven and earth to witness that whether it be a heathen or a Jew, a man or a woman, a manservant or a maidservant, the holy spirit will suffuse any one of them in keeping with the deeds he or she performs.

[What were Deborah's meritorious deeds?] It is said that Deborah's husband was unlettered [in Torah]. So his wife told him; "Come, I will make wicks for you; take them to the Holy Place in Shiloh. Your portion will then

---

1. Ruth R. 1:1; Yalkut, Ruth, §596. Cf. Matthew 7:5.
2. JV: "the idle." But remiyyah ("idle") may also mean "given to deceiving."
3. Ruth R., proem 2; Yalkut, Prov., §959.
4. TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 56. Or, "Abide in place, O my soul!" In other words: I have discharged my duty—now I am free to attend to my personal affairs. So Leon Nemoy.
5. TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 55.
6. Yalkut, Judg., §41.
7. After seven boilings, the lupine is sweet; whereas Israel were chastised (boiled) seven times for serving the seven aforementioned deities, and they still remained obdurate. B. Betz 25b.
8. MTeh 22:20; Yalkut, Judg., §42.

be with men of worth in Israel [who will be studying by the light of your wicks], and you will be worthy of life in the world-to-come." She took care to make the wicks thick, so that their light would be ample. He brought these wicks to the Holy Place [in Shiloh]. The Holy One, who examines the hearts and reins of mankind, said to her: Deborah, since you took care to make the light for the study of My Torah ample, I will make the light of your prophecy ample in the presence of Israel's twelve tribes.[1]

21. The point of the words "She sat under the palm tree of Deborah" (Judg. 4:5) is taken to be that, since it is improper for a woman to be alone in a house with a man, Deborah went outside and sat down under a palm tree where she instructed multitudes in Torah.[2]

22. "Barak said unto her: 'If thou will join me, then I will go' " (Judg. 4:8), which, according to R. Nehemiah, means that Barak said to Deborah: If you are willing to join me [in a lesser role] in the song [praising God], I will go with you [as a subordinate] into battle, but if you are unwilling to join me in the song, I will not go with you into battle. "She replied: 'I will certainly go with thee. But desist [from setting conditions]. The glory of the song shall not be thine' " (Judg. 4:9),[3] by which, according to R. Reuben, she meant: "What do you suppose—that [the major role in] the song will be given to you for your glory alone?" As it turned out, "Deborah sang, and [in a lesser role] Barak the son of Abinoam" (Judg. 5:1).[4]

23. Sisera attacked them with forty thousand chiefs of armies, each army numbering one hundred thousand men. He was then thirty years old, and in his might had conquered the entire world—there was no city whose wall he could not cause to collapse with his voice; as for beasts in the field, once he bellowed at them, they were unable to budge from their place.

It is said: Whenever Sisera went down into the brook of Kishon to bathe, he would bring back enough fish entangled in his beard to feel a multitude. His chariot was pulled by nine hundred horses, and the strain in pulling it was so great that not one horse would ever return sound in body.[5]

Jephthah and His Daughter

24. Jephthah was no more lettered than a block of sycamore wood, and because of his ignorance he lost his daughter. When? At the time he fought the children of Ammon, when he vowed, "Whatsoever cometh forth of the doors of my house to meet me . . . I will offer it up for a burnt offering" (Judg. 11:31). The Holy One, provoked by him, said, "Suppose a dog, a pig, or a camel came forth out of his house, would he offer it to Me?" So He had his daughter come forth.

"And it came to pass, when he saw her . . . he moaned: 'Alas, my daughter! . . . I have opened my mouth unto the Lord, and I cannot go back' " (Judg. 11:35). But was not Phinehas there [to absolve him of his vow]?[6] However, Phinehas said: Shall I, high priest son of a high priest, demean myself by calling on an ignoramus? While Jephthah said: Shall I, chief of the tribes of Israel, foremost of its leaders, demean myself by calling on a commoner? Between the two of them, the hapless one perished from the world, and both men were held liable for her blood: Phinehas was deprived of the holy spirit, while Jephthah died by having his limbs drop off one by one. Wherever he went, a limb would drop off from him, and it was buried there on the spot.[7]

As Jephthah was making ready to offer up his daughter, she wept before him and pleaded, "My father, my father, I came out to meet you full of joy, and now you are about to slaughter me. Is it written in the Torah that Israel should offer the lives of their children upon the altar?" Jephthah replied, "My daughter, I made a vow." She answered, "But Jacob our father vowed, 'Of all that Thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto Thee' [Gen. 28:22]. Then, when the Holy One gave him twelve sons, did he perchance offer one of them on an altar to the Holy One? Moreover, Hannah also vowed, 'I will give him unto the Lord all the days of his life' [1 Sam. 1:11]—did she perchance offer her son [on an altar] to the Lord?"

Though she said all these things to him, Jephthah did not heed her, but he went up to the altar and slaughtered her before the Holy One.

At that moment, the Holy Spirit cried out in anguish: Have I ever asked you to offer living souls to Me? "I commanded not, nor spoke it, neither came it into My mind" (Jer. 19:5).[8]

Samson

25. The words "The spirit of the Lord began to ring[9] for him" (Judg. 13:25) imply, so said R. Isaac of the school

---

1. TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 48; Yalkut, Judg., §42.
2. TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 50; Yalkut, Judg., §42.
3. JV: "notwithstanding . . . [it] shall not be for thine honor." But R. Reuben construes efes ("notwithstanding") as the Greek afes ("let go, desist").
4. Gen. R. 40:4.
5. Yalkut, Judg., §43.
6. A right that was given to priests and sages.
7. With reference to the manner of his death, Scripture says, "Jephthah was dying; he was buried in the cities of Gilead" (Judg. 12:7). Since Scripture does not say, "In a city in Gilead," but, "In the cities of Gilead," the commentator infers that Jephthah's limbs were interred in several cities in Gilead. JV: "was buried in one of the cities of Gilead."
8. Tanhuma, Be-hukkotai, §5; Tanhuma B, Be-hukkotai, §7; Gen. R. 60:3.
9. JV: "to move." But p'm ("to move") may mean "to ring" and also, as in R. Judah's comment below in §27, "to enlarge his stride."

of R. Ammi, that the Presence rang out for him like a bell [so powerful that it overwhelmed him].[1]

26. Or, the meaning may be: "The spirit of the Lord began to ring within him, [giving him such power that he was able to eliminate the distance] between Zorah and Eshtaol" (Judg. 13:25). For, as R. Assi said: Zorah and Eshtaol were two lofty mountains, and Samson plucked them up and ground them one against the other.[2]

27. Likewise, asserting that "The spirit of the Lord began to ring within him between Zorah and Eshtaol" [means that God endowed Samson with great physical strength], R. Samuel bar Nahman said: Like a man who picks up two pebbles and strikes one against the other, so Samson plucked two mountains and slammed them one against the other.

Or, [reading "The spirit of the Lord began to enlarge his stride"], R. Judah maintained that after the Presence rested upon him, Samson could, in a single stride, cover a distance equal to that between Zorah and Eshtaol.[3]

28. "And it came to pass afterward, that he loved a woman in the valley of Sorek, whose name was Delilah" (Judg. 16:4). It is taught that Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] said: Even if her name had not been Delilah, she should have been called Delilah; for she weakened (dildelah) his strength, weakened his understanding, and weakened his merits.[4]

29. Samson followed the lust in his eyes; therefore the Philistines gouged out his eyes.[5]

30. It is taught that R. Simeon the Pious said: The width of Samson's shoulders was sixty cubits. For it is said, "Samson lay in bed only till midnight. At midnight he arose, grasped the doors of the gate of the city, and the two posts, and pulled them out, bar and all, and put them upon his shoulders" (Judg. 16:3); and we have a tradition that the width of the two doors in the gate of Gaza was not less than sixty cubits.[6]

31. [Of those that were slain by Samson in Gaza], "there were upon the roof about three thousand" (Judg. 16:27). Such was the number on the edge of the roof, but no one knows how many crowded behind those on the edge, and how many there were crowded behind these.[7]

32. "And Samson called unto the Lord, and said: 'O Lord God, remember me, I pray Thee, and strengthen me, I pray Thee, only this once' " (Judg. 16:28). Samson pleaded with the Holy One: Master of the universe, remember on my behalf the twenty-two years I judged Israel and never presumed to say to anyone, "Carry my staff from here to there."[8]

Micah's Idol

33. "Why hast Thou done evil to this people?" (Exod. 5:22). In speaking thus to God, Moses charged Him: It is You who have done evil to this people, for now, whenever there are not enough bricks, the Egyptians immure Israelite children into the structure [in place of bricks]. The Holy One replied: The Egyptians are merely weeding out thorns, for it is revealed to Me that had such children remained alive, they would have grown up utterly wicked. If you wish to test what I say, take out one of these children. Moses took out Micah. In fact, the name Micah, "the crushed one," was given him precisely because he was crushed (nitmaknek) when he was immured into the structure.[9]

34. "Now there was a man of the hill-country of Ephraim, whose name was Micah. . . . And the man Micah had a house of god, and he made an ephod, and teraphim" (Judg. 17:1 and 17:5). Micah's idol was in the days of Cushan-rishathaim,[10] as was the incident with the concubine in Gibeah.[11]

35. The verse "And he passed over the sea with what was to be such a source of distress that it stirred up waves in the sea" (Zech. 10:11)[12] alludes, so said R. Yohanan, to Micah, who stirred up the Red Sea with his idol.[13]

36. It is taught that R. Nathan said: It is three mil from Gareb[14] to Shiloh, close enough for the smoke from [God's] altar in Shiloh and the smoke from Micah's idol [in Gareb] to mingle with each other. When the ministering angels wished to do away with Micah, the Holy One said, "Let

---

1. B. Sot 9b. The problem that R. Isaac deals with in §25, and R. Assi, R. Samuel bar Nahman, and R. Judah in §26 and §27, is the role "the spirit of the Lord" played in the life of Samson. For Samson, it could not have been what it had been for the prophets of Israel, since after it had "moved him," instead of saying something significant, he took unto himself a Philistine girl; or, as later on, displayed great prowess. Hence, R. Isaac suggests that Samson's taking a Philistine girl, quite a departure from the pattern of a Nazirite, came about as a result of God's overwhelming Samson. R. Assi (in §26), R. Samuel bar Nahman, and R. Judah (in §27) understand "the spirit of the Lord" in Samson as endowing him with extraordinary physical strength.
2. B. Sot 9b.
3. Two kilometers. Lev. R. 8:2.
4. B. Sot 9b.
5. Ibid.
6. B. Sot 10a.
7. Gen. R. 98:17–18.
8. B. Sot 10a.
9. Rashi on B. Sanh 101b, using an aggadic source.
10. First of the kings of the area who oppressed Israel. See Judg. 3:8–11.
11. The commentator places Micah at the beginning of Israel's occupation of the Land, even though both the account concerning him and the account concerning the concubine in Gibeah occur at the end of Judg. 18 and 19. SOR 12; Yalkut, Judg., §41.
12. JV: "And over the sea affliction shall pass, and the waves shall be smitten in the sea."
13. Thus Micah had already made an idol for himself in Egypt. B. Sanh 103b.
14. The town where Micah's idol was set up.

him be, since his bread is available to wayfarers." On the other hand, because of Micah's idol in Gareb, [which his neighbors permitted], the [death] penalty was visited upon many men of Israel who fought the tribe of Benjamin to avenge the concubine in Gibeah.[1] The Holy One said to the men of Israel, "For My honor, [tarnished by Micah's idol], you put up no fight, but for a woman's honor, you did."[2]

37. "The children of Dan set up for themselves the graven image; and Jonathan, the son of Gershom, the son of Manasseh, he and his sons were priests to the tribe of the Danites" (Judg. 18:30). But was Gershom the son of Manasseh? Was he not, in fact, a son of Moses, as is said, "The sons of Moses: Gershom, and Eliezer. The sons of Gershom: Shebuel" (1 Chron. 23:15–16), the latter [alias Jonathan] being further identified elsewhere as "Shebuel the son of Gershom, the son of Moses" (1 Chron. 26:24)? However, because he acted [wickedly] like [King] Manasseh,[3] Scripture assigned his ancestry to Manasseh. Still, the letter nun in Manasseh is suspended above the line, indicating that, if deserving, he will be spoken of as a descendant of Moses; if undeserving, as a descendant of Manasseh.[4]

R. Eleazar said: One should always take care to intermarry with virtuous people, for out of Moses, who married Jethro's[5] daughter, there issued Jonathan.[6]

38. The sages asked R. Samuel bar Nahman: How is it that Jonathan, although a priest for idolatry, had such a long life? He replied: Because Jonathan made a mockery out of his idol. Thus, when a man came to offer a bullock, a lamb, or a goat to his idol, saying, "Draw its favor upon me," Jonathan would reply, "How can this thing help you? It cannot see, hear, or speak; it can do neither good nor harm." The man asked, "As you live, what am I to do?" Jonathan replied, "Go and bring me a bowl of fine flour, add ten eggs, and set the repast before it. It will eat all that is brought, and I will draw its favor upon you." After the man [did so, and] left, Jonathan himself ate up every bit of the offering.

Once an impudent fellow came, and when Jonathan said the same thing to him, he asked, "If the idol gives no help at all, what are you doing here?" Jonathan answered, "Making my living."

[When the Danites reached the house of Micah, they recognized Jonathan as a Levite, so "they asked him]: 'Who brought thee hither? and what doest thou in this place? and what hast thou here?' " (Judg. 18:3). By these inquiries, the Danites meant: Are you not a descendant of Moses? Yet now you act as a priest to an idol? He replied, "I have a tradition from my grandfather's house that a man should hire himself out to officiate at idol-worship rather than be dependent on fellow mortals." (He supposed that in the tradition referred to, avodah zarah meant idol-worship. But in fact, such was not the tradition's meaning—it meant work that was strange, uncongenial.)[7]

In later years, when David perceived that Moses' grandson had an exceptional appreciation for money, he appointed him over the treasuries, as is said, "Shebuel, the son of Gershom, the son of Moses, was chief officer in charge of the treasuries" (1 Chron. 26:24). But was his name Shebuel? Was it not Jonathan? However, as R. Johanan explained, the name Shebuel [Hebrew: Shevuel] means that he returned to God (shav la-el) with all his heart.[8]

The Scroll of Ruth

39. "And it came to pass (va-yehi) in the days when the judges judged" (Ruth 1:1). In the name of R. Hiyya and R. Eleazar, it is reported: We brought the following rule in exegesis from the Babylonian exile: Wherever the word va-yehi occurs, there is woe.[9]

In the verse "And it came to pass (va-yehi) in the days when the judges judged," what woe is implied? "There was (va-yehi) a famine in the Land" (Ruth 1:1). But why does the word va-yehi occur twice in this verse? Once to intimate the famine for bread, and again to intimate the famine for Torah. [The word is repeated] to teach that when a generation is not possessed of Torah, it will find itself possessed of famine.[10]

40. "And a certain man of Bethlehem in Judah went . . . and the name of the man was Elimelech" [Hebrew: Elimelekh] (Ruth 1:1–2). He used to say, "To me (eli) shall kingship (melekh; read malkhut) come." "And the name of his wife was Naomi" (ibid.), her actions being comely and sweet (neimim); "and the name of the two sons Mahlon and Chilion" (ibid.), Mahlon, because he was blotted out (nimmah) from the world; and Chilion, because he perished (kalah) from the world.[11]

41. "And a certain man of Bethlehem in Judah went . . . and the name of the man was Elimelech" (Ruth 1:1–2). Why was Elimelech punished? Because he caused the hearts of Israel to fall [into despair]. Elimelech may be compared to a magnate who lived in a certain province. The people of that province, depending on him, used to say, "Should years of drought come, he could supply the entire province with food for ten years." However, when a year of drought did come, his maidservant went walking

---

1. In the initial battles, the men of Israel lost forty thousand of their number. See Judg. 20:21 and 20:25.
2. B. Sanh 103b.
3. Hezekiah's son, one of Judah's most wicked kings.
4. In Hebrew, Menasheh with the letter nun; without it, Mosheh.
5. The rabbis are divided in their judgment of Jethro. Some, as R. Eleazar, regard him as an idolatrous priest of Midian; others as a true proselyte.
6. An idolatrous priest for the tribe of Dan. B. BB 109b; P. Ber 9:3, 13d.
7. Avodah zarah may mean either "strange worship" or "strange, uncongenial work."
8. P. Ber 9:3, 13d; B. BB 110a; Yalkut, Judg., §73.
9. Play on the syllable va[y] in va-yehi; vay in Aramaic means "woe."
10. Ruth R., proem 7; Yalkut, Ruth, §596.
11. Ruth R. 2:5; Yalkut, Ruth, §600.

about the marketplace with her [empty] basket in her hand. The people of the province said, "He on whom we depended in the event of a drought to feed the entire province for ten years—look! There in the marketplace stands his maidservant, basket in hand—empty! So with Elimelech. He was one of the notables of the realm, one of the sustainers of the generation. Still, when the years of famine came, he said to himself: Now all of Israel will come knocking at my door [begging for food], one with a large basket, and another with a small basket. So he got up and ran away from them.[1]

42. "They came into the fields of Moab, and chose to remain there" (Ruth 1:2). At first they came to country towns, where they found a scarcity of water; then they went to large cities, but found the inhabitants utterly dissolute. So they returned to the country towns: "They came into the fields of Moab, and chose to remain there."[2]

43. "And they took them wives of the daughters of Moab; the name of the one was Orpah, and the name of the other Ruth" (Ruth 1:4). Orpah, because she turned her back (oref) on her mother-in-law;[3] and Ruth, because she understood (raatah) her mother-in-law's true wish.

Ruth and Orpah, so said R. Bebai in the name of R. Reuben, were the daughters of Eglon [king of Moab],[4] to whom the Holy One said: Rising from your throne in deference to me (Judg. 3:20), you accorded Me honor. As you live, I shall cause to rise out of you a son whom I will seat on My throne.[5]

44. "And Elimelech . . . died . . . and Mahlon and Chilion died both of them" (Ruth 1:3 and 1:5). It is taught: The Master of Mercy [in His exercise of justice] puts off taking human life. Thus, their horses died first, then their asses, then their camels; after that, "Elimelech died," and after that, "Mahlon and Chilion died, both of them."

"And the woman was left" (Ruth 1:5), left, said R. Hanina, as the leavings of a meal offering.[6]

45. "And she went forth out of the place" (Ruth 1:7). Was she the only one who went forth from the place? Did not many cameleers go forth? Did not many ass drivers go forth? However, as R. Azariah explained in the name of R. Judah bar Simon, the notable of a city is its radiance, its splendor, its adornment, its renown. When he departs, its radiance departs, its splendor departs, its adornment departs, and its renown departs.[7]

46. "And she went forth out of the place . . . and her two daughters-in-law with her, and they walked on the way" (Ruth 1:7)—walking was agonizing for them: being unshod, their bare feet were lacerated by the hard ground.[8]

47. "And Naomi said: 'Turn back, my daughters.' . . . And Ruth said: 'Entreat me not to leave thee, and return from following after thee' " (Ruth 1:11 and 1:16), for in any event, I intend to be converted, but I prefer that it come about through you and not through another. When Naomi heard this, she began to set forth the rules for conversion, saying also, "My child, it is not the practice for daughters of Israel to go to the theaters and circuses of the heathen."[9] Ruth replied, "Whither thou goest, I will go" (Ruth 1:16). Naomi continued, "It is not the practice for daughters of Israel to dwell in a house that has no mezuzah." Ruth replied, "Where thou lodgest, I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God" (ibid.).[10]

48. "So they two went. . . . And it came to pass, when they were come to Bethlehem" (Ruth 1:19). That day Boaz's wife died, and all Israel assembled to give her a loving farewell. Just then Ruth came with Naomi—as Boaz's wife was taken out, Naomi came in, and "all the city was astir concerning them, and the women said: 'Is this Naomi?' [ibid.]—the one whose appearance used to be so comely, so attractive. At one time she used to be carried about in a palanquin, and now she walks barefoot. At one time she wore garments of fine wool, and now she is covered with rags. At one time her face was ruddy from food and drink, and now her face is a sickly green from hunger." Naomi replied, "Call me not Naomi,[11] call me Marah"[12] (Ruth 1:20).

49. "Then said Boaz . . . :'Whose damsel is this?' " (Ruth 2:5). Did he not recognize her? Yes, but noticing how sweet she was and how demure her conduct, he was moved to inquire about her. All the other women bent down to gather ears of corn, while she sat down to gather them; all the other women hitched up their skirts, while she kept hers down; all the other women bantered with the reapers, while she was reserved—"she sat apart from the reapers" (Ruth 2:14), not in their midst. All the other women gathered from between the sheaves, while she gathered only what was already abandoned—two sheaves, not three.[13]

50. "Then she said: 'Let me find favor in thy sight, my lord . . . though I be not as one of thy handmaidens' " (Ruth 2:13). Boaz replied, "God forbid! You are not as one of the handmaidens (amahot) but as one of the matriarchs (immahot)."[14]

---

1. Ruth R. 1:4; Yalkut, Ruth, §598.
2. Ruth R. 2:6; Yalkut, Ruth, §600.
3. She left Naomi, after Naomi's plea that she do so.
4. Judg. 3:12.
5. Ruth R. 2:4; Yalkut, Judg., §42.
6. These are of no value whatever, even as Naomi came to feel about herself following her husband's and sons' deaths. Ruth R. 2:10
7. Ruth R. 2:12.
8. Ibid; Yalkut, Ruth, §601.
9. These had a reputation for lewdness.
10. Ruth R. 2:22; Yalkut, Ruth, §601.
11. Pleasant.
12. Bitter. Ruth R. 3:6; Yalkut, Ruth, §601.
13. Two sheaves are deemed "forgotten," that is, belong to the poor (see Pe 6:5). Ruth R. 4:6 (in printed eds., as opposed to medieval manuscripts, 4:9); Yalkut, Ruth, §601.
14. Ruth R. 5:5; Yalkut, Ruth, §603.

51. R. Yohanan said: Why was she called Ruth [the one who fills to overflowing]? Because such was her merit that from her was to issue David, who filled to overflowing (rvh) the Holy One with songs and hymns.[1]

52. R. Ze'era said: The Scroll of Ruth tells us nothing of the laws of cleanness or uncleanness, of what is prohibited or what is permitted. Why then was it written? To teach you how great is the reward of those who do deeds of kindness.[2]

Elkanah and Hannah

53. Elkanah used to make a pilgrimage to Shiloh four times a year—three times as required by Scripture and one time in fulfillment of what he required of himself on his own. Elkanah went up together with his wife, his sons, his daughters, his brothers, his sisters, and his kin.

When Elkanah and his retinue were on the way, they would lodge in the broad place of a city. As a result, the city was astir as people kept asking, "Where are you bound?" Elkanah and his kin would reply, "To the house of God in Shiloh, whence Torah and commandments come. Why don't you come with us? We'll all go together." At that, tears came to the eyes of the questioners, and they said, "Indeed we will go with you." So [one year] five families went up; the year after, ten; and the year after that, the entire city was astir, set on going up to Shiloh.

Moreover, the way Elkanah would go one year he would not go the following year, but he would go another way instead. Thus, Elkanah kept bringing up more and more Israelites with him, until all of them began to go up. As a result, the Holy One said to him: Elkanah, you tipped the balance on the scales in Israel's favor and trained them in the observance of the commandments, so that many people earned merit because of you. Therefore I will have a son issue from you who will likewise tip the balance on the scales in Israel's favor and train them in the observance of commandments, so that many will grow in merit through him.[3]

54. "And her rival vexed her sore" (1 Sam. 1:6). Peninnah would vex Hannah [who was childless] with one annoying taunt after another. What would Peninnah say to her? "Did you get a scarf for your older son and an undergarment for your second son?" Then, too, Peninnah would get up early—so said R. Nahman bar Abba—and say to Hannah, "Why don't you rouse yourself and wash your children's faces, so that they will be fit to go to school?" At twelve o'clock,[4] she would say, "Hannah, why don't you rouse yourself and welcome your children who are about to return from school?"

R. Tanhuma bar Abba said: When they sat down to eat, Elkanah would give each of his children his proper portion. Intending to vex Hannah, Peninnah would say to Elkanah, "Give this son of mine his portion and that son of mine his portion. You have given no portion to this [unborn] one."[5] Why did Peninnah speak this way? "To make her fret (hrmh)" (1 Sam. 1:6) against God [for making her barren].

In another comment, the word hrmh is interpreted not "to make her fret" but "to make her thunder" against God in prayer on her own behalf. The Holy One said to Peninnah, "You make her 'thunder' against Me. As you live, there are no thunders that are not followed by rain. I shall remember her at once."[6]

55. "O Lord of Tzevaot ['hosts'], if Thou wilt but look on the affliction of Thy handmaid!" (1 Sam. 1:11). R. Eleazar said: From the day the Holy One created His world, there was no one who called the Holy One [Lord of] Tzevaot ("hosts") until Hannah came and called Him [Lord of] Tzevaot—for she spoke up to the Holy One: Master of the universe, out of all the hosts of hosts that You created in Your world, is it so difficult for You to give me just one son? By what parable may Hannah's petition be illustrated? By the one of a king of flesh and blood who made a feast for his servants. A poor man came and, standing by the doorway, begged them, "Give me a morsel of bread," but no one heeded him. So he forced his way into the presence of the king and said, "My lord king, out of the entire feast you have made, it is so difficult in your sight to give me one morsel of bread?"

Another comment: Hannah used to go up to the Sanctuary on festal pilgrimages, and when she observed all Israel gathered there, she would say to the Holy One: Master of the universe, You have all these hosts, but among them not even one is mine.[7]

56. "Now Hannah, she spoke about[8] her heart" (1 Sam. 1:13), about matters, so said R. Eleazar in the name of R. Yose ben Zimra, that were in her heart.[9] She spoke right up to the Holy One: Master of the universe, of all that You created in woman, there is not one part without its purpose—eyes to see, ears to hear, a nose to smell, a mouth to speak, hands to work with, legs to walk with, breasts to give suck. The breasts You placed over my heart—what are they for? Are they not to give suck? Give me a son, that I may give him suck with them.[10]

57. "For this child I prayed" (1 Sam. 1:27). [The significance of "this" will be explained in what follows: The child] Samuel presumed to give a decision in the presence of his teacher, as implied in "When a bullock was about to be slaughtered, the child was brought to Eli" (1 Sam. 1:25). Just because a bullock was about to be slaughtered, they brought the child to Eli? [No. Rather] the bullock

---

1. B. Ber 7b; Yalkut, Prov., §964, end.
2. Ruth R. 2:14.
3. TdE (8) 9 (ed. Friedmann, pp. 47–48; JPS, pp. 149–50); Yalkut, 1 Sam., §377.
4. Literally, "the sixth hour."
5. Pointing to Hannah's barren belly.
6. PR 43:8 (YJS 2:768); Midrash Sam. 5; Yalkut, 1 Sam., §77.
7. B. Ber 31b; PR 43:3 (YJS 2:757).
8. JV: "in." The use of al in the sense of "on, of, about" is exceptional.
9. In Hebrew, the word for "heart" also means "chest," thus allowing for Hannah's disquisition that follows.
10. B. Ber 31b.

was brought to be offered up. Eli said, "Call a priest, and have him come and slaughter it properly."[1] When the child Samuel saw the people look for a priest to do the slaughtering, he said, "Why do you go about looking for a priest? A commoner's slaughtering is just as valid."

At that, [the child] Samuel was brought before Eli, who asked, "Where did you get such a decision?" Samuel replied, "Does Scripture say, 'The priest shall slaughter'? All that it says is, 'The priests shall present [the blood]' [Lev. 1:5], that is, the priest's obligation begins with receiving the blood. Hence, proper slaughtering may be performed by a commoner." Eli said, "You have reasoned well. But you presumed to give a decision in the presence of your teacher, and one who presumes to give a decision in the presence of his teacher is liable to the death penalty." Hannah immediately appeared and cried out in anguish, "I am the woman that stood by thee here" (1 Sam. 1:26). Eli replied, "Let me be, that I may condemn him to death. Afterward, I will invoke God's mercy in your behalf, and He will give you a son better than this one." But she said to him, "For this child I prayed."[2]

The Sons of Eli

58. "Now the sons of Eli were base men; they knew not the Lord. . . . Yea, before the fat was made to smoke, the priest's servant came with a three-pronged fork . . . and whatever the fork brought up, the priest would take away for himself" (1 Sam. 2:12–15). R. Simeon ben Yohai taught that the Holy One said to the sons of Eli: Why do you devour the remnants of the meal offering and leave to the flies the handful [that should be burned on the altar]? Why do you devour the flesh of offerings and leave its pieces of fat lying about in the sun?

What did Israel keep saying to the priest? "Let the priest sprinkle the blood, make the pieces of fat go up in smoke on the altar, and only then consume the flesh of the offering." What did the priest, [the son of Eli] say in reply? "The blood I will not sprinkle, the fat I will not make go up in smoke. [Why make such a fuss!] 'Give the priest flesh to roast . . . or else I will take it by force' " (1 Sam. 2:15–16).

Hence, in summing up the story, Scripture says, "The sons of Eli were men without a yoke[3] (beli-yaal)" (1 Sam. 2:12), that is, men who cast off from themselves the yoke (ol) of Heaven. "They knew not the Lord" (ibid.)—they said, "There is no [divine] kingship in heaven."[4]

Samuel

59. "Before the lamp of God had gone out, Samuel was laid down to sleep" (1 Sam. 3:3). R. Hiyya bar Abba said in the name of R. Yohanan: No righteous man ever departs from the world before a righteous man like him is brought into being: "A sun ariseth, even as another sun goeth down" (Eccles. 1:5). Thus, even before the sun of Eli set, the sun of Samuel the Ramathite began to shine.[5]

60. "Samuel was laid down"—like a lamb[6]—said R. Yohanan, without a blemish.[7]

61. We find that Moses and Samuel are regarded as equal in worth, as implied in the verse "Moses and Aaron among His priests; Samuel among them that call upon His Name" (Ps. 99:6). Pause to consider the difference between Moses and Samuel: Moses had to enter the Tabernacle and thereby come to the Holy One in order to hear the Divine Word; whereas the Holy One would come to Samuel, as is said, "The Lord came and stood" (1 Sam. 3:10). Why the difference? Because, the Holy One says, "I deal with every man in keeping with justice and equity." Moses used to sit in his place, and whoever had a case in law would come to him and have it judged, as is said, "And Moses sat to judge the people" (Exod. 18:13). But Samuel wearied himself going around from place to place to act as judge, so that people would not be put to the trouble of coming to him, as is said, "And he made the rounds from year to year" (1 Sam. 7:16).

Hence the Holy One said: Let Moses, who sits in one place to judge Israel, come to Me to the Tent of Meeting, to hear the Divine Word. But Samuel, who goes about to Israel in their many settlements to act as judge on their behalf—to him I will go and speak, in keeping with the verse "A just balance and scales is the Lord's" (Prov. 16:11).[8]

62. Samuel was regarded as equal to Moses and Aaron together, as is said, "Moses and Aaron among His priests; Samuel among them that call upon His Name" (Ps. 99:6).[9]

62a. [10] "And they answered them, and said, He is; behold, He is before thee" (1 Sam. 9:12). According to R. Yudan, who cited R. Mari bar Jacob, [when Saul and his servant asked some young women where Samuel could be found, and the young women in their reply finished by saying, "He is before thee," they meant that Samuel could be found where God in the cloud was conversing with him]. "Do you not see," they asked, "the cloud that always hovers about Samuel's courtyard?"[11]

The Destruction of Shiloh

63. "And the Philistines fought, and Israel was smitten. . . . And the Ark of God was taken. . . . And there

---

1. Perform shehitah (ritual slaughter).
2. B. Ber 31b; Yalkut, 1 Sam., §80.
3. JV: "base men."
4. Yalkut, 1 Sam., §86; Midrash Sam. 6:11.
5. B. Yoma 38b.
6. Here there may be a play on the words shkv ("laid down,") and, by metathesis, kvs ("lamb").
7. Yalkut, 1 Sam., §97.
8. Exod. R. 16:4
9. Num. R. 18:8.
10. Transposed by the translator from §72 below in this chapter.
11. Yalkut, 1 Sam., §108.

ran a man of Benjamin out of the army, and came to Shiloh the same day" (1 Sam. 4:10–12). The man of Benjamin was Saul, who, according to R. Levi, ran sixty mil that day. He was in the front lines, but when he heard that the Tablets had been captured, he went, snatched them from Goliath, and came [to Eli].[1]

64. "And it came to pass when the Benjamite made mention of the Ark of God, [Eli] fell . . . backward . . . and his neck broke" (1 Sam. 4:18). R. Joshua bar Nehemiah said: Neither five [iron] claws nor five [iron] styli[2] killed Eli, but at the news that the Ark was captured, his neck broke asunder.[3]

65. "Now the Philistines had taken the Ark of God . . . and brought it into the house of Dagon, and set it by Dagon" (1 Sam. 5:1–2). The Philistines, so stated R. Yohanan, honored the Ark, saying, "This one is a god, and the other [Dagon] is a god. Let this god come and abide with the other god." Resh Lakish argued, "If that were so, would the Philistines' reward have been so humiliating? In fact, what they actually said was, 'This one is the vanquished, while the other [Dagon] is the victor. Let the vanquished one come and serve the victorious one.' But the Holy One said, '[just for this], you will be scalded not by tepid water but by furiously boiling water.'[4] Hence, 'when they arose early the next morning, behold, Dagon was fallen upon his face. . . . And the head of Dagon and both the palms of his hands lay cut off upon the threshold' " (1 Sam. 5:4).[5]

66. "But the hand of the Lord was heavy upon them of Ashdod, and He destroyed them, and smote them with mice" (1 Sam. 5:6). [Deluding themselves], the wicked men of Ashdod said, " 'So this is the God who smote the Egyptians!' [1 Sam. 4:8] He had ten plagues, but they have been used up." The Holy One replied, "Do you suppose I have no other plague left? I will bring a plague upon you, the like of which has not been in the world—mice that will pull out your innards [when you sit down to ease yourselves]." Even when the men of Ashdod, in an attempt to protect themselves, made copper vessels on which to sit, a mouse would say to the vessel, "We are the emissaries of Him who spoke and the world came into being, and you are one of His creatures. Give honor to Him who created you." Then the vessel would split open of itself, and the mouse would leap up out of the deep and pull out the man's innards.

This is one of the instances when God endowed the frail with mastery over the strong.[6]

67. It is said in the name of R. Abba: Why were the people of Beth-shemesh smitten?[7] Because they behaved disrespectfully toward the Ark, so that the Holy One was constrained to say: If a hen belonging to one of the people of Beth-shemesh had been lost, would not its owner have gone around to many doorways to recover it? Yet My Ark has been seven months in the country of the Philistines, and not one of you gave it any heed. Since you are not giving it any heed, it is for Me to give heed to it. [God's bestirring Himself for the Ark is set forth in the verse] "His right hand and His holy arm hath wrought deliverance for Him" (Ps. 98:1).[8]

68. "And the heifers took the straight way (va-yisharnah) by the way to Beth-shemesh" (1 Sam. 6:12). What is the dual significance of va-yisharnah? Rav said: The heifers directed (yashar) their visages toward the Ark and uttered a song (shirah). What song did they utter? R. Isaac Nappaha said:

> Sing, sing, O [Ark of] acacia!
> Exult in all your radiance,
> You who are overlaid with woven gold,
> Extolled in God's holiest place,
> Made resplendent with delicate traceries,
> Sheltered between the wings of cherubim.

R. Samuel bar Nahman said: How much toil did [Moses] the son of Amram expend until he had taught song to the Levites! Yet you, on your own, utter song. All strength (yeyasher) to you.[9]

The Sons of Samuel

69. "And it came to pass when Samuel was old . . . his sons walked not in his ways, but turned aside for lucre" (1 Sam. 8:1 and 8:3)—they did not follow the pattern set by their father. The righteous Samuel used to travel throughout Israel's habitations, dispensing justice for them in the cities they dwelled in: "And he made the rounds from year to year of Bethel, and Gilgal, and Mizpah; and judged Israel in all those places" (1 Sam. 7:16). His sons, however, did not do so—they remained in their towns, in order to provide lucrative income for their beadles and scribes.[10]

70. The words "they turned aside for lucre" mean, according to R. Meir, that the sons of Samuel asked outright for the portions due them [as Levites];[11] or, according to R. Judah, that they forced people to sell the excess produce for them; or, according to R. Akiva, that they extorted an extra basket of tithe beyond what they were entitled to;

---

1. Midrash Sam. 11; Yalkut, 1 Sam., §102.
2. Clawing and penetrating attachments to weapons of war.
3. Midrash Sam. 11.
4. I thought you would understand a slight hint, but apparently you require a more unambiguous assertion.
5. Midrash Sam. 10.
6. MTeh 78:11 (YJS 2:30); Yalkut, 1 Kings, §222.
7. See 1 Sam. 6:19.
8. The only instance in Scripture where it is said that God came to His own aid. Gen. R. 54:4.
9. B. AZ 24b; Gen. R. 54:4; Yalkut, 1 Sam., §103.
10. The beadles were sent to summon litigants, and the scribes recorded the proceedings. B. Shab 56a.
11. Because of their importance, they received what they demanded, thus depriving Levites of humbler status, indeed reducing them to near starvation. But they were not guilty of perversion of justice.

or, according to R. Yose, that they extorted additional sacred gifts.[1]

King Saul

71. Why did Saul merit kingship? Because of his humility. He said on one occasion: "Lest my father cease caring for the asses, and become anxious concerning us" (1 Sam. 9:5), thus making the servant to whom he was speaking equal to himself in his father's affection. And again, when Saul sought to evade kingship, what did God say of him? "Behold, he hath hid himself among the baggage" (1 Sam. 10:22).[2]

72. [This section is transposed to §62a, above in this chapter.]

73. "As soon as ye are come into the city, ye shall straightway find him, before he go up to the high place to eat; for the people will not eat until he come, because he doth bless the sacrifice; and afterward they eat that are bidden. Now therefore get you up; for at this time ye shall find him" (1 Sam. 9:13). Why did the maidens talk at such great length? Because women are fond of talking, said Rav. Because, said Samuel, they wanted to gaze at the beauty of Saul, of whom it is written, "From his shoulders and upward he was higher than any of the people" (1 Sam. 9:2). But R. Yohanan said: The maidens had to talk at such length [to detain Saul], because one reign may not overlap another even by as little as a hairbreadth.[3]

74. "Then Saul drew near . . . and said: 'Tell me, I pray thee, where the seer's house is.' And Samuel answered . . . : 'I am the seer' " (1 Sam. 9:18–19). The Holy One then said to Samuel, "So you are the seer, are you? As you live, I will make you see that you are not much of a seer." When did He make Samuel see it? When He said to him, "Fill thy horn with oil. . . . And it came to pass, when [the sons of Jesse] were come, that he beheld Eliab, and said: 'Surely the Lord's anointed is before Him.' But the Lord said unto Samuel: 'Look not on his countenance . . . for it is not as man seeth' " (1 Sam. 16:1 and 16:6–7).[4]

75. When the Holy One said to Saul, "Now go and smite Amalek" (1 Sam 15:3), Saul said to himself: If at the death of a single person, the Torah ordains, "Bring a heifer whose neck is to be broken,"[5] how many more and more such heifers would have to be brought for the death of so many! In any event, even if a human being has sinned, what sin has the animal committed? And if grownups have sinned, what sin did the little ones commit? A divine voice came forth and said, "Be not righteous overmuch" (Eccles. 7:16). Subsequently, after Saul had said to Doeg, "Turn thou and fall upon the priests" (1 Sam. 22:18), another divine voice came forth and said to him, "Be not overmuch wicked" (Eccles. 7:17).

Because brazenness dwelled in King Saul, he was slain and his royal line was extirpated. Thus, when Samuel asked him, "Wherefore then didst thou not hearken to the voice of the Lord?" (1 Sam. 15:19), Saul answered brazenly, "Yea, I have hearkened to the voice of the Lord" (1 Sam. 15:20). Saul was all the more at fault! For thereafter, because of David, he nursed hostility and vengefulness in his heart against Israel wherever they dwelled.[6]

76. "Seek me a woman that divineth by a ghost, that I may go to her, and inquire of her" (1 Sam. 28:7). In speaking thus, to whom may Saul be likened? To a king, said Resh Lakish, who entered a province and issued a decree that all the cocks in it should be slaughtered. The next night he decided to depart early in the morning, so he inquired; "Is there a cock here that will crow at dawn?" At that, he was asked "Are you not the one who issued a decree that all cocks in this province be slaughtered?" So, too, Saul first removed from the Land all who divined by ghosts or familiar spirits, then he turned around and said, "Seek me a woman that divineth by a ghost."

"And Saul disguised himself, and put on other raiment" (1 Sam. 28:8), a commoner's raiment. "And went, and two men with him" (ibid.)—Abner and Amasa. "And they came to the woman by night" (ibid). But was it night?[7] No, but "at night" intimates that the hour was as gloomy for them as night.

"And Saul swore to her by the Lord" (1 Sam. 28:10). To whom may Saul at that time be compared? To a woman, said Resh Lakish, who while in the company of her lover, swears by the life of her husband. So, too, Saul, while inquiring of a diviner by a ghost and a familiar spirit, said, "As the Lord liveth, there shall no punishment happen to thee for this thing" (ibid.).[8]

77. "Then said the woman: 'Whom shall I bring up unto thee?' And he said: 'Bring me up Samuel' " (1 Sam. 28:11). The woman did what she had to, and said what she had to, and brought up Samuel. "And Samuel said to Saul: 'Why hast thou disquieted me?' And Saul answered: 'I am sore distressed . . . and God is departed from me, and answereth me no more, neither by prophets, nor by dreams' " (1 Sam. 28:15). But why did Saul not also say, "Nor by the Urim and Tummim"?[9] "The heart knoweth its own bitterness" (Prov. 14:10), said R. Isaac son of R.

---

1. Either the priestly dues—the shoulder, cheeks, and maw of animals—though the sons of Samuel were not priests; or the Levitical dues—the first tithes. The sin of the sons of Samuel was that they used force. Tithes were to be given voluntarily, not collected.
2. Tos Ber 4:18.
3. B. Ber 48b.
4. Sif Deut., §17; Midrash Sam. 14.
5. See Deut. 21.
6. Yalkut, 1 Sam., §120; TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 159. He charged that even the Benjamites—his own tribe—were all conspiring against him (1 Sam. 22:7–8). For a different view of Saul, see MTeh 7:2 (YJS 1:101–3).
7. Saul's disguise would have been unnecessary at night. Mattenot Kehunnah, ad loc.
8. Lev. R. 26:4; Tanhuma, Emor, §2.
9. Since Saul did inquire of them and received no answer. See 1 Sam. 28:6.

Hiyya: Had Saul mentioned the Urim and Tummim,[1] Samuel might have said to him: Are you not the one who brought it upon yourself? Are you not the one who smote Nob, the city of priests [including Ahimelech, the high priest]?[2]

"Then Saul fell straightway his full length upon the earth, and was sore afraid, because of the words of Samuel" (1 Sam. 28:20). When Abner and Amasa asked, "What did Samuel say to you?" he replied [untruthfully], "He said, 'Tomorrow when you go down to battle you will be victorious. More! Your sons will be appointed to high office.' "

Then Saul took his three sons, and they went forth to war. At that very moment, said Resh Lakish, the Holy One summoned the ministering angels and said to them: Come and behold the extraordinary being I created in My world! Ordinarily, even a man going to a feast will not take his sons with him, because of the evil eye. But this man is going forth to war and, though he knows that he will be slain, takes his sons with him, facing cheerfully the measure of justice that is sure to strike him.[3]

The Death of Saul

78. R. Joshua of Sikhnin said in the name of R. Levi: The Holy One showed Moses every generation and its judges, every generation and its kings, every generation and its sages, every generation and its leaders, every generation and its teachers of Mishnah, every generation and its officers, every generation and its communal heads, every generation and its extortionists, every generation and its brigands, every generation and its prophets. When He showed him Saul and his sons falling by the sword, Moses spoke up: Shall the first king raised over Your children be pierced by the sword? The Holy One answered: Why are you speaking of this matter to Me? Speak to the priests whom he ordered slain. They are now acting as accusers against him. "And the Lord said unto Moses: 'Speak unto the priests' " (Lev. 21:1).[4]

79. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: Why was Saul punished? Because he waived the honor due him, as when "certain base fellows said: 'How shall this one save us?' And they despised him. . . . But he held his peace" (1 Sam. 10:27).[5]

But in the name of Samuel, R. Judah said: Why did the dynasty of Saul not continue? Because Saul was above reproach.[6]

80. "And there was a famine in the days of David. . . . And the Lord said: 'It is because of Saul' " (2 Sam. 21:1), because he was not mourned in the manner required by law. The Holy One asked David: David, is he not the Saul who was anointed with the oil of anointing? Is he not the Saul in whose day no idolatry was practiced in Israel?[7] Is he not the Saul whose portion in heaven is with Samuel the Prophet?[8] Yet you are in the Land and he is outside it.[9]

At once David got busy and gathered all the elders and notables of Israel. They crossed the Jordan, came to Jabesh-gilead, and found the bones of Saul and of his son Jonathan—bones over which worms had exercised no power. They took the bones, put them in a coffin, and went back across the Jordan. Then David commanded that Saul's coffin be borne through the territory of each and every tribe. Upon the coffin's arrival in a tribe's territory, the entire tribe—the men, their sons and daughters, as well as their wives—came out and paid affectionate tribute to Saul and to his sons, thus discharging the obligation of loving-kindness to the dead. When the Holy One saw that Israel had shown such loving-kindness, He, immediately filled with compassion, sent down rain.[10]

David the Shepherd

81. "The Lord testeth the righteous" (Ps. 11:5). He tested David by means of the sheep and found him a good shepherd, as is said, "He took him because of [his] separations[11] of the sheep" (Ps. 78:70). What is meant by "[his] separations"? It means that David kept some sheep separate from the others. He would first lead out the young lambs and let them feed on the upper part of the herbage, which is tender; then he would lead out the rams and let them feed on the middle part of the herbage, which is neither tender nor tough; and finally he would lead out the old ewes and let them feed on the stubble of the herbage, which is tough. So the Holy One said: He who knows how to look after sheep, each according to its capacity, is to look after My sheep—Israel. Hence, "from following the ewes that give suck He brought him, to be shepherd over Jacob His people" (Ps. 78:71).[12]

82. While David was tending sheep, he came upon the re'em[13] asleep in the wilderness and, thinking it was a mountain, climbed upon it and continued to tend his sheep. The re'em woke up and arose, and David, astride its horns, was lifted up as high as the heavens. [At that moment David prayed before the Holy One to bring him down from the horns of the re'em.] What did the Holy One do? He caused a lion to come toward the re'em, and when the re'em saw the lion, he was afraid of it and cringed before it, for the lion is king of all animals and beasts. When David saw the lion, he also was afraid of it. Then

---

1. Which are in the hands of the high priest.
2. See 1 Sam. 22:11–19.
3. Lev. R. 26:8.
4. Lev. R. 26:7.
5. A king should be resolute and firm.
6. He had no family skeletons, which might have softened his arrogance. B. Yoma 22b.
7. "Saul had put away those that divined by a ghost or a familiar spirit out of the Land" (1 Sam. 28:3).
8. See Lev. R. 26:7.
9. Buried in Jabesh-gilead. See 1 Sam. 31:13.
10. Num. R. 8:4; PRE 17; Yalkut, 2 Sam., §154.
11. JV: "from the sheepfolds."
12. MTeh 78:21; Exod. R. 2:2; Yalkut, Ps., §823.
13. A fabulous animal of giant proportions.

the Holy One caused a gazelle to come along, and as the lion sprang after it, David descended and went his way. Hence David said, "Save me from the lion's mouth: for Thou hast answered me from the horns of the remim" (Ps. 22:22).[1]

David and the Works of the Lord

83. "A psalm of David when he feigned madness" (Ps. 34:1). [Why David had to feign madness will be explained in what follows]: David said to the Holy One, " 'How manifold are Thy works, O Lord! All those that Thou hast made in wisdom' [Ps.104:24]. All that You have made in Your world, You have made beautiful, yet the most beautiful of all Your works is wisdom. But madness, which You also made—what profit is there for the world in madness? When a man goes about the marketplace and rends his garment, and children run after him and mock him, is this beautiful in Your eyes?" The Holy One answered, "David, are you raising a cry against madness? By your life, you shall have need of it and you shall find yourself praying for madness before I give you a touch of it."

Not long after David spoke thus to God, he set out to go to Achish, king of the Philistines. The Holy One asked, "David, are you going to Achish?! Yesterday you slew Goliath—his blood is not yet dry—and Goliath's brothers serve as the king's bodyguard, and yet you are going to Achish with Goliath's sword in your hand?"

When David did come to Achish, Goliath's brothers said to Achish, "Let us slay him who slew our brother!" Achish replied, "Was it not in fair battle that David slew your brother? Is it not true that your brother stipulated with him, 'If he be able to fight with me and kill me, then we will become your slaves' (1 Sam. 17:9)?" The brothers said to Achish, "If so, get up off your throne, surrender your kingship to David, and let us become his slaves, for this is what Goliath stipulated." Thus they hammered at him with their words.

In that instant David grew afraid and began to pray to God, saying, "Master of the universe, answer me!" The Holy One asked, "David, what do you require?" David said, "Give me a touch of that thing [that madness You have created]." The Holy One replied, "Did I not say to you, "Whoso despiseth a thing shall be taken by it' (Prov. 13:13)?"

Then David made himself out to be a madman and started writing on the doors, "Achish, king of Gath, owes me one hundred myriads, and his wife fifty myriads." Now, the daughter of Achish and her mother were both mad, and the two were screaming and carrying on in madness within, while David was screaming and feigning madness without. So Achish said to his servants, "Do I lack madmen, that you have brought this fellow to rave for me?" (1 Sam. 21:16).

In that instant David rejoiced greatly [that madness had come to his aid] and said to the Holy One, "Master of the universe, how very good is madness! 'I will bless the Lord at all times' [Ps. 34:2]—both in time of reason and in time of madness."[2]

84. Once, while seated on the roof of his house, David, king of Israel, saw a wasp eating a spider. David spoke up to the Holy One: Master of the universe, what benefit is there from these two You created in Your world? The wasp merely despoils the nectar of flowers—no benefit from it. Throughout the year, the spider spins but makes no garments. The Holy One replied: David, you belittle My creatures! The time will come when you shall have need of both of them.

Later, when fleeing from King Saul, David had taken refuge in a cave. The Holy One sent a spider, which spun a web across the cave's entrance, sealing it. When Saul came and saw the cave's entrance with the web across it, he said: Surely no man has come in here, for had he come, he would have torn the web into shreds. So Saul went away without going into the cave.

And when David went out of the cave and saw the spider, he all but kissed him, saying: Blessed is your Creator, and blessed are you.

Subsequently, David found Saul asleep within a barricade [in the royal tent] and Abner lying prone across the tent's entrances, his head in one entrance and his feet in the opposite entrance. But Abner's knees were raised up, and so David was able to come in under them and pick up the cruse of water.[3] As he was about to leave the way he came, Abner stretched out his legs, which in size were like two gigantic columns, pinning David down. Beseeching the Holy One's compassion, David prayed, "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" (Ps. 22:2). Then the Holy One performed a miracle for him—He sent him a big wasp, which stung Abner's legs so that he again bent his knees, and thus David was free to leave.

In that instant David said, in praise of the Holy One: Master of the universe, who can imitate Your works, Your mighty acts—all Your works are beautiful![4]

David's Harp

85. "At midnight I will rise to give thanks unto Thee" (Ps. 119:62). A harp was hung above David's couch, across his window. When midnight arrived, the north wind blew upon the harp and made it swing to and fro, so that it played of itself. David would immediately rise and occupy himself with Torah until the break of dawn. And after dawn's break, the sages of Israel would come in to see him and say, "Our lord king, your people Israel require sustenance." He would reply, "Let them go out and make a living one from the other."[5] They would answer, "A handful cannot satisfy a lion, nor can a cistern be filled by rain falling into its surround."[6] So he said, "Go forth in troops and help yourselves [to the enemy's posses-

1. MTeh 22:28; Yalkut, 1 Sam., §131.

2. MTeh 34:1; Yalkut, 1 Sam., §131.

3. See 1 Sam. 26:12.

4. Alphabet of Ben Sira, in Eisenstein.

5. Let the poor be supported by the prosperous.

6. To fill a cistern, water must be channeled in.

sions]."[1] The sages took counsel with Ahithophel, sought advice from the Sanhedrin, and inquired of the Urim and Tummim. [After that, they would go forth to wage war.]

And the proof that David was awakened in such a way and at such an hour? The verse, so said R. Isaac bar Adda, "Wake up my royal glory, let the psaltery and the harp wake it, and I then wake the dawn" (Ps. 57:9).[2]

86. "A prayer of David. . . . Preserve my life, for I am pious" (Ps. 86:1–2). David dared to say to the Holy One: Master of the universe, am I not a truly pious man? All the kings of the east and of the west sleep into the third hour of the day,[3] while "I at midnight rise to praise Thee" (Ps. 119:62). All the kings of the east and of the west sit in pomp in the midst of retinues, while I, in order to declare a woman clean for her husband, have my hands soiled with the blood [of menstruation] or with an aborted fetus and its placenta.[4] What is more, in all that I do, I consult my master Mephibosheth, for I ask him: My master Mephibosheth, is my decision right—have I properly convicted, properly acquitted, properly declared clean, properly declared unclean? I [the king] am not ashamed [to ask an underling]. Hence, unlike other kings [who spend their time feasting], "I speak of Your decrees, and am not ashamed [to ask concerning them]" (Ps. 119:46).[5]

87. [David said]: "Let me dwell in Thy tent forever" (Ps. 61:5). Could David have actually believed that he would live forever? No. What David asked the Holy One was: May it be the will of Your Presence that my songs and paeans of praise be uttered in synagogues and houses of study forever.[6]

88. It is reported of King David that when he finished the book of Psalms, he became complacent, saying to the Holy One: Master of the universe, is there a creature You created in Your world who utters songs and paeans of praise more than I? In that instant a frog confronted him and said: David, do not be so complacent—I utter more songs and more paeans of praise than you.[7]

1. Saying, in effect: If you are so inept that you cannot manage the people's economy, there is only one alternative for you—despoil the neighboring nations by brute force. So Leon Nemoy.
2. B. Ber 3b–4a and En Yaakov, ad loc.; P. Ber 1:1, 2c.
3. 9:00 A.M.
4. "The restrictions of Lev. 12:2ff. do not apply to all cases of abortion, nor is all discharge treated as menstrual, and David is represented as occupying himself with deciding such questions instead of feasting. [The Munich] ms. omits 'with the blood [of menstruation] or' " (Maurice Simon in Ber, Soncino, p. 11, n.5).
5. B. Ber 4a.
6. P. Ber 2:1, 4a.
7. Perek Shirah.

David's Sin and Repentance

89. For twenty-two years the holy spirit was taken away from David, king of Israel,[8] and in his grief he shed a cupful of tears every day and ate his bread sprinkled with ashes.[9]

90. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: When David said to Mephibosheth: "Thou and Ziba divide the Land" (2 Sam. 19:30), a divine voice came forth and said: Rehoboam and Jeroboam will divide the kingdom.[10]

91. No generation is without its scorners. What did such impudent ones do in David's generation? They would go to David's windows and say: David, David, when will the Temple be built? When will we be able to go to the house of the Lord? And David would say to himself: Although they intend to provoke me, may such-and-such befall me if I did not rejoice should what they ask be fulfilled. That David spoke thus is implied in the words "I rejoiced when they said unto me: 'Would that we were able to go to the house of the Lord' " (Ps. 122:1).[11]

David's Humility

92. "And David danced (mekarkher) before the Lord with all his might" (2 Sam. 6:14). Just what did he do? He was dressed, say our masters, in glistening garments embroidered with fringes shining like fine gold (paz), and he struck his hands one against the other, clapping them. As he danced, crying, "[Hail], exalted Lord (kiri ram)!"[12] the glistening gold fringes that he wore made a tinkling sound (pozez). More! He pulled up his skirts [thus baring his legs] and cavorted as Israel cheered loudly, sounding horns and trumpets and all kinds of musical instruments. When he reached Jerusalem [cavorting thus], all the women looked at David from roofs and windows, and he did not mind. But Michal did not let him come into the house. Instead, she ran out into the street and pummeled him with reproaches, saying, "Didn't the king of Israel do himself honor today—exposing himself in the sight of the slave-girls of his subjects, as one of the riffraff might expose himself!" (2 Sam. 6:20). She went on, "Today the nobility of my father's house was made evident. Look at the difference between you and my father's house. Everyone in my father's house was modest and godly. [Of the house of

8. In the seventeenth year of his reign, during his campaign against Ammon, he took Bathsheba. And the next twenty-two years until the day of his death he spent in penitence. See 2 Sam. 11:2–17 and 12:15–23; 1 Chron. 3:5; and EB 2:634 and 2:641–42, s. v. "David."
9. TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 7; Yalkut, 2 Sam., §165.
10. B. Shab 56b.
11. David had been told that he would not build the Temple. Hence, the request of "the impudent ones" to go to the house of the Lord was in effect a wish that he die. P. Ber 2:1, 4b; P. Shek 2:7, 47a; Yalkut, Ps. §879.
12. Play on mekharker: kiri (Greek kyrios: "lord, master"); ram (Hebrew: "exalted, high").

Saul, it is said that in all their lives no one had ever seen the naked heel or toe of any of them] While you—you stand and uncover yourself like one of the riffraff." David replied, Am I acting up before a king of flesh and blood? Am I not acting up for the King who is King of kings? They of your father's house sought honor for themselves and put aside the honor of Heaven. I do not do so—I seek the honor of Heaven and put aside my own honor. Moreover, "I will gladly be honored among the slavegirls you speak of" (2 Sam. 6:22). Those daughters of Israel whom you call slavegirls (amahot) are not slavegirls, but matriarchs (immahot). Would that my share were with them in the time-to-come.

"Lord, my heart was not haughty" (Ps. 131:1) when Samuel anointed me king: "nor mine eyes lofty" (ibid.) when I slew Goliath; "nor did I strut in high office" (ibid.) when God restored me to kingship; "or in tending to marvels beyond my scope" (ibid.) when I brought up the Ark. "Surely I disposed my person like a weaned child with his mother" (Ps. 131:2)—even as an infant is not ashamed to be uncovered before his mother, so I disposed my person before You; I felt no shame in abasing myself for the sake of Your glory.[1]

David and Abner

93. Why was Abner punished? The sages said: Because he did not let Saul be reconciled with David when David said to Saul, "Please, sir, take a close look at the corner of thy cloak in my hand; for when I cut off the corner of thy cloak, I did not kill thee" (1 Sam. 24:12).[2] At that, Abner said to Saul, "Why pay attention to the corner of the cloak displayed by this [boastful liar]? It was probably torn away by a thornbush." And afterward [when David took away the spear and the cruse of water from near Saul's head][3] in the barricade where Saul lay, David cried to Abner, "Abner, aren't you going to answer?" (1 Sam. 26:14), as if to say, "Are you not he who declared, '[The corner of Saul's cloak] was probably torn away by a thornbush'? The spear and the cruse—were they also torn away by a thornbush?"

Some say that Abner was punished [because, as one of Saul's guards], he had an opportunity to protest [the slayings] at Nob, the city of priests, but did not protest.[4]

R. Simeon ben Lakish said: It was because Abner made of young men's blood something to play with, as is written, "Abner said to Joab: 'Let the young men, I pray thee, arise and play before us' " (2 Sam. 2:14) [that is, engage in a sword-fighting duel to the death].[5]

David and Israel's Enemies

94. "David . . . also defeated the Moabites. He made them lie down on the ground and he measured them off with a cord; he measured out two lengths of a cord for those who were to be put to death, and one length for those to be spared" (2 Sam. 8:2). As is known, when David was fleeing from Saul, he took his father and his mother to the king of Moab, whom, as a descendant of Ruth the Moabite, he trusted. Thus it is written, "David went thence to Mizpeh of Moab; and he said unto the king of Moab: 'Let my father and my mother, I pray thee, come and stay with you,' " etc. (1 Sam. 22:3). But the king of Moab slew them and not one of them escaped, except a brother of David's who fled to Nahash, king of the Ammonites. The king of Moab sent for him, but the king of Ammon would not give him up. (That was the kindness Nahash showed to David.) Because of what the king of Moab had done to his family, David waged war against the Moabites.[6]

95. When David sent Joab against Aram-naharaim and Aram-zobah, he at first was about to attack the Edomites [to protect his rear], intending to neutralize them.[7] But they showed him a document that bore God's injunction,[8] "Be very careful not to start a fight with [the descendants of Esau]" (Deut. 2:4–5). Then, when he was about to attack the Moabites [also in his rear], wishing to neutralize them, they likwise produced a document bearing God's injunction "Do not harass the Moabites, or engage them in war" (Deut. 2:9). So Joab desisted, but sent emissaries to David, saying: I was about to attack the Edomites, but they showed me a document bearing the injunction "Be very careful not to start a fight with [the descendants of Esau]." Then I was about to attack the Moabites, and they too showed me a document bearing the injunction "Do not harass the Moabites."

Then David, disregarding royal dignity, arose, doffed his purple and his crown, wrapped himself in his cloak, and went to the Sanhedrin, to whom he said: My masters, ordinarily I come here to learn, but this time, with your permission, I would instruct. I sent Joab to Aram-naharaim and to Aram-zobah, and when he was about to attack the Edomites [in his rear], they showed him a document with the injunction "Be very careful not to start a fight with [the descendants of Esau]." But were they not the first to breach the border? For "[Eglon] brought the Ammonites and the Amalekites[9] together . . . and went and defeated Israel" (Judg. 3:13) Then Joab was about to attack the Moabites, wishing to neutralize them, but they also brought forth a document with the injunction "Do not harass the Moabites." But were they not the first to breach the "border"? For "Balak . . . king of Moab . . . sent messengers to Balaam . . .: 'Come, put a curse upon this people for me' " (Num. 22:4–6).

The aforegoing is implied in the psalm's caption,

---

1. Num. R. 4:20.
2. That is, David could have killed Saul in the cave in En Gedi, but instead he cut off the corner of Saul's cloak; and later, having followed Saul out of the cave, he showed Saul the cloak as proof that he had refrained from killing him.
3. 1 Sam. 26:5 and 26:12.
4. See 1 Sam. 22:17 and Rashi.
5. Yalkut, 1 Sam., §133; Num. R. 23:13; Tanhuma, Hukkat, §4.
6. Num. R. 14:1.
7. Literally, "to crop their tails."
8. Instead of quoting, "Ye have compassed this mountain long enough" (Deut. 2:3), the translator quotes the words that follow directly.
9. Descendants of Esau.

"Mikhtam for David to instruct" (Ps. 60:1): [Though cloaked (mikh)] in genuine humility (mikhut), [yet compelled (tam) by his] integrity (tammut), David presumed to instruct [the Sanhedrin].[1]

95a.[2] R. Judah said in the name of Rav: [In his army] David had four hundred young squires, all of them sons of women taken captive in battle. All trimmed their hair in front and grew long locks [in heathen fashion]; all went about in golden chariots. They formed the army's vanguard, David's strike force—wherever they went, they terrified the enemies of Israel.[3]

David and His Son Absalom

96. When a man refrains from chastising his son for disobedience, the son will in the end fall into evil ways and come to hate his father. . . . Because David neither rebuked nor chastised his son Absalom, Absalom fell into evil ways, sought to slay his father, forced him to walk [out of Jerusalem] barefoot and weeping—in consequence of which many thousands, many myriads fell in Israel—and brought upon his father many, many other cruel afflictions without end.[4]

97. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon ben Yohai: An evil brood in a man's house is worse than the war of Gog and Magog.[5] For the words "A psalm of David when he fled from his son Absalom" (Ps. 3:1) are followed at once by David's saying, "O Lord, my foes are so many! Many are those who attack me" (Ps. 3:2); while concerning the war of Gog and Magog, the words "Why do the nations assemble, and the peoples plot vain things?" (Ps. 2:1) are not followed by David's saying, "O Lord, my foes are so many."[6]

98. "A psalm of David when he fled from his son Absalom" (Ps. 3:1). "A psalm of David"? Scripture should have said, "A lamentation of David." R. Simeon ben Avishalom explained David's use of "psalm" by the parable of a man against whom a writ of debt is issued. Before he pays it, he is troubled; but after he has paid it, he is glad. So it was with David. When the Holy One said to him, "Behold, I will raise up evil against thee out of thine own house" (2 Sam. 12:11), he was troubled, saying to himself: Perhaps it will be a slave or a bastard who will have no pity on me. But when he saw that it was Absalom, he was relieved, saying; A son is likely to have pity on his father.[7]

99. "I pray thee, let me go and pay my vow" (2 Sam. 15:7). Absalom said to David, "I ask you one favor—that you give me two elders to accompany me, so that whatever I do will be done by their authority." So David gave him a writ directing that two elders whom Absalom might pick from each and every city accompany him. Absalom then took the writ and went from city to city, where he called upon its most distinguished elders and, showing them the writ issued by his father, said, "Read what my father wrote in my behalf. Only because I favor you [over others] did I seek you out." Absalom did this in every city, until he got himself two hundred elders, as is said, "Out of Jerusalem there accompanied Absalom two hundred men who were invited and went in good faith, suspecting nothing" (2 Sam. 15:11)—they had no idea for what purpose they were accompanying Absalom.

Then Absalom prepared a feast for all the elders, where he had them recline in twos—between each two, one who had joined him in the conspiracy would keep saying, "Look how comely Absalom is. Kingship becomes him. Let us abandon David and go with Absalom."

How did the elders respond? Though they seemed to go along with Absalom, yet they prayed in behalf of David, saying, "May it be God's will that we fall into David's hands and not David into our hands. For if we fall into David's hands, he will have pity on us; but if David falls into our hands, we will [be compelled to] show no pity to him."[8]

David and Ishbi-benob

100. "Ishbi-benob tried to kill David—he was a descendant of the [giant] Raphah; his bronze spear weighed three hundred shekels" (2 Sam. 21:16). What is the meaning of the name Ishbi-benob? R. Judah, citing Rav, defined it as "the man who was dispatched (ish she-ba) [by God against David] because of the set-to at Nob." The Holy One asked David, "How long shall the misdeed at Nob go unatoned for by you? Because of your doing, Nob, a city of priests, was put to the sword. Because of your doing, Doeg the Edomite was banished from life in the world-to-come. Because of your doing, Saul and his three sons were slain.[9] Therefore, take your choice: either [the royal power of] your descendants will be abrogated or you will be delivered into the hands of your enemy." David replied, "Master of the universe, it is better that I be delivered into the hands of my enemy than that [the royal power of] my descendants be abrogated."

[Some time later] David went out to hunt, and Satan appeared to him in the guise of a gazelle. David shot an arrow at him but did not hit him; then he found himself drawn on and on by Satan, until he reached the land of the Philistines. When Ishbi-benob saw David, he said, "This man is he who slew my brother Goliath.'" He swung his shield [to crush] David, but David leaped back eighteen

---

1. Gen. R. 74:15.
2. Section 95a, in BR §104, is transposed and renumbered.
3. Literally, "the world." B. Kid 76b.
4. Exod. R. 1:1.
5. Prior to the Messiah's coming, Gog and Magog will, according to Ezek. 38–39, wage a terrible war against Israel.
6. B. Ber 7b.
7. Ibid.
8. Yalkut, 2 Sam., §149; Num. R. 9:24.
9. By his lack of precaution, he caused Saul's suspicion against the priests of Nob. Doeg reported what had taken place (1 Sam. 22:22) and so lost his life in the future world. The subsequent defeat and death of Saul were, in part, punishment for what he had done to the priests. David was thus ultimately responsible for all that grief.

cubits. Each was then afraid of the other. Ishbi-benob was afraid of David, thinking; If he can leap back that far, how far forward might he leap? And David, too was afraid of Ishbi-benob, thinking; If he can swing his shield[1] so easily, how can I stand up to him?

In that instant, David whispered: O that one of my sister's sons would come to help me.

Meanwhile, Ishbi-benob seized David, tied him up, and weighted him down by putting him under the beam of an olive press. Ishbi-benob stretched out on that beam, saying; I will have a bite to eat, something to drink, and then amuse myself with him at my pleasure. But a miracle was wrought for David—the earth receded under him [so that he was not crushed].

That day was the eve of the Sabbath, and Abishai the son of Zeruiah,[2] who was washing his head in four seah of water, saw bloodstains in the water. Some say that David's mule came to him whinnying plaintively. And some say that a dove came and stood fluttering its wings before him. Abishai said, "The congregation of Israel is likened to a dove in the saying 'Ye are as the wings of a dove covered with silver' " (Ps. 68:14). [Since Israel is not now in distress], it must be that David, Israel's king, is in torment. He went to David's house and did not find him. He sent to inquire at the house of study and did not find him. When he asked there, "Where is David?" he was told, "He went out in the morning and did not come back."

Then he said to himself: We were taught that "one may neither ride a king's horse nor sit on his throne nor use his scepter."[3] But what may be done in an emergency? He made inquiry in the house of study and was told that these things are permitted in an emergency. He then mounted David's mule and rode off. Instantly, the earth contracted under Abishai [so that he arrived quickly]. On the way, Abishai saw Orpah, Ishbi-benob's mother, spinning silk. When she saw him, she took her spindle and threw it at him, intending to slay him, [but she missed]. Then she said, "Young man, fetch me my spindle." Abishai [picked up the spindle], threw it at the top of Orpah's head, and slew her.

When Ishbi-benob saw Abishai, he said, "Now that they are two, they will surely slay me." So he tossed David into the air and, at the same time, drove his spear into the ground, thinking; David is sure to fall upon it and be slain. But Abishai uttered God's Ineffable Name and so kept David suspended between heaven and earth.

Abishai then asked David, "How do you happen to be here?" David replied, "God gave me a choice, and I chose to be delivered into the hands of an enemy." Abishai said, "Reverse your prayer. Spare yourself sorrow, even if your son's son shall have to sell wax." David said, "If so, succor me with your prayer." Of Abishai's prayer in David's behalf, it is said, "Abishai the son of Zeruiah succored him" (2 Sam. 21:17). Then Abishai again uttered the Ineffable Name and brought David down. Ishbi said, "Two against one?" They replied, "After we slay you, go up to the city and boast that ten men slew you." Since Ishbi-benob seemed determined to attack them, they said to him, "Go [first] and find your mother in her grave."[4] At their mentioning of his mother's name, his strength failed, and Abishai and David were able to kill him.

Following this incident, "the men of David swore unto him, saying: 'Thou shalt go no more out with us to battle, that thou quench not the lamp of Israel' " (2 Sam. 21:17).[5]

David's Death

101. "Lord, make me to know mine end and the measure of my days, what it is; let me know the day I will cease to be" (Ps. 39:5). When David pleaded with the Holy One, "Master of the universe, let me know when mine end is to come," God replied, "This decree has gone forth from Me: the end of a mortal is not to be made known to him." "And the measure of my days, what it is?" "This decree has gone forth from Me: a man's span of life is not to be made known to him." "Let me know the day I will cease to be." God replied, "You will die on the Sabbath." "Let me die on the first day of the week."[6] "By then the time for the reign of Solomon your son will have come, and one reign may not overlap another even by a hairsbreadth." "Then let me die on the sixth day of the week." God replied, "[Remember your saying], 'Better is a day in Thy courts than a thousand . . .' [Ps. 84:11]? So, too, for Me, the one extra day you sit in the courts [of study] where you occupy yourself with Torah is better than the thousand burnt offerings your son Solomon will bring to Me on the altar."[7]

Hence, every Sabbath David would sit and study Torah all day.[8] On the day that his time to die came, the angel of death stationed himself before David, but could not prevail, because learning did not cease from his mouth. The angel of death said to himself: What am I to do with him? Now, behind David's house there was a garden. So the angel of death entered it, then flew up and soughed in the trees. David went out to see [what caused the sound]. As he climbed a ladder, it broke under him [and, silenced for an instant, learning ceased]. At that, his soul left him, and he died.[9]

102. Since King David's body was lying in the hot sun, Solomon beckoned to eagles, who spread their wings over the body so that the sun would not beat down upon it.[10]

---

1. Since the weight of Ishbi-benob's spear was three hundred shekels, his shield must have been very heavy.
2. David's sister's son, brother of Joab, and one of the captains of David's army.
3. Sanh 2:5.
4. They said that she was dead.
5. B. Sanh 95a; Gen. R. 59:11; Yalkut, Hayye Sarah, §107; Yalkut, 2 Sam., §154–55.
6. So that my body could at once be made ready for burial. On the Sabbath, such activity is prohibited.
7. "Thus your life is too precious for a single day to be renounced. Study itself is regarded in Judaism as an act of worship, indeed, the greatest, though only when it leads to piety; cf. Pe 1:1" (Shab, Soncino, p. 134, n. 5).
8. "The angel of death cannot approach one who is studying the Torah. Sot 21a" (ibid.).
9. B. Shab 30a–b; Eccles. R. 5:10, §2.
10. Ordinarily, a body may not be moved on the Sabbath. Ruth R. 3:2.

103. In the verse "And the fame of David went out into all lands" (1 Chron. 14:17), the word "fame" means that coins bearing his name were current throughout the world. What was stamped on them? On one side a shepherd's staff and pouch, and on the other a royal tower.[1]

104. [This section is transposed and renumbered 95a.]

The Wisdom and Greatness of King Solomon

105. "God said: 'Ask what I shall give thee.' And Solomon replied: . . . 'Give thy servant an understanding heart' " (1 Kings 3:5–6 and 3:9). R. Simon said in the name of R. Simeon ben Halafta that Solomon resembled a counselor who was raised [from childhood] in the king's court. When the king said to him, "Ask me for anything you want," the counselor said to himself: If I ask for silver and gold, that is all I shall have; for precious stones and pearls, that is all I shall have. So he said [to himself]: I will ask for the king's daughter, and that will include everything. Even so, "in Gibeon the Lord appeared to Solomon in a dream by night, and God said, 'Ask what I shall give thee' " (1 Kings 3:5). Solomon said to himself: If I ask for silver and gold, for precious stones and pearls, that is all I shall ever have. So I shall ask for wisdom, which encompasses everything. God then said: Solomon, you have asked for wisdom, not for wealth and possessions or the life of your enemies. As you live, wisdom and understanding are hereby given you, and by means of these I will also give you wealth and possessions.[2]

106. "Solomon . . . was wiser than all men" (1 Kings 5:11). All kings feared him. Nations speaking divers languages obeyed him and brought tribute to him. Fishes of the sea and birds of heaven, together with cattle and beasts of the field, would come as one to the slaughterhouse to be slaughtered for Solomon's banquet. He was rich and powerful, acquiring property, silver, and gold in great abundance. He interpreted parables, told what is hidden, and made known mysteries without end. His enemies and his foes alike turned into his friends. All kings deferred to him. All of them stood together to behold his countenance and were eager to hear his words of wisdom, for his fame had spread among kings, and the vigor of his understanding among sages. He was an upright man who shunned evil. He was so wise that he even knew the mysteries of heaven. Princes of all realms would offer their sons and daughters to be his menservants and maidservants. To him was given the great key whereby all gates of wisdom and understanding are opened. He knew and understood the speech of birds, cattle, and beasts of the field. Deer and gazelles were his forerunners, lions and tigers his armor bearers.[3]

107. One day Ashmedai, king of demons, came to King Solomon and asked, "Are you the one of whom it is written, 'He was wiser than all men' (1 Kings 5:11)?" Solomon replied, "Yes, that is what the Holy One promised me." Ashmedai said, "If you allow me, I will show you something you have never seen before." Solomon: "Very well." Ashmedai reached down into the subterranean region called Tevel and out of it brought up a man with two heads and four eyes. Solomon, shaken and terrified, said, "Bring him into a private chamber."

Then Solomon sent for Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, whom he asked, "Would you say that human beings exist beneath us?" Benaiah replied, "As you live, my lord king, I do not know. But I heard from Ahithophel that human beings do exist beneath us." Solomon: "What will you say if I show you one of them?" Benaiah: "How can you show me something that is below the depth of the earth—below our earth, which extends downward a distance that at an ordinary pace would require five hundred years to traverse; and below the distance between our earth and the next earth[4] a distance that at an ordinary pace would likewise require five hundred years to traverse?" So Solomon had the [subterranean] man brought into his presence. When Benaiah the son of Jehoiada saw him, he fell on his face [in fright], saying, "Blessed are You who has granted me life and substance, and permitted me to reach such a day."

Solomon then asked the man, "Whose son are you?" The man: "I am Adam's descendant, of the progeny of Cain." "Where do you live?" "In the earth known as Tevel." "Do you have a sun or a moon there?" "Yes." "Whence does the sun rise and where does it set?" "It rises in the west and sets in the east." "What is your occupation?" "We plow and reap and graze flocks and herds." "Do you pray?" "Yes." "What is your prayer?" "How manifold are Thy works, O Lord! In wisdom hast Thou made them all" (Ps. 104:24).

Solomon told the man, "If you wish, we shall return you to your place." The man replied, "Out of your goodness, do so—please return me to my place."

The king immediately summoned Ashmedai and said, "Go, return the man to his place." Ashmedai replied, "I can never restore him to his own place."

When the man saw how things were, he took a wife and begot seven sons by her—six in the likeness of the mother, and one in the likeness of the father: he had two heads and four eyes.

The man plowed and reaped, and presently became very rich, as rich a man as there was in the world.

In due time, the man died and left an inheritance to his sons, who proceeded to quarrel, the six saying, "There are seven of us to divide our father's estate." But the man with the two heads contended, "We are eight, and I am entitled to take two portions of the inheritance."

So they all went to Solomon and said, "Our lord king, we are seven, but our two-headed brother says that we are eight and wishes to divide our father's estate into eight parts and take two parts himself."

Solomon called together the Sanhedrin, whom he asked, "What is your opinion in this matter?" They kept

---

1. Gen. R. 39:11.
2. Song R. 1:1, §9.
3. Targum Sheni on Esther, beginning.
4. Just as there are seven firmaments, so there are said to be seven earths, the lowest of which is Tevel. See PRKM 23:10.

silent. Solomon said, "Tomorrow morning there will be justice" (Jer. 21:12).

At midnight Solomon entered the Temple and, standing in prayer before Him who is everywhere, said, "Master of the universe, in Gibeon, when you revealed Yourself to me, You said, 'Ask what I shall give thee' [1 Kings 3:5]. I asked for neither silver nor gold, only wisdom, in order to be able to judge men with equity. Now lend light to my eyes, that I may issue a verdict that is just." The Holy One replied, "In the morning I shall give you the wisdom you require."

In the morning Solomon sent for and gathered the entire Sanhedrin, to whom he said, "Bring the two-headed man into my presence." After he was brought, Solomon said, "Observe—if one head is aware of and feels what I am going to do to the other head, the man is one person. If not, he is two."

Then Solomon said, "Bring hot water." Hot water was brought and sprayed over one head. The other head cried out, "My lord king, we are dying, we are dying!"

When Israel saw the way Solomon arrived at the verdict, they were amazed and shaken, and all were awed by him.[1]

108. Once a man was walking in a field with a jug of milk in his hand. A snake, moaning with thirst, met him. "Why are you moaning?" asked the man. "Because I am thirsty," replied the snake; "what is this that you have in your hand?" The man: "Milk." The snake: "Give me the milk to drink, and I will show you so much money that you will be rich." The man gave the milk to the snake, and it drank.

After the snake had drunk, the man said, "Show me the money you spoke of." The snake: "Follow me." He followed it until they came to a big stone. "The money [is hidden]," said the snake, "under the stone." The man lifted the stone, dug down, and found the money, which he took and was about to carry to his house.

But what did the snake do? It leaped up and wrapped itself around the man's neck. "Why are you doing this?" the man asked. The snake: "I am going to kill you because you took all my money." The man: "Come with me to Solomon and his court."

They went and appeared before Solomon—the snake still around the man's neck, and the man sobbing in the king's presence.

"What are you after?" the king asked the snake. It answered, "In accord with Scripture's 'Thou shalt attack him in the heel' [Gen. 3:15], I want to kill him." "Get off his neck," said the king; "since both of you are in court, it is not right that you, and not I, should hold him!" So the snake slithered off the man's neck to the ground. The king: "Now you can have your say." The snake: "I wish to slay the man, in keeping with what the Holy One said to me: 'Thou shalt attack him in the heel.' " The king to the man, "And of you the Holy One said, 'He shall attack [the snake] in the head' " (ibid.). At once the man sprang forward and stamped on its head.

Hence the proverb "Smash the head of even the best of snakes."[2]

109. "And Solomon's wisdom excelled . . . all the wisdom of Egypt" (1 Kings 5:10). What sort of wisdom was there in Egypt? You find that when Solomon wished to build the Temple, he sent word to Pharaoh-necoh, saying: Send me craftsmen to work for a wage, for I wish to build the Temple. What did Pharaoh do? He gathered all his astrologers and said to them, "Gaze into the future and see which of our craftsmen are destined to die during the coming year, and I will send these to Solomon." When they came to Solomon, he perceived through the holy spirit that they were destined to die during that year. So he gave them their shrouds and sent them back, together with a written message: Didn't you have enough shrouds to bury your dead? Here are the ones about to die, together with their shrouds.[3]

110. "And Solomon became allied to Pharaoh king of Egypt by marriage, and took Pharaoh's daughter" (1 Kings 3:1). It is said: When Solomon married Pharaoh's daughter, Gabriel came down and stuck a reed into the sea. That reed gathered around itself a sandbank, on which the great city of Rome was eventually built.[4]

Solomon as Builder

111. Our masters taught: Solomon built the Temple with the help of the shamir. For the verse "When the house was built, only unbruised stones from the quarry were used" (1 Kings 6:7) implies that [because of the shamir] the stones emerged in a hewn state. Such was the opinion of R. Judah. But R. Nehemiah argued: How can you say so? Does not Scripture declare, "All these buildings were of choice stones, according to the measures of hewn stone, sawed with saws" (1 Kings 7:9)? [R. Judah replied: But if the stones were sawed with saws], why does it say, "No iron tool was heard in the house while it was being built?" (1 Kings 6:7)? [R. Nehemiah replied]: Scripture means that the stones were made ready outside and then were brought in.

Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] observed: R. Judah's opinion is reasonable in connection with the stones for the Sanctuary, while R. Nehemiah's opinion is likely in connection with the stones for Solomon's own house. How, then, according to R. Nehemiah, was the shamir used? In readying the stones for the shoulder pieces on the ephod [and the stones for the breastplate]. For concerning these we are taught: The precious stones for the ephod and the breastplate could not have the names of the twelve tribes inscribed on them in ink, inasmuch as Scripture requires "engravings of a signet" (Exod. 28:11); nor could a chisel be used to make an incision in the stones, inasmuch as Scripture requires that the stones remain "in their

[1] BhM 4:151–52.

[2] Tanhuma B, introduction, p. 157.

[3] Num. R. 19:3; PR 14:9 (YJS 1:272).

[4] Thus, Solomon's straying led ultimately to the destruction of the Jewish state. B. Shab 56b; B. Sanh 21b.

fullnesses"[1] (Exod. 28:20). Hence the stones had first to be marked lightly with ink; then, with the markings on their outer surfaces, they were held up and passed in front of the Shamir. At that, the stones, of their own accord, split at the markings, like a fig that opens up during the summer and nothing thereof is lost; or, like a valley that opens up during the rainy season [2] and nothing thereof is lost.

The shamir is a creature about the size of a grain of barley and was created during the six days of creation.[3] Nothing is hard enough to withstand it. How then was it kept? It was wrapped in tufts of wool and placed in a leaden tube full of barley bran.

And who brought the shamir to Solomon? The eagle fetched it from the Garden of Eden. For "Solomon [who] spoke also to beasts and to birds" (1 Kings 5:13) asked the birds, "Where is the shamir hidden away?" and the eagle went and fetched it.[4]

112. Iron was created to shorten man's days, while the altar was created to lengthen his days. What shortens life should not be listed as a tool to build what lengthens life.[5]

113. "And for the house he made windows, broad and narrow" (1 Kings 6:4). R. Avin the Levite explained: You find that when a man makes openings for windows, he makes them broad on the inside and narrow on the outside. Why? So that they draw in the greatest amount of light. But the windows in the Temple were broad on the outside and narrow on the inside. Why? So that the light would flow out from the Temple and illumine the world.[6]

114. "Thus all the work was finished va-tishlam (1 Kings 7:51). [Read not va-tishlam but] va-tehi shalom, "the work was accomplished in peace": of all the craftsmen who were building the Temple, not one died, not one took sick; no trowel or ax was broken; not a tool used in the work of building was even dented.[7]

115. After Solomon built the Temple, he attempted to bring the Ark into the Holy of Holies, but the gates held fast one to the other, and although Solomon cried out twenty-four times, he was given no response.[8] Then, when he opened his mouth and said, "O gates, lift up your heads! Up high, ye everlasting doors, that the King of glory may come in" (Ps. 24:7), the gates rushed at him to swallow him up. "Who [did you say, they asked], is the King of glory?" (Ps. 24:8).[9] Solomon replied, "The Lord strong and mighty" (ibid.). Then he repeated the plea: "O gates, lift up your heads! Up high, ye everlasting doors, that the King of glory may come in" (Ps. 24:9). The gates asked again, "Who is the King of glory?" (Ps. 24:10), and Solomon answered, "The Lord of hosts, He is the King of glory forever" (ibid.), and still he was given no response. But when he said, "O Lord God, turn not away the face of Thine anointed, remember the good deeds of David Thy servant" (2 Chron. 6:42), he was given a response immediately. Then the faces of David's enemies turned as black as the bottom of a pot, for all the people—all Israel—knew that God had forgiven him that sin [with Bathsheba].[10]

116. "He built the house of the forest of Lebanon"[11] (1 Kings 7:2). R. Oshaia said: When Solomon built the Temple, he planted in the Temple area all sorts of golden fruit-bearing trees, which brought forth their fruit in season. When the wind blew through them, the fruit would fall to the ground [in great abundance], as indicated by the verse "Let his fruit thrive like the forest of Lebanon" (Ps. 72:16)—[in such abundance] that the priests had their full maintenance from that fruit. But after heathens entered the Holy Place, the fruit withered, as is said, "The blossom of Lebanon withered" (Nah. 1:4). But the Holy One will restore the abundance of Lebanon's trees, as Scripture says, "It shall blossom abundantly, it shall also exult and shout. It shall [again] receive the glory of Lebanon" (Isa. 35:2).[12]

117. R. Ishmael said: On the night Solomon completed the work of the Temple, he married Bithiah, the daughter of Pharaoh. There was shouting in celebration of the Temple, and there was shouting in celebration of Pharaoh's daughter. But the shouting for Pharaoh's daughter was more joyous than the shouting for the Temple. At that time the thought of destroying Jerusalem came to the Holy One. Hence R. Hillel bar Helene said of the verse "This city hath been a provocation to My nose[13] and to My fury" (Jer. 32:31): God felt like a man who, passing a filthy place, turns his nose away.

R. Hunia said: Pharaoh's daughter danced eighty kinds of dances that night. The sages add: She brought Solomon a thousand kinds of musical instruments and

---

1. Use of a chisel would, it goes without saying, chip off particles of the stones, so that they would not remain "in their fullnesses." JV: "in their settings."
2. The dried-up stream bisecting the valley is now in flood stage and sweeps away the accumulation of sand and debris that blocked the entrances to the valley. So Leon Nemoy.
3. See above, chap. 2, §67.
4. B. Sot 48b and En Yaakov, ad loc.; Yalkut, 1 Kings, §182, which cites MTeh 78:11.
5. Mid 3:4.
6. Tanhuma, Be-haalotekha, §2; Yalkut, 1 Kings, §182.
7. PR 6:7 (YJS 1:126).
8. The expressions "cry," "prayer," and "supplication" are repeated twenty-four times in the account of the dedication of the Temple. See 2 Chron. 6.
9. They thought he was describing himself.
10. B. Shab 30a.
11. Lebanon, "that which whitens (malbin) the sins of Israel," is taken to refer to the Temple, which Solomon built with cedars of Lebanon. In the present verse, R. Oshaia resolves the inconsistency between "house" and "forest" by saying that fruit grew in the Temple area. That the fruit was golden is derived from the assertion that Solomon garnished the House with "gold of Parvaim" (2 Chron. 3:6); and by associating "Parvaim" with the verb prh ("to bear fruit"), he concludes that the fruit was golden. See Samuel Edels on B. Yoma 39b.
12. B. Yoma 39b and 21b.
13. JV: "Mine anger." But af means "nose" as well as "anger."

ordered that each of them be played to him that night. As each instrument was played, she would say to Solomon: Thus it is played before such-and-such an idol, and thus it is played before such-and-such another idol. What else did Pharaoh's daughter do? Over his bed she spread a kind of canopy, in which she set all kinds of precious stones and pearls that shimmered like stars and planets, so that whenever Solomon was about to get up, he saw those stars and planets, and kept going back to sleep until the fourth hour in the day.[1]

R. Levi said, That day the morning offering was brought not at dawn[2] but during the fourth hour. And Israel grieved, for although it was the day of the Temple's dedication, they could not bring the offering on time because Solomon was asleep with the keys of the Temple under his head, and, in their awe of royalty, they hesitated to wake him. So they went and told Bathsheba, his mother, who came in, woke him up, and chastised him. With regard to this, it is said, "The utterance of his mother, followed by her chastising him"[3] (Prov. 31:1). She took off her slipper and slapped him on one cheek, then on the other, as she said, "What, my son? and what, O son of my womb?" (Prov. 31:2).

Or, the verse is read: "The utterance of his mother, followed by her intention to chastise him." R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon ben Yohai: The verse implies that Bathsheba tied Solomon to a post [intending to chastise him], as she said, "What, my son? and what, O son of my womb? And what, O son of my vows?" (Prov. 31:2). In saying, "What, my son," she meant: All know that your father feared God, [but now it will be said: His mother made him what he is, and you will be spoken of not as your father's son, but as my son]. In saying, "And what, O son of my vows," she meant: Each woman in your father's household made vows as she prayed, "May I have a son fit for the throne," while I made vows as I prayed, "May I have a son eager and keen to study Torah, and fit for prophecy." Continuing her reprimand of Solomon, Bathsheba said, "Not with kings [who say], 'Lemuel' " (Prov. 31:4). Why do you imitate kings who say, "Lamah lanu el," "What need have we of God?" "Not with kings who drink wine" (ibid)—why do you act like those kings who imbibe wine, get drunk, then indulge in all kinds of lewdness? "Not for the master of secrets (rozenim) [to keep asking], 'Where is strong drink?' " (ibid.)—not for him to whom all mysteries of the world (raze olam) are revealed to imbibe and get drunk. Some read the verse, "Not for [one sought out by] the world's princes (rozenim) [to keep asking], 'Where is strong drink?' "—shall he whose door to the world's princes seek out early in the morning give himself to drinking wine?

How do we know, said R. Isaac, that Solomon repented and admitted to his mother that she was right? From the verse "Surely I am more brutish than that man, and have not the understanding of Adam" (Prov. 30:2). In saying, "I am more brutish than that man," Solomon referred to Noah, of whom it is said, "Noah, the man engaged in farming, profaned himself [by getting drunk]" (Gen. 9:20–21).[4] In saying, "And have not the understanding of Adam," he referred to the first man['s eating of the grape].[5]

Solomon's Throne

118. "Moreover the king made a great throne of ivory" (1 Kings 10:18). The throne was overlaid with the fine gold of Ophir, studded with lapis lazuli, jacinth and emerald, turquoise and chalcedony, as well as pearls and other precious stones—white, green, and ruby red. No other like it was made for any other king—indeed, no kingdom had the means to construct a throne like it. The details of its structure were as follows: at its two sides stood [six groups of] twelve golden lions, and opposite them [six groups of] twelve golden eagles, each lion opposite an eagle even as each eagle was opposite a lion. The pairs were thus standing face to face, so that the right paw of each golden lion was opposite the left wing of each golden eagle even as the right wing of each eagle was opposite the left paw of each lion. Thus there were seventy-two lions and seventy-two eagles. At the apex of the throne was a circular area that served as the royal seat.

The throne had six steps [leading up to the seat]. On the first step crouched a golden lion, and opposite him a golden ox; on the second step crouched a golden wolf, and opposite him a golden lamb; on the third a golden tiger, and opposite him a golden kid; on the fourth a golden bear, and opposite him a golden gazelle; on the fifth a golden eagle, and opposite him a golden dove; on the sixth a golden hawk, and opposite him a golden sparrow. At the very top of the throne rested a golden dove, her claw holding a golden blossom. Over the seat hung a golden lampstand, set up with all its parts—its lamps, its calyxes, its tongs and its fire pans, its cups and its petals. From one side of the lampstand there extended seven golden branches, upon which were wrought the likenesses of the seven patriarchs of the world: Adam, Noah, his eldest [son] Shem, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, together with Job. From the other side of the lampstand there also extended seven golden branches, upon which were wrought the likenesses of the seven pious men of the world: Levi['s son] Kohath, Amram, Moses and Aaron, Eldad and Medad, with Hur between them. Attached to the top of the lampstand was a golden bowl filled with the purest olive oil, the kind that is used for illumination in the Temple; and below, a golden basin filled with pure olive oil for the lamps of the lampstand. The likeness of Eli was wrought upon the basin. From this large basin there extended two golden faucets, upon which were wrought the

---

1. 10:00 A.M.
2. As prescribed.
3. JV: "the burden wherewith his mother corrected him." But the root ysr ("to correct") may also mean "to chastise, give the lash."
4. See above, chap. 2, §133.
5. According to the opinion that the fruit of the forbidden tree was the grape, which Adam ate but did not get intoxicated by (see above, chap. 2, §91). B. Sanh 70b; Lev. R. 12:5; Num R. 10:4; Midrash Prov., ad loc.

likenesses of Eli's two sons, Hophni and Phinehas. From the golden faucets protruded two golden spouts, upon which were wrought the likenesses of Aaron's two sons, Nadab and Abihu.

At the two sides of the throne there were two high-backed chairs of gold, one for the high priest and one for the deputy high priest. Surrounding the throne there were seventy high-backed chairs of gold, upon which sat the seventy elders, members of Israel's Sanhedrin, who administered justice in Solomon's presence. Close by the king's ears there hovered two sirens [who sang sweetly], so that he would not be agitated. Twenty-four golden vines rising at both sides of the throne provided shade for the king. Around the throne there were also palms canopied with white linen and all kinds of dyed cloth hanging from cords of fine linen and purple wool, so loosely woven that fresh air come come in. The vines and the palms covered an area of a hundred cubits around the throne. The vines and palms with their multicolored covering had the appearance of lightning, the appearance of dazzling flashes of fire, and the appearance of a rainbow. Golden bells were tied to the edges of the multicolored covering, and whenever the wind blew through them, the bells started ringing. On the treetops were ivory peacocks, which faced the wings of [ivory] eagles. Above the throne, in an upper chamber of Solomon's, stood two golden lions, hollowed out and filled with all kinds of perfumes exuding fragrance.

When Solomon, about to ascend to his seat, put his foot on the first step, the wheels in the mechanism of the throne began to whirl, so that at the king's right the lion reached out his paw, and at the king's left the ox reached out his foreleg. The king leaned upon these as he went up. Thus, aided by the different animals at succeeding steps, he kept going up until he reached the top. There the eagles came down, took hold of him, and helped him to his seat. When the king sat down, a great eagle circling above picked up the royal crown and placed it on the king's head.

There was also a silver serpent in the elaborate mechanism of the throne. [The moment Solomon sat down], that great serpent sprang forward [and, pressing] against the machinery, forced the lions and the eagles upward until they formed themselves into a protective cover above the king's head.

Then a golden dove came down from the reader's stand, opened the Ark, took out a scroll of Torah, and placed it in the king's hand, to fulfill the precept "It shall be with him, and he shall read therein all the days of his life" (Deut. 17:19).

When the high priest and the elders arrived, they would pay homage to the king, then sit at his right and at his left, and, together with him, administer justice. Whenever witnesses inclined to give false testimony appeared before Solomon, the machinery of the throne came into motion: the wheels turned, the oxen bellowed, the lions roared, the wolves howled, the lambs baa'ed, the leopards snarled, the goats bleated, the bears growled, the hinds cried, the hawks screamed, the sparrows chirped, the eagles flew above, and the peacocks scurried about. Why? In order to grip and terrify the hearts of the witnesses and prevent them from giving false testimony. The witnesses would say to themselves: We'd better give true testimony. If we do not, the world will be destroyed on account of us.

When Pharaoh-necoh, king of Egypt, carried the throne from Jerusalem into captivity in Egypt, and tried to ascend and sit on it, the lion stretched forth his right foreleg and struck him on his hip, so that he limped to the day of his death. He was thenceforth called Pharaoh-necoh, "Pharaoh the Lame."

When wicked Nebuchadnezzar destroyed Jerusalem and came to conquer Egypt, he found the throne there, seized it, and brought it to Babylon so that he might sit on it in Babylon. But as he put his foot upon the first step, the lion struck him, and he fell to the ground.

When Darius became king and destroyed Babylon, he took the throne and brought it to Media, but no one dared sit on it. When Alexander of Macedon became king, he captured the throne and brought it back to Egypt.

When Antiochus Epiphanes came and devastated Egypt, he captured the throne and put it on a ship. A golden chain within the throne's leg was pulled out of place. He brought all the craftsmen and artificers in the world to fix the leg of the throne, but they have been unable to fix it to this day.[1]

Solomon and the Queen of Sheba

119. When Solomon was in a cheerful mood from wine, he sent word summoning all the kings of the east and of the west who were near the Land of Israel, and had them quartered in the royal palace. After a while he commanded that there be brought psalteries and cymbals, tabors and harps that his father used to play upon, and he had these played before him. Then he commanded that the birds of heaven, the beasts of the field, the creatures that creep on the ground, demons, spirits, and night harpies dance before him, in order to demonstrate his greatness to all the kings seated in his presence. The king's scribes summoned the animals and the spirits by name, and all gathered and came to the royal palace of their own accord, neither fettered nor bound, with no human hand to lead them.

Among the birds who came, the hoopoe was looked for but could not be found. Greatly provoked, the king commanded that the bird be fetched, intending to punish him. When the hoopoe appeared, he said: My lord, king of the world, listen to me—let what I say enter your ears. For three months, while endeavoring to grasp [the extent of your kingdom], I reflected so intensely that I ate no bread and drank no water. Then I said: Let me roam throughout the world and see whether there is any principality or government that has not submitted to my lord king. I kept looking about until I found one such principality, the city of Kitor in the east. Dust there is more valuable than gold, and silver is as common as manure in its streets. Its trees, planted since the beginning of creation, drink water from the Garden of Eden. In it are many warriors whose heads are crowned with laurels, but these warriors do not know how to wage war—they are unable even to bend a bow. Indeed, I saw a woman ruling all of them—she is called the queen of Sheba. Now if it please my lord king, I will gird my loins as if I were a man, go to the city of Kitor in the principality of Sheba, fetter its princes with chains and its governors with iron bands, and bring them to my lord king.

[1] Midrash Abba Gorion, ed. Buber, pp. 4–8; Midrash Panim Aherim, ed. Buber (Vilna, 1886), pp. 57–58; Targum Sheni on Esther 1; BhM 5:34–37.

What the hoopoe had to say pleased the king. The king's scribes were summoned, and they wrote a letter which they bound to the hoopoe's wings. Then the hoopoe rose up and ascended to the heights of heaven, uttering a cry of joy. In triumph he flew among the other birds, who immediately followed him to the city of Kitor in the principality of Sheba.

In the morning, when the queen went out to prostrate herself to the sun, behold, a cloud of birds darkened the sun's light. In bewilderment and desolation, she took hold of her garments and rent them. Then, as the hoopoe alighted near her, she saw a letter bound to his wing. She untied the letter and read what was written in it: "From me, King Solomon. Peace be upon you and upon your princes! Did you not know that the Holy One made me king over the beasts of the field and the birds of heaven, over demons, over spirits, and over night harpies? All kings, east and west, north and south, come to pay me homage. Now then, if you will come and pay me homage, I will accord you honor greater than that accorded to any of the kings who attend me. But if you refuse to come and pay me such homage, I will dispatch potentates with their legions and riders against you. Do you ask, Who are King Solomon's potentates, legions, and riders? The beasts of the field are the potentates; the birds of heaven are the riders; the spirits, the demons, and the night harpies are the legions who will strangle you in the beds within your houses. The beasts of the field will slay you in the fields, and the birds of heaven will devour the flesh from off your bones!"

After the queen of Sheba fully perceived what the letter demanded of her, she again put her hands to her garments and rent them anew. Then she sent for the counselors and princes, whom she asked, "Will you not assent to the request King Solomon dispatched to me?" They replied, "We know nothing of King Solomon, and we owe no homage to his royal power." However, she felt no confidence in them and paid no heed to what they said. So she summoned all her sea captains and had them load their vessels with cypress wood, pearls, and precious stones. She also sent to Solomon six thousand youths and maidens, all born in the same year, in the same month, on the same day, in the same hour, all of equal stature and size, all clothed in purple garments. She wrote the following letter to King Solomon, which she sent with them: "From the city of Kitor to the Land of Israel is normally a journey of seven years. Nevertheless, I plead and petition: Let me come to you at the end of three years."

At the end of the three years, the queen of Sheba came to King Solomon. When King Solomon heard that the queen of Sheba had arrived, he had Benaiah the son of Jehoiada go out to meet her. Benaiah looked like the hind at dawn leaping into the sunlight, like the evening star always aglow among other stars, like a lily swaying by brooks of water. When the queen of Sheba saw Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, she descended from her chariot. Benaiah the son of Jehoiada spoke up and asked, "What made you descend from your chariot?" "Are you not King Solomon?" she queried. Benaiah replied, "I am not King Solomon—I am but one of the servants who attend him." The queen turned around, and, quoting the proverb "You have not yet seen the lion, come and behold his den," said to her princes, "You have not yet seen King Solomon; come and behold the beauty of him who attends him."

Then Benaiah the son of Jehoiada conducted her to the king, who, upon hearing that she was about to arrive, went to a glass house to receive her. When the queen of Sheba beheld the king seated in the glass house, the thought came to her that the king was seated in water. So [to pass through what she believed to be water, she lifted her skirts], exposing her thighs, and the hair on her legs became visible. The king was moved to say, "Your beauty is a woman's, but the hair [on your legs] is that of a man—hair, an ornament in a man, is disfiguring in a woman."

Then the queen of Sheba spoke up and said, "My lord king, allow me to put three riddles to you. If you can solve them, I will know that you are a wise man. If not, you are like other men." Then she went on: "A wooden well with an iron bucket, which draws up grains of sand and pours out water—what is it?" The king replied, "A kohl tube."[1]

"It issues as dust from the earth, its food is dust of the earth, it is poured out like water, and it gives light to the house—what is it?" The king replied, "Naphtha."[2]

"When the wind rushes over the tops of all these, each makes a loud, anguished noise; each bends its top like a reed; each enhances the distinction of nobles and reflects the lowliness of the poor;[3] each is the glory of some who are dead and the disgrace for some who are alive;[4] each is the delight of birds and the cause of mourning for fish[5]—what is it?" The king replied, "Flax."

Then the queen brought before the king a number of males and females of the same appearance—the same height, and wearing the same garb—and said to him, "Sort out the males from the females for me." At once he beckoned to his eunuchs, who brought him nuts and roasted ears of corn, which he proceeded to distribute among the males and the females. The males, not bashful, put the nuts and corn into their robes [whose lower edges they lifted up to form a pocket]; but the females, who were

---

1. The kohl (mascara) applicator is "the iron bucket" that draws up the kohl powder, "grains of sand," from its container, the "wooden well." When mascara inadvertently gets into the eye, it causes tears, "the pouring out of water."
2. Naphtha was used for lighting lamps.
3. Both fine linen and coarse sackcloth may be made out of flax.
4. Shrouds, as well as cords for binding prisoners or for hanging men condemned to die, are made out of flax.
5. Birds eat the seed of flax, and nets to catch fish are made out of flax.

modest, put them into their head kerchiefs.[1] The king said, pointing, "These are males, and those are females."

To test him once more, the queen set another exhibit before him. She had a number of men, some circumcised, some uncircumcised, stand in his presence and said, "Sort out for me the circumcised from the uncircumcised." The king beckoned to the high priest to open the Ark of the Covenant, whereupon those who were circumcised bowed their bodies to half their height—more, their countenances seemed to be filled with the radiance of the Presence. But the uncircumcised ones fell on their faces.[2] Solomon spoke up and said, "These are circumcised, and those are not."

The queen said, "I did not believe the reports until I came and saw with my own eyes that not even the half had been told me; your wisdom and wealth surpass the reports I have heard. How fortunate are your men, and how fortunate are these your servants" (1 Kings 10:7–8). Then Solomon brought the queen into an inner hall of the royal palace, where she presented him with fine gold and silver, and he gave her everything she wanted.[3]

120. R. Yose said: [In the days of Solomon], the population was divided into four groups [each wearing garments of a different color]. Thus the king and his courtiers, the sages and their disciples, the priests and the Levites wore blue; all Israelites who lived in Jerusalem wore white; those who came from the provincial cities, the villages, and from other places wore red; and the nations of the world who would come from afar to bring presents to the king wore green. R. Yose's disciples asked: Why garments of these particular colors? He replied: The colors correspond to the [colors associated with the] four cycles in the year. During the cycle from Tishri to Tevet, the [sparkling] days are like the color blue; during the cycle from Tevet to Nisan, snow comes down, so white garments were worn; from Nisan to Tammuz, the green sea is fit to sail upon, so the garments worn were green; and from Tammuz to Tishri, fruits are shapely and red-cheeked, so the garments worn were red.[4]

121. [Who has been able to move as rapidly[5] as I?" (Eccles. 2:25). Who has done, Solomon asked, what I have done? Thus,] in the words "And he built Tadmor in the wilderness" (2 Chron. 8:4), there is the implication, according to R. Jeremiah, who cited R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, that Solomon had a large eagle upon whose back he used to ride to and from Tadmor in the wilderness[6] in one day.[7]

1. The kerchiefs were wound as turbans and served as pockets without being removed from their heads.
2. "Those who are not sons of the covenant of Abraham cannot bear the Divine Presence" (Ginzberg, Legends 6:290).
3. Targum Sheni on Esther; Yalkut ha-Makhiri, ed L. Grünhut (Jerusalem, 1902), Prov. 20.
4. BhM 5:39.
5. JV: "Who will enjoy?" But hush ("to enjoy,") also means "to move fast, rapidly."
6. Palmyra, an oasis in the Syrian desert.
7. Eccles. R. 2:25, §1.

Solomon—King and Commoner

122. "I got me male and female demons" (Eccles. 2:8).[8] [Male and female demons?] For what purpose did Solomon get them? Because it is said, "The house, when it is in building, is to be built of stone made ready before it is brought thither: so that neither hammer nor ax nor any tool of iron shall be heard in the house, while it is in building" (1 Kings 6:7). Solomon asked the sages, "Then how can it be built?" They said to him, "You could build it if you had the shamir, which Moses brought to cut the stones in the ephod." Solomon asked, "Where is the shamir to be found?" They replied, "Get a male and a female demon, and press them hard one against the other. Perhaps they know and will tell you." So Solomon went and got a male and a female demon, and pressed them one against the other. But the demons said to him, "We do not know. Perhaps Ashmedai, king of the demons, knows." Solomon asked them, "Where is he?" They answered, "He is in such-and-such a mountain, where he has dug himself a pit, filled it with water, covered it with stone, and sealed it with his signet. Every day Ashmedai goes up to heaven and studies in the academy on high. Then he comes down to the earth and studies in an academy below. After that, he examines his seal, opens the pit, and drinks from it; then he covers it again, seals it, and goes on his way."

At once Solomon sent for Benaiah the son of Jehoiada and gave him a chain and a signet ring with the Ineffable Name engraved on each. He also gave him wool fleece and jugs of wine.

Benaiah went and dug a ditch from below to Ashmedai's pit and drained the water into it. Then he stopped up the ditch with the wool fleece. Above the pit he dug another ditch, through which he poured the wine into Ashmedai's pit. He covered both ditches with earth, climbed to the top of a tree, and seated himself there.

When Ashmedai came, he examined the seal, opened the pit, and found wine. He said, "It is written, 'Wine is a mocker, strong drink is riotous; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise' " (Prov. 20:1). And so he did not drink. But when he grew very thirsty, he could no longer restrain himself; he drank, became drunk, and fell asleep. Then Benaiah came down and threw over him the chain [on which the Ineffable Name was engraved] and bound him. When Ashmedai woke up and began to struggle madly, Benaiah said, "The Name of your Master is upon the chain," and grasped him firmly, so that Ashmedai had to go with him. Yet, when Ashmedai came to a palm tree, he rubbed himself against it and threw it down, and when he came to a house, he overturned it. When he reached the hut of a widow, she came out and begged mercy of him. So he jerked his bulk away from the hut so abruptly that he broke a bone, at which he said, "This bears out the verse 'A soft tongue breaketh the bone' " (Prov. 25:15). When he saw a blind man wandering off the path, he brought him back. When he saw a drunken man staggering off the path, he brought him back. When he saw a wedding procession on its merry way, he wept. When he heard a man say to a shoemaker, "Make me a pair of shoes that will last seven years," he laughed. When he saw a diviner practicing divination upon a loaf of bread, he laughed again.

8. JV: "I got me men singers and women singers." But the words shiddah and shiddot, which in JV are translated "men singers and women singers," are obscure. The meaning "demon" (shed) is as admissible as any proposed.

After they arrived in Jerusalem, Ashmedai was not taken before Solomon for three days. On the first day, he asked, "Why am I not summoned before the king?" and when he was told, "Drink has overcome the king," he picked up a brick and placed it upon another. When this was reported to Solomon, he said, "By this Ashmedai meant that you are to give me more wine to drink." The next day Ashmedai again asked, "Why am I not summoned before the king?" and when he was told, "Too much food constrains the king," Ashmedai took the brick and set it back on the ground. When they came and reported this to Solomon, he said, "Ashmedai meant that you are to deny me food."

At the end of the third day, when Ashmedai was brought before Solomon, he measured off four cubits on a reed and, throwing it before Solomon, said, "When you are dead, you will own nothing in this world but four cubits [of earth]. Yet now, having subdued the whole world, you were not satisfied until you also subdued me." Solomon replied, "I want nothing at all that is yours. But because I desire to build the Temple, I need the shamir." Ashmedai said to him, "The shamir was not placed in my charge but given to the prince of the sea, and he gave sole charge of it to the wild cock,[1] who is entrusted with it on his oath. Do you know what he does with it? He takes it to an uninhabited mountain and sets it down upon the peak, and the mountain splits asunder. Then the wild cock gathers seeds of trees and scatters them in the split, which consequently attracts settlers." (Hence the Aramaic Targum calls the wild cock the "splitter of mountains.")

They sought out the nest of the wild cock and found fledglings in it, so they covered it with a white glass. The wild cock came and tried to get into the nest, but could not. He went and fetched the shamir, and was about to set it down upon the glass that covered the nest. But at that moment they threw a pebble at the wild cock, causing him to drop the shamir, and thus they were able to take it away. When the wild cock realized that he had failed to keep his oath, he went and strangled himself.

[After the shamir was brought in], Benaiah asked Ashmedai, "When you saw the blind man wander off the path, why did you bring him back?" Ashmedai replied, "Because in heaven it was proclaimed of the blind man that he was a completely righteous man, and that whoever did him a kindness would merit life in the world-to-come."

"And when you saw the drunken man stagger off the path, why did you bring him back?" [Ashmedai replied], "Because in heaven it was proclaimed that he was a completely wicked man, and so I help him enjoy life in this world."

"And when you saw the wedding procession, why did you weep?" [Ashmedai replied], "Because the husband was to die within thirty days, and the wife would have to wait thirteen years before the husband's [infant] brother would be of an age to marry her."

"And when you saw the man say to the shoemaker, 'Make me shoes that will last seven years,' why did you laugh?" [Ashmedai replied], "The man did not have seven days to live, and he wanted shoes for seven years!"

"And when you saw the diviner divining, why did you laugh?" [Ashmedai replied], "He was sitting over a king's treasure and should have divined and found out what was underneath him!"

Solomon detained Ashmedai while the Temple was being built. One day when the two were standing alone, Solomon said to him, "In what way is your power superior to ours?" Ashmedai answered, "Remove the chain from my back and give me your ring, and I will show you how great is my power." Solomon removed the chain from his back and gave him the ring. Ashmedai swallowed it, and, setting one of his wings down on the earth and the other in the sky, he hurled Solomon a distance of four hundred parasangs [and then went and sat himself down on the throne in the guise of the king]. Of that time, Solomon said, "What profit hath a man of all his labor, wherein he laboreth under the sun" (Eccles. 1:3), and, "This is my portion from all my labor" (Eccles. 2:10)—all I have is my walking stick. At the beginning, "I, Koheleth, was king over Israel" (Eccles. 1:12), and now I am king only over my walking stick.

Solomon had to go begging at doorways, and wherever he went he would declare, " 'I, Koheleth, was king over Israel in Jerusalem'." And people said, "King Solomon is seated on his throne in Jerusalem; you are out of your mind." And they tapped him with a length of reed [as is done to quiet a lunatic] and set before him a dish of boiled grits. It was then that Solomon said to himself: This is my portion after all my labor. When he reached the Sanhedrin, the sages said, "A madman does not hold fast to the same illusion. What kind of man is this person?" So they went to Benaiah and asked him, "Does the king summon you?" and he said, "No!" They sent to the queens: "Does the king come to you?" They replied, "Yes." They sent word again: "Examine his feet." The queens replied, "He comes to us with socks on his feet."[2]

They brought Solomon back and gave him the ring and the chain on which the Name was engraved. As soon as Solomon came in, Ashmedai saw him and fled.[3]

123. When Solomon had been removed from his throne and went from door to door begging for food, a man met him and, prostrating himself before him, said, "My lord king, if you please, deign to visit me today." At once Solomon went with the man, who took him to an upper chamber in his home, where he slaughtered an ox for him

---

1. In §119 above in this chapter, tarnegol ha-bar is translated not as "wild cock" but as "hoopoe."

2. The socks concealed Ashmedai's cloven hoofs.

3. B. Git 68a–b; MTeh 78:12; Tanhuma B, Ahare, §2.

and served him many viands. Then the man began to remind Solomon of matters that had taken place when he was king: "Do you remember your doing such-and-such when you were king?" The moment the man reminded Solomon of the time he was king, Solomon broke down and wept. He wept thus throughout the meal and continued to weep even after he stood up to leave.

The next day, another man met Solomon. He, too, prostrated himself before him and said, "My lord king, if you please, deign to visit me today." Solomon replied, "What will you do for me?" Will you perhaps do to me what your friend did yesterday?" The man said, "My lord, I am only a poor man. But if you will visit me, I have a few greens, which I will set before you. So if you are willing, come with me to my house." Solomon went with him. When Solomon reached his house, the man washed Solomon's face, hands, and feet, and served him the few greens he had. Then he began to comfort him, saying, "My lord, the Holy One swore an oath to your father that royalty would not cease in his seed. However, such is the way of the Holy One—He reprimands, but then comes back and conciliates. Be assured that the Holy One will restore you to your throne."

After Solomon did return to the throne, in his wisdom he spoke of this experience with the force of prophecy, " 'Better is the dinner of greens' [Prov. 15:17] that I ate at the poor man's home 'than the fattened ox' [ibid.] that the rich man fed me only to remind me of my distress."[1]

124. "It came to pass, when Solomon was old, that his wives turned away his heart after other gods" (1 Kings 11:4). R. Hiyya bar Abba said: It would have been better for Solomon to have cleaned sewers than to have such a verse written of him.[2]

Jeroboam

125. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: When David said to Mephibosheth, "Thou and Ziba divide the land" (2 Sam. 19:30), a divine voice came forth and said: Rehoboam and Jeroboam will divide the kingdom. In this connection, R. Judah said further in the name of Rav: Had David been unwilling to accept Ziba's slanderous talk [about Mephibosheth], not only would David's kingdom not have been divided, but Israel would not have given themselves to idolatry,[3] nor would we have been exiled from our Land.[4]

126. "Rehoboam went to Shechem; for all Israel were come to Shechem to make him king" (1 Kings 12:1)—to a place, so it is taught in the name of R. Yose, predestined for calamity. Dinah was ravished in Shechem, Joseph's brothers sold Joseph in Shechem, even as the kingdom of the house of David was to be divided in Shechem.[5]

127. Our masters taught: The name Jeroboam [Yerov'am] implies that he fomented strife (merivah) among the people (am). Another interpretation: It implies that he caused strife between Israel and their Father in heaven.

R. Yohanan said: Why did Jeroboam merit kingship? Because he reproved Solomon. Why then was he punished? Because he reproved him in public, as is said, "And this was the cause that [Jeroboam] lifted up his hand against the king: Solomon built Millo, and repaired the breach of the city of David his father" (1 Kings 11:27). What Jeroboam said to Solomon was: Your father David made breaches in the wall, so that Israel could readily come up to Jerusalem in pilgrimage for the festivals; but you closed them to make a tollgate for the benefit of Pharaoh's daughter.[6]

R. Nahman said: The arrogance that possessed Jeroboam drove him out of the world,[7] for "Jeroboam said in his heart: 'Now will the kingdom return to the house of David. If this people go up to offer sacrifices in the house of the Lord at Jerusalem, then will the heart of this people turn back unto their lord, even unto Rehoboam king of Judah; and they will kill me' " (1 Kings 12:26–27). He reasoned thus: It is a tradition that sitting in the court of the Temple is prohibited except to kings of the house of David. Now, when the people see Rehoboam seated and me standing, they will say of him, "Here is the king," and of me, "There is the servant." Were I to sit down, I would be deemed a rebel against royal authority. I would be put to death, and the people would follow Rehoboam. "Wherefore the king took counsel, and made two calves of gold" (1 Kings 12:28). How did he go about procuring the counsel he sought? [In the council chamber], so said R. Judah, he seated a wicked man right next to a righteous one and asked both, "Will you sign your consent to all I may do?" They replied, "Yes." He then said, "I wish to be made king." They said, "Yes, good." "Will you obey all that I bid you do?" "Yes." "Even to worship idols?" "God forbid," the righteous man replied. The wicked one asked the righteous one, "Can the thought enter your mind that a man such as Jeroboam would worship idols? He merely wishes to test all of you, to see whether you are willing to accept what he has to say." In the end, even Ahijah of Shiloh erred and signed his consent.[8]

128. On the very day that Jeroboam introduced two golden calves, one into Bethel and the other into Dan, far away there was built a hut [to which more and more and more huts were added, until] the area became known as Magna Graecia.[9]

---

1. Yalkut, Prov., §953.
2. Tanhuma, Va-era, §5; Exod. R. 6:1.
3. To maintain the independence of his kingdom, Jeroboam set up the golden calves at Dan and Bethel.
4. As punishment for such idolatry. B. Shab 56b.
5. B. Sanh 102a.
6. Since few openings were left in Jerusalem's walls, visitors could be checked closely and made to pay for the privilege of coming to Jerusalem.
7. Led to his destruction.
8. B. Sanh 101b.
9. Greek Italy, that is, Rome. B. Shab 56b.

129. R. Oshaiah said: Until Jeroboam, Israel used to suck its proneness to idolatry from only one calf; but thenceforth from two—indeed, from three—calves.[1]

130. "After this occurrence Jeroboam returned not from his evil way" (1 Kings 13:33). After what occurrence? R. Abba said: After the Holy One had seized Jeroboam by his garment and said, "Repent; then I, you, and the son of Jesse will walk together in the Garden of Eden." "But who," Jeroboam asked, "shall be at the head?" [God]: "The son of Jesse shall be at the head." [Jeroboam]: "If so, I will not have it."[2]

Omri and Ahab

131. R. Yohanan taught: Why did Omri merit kingship? Because he added a large city to the Land of Israel, as is said, "He bought the hill Samaria from Shemer . . . and called the name of the city which he built . . . Samaria" (1 Kings 16:24).[3]

132. In the school of Elijah it is taught: One day I was seated in the presence of sages in the great academy of Jerusalem, and I asked them: My masters, why was Omri, captain of the hosts of Israel, treated differently [from those who had occupied the throne of Israel previously]? Before him, no king had his grandson accede to the throne, whereas after Omri, three of his descendants [a son and two grandsons] came successively to the throne.[4] They replied: We have not heard [any explanation of this.] I said: My masters, Omri was treated differently because he added a large city[5] to the number of cities in Israel: his purpose was to make Samaria for the kings of Israel the same as Jerusalem was for the kings of Judah.[6]

133. Our masters taught: Though the men of Ahab's generation—all of them—worshiped idols, they were victorious when they went into battle because there were no informers among them. Therefore, when Elijah called out to the people on Mount Carmel, "I, even I only, am left a prophet of the Lord" (1 Kings 18:22), though all the people knew otherwise, none made it known to the king [that there were a hundred prophets whom Obadiah had hidden].[7]

134. The verse "Their altars are as heaps in the furrows of the fields" (Hos. 12:12) implies that there was not one furrow in the Land of Israel upon which Ahab did not set up an idol and prostrate himself before it.[8]

135. Every day Ahab used to adorn himself; then, standing in front of Hiel, who was in charge of his treasuries, he would ask, "How handsome am I today?" Hiel would reply, "Each day, more and more." Then Ahab would turn over the equivalent of his worth in money to shrines of idolatry. With regard to this, Ahab was told, "[I will bring disaster upon you, because] to do evil in the sight of the Lord, [you kept selling your person]" (1 Kings 21:20).

"But there was none like unto Ahab, who gave himself to do what was evil in the sight of the Lord" (1 Kings 21:25). For six months R. Levi expounded this verse, to Ahab's discredit. Then Ahab appeared to him [in a dream] during the night and asked, "In what way have I sinned or transgressed against you? For you expand upon the verse's beginning, but ignore its conclusion—'Jezebel his wife stirred him up' " (ibid.). Thereafter, for the next six months, R. Levi expounded the entire verse: "There was none like unto Ahab . . . whom Jezebel his wife stirred up."[9]

136. Ahab was equally balanced between good and evil, as implied by the words "The Lord said: Who shall entice Ahab so that he will . . . fall? One [of the host of heaven] said: 'On the one hand [he deserves to fall]'; but another said: 'On the other hand [he does not deserve to fall]' " (1 Kings 22:20).[10] R. Joseph objected [to such a characterization of Ahab]: He of whom it is said, "There was none like unto Ahab, who kept giving himself to do that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, whom Jezebel his wife stirred up" (1 Kings 21:25), and of whose wife it is taught that every day she used to weigh out gold shekels for shrines of idolatry—you say of such a man that he was equally balanced between good and evil! He was not! But Ahab was generous with his money—with his means he used to benefit disciples of the wise. Hence, half his sins were forgiven him.[11]

137. The name Ahab [Ah'av] means that he was a wavering brother (ah) to Heaven, but a loving father (av) to idolatry.[12]

138. Naboth had a good voice, and whenever he came up to Jerusalem, all Israel would gather to hear his voice [in song]. The one time he failed to make the pilgrimage, witnesses [suborned by Jezebel], vile rogues, testified against him [so that he was condemned to be stoned] and thus perished out of the world.[13]

139. "And there came forth a spirit, and stood before the Lord, and said: 'I will entice him' " (1 Kings 22:21).[14]

---

1. The one they made at Sinai and the two Jeroboam made at Bethel and Dan. B. Sanh 102a.
2. Ibid.
3. B. Sanh 102b.
4. Omri's son Ahab, and Ahab's two sons, Ahaziah and Joram (1 Kings 16:29 and 22:40; 2 Kings 3:1). Of Omri's predecessors, Jeroboam's and Baasa's sons, but not their grandsons, came to the throne. See 1 Kings 15:25–27 and 16:8–9.
5. Before Samaria, the capital Tirzah was presumably a city of lesser importance. See 1 Kings 14:17, 15:33, 16:6, 16:8–9, and passim.
6. TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 49.
7. See 1 Kings 18:3–14. Yalkut, 1 Kings, §213; Tanhuma, Hukkat, §4.
8. B. Sanh 102b.
9. P. Sanh 10:2, 28b.
10. The verse is interpreted thus by Samuel Edels, ad loc. JV: "And one said: On this manner; and another said: On that manner."
11. B. Sanh 102b.
12. Ibid.
13. Yalkut, 1 Kings, §221; PR 25:2 (YJS 2:517).
14. Entice Ahab to march against Ramoth-gilead, where he would fall.

Whose spirit was it? "The spirit," said R. Yohanan, "of Naboth the Jezreelite."[1]

Elijah and the Worshipers of Baal

140. "Let them therefore give us two bullocks" (1 Kings 18:23). Elijah said to the prophets of Baal: Select two bullocks equal in all respects, from the same dam, reared at the same trough. Then cast lots for them, one for the Lord and the other for Baal. So the prophets of Baal chose for themselves one of the bullocks. Elijah's bullock followed him immediately. As for the bullock intended for Baal, though all the prophets of Baal and all the prophets of the Asherah gathered around to make it lift its feet from the ground, they could not get it to do so until Elijah began to speak to it, urging, "Go along with them." The bullock replied by saying to Elijah in the presence of all the people, "My brother and I have come from the same belly, from the same sire: have grown up on the same pasture and fed from the same trough. Yet he has fallen to the lot of Him who is everywhere, and the Name of the Holy One will be sanctified in him, while I have fallen to the lot of Baal to provoke my Creator." Elijah said to it, "Bullock, bullock, feat not! Go with them, so that they will find no excuse for failure. Indeed, even as the Name of the Holy One will be sanctified through the bullock that is with me, so will it be sanctified through you." The animal replied, "Is such the advice you give me? Then I swear I shall not budge from here until you yourself turn me over into their hands." At that, "they took the bullock which he gave them" (1 Kings 18:26). Who gave it to them? Elijah.[2]

141. "And it danced in halting wise about the altar which he made" (1 Kings 18:26). Hiel made the altar hollow, and he was placed inside it and told, "As soon as you hear the sound of dancing feet, stir up the embers you have and make a fire under the altar." At that, the Holy One had a serpent come—it bit Hiel and he died.[3]

Jonah

142. "But Jonah rose up to flee unto Tarshish from the Presence of the Lord" (Jon. 1:3). Why did Jonah flee? Because the first time, when the Holy One sent him to announce the restoration of Israel's borders, his words were fulfilled, for Jeroboam did "restore the borders of Israel from the entrance of Hamath unto the Sea of Arabah" (2 Kings 14:25). Then the Holy One sent him a second time to Jerusalem to announce that He would destroy it. But when Israel resolved to repent, the Holy One, in the abundance of His mercy, regretted the evil decree and did not destroy Jerusalem. Hence Israel called Jonah "a lying prophet."[4] The third time, the Holy One sent him against Nineveh. Jonah reasoned with himself: I know that this people are [more] prone to repentance [than Israel], and so they are likely to repent. Then the Holy One will direct His anger at Israel [who are slow to repent]. It is not enough that Israel call me "a lying prophet"? Shall the nations of the world do likewise? I have no choice but to flee.

Jonah went down to Joppa, but found no ship in which he could embark. So the Holy One sent a windstorm against a ship two days' journey away and blew it back to Joppa. When Jonah saw it, he rejoiced, saying, "Now I know that my conduct is deemed right by the Holy One." So he asked the ship's crew, "May I embark with you?" They replied, "We are going to the islands of the sea, to Tarshish." Jonah: "I would like to go with you to Tarshish."

After they had traveled one day's journey on the sea, a windstorm rose up against them at their right as well as at their left. While all other ships in the sea passed to and fro in safety, the ship on which Jonah had embarked was in great peril. "And the mariners were afraid, and cried every man unto his god" (Jon. 1:5). R. Hananiah said: On the ship there were men speaking the world's seventy languages, and each man, with his god in his hand, said: Let each of us cry out to his god, and the god who answers and delivers us from this peril shall be proclaimed the true god. But though each man cried out to his god, it availed not at all.

"Jonah was gone down into the innermost parts of the ship" (Jon. 1:5) and, despite the anguish in his soul, dozed off and fell asleep. The captain came to Jonah and said, "We are hovering between life and death, and you are off sleeping! Who are your people?" "I am a Hebrew" (Jon. 1:9). The captain: "Have we not heard that the God of the Hebrews is great? 'Rise, call upon thy God, that He bestir Himself in our behalf' [Jon. 1:6] and perform miracles for us even as He did for you at the Red Sea." Jonah: "I dare not hide from you that the trouble that has befallen you is because of me. Take me up and cast me forth into the sea; that the sea may be calm unto you" (Jon. 1:12). However, the crew would not cast him into the sea. "But they cast lots, and the lot fell upon Jonah" (Jon. 1:7). Nevertheless, it was all kinds of the ship's utensils that they took and cast into the sea to lighten its weight, but that did not avail them. They tried to row hard to dry land, but they could not. What did they finally do? They took Jonah, and, stationing themselves at the side of the ship, they said, "God of the universe, Lord! Do not lay upon us innocent blood, that we may not be doomed because of the life of this man, whose character and deeds we do not know but who keeps saying loud and clear, 'This trouble is yours because of me.' " Then they took him and lowered him into the water up to his knees, and the sea's wrath abated. When they hoisted him to their own level into the ship, the sea resumed its raging at them. Then they lowered him to his neck, and the sea's wrath abated once more. But when they lifted him up again to their own level into the ship, the sea again resumed its raging at them. Finally, after they put all of him in, the sea's wrath ceased.

"The Lord had designated a great fish to swallow up Jonah" (Jon. 2:1). That fish, said R. Tarfon, had been designated since the six days of creation to swallow up Jonah. Jonah entered its mouth just as a man might enter a big house, and he was able to remain standing there.

---

1. B. Sanh 102b.
2. Tanhuma, mas'e, §8; Num. R. 23:9; Yalkut, 1 Kings, §214.
3. Yalkut, 1 Kings, §214.
4. The prophet in 2 Kings 9:4–12 is identified by Rashi and Kimhi as Jonah.

The two eyes of the fish were like two windows giving light to Jonah. But, according to R. Meir, a pearl was suspended from the innards of the fish, and, like the sun, which gives light at noon, it gave light to Jonah and made it possible for him to see all around him in the sea and in the depths.

The fish asked Jonah, "Are you not aware that my day has come to enter the mouth of Leviathan [and be devoured]?" Jonah: "[Take me] to him, and I will save you and myself." The fish immediately took Jonah to Leviathan's place, and Jonah said, "Leviathan, you should know that it is on account of you that I came down to see the place where you abide. For [in the time-to-come] I am destined to put a rope around your tongue, bring you up, and slaughter you for the great feast of the righteous." At that, Leviathan precipitously swam away from Jonah a distance of two days' journey.

Then Jonah said to the fish: Now that I have saved you from the mouth of Leviathan, show me everything that is in the sea and in the depths below. The fish showed him the great river whence the waters of the Ocean issue; showed him the paths in the Red Sea through which Israel had passed; showed him the place whence the breakers of the sea and its waves originate; showed him the pillars of the earth and its foundations; showed him Gehenna and nethermost Sheol; showed him the Temple of the Lord in heaven and the earth's foundation stone fixed in the deep directly under the Temple of the Lord—on this stone, the sons of Korah continue to stand and pray.[1]

The fish said to Jonah: Look, you now stand near the Temple of the Lord. Pray, and you will be answered. Jonah said to the fish: [Yes, indeed!] Remain still where you are, because I do wish to pray.

The fish remained in its place, and Jonah began to pray to the Holy One, saying: Master of the universe, You are called "the One who casts down and the One who brings up"—behold, I have been cast down; now bring me up. You are called "the One who kills and the One who restores life"—behold, my soul has all but reached death; now restore me to life. But Jonah was not answered until he said, "That which I have vowed, I will perform" (Jon. 2:10). What I vowed—to bring up Leviathan and slaughter him in Your presence for the great feast of the righteous—I will perform on the day of Israel's deliverance. The Holy One immediately beckoned to the fish, and it cast forth Jonah onto dry land.[2]

The Banishment of the Ten Tribes

143. In the twentieth year of Pekah, king of Israel, "came Tiglath-pileser, king of Assyria," etc. (2 Kings 15:29). He took the golden calves, smashed them, and went away. In the twelfth year of Ahaz, "the God of Israel stirred up the spirit of Pul, king of Assyria . . . and he carried them away, even the Reubenites and the Gadites" (1 Chron. 5:26), and also took the golden calf at Bethel, and went away. When [King] Hoshea son of Elah perceived that both golden calves had been carried away, he removed the border posts that Jeroboam son of Nebat had set up to prevent Israel [in the north] from coming up to Jerusalem as pilgrims. Note that Scripture says of every other king of Israel, "And he went in the way of Jeroboam," but of Hoshea son of Elah it says, "He did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, yet not as the kings of Israel that were before him" (2 Kings 17:2).

"Against [Hoshea] came up Shalmaneser" (2 Kings 17:3). Why had the decree for the banishment of Israel not been sealed prior to his time? Because until Hoshea, Israel could hang responsibility for their corruption on their kings. [But upon Hoshea's coming to the throne], Scripture could say, "I, even I, know Ephraim, and Israel is not hid from Me; for now, O Ephraim, thou [on thine own] hast gone awhoring [with idols]. Hence, Israel defiled itself" (Hos. 5:3).[3]

144. In what way was Hoshea son of Elah different, so that the ten tribes were exiled during his reign? He was different because, until he came to the throne, the transgression of idolatry was identified with a single individual [each successive king], and it was difficult for the Holy One to exile the congregation [of Israel] because of the iniquity of an individual. But when Hoshea son of Elah came along and abolished all the border posts, every one of them, he announced, "Whoever wishes to go up to Jerusalem may go up"—he did not say, "Everyone must go up to Jerusalem." Hence, "because of him, came up Shalmaneser king of Assyria" (2 Kings 17:3). For what Hoshea did was to remove the iron collar from his own neck and hang it on the neck of the many [by allowing them to choose not to go up]. Hence the sages said: He who begins performing a precept but does not carry it through makes himself liable to the death penalty.[4]

145. "As the shepherd rescueth out of the mouth of the lion two legs or a piece of an ear" (Amos 3:12). The verse refers to those of the ten tribes who relied on Hezekiah and found safe refuge with him. Whereas, of the Israelites who lived in Samaria, only one in eight remained.[5]

146. Where did Sennacherib deport the ten tribes? To Africa,[6] according to Mar Zutra; to the mountains of Salug,[7] according to R. Hanina.[8]

147. R. Judah bar Simon said: The tribes of Judah and Benjamin were not banished to the place where the ten tribes had been banished. The ten tribes were banished beyond the river Sambatyon, while the tribes of Judah and Benjamin are dispersed in all lands.[9]

---

1. The three sons of Korah survived the death of Korah and his followers. See Num. 26:10.
2. PRE 10; Midrash Jon. in Eisenstein, pp. 218–19.
3. SOR 22.
4. TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 188.
5. SOR 22.
6. Abrik, 150 kilometers northwest of Diarbekir (Obermeyer, pp. 11ff.).
7. The mountains of Salak in the district of Adiabene. Ibid.
8. B. Sanh 94a.
9. Gen. R. 73:6.

148. In the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman, it is said: Israel were exiled in three successive banishments: the first, beyond the river Sambatyon; the second, to Daphne of Antioch; and the third—a cloud came down upon them and concealed them.[1]

149. The ten tribes will not return [to the Land of Israel], for it is said: "The Lord . . . will cast them into another land, like this day" (Deut. 29:27). Just as this day goes and does not return, so the ten tribes who have gone will not return. Such is the opinion of R. Akiva. But R. Eliezer said: Scripture's saying "like this day" implies that just as the day grows dark and then grows light again, so, too, after darkness has fallen upon the ten tribes, light shall shine for them hereafter.[2]

The Cutheans [Samaritans]

150. The Cutheans are not to be regarded as one of the seventy nations in the world. For they were the remnant of the five nations of Babylon, Cuthah, Avva, Hamath, and Sepharvaim, which the king of Assyria had captured. R. Yose added other peoples as having been included among the Cutheans, namely, the Dinites, the Apharesattechites, the Tarpelites, the Apharesites, the Archevites, the Babylites, the Shushanchites, the Dehites, the Elamites (Ezra 4:9).

After the Israelites were banished from Samaria, Sennacherib stationed officers in Samaria to raise tribute for his kingdom. So the Holy One dispatched lions against the officers, which kept killing them. The survivors wrote to the king: Our lord king, the Land to which you sent us will not accept us—out of many, only a few of us are left. So the king sent word to the elders of Israel, saying: All the years you were in the Land, beasts of the field did not devour you, but now the Land will not accept my officers. The elders responded with advice that they hoped might lead the king to restore the banished Israelites to their own Land. They said: Our lord king, the Land will not accept aliens who are uncircumcised and who do not study Torah. The king replied: Let me have two of your number, who will go and circumcise the newcomers and teach them Torah. Since the king's command may not be denied, the elders sent R. Dostai ben Yannai and R. Zechariah, who wept as they taught the Cutheans Torah in the Notarikon script.[3] Thereafter, the nations [settled in Samaria] followed the statutes of the Torah as well as the statutes of their own gods, until Ezra, together with Zerubbabel son of Shealtiel and Joshua son of Jehozadak, came up from Babylon and began building the Temple. At that time the Samaritans came with a hundred and eighty thousand men to fight against them. (But were they Samaritans? Were they not in fact Cutheans? Yes, but they were called Samaritans after the city of Samaria in which they lived.) They also sought to kill Nehemiah through trickery and for two years caused the work on the Temple of the Lord to cease. What did Ezra, Zerubbabel, and Joshua do? They gathered the entire congregation in the Temple and brought three hundred priests with rams' horns in their hands and three hundred children with Torah scrolls in their arms. [The priests] blew the rams' horns, the Levites hymned songs and praises, and, using the secret Explicit Name, whose letters were incised on the Tablets, they excommunicated the Cutheans by a ban of the court of justice here below and a ban of the court of justice above, [and decreed] that no Jew may eat a Cuthean's bread (hence it is said: He who eats a Cuthean's bread is deemed as though he had eaten the flesh of swine), that no Jew may convert a Cuthean, and that the Cutheans shall have no portion in the resurrection of the dead and neither portion nor inheritance nor memorial in Israel.

The elders sent the writ of the ban to the Jews in Babylonia, who added an additional ban, which King Darius ordained to be a perpetual ban upon them: "May the God that hath caused His Name to dwell there overthrow all kings and peoples that shall put forth their hand to alter the same" (Ezra 6:12).[4]

Hezekiah and the Fall of Sennacherib

151. The name Hezekiah means "he whom God (Yah) has strengthened (hizzeko)." Or, "He who fastened (hizzek) Israel to their Father in heaven."[5]

152. The verse "The yoke shall be destroyed because of the oil" (Isa. 10:27) means, said R. Isaac Nappaha, that Sennacherib's yoke was destroyed because of Hezekiah's providing oil that burned in synagogues and in houses of study. What did Hezekiah do? He thrust a sword into the ground at the entrance to a house of study and said: He who will not occupy himself with Torah will be transfixed with this sword. After that, search was made from Dan to Beersheba, and no ignoramus was found; from Gabbath to Antipatris, and no boy or girl, no man or woman was found not thoroughly versed even in the laws of cleanness and uncleanness.[6] Of that time, Scripture says, "It shall come to pass on that day that a man will be content to nourish only one young cow and two sheep"[7] (Isa. 7:21), and also, "On that day it shall come to pass that every place where there had been a thousand vines at a thousand silver shekels shall become a wilderness of briers and thorns" (Isa. 7:23): though a thousand vines were worth a thousand silver shekels, yet that vineyard will be abandoned to briers and thorns.[8]

153. The words "The curse of the Lord is in the house of the wicked" (Prov. 3:33) apply to Pekah son of Remaliah, who used to eat forty seah of young birds as a

---

1. P. Sanh 10:6, 29c.
2. B. Sanh 110b; Yalkut, Nitzavim, §940.
3. The ancient Hebrew script, used before the introduction of the present-day "square" script.
4. PRE 38; Tanhuma, Va-yeshev, §2; Yalkut, 2 Kings, §234.
5. B. Sanh 94a.
6. Which are exceedingly difficult to understand.
7. Leaving ample time for study.
8. People will neglect the vines for study of Torah. B. Sanh 94b.

mere dessert;[1] and the words "But He blesseth the habitations of the righteous" (ibid.) apply to Hezekiah, king of Judah, who ate but a litra of vegetables as his entire meal.[2]

154. "These also are the proverbs of Solomon, which the men of Hezekiah copied out (he'etiku)" (Prov. 25:1). [They were copied out and circulated] after having been suppressed. Or, he'etiku, construed as "removed," means that the men of Hezekiah moved them out of circulation [as part of the canon].[3]

155. Our masters taught: King Hezekiah did six things, three of which the sages approved and three others that they did not. The three they approved: He hid away the Book of Cures,[4] and they approved; he smashed the brazen serpent,[5] and they approved; he dragged the bones of his father [to the grave] on a bed of ropes,[6] and they approved.[7] The three they did not approve: He stopped up the waters of Gihon,[8] and they did not approve; he stripped [the gold] from the doors of the Temple and sent it to the king of Assyria, and they did not approve;[9] and he intercalated the month of Nisan during the month of Nisan,[10] and they did not approve.[11]

156. R. Joshua ben Levi said: Sennacherib dared say, "Am I now come up without the Lord against this place to destroy it? The Lord said to me: 'Go up against this Land to destroy it' " (2 Kings 18:25), because he had heard the prophet declare, "Forasmuch as this people refuseth the waters of Shiloah that go gently" (Isa. 8:6)—refused, that is, the kings of the house of David, who led the people gently even as the waters of Shiloah flow gently. Hence Sennacherib applied to himself the words "Now therefore, behold, the Lord will bring up upon them the waters of the river, strong and many, even the king of Assyria" (Isa. 8:7). Why then was Sennacherib punished? Because the prophet prophesied only of the ten tribes, whereas Sennacherib set his face against the whole of Jerusalem. In fact, when the prophet declared, "He who wearies himself will not be for the oppressor" (Isa. 8:23), he meant, so said R. Eleazar bar Berekhiah, that the people that makes itself weary through intensive study of Torah will not be made victim of an oppressor. "Aforetime, the land of Zebulun and the land of Naphtali took [its burden] lightly; but the latter generations who held the burden [of Torah] in high regard—for them, it will be like the way through the sea, like the passing over the Jordan" (ibid.).[12] Unlike [the experience of] former generations,[13] who took the yoke of Torah lightly, the latter generations [Judah and Benjamin] who persisted in making the yoke of Torah ever heavier for themselves will have miracles performed for them—miracles like those that were performed for the Israelites who crossed the Red Sea and who passed over the Jordan.

[Nevertheless, even they of Jerusalem were to be punished for the massacre of the priests at Nob.[14] However, God set a time limit for imposing such punishment.] "Only one day yet remained to stand [against Jerusalem] on account of Nob" (Isa. 10:32).[15] R. Huna said: Only that one day was left for punishing the crime committed at Nob. So Sennacherib's astrologers said to him: If you set out now to attack, you will conquer Jerusalem; if not, you will not conquer it.[16] Therefore, the journey that should have taken ten days,[17] he completed in only one day. When the Assyrians reached Jerusalem, Sennacherib's soldiers piled up a great many mattresses for him, so that, by mounting the pile, he was able to sit on a level higher than the city wall and see all of Jerusalem. As he gazed on it, it appeared so small in his eyes that he was moved to ask his troops, "Is this the city on whose account I scared up all my soldiers, summoned the entire might of my realm? Why, it is smaller and weaker than any one of the cities of the nations I subdued with [but a portion of] my armed strength." Then he stood up and, shaking his head in disbelief [at the number of troops brought], contemptuously waved his hand back and forth from the direction of fair Zion's mount to the Temple Court in Jerusalem. In the meantime, the astrologers kept urging, "Let us attack today—at once." But Sennacherib said to his soldiers, "You are weary today, having just come from a distant land. So rest up for the night. Tomorrow [you will conquer Jerusalem so easily that] each of you will bring me a stone from its demolished wall."

As Sennacherib was speaking, his court official, Rabshakeh, looking at the wall, heard Israel chanting the Passover Hallel.[18] So he said to Sennacherib, "Go back. On this night miracles are wrought for Israel." But Sennacherib made little of the warning, as again he contemptuously "waved his hand toward fair Zion's mount" (Isa. 10:32). Whereupon "it came to pass that night that the angel of the Lord went forth and smote in the camp

---

1. Even then his hunger was not satisfied. The metaphor may refer to the fact that Pekah, a mere captain, conspired against the legitimate king and slew him.
2. And was nevertheless satisfied. B. Sanh 94b.
3. See Eliezer (Louis) Finkelstein, Mavo le-Massekhtot Avot ve-Avot de-R. Natan (New York, 1951), pp. 126–27. Yalkut, Prov., §961; Midrash Prov. 25 (ed. Buber, p. 97).
4. So the sick would direct their hearts to Heaven.
5. 2 Kings 18:4.
6. Instead of giving him a royal burial.
7. Because his father Ahaz was a wicked man.
8. To deprive the Assyrian invaders of water. 2 Chron. 32:30.
9. 2 Kings 18:16.
10. A second Nisan must not be intercalated. Or: He intercalated a second Adar so late in the month of Adar that it seemed as though he were intercalating the second Adar when Nisan had already set in.
11. B. Ber 10b.
12. JV: "Now the former hath lightly afflicted the land of Zebulun and the land of Naphtali, but the latter hath dealt a more grievous blow by the way of the sea, beyond the Jordan."
13. The ten tribes, who were exiled in 722 B.C.E.
14. 1 Sam. 22:17–19.
15. Literally, "And yet shall he halt at Nob that day."
16. Sennacherib was king of Assyria in 705–681 B.C.E. He invaded Judah in the fourteenth year of Hezekiah's reign.
17. The ten days' journey is deduced from the listing of the ten marches in Isa. 10:28–31.
18. Psalms in praise of God—Pss. 113–118.

of the Assyrians. . . . And the following morning, they were all dead corpses" (2 Kings 19:35; Isa. 37:36).

Concerning the above, R. Papa cited the proverb "Sentence delayed overnight is sentence repealed."[1]

157. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: [In the days of Hezekiah], wicked Sennacherib advanced against Israel with forty-five thousand princes, each seated in a golden chariot, each accompanied by his consorts and concubines; with eighty thousand warriors in coats of mail; with sixty thousand swordsmen at a run in front of him, and the rest on horseback.

It is taught: The length of Sennacherib's camp was four hundred parasangs; the horses standing neck to neck formed a line forty parasangs in width; and the total of his army numbered two million six hundred thousand less one. The troops were so numerous that, although the vanguard had to swim across rivers, the midmost were able to wade across them, while the feet of the rearguard kicked up the sand [from riverbeds][2] where no water was found to drink until brought from elsewhere—only then were they able to satisfy their thirst.

(But it is not written, "And it came to pass that night that the angel of the Lord went forth and smote in the camp of the Assyrians a hundred fourscore and five thousand; and the following morning, they were all dead corpses" [2 Kings 19:35]?[3] R. Abbahu replied: These were just the army captains.)

The Holy One asked Gabriel: Is your sickle sharpened [to cut down the Assyrians]? He replied: Master of the universe, it has been sharpened and made ready ever since the six days of creation. It was the time of year, so said R. Simeon ben Yohai, for fruits to ripen. Hence the Holy One told Gabriel: On your way to ripen fruits,[4] as you pass [the Assyrians], attack them, in keeping with the advice "As he passeth, he should take you on" (Isa. 28:19).

R. Papa said: The saying, "When you pass, make your enemy aware of you" applies here.[5]

"While the king sat at his table" (Song 1:12). R. Yudan said: While Hezekiah and his company were still eating their paschal lambs in Jerusalem, God had already wrought their deliverance that very night: "It came to pass that night that the angel of the Lord went forth and smote in the camp of the Assyrians" (2 Kings 19:35).[6]

158. Some say: Gabriel huffed out of his nose at the Assyrians and they died, as is said, "He huffed upon them, and they withered" (Isa. 40:24). R. Jeremiah bar Abba said: Gabriel struck his hands together at them and they died, as is said, "I will strike hand against hand, and will satisfy my fury upon you" (Ezek. 21:22). R. Isaac Nappaha said: He unsealed their ears for them, so that they were able to hear the song of the celestial creatures in the chariot,[7] and they died, as is said, "At the [sound of] exaltation of Thee the heathen were shattered" (Isa. 33:3).

How many [Assyrians] were left? Ten, said Rav, for it is written, "The remnant of the trees of his forest shall be so few that a child may write them down" (Isa. 10:19). What number can even a child write? Ten.[8] Six, said R. Eliezer, the length of a scratch that a young lad can make in a wall.[9]

159. Pharaoh king of Egypt and Tirhakah king of Ethiopia, who had come to help Hezekiah,[10] benefited from that miracle. [Before they reached Hezekiah], Sennacherib became aware that they were coming. What did the wicked Sennacherib do to them? [He managed to capture them and] in the evening put them in fetters. At midnight the angel went forth and smote the hosts of Sennacherib. When Hezekiah rose in the morning and found the two kings in fetters, he said, "It appears that the two had come to help me." So of course he released them, and both of them went forth to tell the miracles and mighty acts of the Holy One.[11]

160. When Sennacherib came and laid siege to Jerusalem, Shebna wrote a note declaring, "Shebna and his followers are willing to make peace; Hezekiah and his followers are not willing," [and inserted the note] in an arrow, which he shot [into the enemy's camp. When he heard about the note], Hezekiah was afraid, saying, "Perhaps the mind of the Holy One will, Heaven forbid, incline toward the majority [who wish to surrender]." The prophet came and said, "Do not dignify it with the name 'confederacy' merely because most of this people say it is a confederacy [Isa. 8:12]: it is a confederacy of the wicked, and a confederacy of the wicked cannot be counted [in arriving at a decision]."

[Parenthetically, prior to Shebna's organizing his conspiracy, he aspired to the throne of David.] He even went to hew out a sepulcher for himself among the sepulchers of the house of David. It was then that the prophet Isaiah came and said to him, " 'What hast thou here, and whom hast thou here, that thou wouldst hew thee out a sepulcher here? . . . Take note, the Lord will continue to drive you

---

1. B. Sanh 95a; Targum Jonathan on Isa. 10:32; Yalkut, Isa., §415.
2. "The draining of the rivers may be another way of indicating the size of Sennacherib's army, which began its approach at the end of the rainy season, when the rivers were swollen, and reached its goal only at the end of summer, when the rivers ran dry." (Pearl F. Braude, Providence, R.I.).
3. Proving that the total of Sennacherib's army was much less than two million.
4. One of Gabriel's tasks.
5. B. Sanh 95b.
6. Song R. 1:12, §3.
7. Possibly metaphors for, respectively, a khamsin, an earthquake, and thunder and lightning. So Ze'ev Wolf Rabinovitz, Shaare Torat Bavel (Jerusalem, 1961), p. 167.
8. Represented in Hebrew by the letter yod, which "being formed by the mere stroke of a pen, is the easiest letter for a child to write" (Isidore Epstein in Sanh, Soncino, p. 645, n.11).
9. The length of the letter vav in the Assyrian script used today—not in the ancient Hebrew script current in Hezekiah's time (BR's note). B. Sanh 95b; Lam.R. 4:12, §15.
10. See Isa. 36:6 and 37:9.
11. Song R. 4:8, §3.

from place to place like a cock'[1] [Isa. 22:16–17]. You drifter and son of a drifter,[2] [what gives you the right to aspire to royalty]? What wall have you ever built here? What pillar have you ever set up here? Indeed, what nail have you ever driven in here?"

[To come back to the conspiracy: When Shebna went out of Jerusalem to surrender to Sennacherib], Gabriel came and shut the city gate in the face of his troops, [cutting him off from them]. On being asked, "Where are your followers?" Shebna answered, "They deserted me." So, saying, "You made us appear ridiculous," the Assyrians bored holes through Shebna's heels, and through these holes tied him to the tails of their horses and dragged him over thorns and thistles.[3]

161. R. Yohanan said: [Why did Sennacherib], that evil man, merit being referred to as "the great and noble Asenappar" (Ezra 4:10)? Because he did not speak disparagingly of the Land of Israel, for his aide Rab-shakeh quoted him as saying, "Until I come and take you away to a land like your own Land" (2 Kings 18:32). Rav and Samuel [differ as to what Sennacherib's saying "a land like your own Land" reveals about his mental capacity]. One maintained he was a wise king, for had he said, "A land that is better than your own," they would have replied, "You lie." The other maintained that he was a foolish king, because if the land to which they were to be taken was no better than their own, what inducement was offered them [to leave it]?[4]

162. Maintaining that Sennacherib was a foolish king who did not know how to win people, R. Simeon ben Yohai told the parable of a man who, wishing to marry a certain woman, said to her: Your father is a king, and I, too, am a king. Your father is rich and I am rich. Your father gives you meat and fish to eat and aged wine to drink, and I, too, will give you meat and fish to eat and aged wine to drink. Such talk is not likely to win the lady's heart. What would have been an effective way of winning her? His saying: Your father is a commoner, but I am a king; your father is poor, but I am rich; your father gives you vegetables and pulse to eat and water to drink, but I will give you meat and fish to eat and aged wine to drink; your father takes you to the baths on foot, but I will take you in a palanquin.[5]

163. R. Berekhiah said in the name of R. Eleazar: By rights Hezekiah should have hymned a song of praise over the fall of Sennacherib, but Scripture records that "Hezekiah rendered not according to the benefit done unto him" (2 Chron. 32:25). Why did he not do so? Because "his heart was puffed up" (ibid.). Think about it! Though a king, Hezekiah was nevertheless a righteous man, yet Scripture says of him, "His heart was puffed up." It can only mean that he felt himself to be above chanting a hymn of praise. So when Isaiah came to Hezekiah and his retinue, and said to them, "Sing unto the Lord" (Isa. 12:5), they replied, "Why?" Isaiah said, "Because He hath done gloriously" (ibid.). They said, "But this is already known in all the earth" (ibid.). And, according to R. Abba bar Kahana, Hezekiah went on to say, "The Torah in which I am engaged makes up for the lack of song"; and, according to R. Levi, Hezekiah continued in the same vein: "What need have we to proclaim the miracles and mighty deeds of the Holy One? They are already known from world's end to world's end. Did not the orb of the sun stand still in the midst of the firmament long ago, so that the miracles and mighty deeds of the Holy One were seen to the ends of the world?"[6]

164. There were four kings, David, Asa, Jehoshaphat, and Hezekiah—not one asked of God what each of the others was to ask. David asked, "Let me pursue mine enemies and overtake them, and not turn back till they are consumed" (Ps. 18:38; 2 Sam. 22:38). The Holy One replied, "I will help you do so." Then "David smote them from dawn until evening into the morrow of the next day" (1 Sam. 30:17)—[thus on two nights the Holy One gave him light by shooting stars and lightning flashes]. Hence David said, "Thou dost light my lamp; the Lord my God doth lighten my darkness" (Ps. 18:29; 2 Sam. 22:29).

Then Asa rose up and asked, "I—in me there is no strength to slay them. All that I can do is pursue them. You slay them." The Holy One replied, "I will do so." Hence it is said, "Asa and the people that were with him pursued them. . . . None remained alive: for they were shattered before the Lord" (2 Chron. 14:12)—not "before Asa," but "before the Lord."

Then Jehoshaphat rose up and asked, "I—I have not the strength either to slay or to pursue, but I will utter a song, and You do [the pursuing and the slaying]." The Holy One replied, "I will do so." Then, "when they began to sing and to praise, the Lord set an ambush against the Ammonites . . . and they were smitten" (2 Chron. 20:22).

Finally, Hezekiah rose up and asked, "I—I have not the strength to slay, to pursue, or to utter song, but I will sleep in my bed, and You do what is required." The Holy One replied, "I will do so." Then "it came to pass that night that the angel of the Lord went forth and smote in the camp of the Assyrians" (2 Kings 19:35).[7]

165. "Of the increase (le-marbeh) of [Hezekiah's] government and of peace there shall be no end" (Isa. 9:6). R. Tanhum related that Bar Kappara expounded this verse in Sepphoris as follows: Why is every mem in the middle

---

1. JV: "Behold, the Lord will hurl thee up and down with a man's throw." But gever ("man") also means "cock."
2. In Isa. 22:15, Shebna is called sokhen, usually translated "steward." But here the commentator takes the word to mean "the man from Sikhnin," a town in northern Galilee, who came to Jerusalem as a kind of carpetbagger.
3. B. Sanh 26a–b; Lev. R. 5:5.
4. B. Sanh 94a.
5. Sif Deut. §37; Yalkut, 2 Kings, §238.
6. Song R. 4:8, §3.
7. At a time when, it is assumed, Hezekiah was in bed. Lam R., proem 30; Yalkut, 2 Sam., §163.

of a word open while the one in this verse is closed?[1] Because the Holy One was about to designate Hezekiah as the Messiah, and Sennacherib as Gog and Magog.[2] But the attribute of justice[3] spoke up to the Holy One: Master of the universe, David, king of Israel, who uttered so many hymns and praises before You, You did not make the Messiah, yet Hezekiah, for whom You performed all manner of miracles and who uttered no hymn in praise of You—him You are about to make the Messiah? Following the argument by the attribute of justice, the letter mem was closed.[4] Immediately, the earth exclaimed: Master of the universe, as proxy for this righteous man, I will utter song before You—designate him the Messiah. And the earth broke into song before Him, as is written, "From the uttermost ends of the earth have we heard song: 'Glory to the Righteous' " (Isa. 24:16). Then the prince of the world spoke up before the Holy One: Master of the universe, as proxy for this righteous man, the earth has just now fulfilled Your desire [for a song of praise].[5] But a divine voice cried out and said, "[The delay in the Messiah's coming] 'is My secret, My secret' " (Isa. 24:16). To which the prophet replied, " 'Woe is me' [ibid.], woe is me, how long [must we wait]?" In response, a divine voice cried out, "Until 'the faithless who acted faithlessly will themselves have been betrayed.' " (ibid.).[6]

It was taught in the name of R. Pappias: It is a reproach to Hezekiah and his retinue that they uttered no song [to God] until the earth had first broken out into singing.[7]

Hezekiah and Isaiah

166. [King Hezekiah and the prophet Isaiah refused to go to each other's home], Hezekiah saying, "Let Isaiah come to me, for we find that Elijah went to Ahab," and Isaiah saying, "Let Hezekiah come to me, for we find that Joram son of Ahab went to Elisha." What did the Holy One do? He brought illness upon Hezekiah and then said to Isaiah: "Go, visit the sick."[8]

"And Isaiah . . . came to him and said: . . . Thou shalt die and not live" (Isa. 38:1)—"thou shalt die" in this world; "and not live" in the world-to-come. Hezekiah asked, "Why punishment so severe?" Isaiah: "Because you did not wed." Hezekiah: "I did not wed because through the holy spirit I saw that unworthy children would issue from me." Isaiah: "What business have you with the mysterious ways of the Holy One? What you are commanded, you must do, and the Holy One will do what pleases Him." Hezekiah: "Then give me your daughter [as wife]—perhaps, because of my merits and your merits, worthy children will issue from me." Isaiah: "The decree against you has already been sealed." Hezekiah: "Son of Amoz, be done with your prophesying and get out! From the house of my father's father[9] there has been handed down to me the tradition: 'Even if a sharp sword rests on a man's neck, he should not despair of mercy.' " In the end, Isaiah gave Hezekiah his daughter, and Manasseh and Rab-shakeh issued from him. Once, when Hezekiah put both of them on his shoulders and was carrying them to the house of study, one said, "Father's head could be used to fry fish on"; and the other: "Father's head could be used as an altar for idolatrous sacrifice." In anger, Hezekiah flung them to the ground—Manasseh remained alive, while Rab-shakeh died.[10]

167. "And Hezekiah slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the best[11] of sepulchers of the house of David" (2 Chron. 32:33). R. Eleazar said: By "the best" is meant: near the best of the family. And who were they? David and Solomon. "And they did honor to him at his death" (ibid.) means that thirty-six thousand[12] [warriors] marched before his bier with shoulders bared.[13] Such is the opinion of R. Judah. But R. Nehemiah said to him: Was not the same done for Ahab [who was an evildoer]? What the verse means is that a Torah scroll was placed on Hezekiah's bier, and the people declared: This one fulfilled all that is written in that scroll.[14]

168. Since when was the merit of the fathers exhausted? Ever since the days of Hezekiah.[15] So taught R. Yohanan.[16]

The Reward for the Three Steps Merodach-baladan Took

169. Merodach-baladan, who worshiped the sun, used to eat at midday,[17] then go to sleep till three in the afternoon. In the days of Hezekiah, when the orb of the sun

---

1. "There are two forms of mem: medial, which is open ( ), and final, which is closed ( ). In this sentence, however, the final form occurs in the middle of a word" (Sanh, Soncino, p. 630, no 6).
2. It is believed that Gog and Magog will lead all the nations in a powerful attack on Israel. Their defeat will usher in the days of the Messiah.
3. "The attributes of justice and mercy are often hypostatized and represented as interceding with the Almighty" (Isidore Epstein in Sanh, Soncino, p. 630, n. 8).
4. Therefore the word le-marbeh appears in the text with the closed mem to indicate that the matter of Hezekiah's designation as Messiah (a word that begins with the letter mem) was closed.
5. So Samuel Edels. BR take it to mean: "Fulfill the desire of this righteous man," i.e., "Make him the Messiah." The two comments are based on different readings of the phrase tzevi la-tzaddik ("Glory to the righteous").
6. So NJV. That is, until Israel's enemies and the enemies of their enemies have been destroyed.
7. B. Sanh 94a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
8. Part of the Jewish code of charitable conduct.
9. David. See 1 Chron. 21:15–17.
10. B. Ber 10a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
11. JV: "in the ascent of." But be-maaleh ("ascent") can also mean "best."
12. "The figure was arrived at by the numerical value lv [lo] (30 + 6), 'to him,' occurring here in the text" (BK Soncino, p. 75, n. 4).
13. "As a sign of mourning for a righteous man and a scholar" (Isidore Epstein in BK, Soncino, p. 75).
14. B. BK 16b–17a.
15. Since his time it is said, "The zeal of the Lord of hosts [not the merit of the fathers] shall bring this to pass" (Isa. 9:6).
16. B. Shab 55a.
17. "Midday" or, literally, "the sixth hour," instead of BR's "nine in the morning" or, literally, "the third hour."

went back [ten degrees],[1] Merodach had gone to sleep [in the afternoon] as usual, but when he rose and found it was morning, he was about to slay all his servants, saying accusingly to them: You let me sleep all day and all night. They replied: It is the orb of the day that went backward [while you slept]. He asked: Which god made it go backward? They: Hezekiah's God. He: Can there be a god greater than mine? They: Hezekiah's God is greater than all gods in the world.

At that, "Merodach-baladan the son of Baladan, king of Babylon, sent letters and a present to Hezekiah" (Isa. 39:1; 2 Kings 20:12). The letters he wrote began, "Peace to King Hezekiah, peace to Jerusalem, and peace to the great God." No sooner were the letters dispatched than he bethought himself, saying, I have not done right. I have put my salutation to Hezekiah and to his city before my salutation to his great God.

At once he rose from his throne, took three steps to have the letters brought back, and composed other letters in their stead. In these, he first wrote, "Peace to the great God," and then, "Peace to Jerusalem, and peace to Hezekiah."

The Holy One said to Merodach: You rose from your throne and took three steps in My honor. I will raise up from you three kings, Nebuchadnezzar, Evil-merodach, and Belshazzar, each of whom will rule from one end of the world to the other.[2]

Manasseh

170. It is taught that Simeon ben Azzai said: In Jerusalem I found a genealogical scroll in which was written, "Manasseh slew Isaiah." For as soon as Manasseh brought the idol into the Temple, Isaiah began prophesying to Israel, saying to them in the name of the Lord, "Wherefore do you exalt yourselves? Is it because of this house that you built for Me?[3] The upper and the lower worlds cannot contain My glory. Do I then require this house that you built? 'Where is the house that ye may build unto Me?' [Isa. 66:1].[4] Behold, Nebuchadnezzar will come and destroy it, and exile you." At once Manasseh was enraged at Isaiah and said [to his servants], "Seize him." They ran after him to seize him. But he fled into a forest where, on his pronouncing the Name, a cedar opened up and took him in. Still, the fringes of his garment remained visible outside the tree. So the servants returned and reported it to Manasseh, who brought carpenters and had them saw into the cedar until Isaiah's blood flowed forth. Finally, when [the saw] reached Isaiah's mouth, his soul left him, because it was with his mouth that he sinned when he said, "I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips" (Isa. 6:5).[5]

171. Manasseh appeared in a dream to R. Ashi, who asked him: Why did you worship idols? Manasseh replied: Had you been living in my time, you would have seized the skirt of my garment and run to join me.[6]

172. "These are also the proverbs of Solomon, which the men of Hezekiah king of Judah copied out" (Prov. 25:1). Now, would Hezekiah king of Judah have taught Torah to everyone in the entire world but not to his own son Manasseh? Of course not, but all the pains Hezekiah spent on him and all the labor he lavished upon him did not bring Manasseh back to the right path. Only Manasseh's suffering did.[7]

173. "They placed him in a device made of copper" (2 Chron. 33:11).[8] A copper caldron with many holes in it was devised for [the torture of] Manasseh. After he was put into the caldron, a slow fire was started under it. When Manasseh saw that his peril was indeed great, there was not an idol anywhere in the world that he failed to call upon by name: O idol So-and-so, and O idol Such-and-such, come and deliver me. When he perceived that his appeal availed him nothing at all, he said: I remember that my father had me read a particular verse: "In thy distress, when all these things come upon thee . . . return to the Lord thy God" (Deut. 4:30). All right, then, I will call upon my father's God; if He answers me, well and good, but if not, then all dieties are alike—equally worthless. At this point, the ministering angels began shutting heaven's windows so that Manasseh's prayer would not come up before Him who is everywhere. They put the question before Him: Master of universes, a man who set up an idol in the Temple—can You possibly accept the repentance of such a man? The Holy One replied: If I do not receive him in his repentance, I shall be barring the door to all those who would repent. What did the Holy One [proceed to do for Manasseh]? He contrived an opening (htyrh) under His very throne of glory [where the angels could not interfere with] His listening to Manas) seh's supplication. Hence it is written, "And he prayed unto Him; and He was entreated (vy'tr) of him," etc. (2 Chron. 33:13). The word vy'tr may be regarded as another form of vyhtr [meaning that God Himself made the opening for Manasseh—let Himself be dug into, so to speak].[9]

King Zedekiah

174. "For these things I weep" (Lam. 1:16)—for Zedekiah's lack of sense and for the departure of the Presence, said R. Judah. How could Zedekiah, aware that [his children would be put to death and that then] the sadists[10]29

---

1. See Isa. 38:8.
2. Tanhuma, Ki Tissa, §8; Esther R. 3:1; PRKM 3:5 (PRKS, pp. 28–29).
3. Literally, "Wherefore do ye boast of this house ye have built for Me?"
4. Cf. Acts 7:49.
5. B. Yev 49b; PR 4:3 (YJS, pp. 88–89); P. Sanh 10:2, 28c.
6. B. Sanh 102b.
7. B. Sanh 101b.
8. JV: "They bound him with fetters." But nehushtayim, ("double fetters") literally means "something double made of copper."
9. P. Sanh 10:2, 28c; PRKM 24:11 (PRKS, pp. 375–76); Ruth R. 5:6.
10. Literally, "others," which the translator takes to mean "other than normal," hence, "sadists."

would pierce his eyes, not have had the sense to dash his head against the wall until life left him?[1]

Nebuchadnezzar

175. R. Yohanan said: As long as that wicked man lived, the sound of mirth was never heard in the mouth of any living creature, for [in the song of scorn at Nebuchadnezzar's death] the words "The whole earth is at rest and untroubled; they break forth into singing" (Isa. 14:7) imply that until [his death] there had been no singing.[2]

176. "Excellent greatness was added to me" (Dan. 4:33).[3] The verse implies, so said R. Judah in the name of R. Jeremiah bar Abba, that Nebuchadnezzar rode on a male lion, to whose head he tied a snake [for reins], in fulfillment of "And the beasts of the field also have I given him to serve him" (Jer. 27:6).[4]

Jehoiakim and Jeconiah

177. It is said: At the time Nebuchadnezzar went up to destroy Jerusalem, he first came to Daphne of Antioch, where he took up his abode. When the Great Sanhedrin went down to pay their respects to him, they asked, "Has the time come for this house to be destroyed?" He replied, "No, it is only that Jehoiakim has rebelled against me; deliver him to me, and I shall go away." They went and told Jehioakim, "Nebuchadnezzar demands your person." He replied, "Is this the way to act—sacrifice one life for another? Sacrifice my life, so that you may save yours? Does not Scripture say, 'Thou shalt not deliver a bondman unto his master' (Deut. 23:16)?" They said, "Has not a female forebear of yours[5] done this very thing to Sheba son of Bichri, saying, 'Behold, his head shall be thrown to thee over the wall' (2 Sam. 20:21)?" When they saw that Jehoiakim would not heed them, they seized him, put him in chains, and lowered him down [the city wall] to Nebuchadnezzar.

What did Nebuchadnezzar do to him? According to R. Judah, Nebuchadnezzar took him, carried him around through all the cities of Israel, and put him to death by tearing open an ass and sewing Jehoiakim into it, in fulfillment of "He shall have his burial in an ass" (Jer. 22:19). But according to R. Nehemiah, Nebuchadnezzar took Jehoiakim, carried him around through all the cities of Israel, and put him to death, then cut his body into olive-sized pieces, which he threw before dogs, in fulfillment of "He shall be buried with the burial of an ass." Where is the burial of an ass? Is it not in the innards of a dog?

After Jehoiakim was put to death, Nebuchadnezzar made Jehoiakim's son Jeconiah king in his father's place and went down to Babylon. As all the people of Babylon came out to salute and praise him, they asked: What have you accomplished? He replied: Jehoiakim, king of Judah, rebelled against me, so I had him put to death, and I made his son Jeconiah king in his place. They: There is a proverb "Don't expect to tame any puppy sired by a vicious dog," all the less so a vicious puppy sired by a vicious dog.

He took heed of what they said and again took up his abode in the arena of Antioch. Again the Great Sanhedrin came down to pay their respects to him, and again they asked, "Has the time come for the house of the Lord to be destroyed?" He replied, "No. But the one I have just made king—deliver him to me and I shall go my way." They went and told Jeconiah, "Nebuchadnezzar demands your person." What did Jeconiah do then? He gathered all the keys of the Temple, went up to its roof, and said, "Master of the universe, since we are deemed by You unworthy custodians, here are the keys to Your house."[6] At that, what appeared to be a fiery hand came down and took them from Jeconiah's hand.

Then what did Nebuchadnezzar do? He seized Jeconiah and put him in prison; and in Nebuchadnezzar's time, a man put in prison never left it.[7]

178. R. Hiyya bar Avuyah said: On Jehoiakim's skull are inscribed the words: "This and yet another" [which R. Hiyya explained with the following story]: At the gates of Jerusalem, R. Perida's grandfather found a skull with the words "This and yet another" inscribed on it. He buried it, but it burst up out of the ground. He buried it again; it burst up again. Then he said to himself: This must be the skull of Jehoiakim, about whom it is said, "He shall have the burial of an ass, dragged out and left lying outside the gates of Jerusalem" (Jer. 22:19). Still, he reflected, Jehoiakim was a king, and it is not right to subject him to such disgrace. So R. Perida's grandfather took the skull, wrapped it in silk, and put it in a casket. When his wife came home and saw what was in the casket, she went out and spoke of it to her women neighbors, who said: It is no doubt the skull of his first wife, whom he cannot forget. So she lit the oven and burned the skull.

When R. Hiyya bar Avuyah heard of the incident, he said: No doubt it is the skull that is inscribed with the words "This and yet another."[8]

---

1. Apparently R. Judah is willing to condone suicide in the face of great anguish. Lam. R. 1:16, §51.
2. B. Shab 149b.
3. After Nebuchadnezzar lived seven years as a wild beast and had regained his sanity.
4. B. Shab 150a.
5. She was "the wise woman" (2 Sam. 20:16) of Abel of Beth-maacah who persuaded the people of her town to cut off the head of Sheba son of Bichri, in order to save them from Joab's sword (2 Sam. 20:21). One commentator suggests that "the wise woman" was of the tribe of Asher, whose daughters were deemed fit to wed royalty, and that a descendant of "the wise woman" did so, thus making her a forebear of Jehoiakim's. See Lev. R., ed. Mordecai Margulies (Jerusalem, 1953–60), 1:432, n. 6.
6. The words "Up to now we have been faithful householders before You" in BR and in printed editions of Lev. R. are omitted, as in Lev. R., ed. Margulies, ad loc.
7. Lev. R. 19:6 (ed. Margulies, p. 436); P. Shek 6:3, 50a; Yalkut, 2 Kings, §249–50.
8. A dual disgrace: lying about in the streets and being burned. B. Sanh 82a.

CHAPTER SEVEN

THE DESTRUCTION OF THE FIRST TEMPLE

The Destruction of the Temple

1. The Holy One said to Jeremiah: Go and prophesy against Israel. But Jeremiah kept responding to the Holy One, "I am but a child, I know not how to speak" (Jer. 1:6) the dire prophecy You would have me utter against Israel. Until finally the Holy One told him, "Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee, and before thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee; I have appointed thee a prophet unto the nations" (Jer. 1:5). At once he accepted the burden of prophecy, thinking that he was to prophesy only against the nations. No sooner did Jeremiah accept the burden of prophecy than God said to him, "Take this cup of the wine of fury" (Jer. 25:15). Jeremiah took it, as is said, "I took the cup from the Lord's hand" (Jer. 25:17), still thinking that he was to cause only the nations to drink it. But then the Holy One said to Jeremiah: Go forth and learn [a lesson in] proper conduct. Is not drink served [first] to him who reclines in the most prominent position at a banquet? See who reclines in the most prominent position among the world's capitals and serve that one first—Jerusalem: she is the one most prominent among the world's capitals.

What parable applies here? That of a woman to whom infidelity was imputed, who entered the Temple Court to drink the water such a woman is asked to drink.[1] When the priest came to have her drink it, he looked at her, and behold, she was his mother. Deeply embarrassed, he drew back and began to moan and weep for his mother. So it was with Jeremiah. When the Holy One said to him, "Make Jerusalem drink," Jeremiah replied, "Master of the universe, did You not say to me, 'I have appointed thee a prophet unto the nations'? Yet now the beginning of my prophecy is to be directed against my own people! 'O Lord, Thou hast enticed me, and I let myself be enticed' " (Jer. 20:7). The Holy One said, "You have already accepted the burden of prophecy and cannot go back on your word."

And so it came about that Jerusalem took [the cup] from Jeremiah's hand and drank it, all of it, even sucked its shards dry, as is said, "Thou shalt drink it and drain it, and gnaw its shards" (Ezek. 23:34).

When Jeremiah realized that the decree of doom for Jerusalem was sealed, he began to raise his voice and wail bitterly, "How doth the city sit solitary" (Lam. 1:1).[2]

2. When wicked Nebuchadnezzar, together with the other kings, came to Jerusalem, they supposed that they would capture it within a short time. But the Holy One strengthened the men of Jerusalem up to the third year of the siege, in the hope that they would return in penitence. Unending was the number of heroes in Jerusalem who fought the Chaldeans and felled many of them. One such hero was Avuka son of Gavtri. Whenever the Chaldean warriors shot big stones [from catapults] in order to demolish the wall, Avuka would catch the stones in his hand and hurl them back at the warriors, killing many of them. After a while, [when his arm grew weary] he began catching them with his foot and hurled them back at the [Chaldean] army. But Israel's sin brought it about that a wind came up and blew him off the wall—his body split open and he died.

What did Hanamel, Jeremiah's uncle, do then? He called up certain ministering angels by their names and made them come down to the walls, armed with all kinds of weapons. When the Chaldeans saw the angels, they fled in fear of them, until the Holy One changed the angels' names and brought them back to the firmament. Hanamel tried to bring them down again, but could not.[3] What did Hanamel do then? He called up the prince of the world, who raised Jerusalem and kept it suspended in the air, until from heaven the Holy One kicked it, and it fell back to earth. At that, Jerusalem's walls split apart, so that the Chaldeans were able to enter the city. When they came into the Temple Hall and were about to set it on fire, the Holy One summoned Gabriel and Michael, and asked, "Who is most beloved by you?" They replied, "Israel." "And after Israel, who is most beloved by you?" They replied, "The Temple." God then said, "By My great Name I swear that you yourselves shall set fire to it."[4] At once Gabriel and Michael took two flaming torches and set fire to the Temple of the Lord, so that, in lamentation for itself, the Temple cried out, "From above, He sent a fire down into my bones" (Lam. 1:13).[5]

3. R. Joshua of Sikhnin said in the name of R. Levi: For six years the coals were kept dimly glowing in the hands of Gabriel, who thought that Israel would yet resolve on repentance. When they failed to repent, he, in his wrath, wanted to fling the coals at the people. But the Holy One called out to him: Gabriel, Gabriel, go easy, go easy, there are people among them who practice charity toward one another.[6]

4. For eighteen years a divine voice kept reverberating in Nebuchadnezzar's palace, saying, "Wicked servant, go up and destroy the house of your Master, whose children do not listen to Him." But Nebuchadnezzar was afraid and did not go up. He said to himself: He only wishes to entrap

---

1. See Num. 5
2. Yalkut, Lam., §909.
3. Because, not knowing their new names, he could no longer command them.
4. According to tradition, no human hand was capable of destroying the Temple; only God or His angels could do so.
5. Yalkut, Lam., §909.
6. Lam. R. 1:13, §41.

me and do to me what He did to my grandfather.[1] What did Nebuchadnezzar do? He went and set up residence in Daphne of Antioch, but sent Nebuzaradan, the captain of the guard, to destroy Jerusalem. Nebuzaradan spent three and a half years there, maintaining the siege of Jerusalem day after day, but was unable to subdue it. Then, when he decided to retreat, the Holy One put a new idea in his head. He began to measure the height of the wall, which at once began sinking two and a half handbreadths every day, until all of it sank into the ground. After it was wholly sunk, the foes entered Jerusalem. Concerning that time: "The kings of the earth believed not, neither all the inhabitants of the world, that the adversary and the enemy would enter into the gates of Jerusalem" (Lam. 4:12).[2]

5. Rava said: Nebuchadnezzar sent Nebuzaradan three hundred mules laden with iron axes [so sharp] that they could crack iron, and all of them vanished when a single gate of Jerusalem opened up and sucked them in, as is said, "And now a single [gate] opened upon the axes and pikes they battled with" (Ps. 74:6). Nebuzaradan wanted to retreat, saying to himself: I fear that what happened to Sennacherib will happen to me.[3] But a divine voice went forth: "O leaper, and son of a leaper, Nebuzaradan, leap! The time for the Temple to be destoyed, and for the Sanctuary to be consumed by fire has come." He had only one ax left. Leaping up, he struck that gate with the ax's wooden shaft, and the gate opened wide, as is said, "A man became famous for lifting the part of an ax that is wrought from the sturdy portion of a tree" (Ps. 74:5). Nebuzaradan leaped in and kept hewing down [Jews], until he reached the Sanctuary. When he tried to set it on fire, the Sanctuary lifted itself up. But from heaven it was trod upon so hard [that it was forced down]: "As in a winepress the Lord trod upon the most sacred[4] part of fair Judah" (Lam. 1:15). Nebuzaradan was elated. But a divine voice came forth and proclaimed, "A people already slain you slew, a Sanctuary already consumed by fire you set on fire, flour already ground you ground.[5]

6. "Even now our eyes pine away in vain for deliverance" (Lam. 4:17). What did the ten tribes do? They carried oil to Egypt, and from there brought produce, which they sent on to Assyria, saying, "If our foes advance against us, these peoples will be a help for us." As Scripture says, "Now they make a covenant with Assyria, now oil is carried to Egypt" (Hos. 12:2), and also, "We hold out a hand to Egypt, to Assyria, for its fill of bread" (Lam. 5:6). When the foes did come upon the ten tribes, they immediately sent to Pharaoh-necoh [for help], saying, "Send up soldiers from your army." And he did send the soldiers. But as they sailed upon the sea, the Holy One beckoned to the sea, and it floated before their eyes distended leather skins, which looked like corpses with human innards trailing in the water. They asked one another, "What are these corpses?" They were told, "These are the remains of your forebears who enslaved the forebears of the Jews [you are sailing to help]. As soon as the forebears of these Jews were redeemed from your forebears, they rose up and drowned them in the sea." At that, the Egyptian soldiers said, "Jews acted thus to our forebears, and we are going to assist them?" They returned at once, as is said, "The army of Pharaoh, which set out to help you, shall return to Egypt, into its own land" (Jer. 37:7).[6]

The Ninth of Av

7. It is taught: Good things come to pass on an auspicious day, and bad things on an ill-starred day.

It is said: The first time the Temple was destroyed was on the ninth of Av, on a Saturday evening, at the end of a sabbatical year, when a watch of the family of Jehoiarib was on duty, and the Levites standing at their posts were singing a psalm. What psalm did they sing? "He shall bring upon them their own iniquity, and shall cut them off in their own wickedness" (Ps. 94:23). But before they had time to sing the end of the psalm, "Yea, the Lord our God shall cut them off entirely" (ibid.), the heathens entered and silenced them.[7]

Upon the Ruins of Jerusalem

8. "The famine was sore in the city" (2 Kings 25:3). The well-born daughters of Zion used to congregate in the streets of the city, staring at each other, until at last one would say to her friend, "Why have you come out into the street? You never came out into the street before." And in anguish the other would reply, "What have I to hide from you? The 'boon of'[8] famine is hard to accept. I cannot bear it." Then, supporting one another, the daughters of Zion walked around looking for food in the city, for something to put into their mouths.[9] And not finding anything to eat, they would clutch at the house pillars and, wherever the street turned, fall dead at the base of the pillars. Their infants who still needed to suck their mother's milk came crawling after them on their hands and knees. Each child, recognizing his own mother, came up, took the breast he knew, and put it against his mouth, expecting to draw milk. But he drew none, and so, driven into a frenzy, he died in his mother's bosom.

At that time the Lord said to Jeremiah, "Rise, go to Anathoth and buy the field from thine uncle Hanamel."[10]

As soon as Jeremiah left Jerusalem, the angel of the Lord came down from heaven, set his feet against the walls of Jerusalem, and breached them. Then the angel cried

---

1. Sennacherib.
2. Lam. R., proem 30; Lam. R. 4:12, §15.
3. After his abortive siege of Jerusalem, he was assassinated.
4. Literally, "virgin."
5. B. Sanh 96b.
6. Lam. R. 4:17, §20 (ed. Buber [Vilna, 1899], p. 152); Rashi on Lam. 4:17.
7. B. Ta 29a.
8. "Boon of"—so YJS.
9. "For food" and "for something to put into their mouths" added, as in YJS.
10. See Jer. 32:6–44.

out, saying, "Let the enemies come and enter the house, for the Master of the house is no longer within. Let them despoil and destroy it. Let them go into the vineyard and cut down its vines, for the Watchman has gone away and left it." [And to the enemies he said], "Do not boast that you have vanquished the city. Nay, a conquered city you have conquered, a dead people you have put to death. A Temple consumed by fire you set on fire."

The enemies came and set up a platform for themselves on the Temple Mount, in a place that happened to be the very same spot where Solomon used to sit when he took counsel with the elders about how to decorate the Temple. There the enemies sat and took counsel about how to burn the Temple. As they were deliberating, they lifted their eyes and saw four angels descending, in their hands four flaming torches which they put at the four corners of the Holy Place, setting it on fire.

When the high priest saw that the Temple was on fire, he, together with many companies of young priests, went up to the roof of the Temple Hall, holding the keys of the Temple Hall, and cried out, "Master of the universe! Since we have been unworthy custodians of it, here are the keys of Your house," and then cast them heavenward. Something that looked like the palm of a hand came forth and received them. As the high priest started to go down, the enemies seized him and slaughtered him at the altar, in the very place where he used to offer the daily sacrifice. His daughter ran out wildly, crying, "Woe is me! My dear father, the delight of my eyes!" They seized her and slaughtered her also, and mingled her blood with the blood of her father.

When the priests and the Levites saw that the Temple was on fire, they took their harps and trumpets, let themselves fall with them into the flames, and were consumed. When the virgins who wove the curtain for the Sanctuary saw that the Temple was on fire, they too let themselves fall into the flames [so that the enemies should not violate them] and were consumed.

When Zedekiah saw all that was happening, he sought to flee through an underground passage—used as a water main—that led to the plains of Jericho. But the Holy One provided a gazelle that walked on top of the underground passage. The Chaldeans chased after the gazelle, and just as they got to the egress of the passage onto the plains of Jericho, Zedekiah and his sons were emerging. The Chaldeans saw them and seized them. Nebuzaradan sent all of them to Nebuchadnezzar, who asked, "Tell me, Zedekiah, what made you rebel against me? By what law shall I judge you? If by the law of your God, you deserve the death penalty, for you swore in His Name falsely; if by the laws of the state, you likewise deserve the death penalty, for he who violates his oath to the king deserves the death penalty."

Zedekiah replied, "I beg you, slay me first, so that I may not see the blood of my sons." And his sons pleaded, saying, "Slay us first, so that we may not see the blood of our father shed upon the earth."

So Nebuchadnezzar did what they asked: he slaughtered them before their father. Then he gouged out Zedekiah's eyes, put them in an oven [to burn], and took him to Babylon. And Zedekiah kept crying out, "Come and see, all you children of men, that Jeremiah prophesied truly about me when he said to me, 'You will go to Babylon and in Babylon you will die, but your eyes will not have seen Babylon.' I would not listen to his words. And here I am in Babylon, and my eyes do not see it."

In the meantime, the prophet Jeremiah left Anathoth to come back to Jerusalem. He lifted his eyes and saw the smoke of the Temple rising up. So he said in his heart: Perhaps Israel has returned in penitence to bring offerings, and now the smoke of incense is rising up. But when he climbed closer and stood upon the wall, he saw the Temple turned into heap upon heap of stones and the wall of Jerusalem broken down.[1] He cried to God, saying, "Thou hast enticed me, O Lord, and I was enticed; Thou hast overcome me, and hast prevailed," etc. (Jer. 20:7). As he continued on his way, he kept moaning and saying, "What road have the sinners taken? What road have those taken who are about to perish? I will go and perish with them." As he went on, he saw the path covered with blood and the ground on both sides soaked with the blood of the slain. He brought his face close to the ground and made out the footprints of sucklings and children who were walking into captivity. He threw himself on the ground and kissed the footprints. When he caught up with the host going into captivity, he embraced them and kissed them. When Jeremiah saw a band of young men tied by neck chains one to the other, he put his head into a neck chain with them, but Nebuzaradan came along and released him. Then later, when he saw a band of old men bound together by chains, he put the chains on his own neck, but once more Nebuzaradan came by and released him. Even as Jeremiah wept with them and they wept with him, he spoke up and said, "My brethren and my people, all that has befallen you is the consequence of your not hearkening to the words of the prophecy that God uttered through me."

When Jeremiah reached the Euphrates River, Nebuzaradan spoke, saying to him, "If it seem good unto thee to come with me into Babylon, come" (Jer. 40:4). So Jeremiah thought in his heart: If I go with the exiles to Babylon, there will be no comforter for the captivity left in Jerusalem. With that, he started to go forth from among them. When the exiles lifted their eyes and saw that Jeremiah was taking leave of them, all of them broke out weeping and wailing as they implored, "Our father Jeremiah, you are in truth abandoning us!" There they sat down and wept, for thus it is written: "By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down, yea, we wept" (Ps. 137:1). Jeremiah answered and said, "I call heaven and earth to witness that if you had wept even once while you dwelled in Zion, you would not have been driven out."

As Jeremiah went, he wept and said, "Alas for you, most precious of cities." [After he was released by Nebuzaradan] and was on his way back [to Jerusalem], Jeremiah saw fingers and toes [of captive Israelites] that had been cut off and flung on mountain paths. He picked them up, held them close, kissed them, put them in his cloak, and wept over them, saying, "O my children, did I not keep

---

1. YJS: mfvgrt [mefuggeret] ("destroyed") and not msvgrt [mesuggeret] ("closed up" or "shut in").

warning you, 'Give glory to the Lord your God, before it grow dark, and before your feet stumble on the mountains in shadow' (Jer. 13:16)?" Of that time, Scripture says, "On the mountains I take up weeping and wailing, on the pastures in the wilderness a dirge" (Jer. 9:9)—on those mountains, once majestic in splendor, I now am weeping and wailing; and for Jacob's pastures, so desolate [that the sight of them] evokes a dirge.

Jeremiah said: [After I left the exiles and] was going back up to Jerusalem, I lifted my eyes and saw at the top of a mountain a seated woman, clothed in black, her hair disheveled, crying and pleading for someone to comfort her, just as I was crying and pleading, "Who will comfort me?" I came near her and spoke to her, and said, "If you are a woman, speak to me, but if you are a spirit, depart from me." She answered, "Do you not recognize me? I am the woman who had seven sons. Their father went away to a city far across the sea. As I was going up to lament him, messengers came and said, 'Your house has collapsed over your seven sons and slain them.' And in my distraction I know not for whom I am to cry or for whom I am to disarray my hair." I replied, "You are not more deserving of comfort than Mother Zion, who has been made into a pasture for the beasts of the field." She replied, saying, "I am your Mother Zion, the mother of seven." Jeremiah said, "Your chastisement is like Job's chastisement. Job's sons and daughters were taken from him, and your sons and daughters have been taken from you. Job's gold and silver were taken from him, and your gold and your silver have been taken from you. Job was cast upon a dungheap, and you have been turned into a heap of dung. But even as the Holy One turned back and comforted Job, so will He turn back and comfort you."[1]

9. There was a man with four sons, who asked his wife, "Do we have any food in the house?" She replied, "One jarful." He: "Cook it, and we shall eat it." So she cooked it in a pot, and [after it was served] a drop was left. When the eldest son came to scrape it out, the man pushed him aside and said, "Do not rob your brothers." Before the eldest had a chance to eat it, the Chaldeans came,[2] took the children away, and slew all of them. The father went and found each in the place where he fell. He then took the index finger of his eldest son, thrust it into his own eye, and said, "Because I did not let you scrape out a drop of food, let a finger of yours take out the eye of him who denied it."

It is told: A woman had three grown-up sons who were about to join a sortie against the besiegers. She took the infant she was giving suck to and cooked it in a pot. As the grown-up brothers ate from it, they recognized their infant brother's hands. So they went up to the roof, flung themselves down, and died. Concerning them, Jeremiah lamented, "Better off are the slain of the sword than those slain by famine" (Lam. 4:9). And the mother cried in anguish, "Woe is me! Would that I had the leavings of a harvest, the gleanings of a vintage. I have not even one cluster to enjoy" (Mic. 7:1).[3] She meant: a harvester leaves aftergrowths, a vintager leaves gleanings. But I—for me nothing remained. I have been turned over to Nebuchadnezzar's hand like a ewe to the claws of a lion, like a lamb to the hands of a slaughterer.[4]

The Departure of the Presence

10. "The glory of the Lord went forth from off the threshold of the house" (Ezek. 10:18). R. Aha said: God was like a king who was leaving his palace in anger. Nevertheless, as he was leaving, he turned back, embraced and kissed the walls of the palace, and the pillars of the palace, wept, and said: Farewell, my palace! Farewell, my royal residence! Farewell, my cherished home! Farewell! Farewell henceforth! So, too, as the Presence was departing from the Temple, it turned back, embraced and kissed the walls of the Temple and the columns of the Temple, wept, and said: Farewell, My Sanctuary! Farewell, My royal residence! Farewell, My cherished home! Farewell! Farewell henceforth![5]

The Holy One Weeping

11. "And in that day did the Lord, the God of hosts, call to weeping, and to lamentation" (Isa. 22:12). When the Holy One was about to destroy the Temple, He said: So long as I am within it, the peoples of the world will be unable to touch it. However, I will shut My eyes from it and swear that I will have nothing to do with it again till the messianic end of time. Meanwhile, let the enemies come and devastate it. Then He swore by His right hand and put it behind Him, as is said, "He put back His right hand from before His enemy" (Lam. 2:3). At once the enemies entered into the Temple Hall and burned it. After it was burned, the Holy One said: Once again I have no dwelling place in the Land. So I shall remove My Presence from it and go up to My former residence. The Holy One wept and said: Woe is Me! What have I done? For Israel's sake I caused My Presence to dwell below. But now that Israel sinned and I am returning to My former place, I have, Heaven forbid, become the laughingstock of the nations and an object of derision for mortals. In that instant Metatron[6] came, fell upon his face, and spoke before the Holy One: Master of the universe, let me weep, but You must not weep. God replied: If you do not let Me weep, I will go into a place where you have no authority to enter and weep there. That such was God's response is intimated in the verse "If you cannot bear to hear it, My spirit will weep in the secret place" (Jer. 13:17).[7]

Then the Holy One said to the ministering angels:

---

1. PR 26:6 (YJS 2;533–38); Lam. R., proem 32; Rashi on Jer. 39:4.
2. The words "led them to the battlefield" are omitted.
3. JV: "Woe is me! For I am as the last of the summer fruits, as the grape gleanings of the vintage: There is no cluster to eat."
4. Yalkut, Lam., §1015–16.
5. Lam. R,. proem 25.
6. The angel of the Presence.
7. JV: "But if ye will not hear it, my soul shall weep in secret."

Come and let us go, you and I, to My house, and see what the enemies have done to it. At once the Holy One and the ministering angels went forth, Jeremiah leading the way. When the Holy One saw the Temple, He said: Beyond doubt, this was My house, this was My resting place, into which enemies came and did as they pleased. Then and there the Holy One wept and cried out in anguish: Woe is Me for My house! My children, where are you? My priests, My Levites, where are you? What else might I have done with you, seeing that I kept warning you again and again, but you would not return in penitence?

Then the Holy One said to Jeremiah: I am today like a man who had an only son for whom he prepared a marriage bower, but, while in it, the son suddenly died. Will you show no anguish for Me or for My children? Go, summon Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Moses from their graves. They know how to weep. Jeremiah replied: Master of the universe, I do not know where Moses is buried. The Holy One said: Go, stand on a bank of the Jordan, lift up your voice, and cry out: Son of Amram, son of Amram, arise and gaze at your flock, which enemies have ripped apart.

But first Jeremiah went to the cave of Machpelah and said to the fathers of the world: Arise, the time has come when your presence is required by the Holy One. They asked: Why is our presence required by the Holy One on this day more than on any preceding day? Jeremiah replied: I do not know—he was afraid[1] lest they say in reproach, "This has befallen our children in your days."

Jeremiah left the fathers of the world and, standing on a bank of the Jordan, called out: Son of Amram, son of Amram, arise! The time has come when your presence is required by the Holy One. Moses replied: Why is my presence required by the Holy One on this day more than on any preceding day? Again Jeremiah replied: I do not know.

Moses left Jeremiah and went to the ministering angels, whom he had come to know at the time of the giving of Torah. He asked them: Ministers on high, do you know why my presence is required by the Holy One? They replied: Son of Amram, do you not know that the Temple is destroyed and Israel is exiled? Moses immediately rent the garments of glory with which the Holy One had clothed him, put his hands on his head, and walked weeping and moaning until he reached the fathers of the world. When the fathers of the world asked him: Moses, shepherd of Israel, wherein is this day different from any preceding day? he replied: Fathers of my fathers, do you not know that the Temple is destroyed and Israel exiled among the peoples of the world? They also rent their garments, put their hands on their heads, and walked weeping and moaning until they reached the gates of the Temple. When the Holy One saw them, at once "the Lord the God of hosts called on that day to weeping and to lamentation, to shaving the head and to girding on sackcloth" (Isa. 22:12). (Were such words not explicitly set down in Scripture, it would be impossible to utter them.) As the fathers walked from gate to gate, they wept like a man in whose presence the corpse of a dear one is lying; while the Holy One lamented as He said: Woe to the king who prospered in his youth but did not prosper in his old age.[2]

[1] To tell them of the catastrophe that had befallen Israel.

Mourning by the Fathers

12. When the Temple was destroyed, Abraham came weeping before the Holy One, plucking his beard, pulling out the hair of his head, striking his face, rending his garments. With ashes on his head, he kept walking about the site of the Temple, lamenting and crying, until finally he spoke up to the Holy One: "Why am I dealt with differently than [the forebear of] any other nation or tongue, in that I am brought to such shame and humiliation?" When the ministering angels saw him, they arranged themselves in row upon row, like mourners, and composed a dirge: "The highways are desolate, wayfarers have ceased" (Isa. 33:8). The highways You provided for Jerusalem, on which wayfarers were not to cease—how desolate they have become! The roads on which Israel came and went during festivals—how deserted they are!

The Holy One frowned upon the ministering angels and asked: Why did you arrange yourselves in row upon row, like mourners, composing a dirge [about the just punishment of Israel]? They replied: Master of the universe, for the sake of Abraham, Your friend who loves You. He came to Your house, lamenting and weeping—why did You not respond to him? He replied: Ever since My friend departed from My Presence to his eternal abode, he came not to My house, but now, "why should My beloved be in My house?" (Jer. 11:15). Then Abraham spoke up again to the Holy One: Master of the universe, why did You exile my children and turn them over to heathen nations, who put them to death in all kinds of unnatural ways and destroyed the Temple on whose site I once brought my son Isaac as a burnt offering before You? The Holy One replied: Your children sinned and transgressed against the entire Torah and against the twenty-two letters[3] in which it is written. Abraham spoke further to the Holy One: Master of the universe, who will testify against them, against Israel, that they have indeed transgressed Your Torah?[4] God: Let the Torah herself come and testify against them, against Israel.

At once the Torah came to testify against Israel. But Abraham said to her: My daughter, have you come to testify against Israel, that they transgressed your commandments? Have you no shame in my presence? Remember the day when the Holy One went around with you to every nation and tongue, and not one of them would have you until my children came to Mount Sinai and accepted you and honored you. Yet now you come to testify against them in the day of their misfortune. Upon hearing this, the Torah stood aside and gave no testimony against them.

Then the Holy One said to Abraham: Let the twenty-two letters of the alphabet come and testify against them, against Israel. At once the twenty-two letters came. As the alef came forward to testify against Israel, that they transgressed the Torah, Abraham said to her: Alef, you who are the first among the letters would testify against Israel in the day of their misfortune? Remember the day the Holy One appeared on Mount Sinai and began [the Ten Commandments] with you: Anokhi,[1] "I am the Lord your God" (Exod. 20:2)? No nation or tongue would have you, save only my children, yet you are here to testify against my children. At once the alef stepped back and gave no testimony against them.

[2] Lam. R., proem 24; Yalkut, Lam., §996.

[3] The Hebrew alphabet has twenty-two letters.

[4] The accused cannot be judged guilty unless there are witnesses attesting his guilt.

Then the bet came to testify against them, against Israel. Abraham said to her: My daughter, you come to testify against my children who are diligent in the study of the Five Books, at whose beginning you stand?[2] At once the bet, too, stepped back and gave no testimony whatever.

When all the other letters saw that Abraham had silenced those who appeared, they were embarrassed, stepped aside, and did not testify against Israel.

Then Abraham began to speak to the Holy One and said: Master of the universe, when I was already a hundred years old, You gave me a son, and when he reached the age of understanding, a mature man of thirty-seven,[3] You said to me, "Bring him as a burnt offering before Me." I steeled my heart against him with cruelty and showed no compassion for him; on the contrary, I myself bound him. Will You not remember this on my behalf, and will You not have mercy on my children?

Then Isaac began to speak and said: Master of the universe, when my father said to me, "God will provide Himself the lamb for a burnt offering, my son" (Gen. 22:8),[4] I did not balk at what You had to say. I willingly let myself be bound upon the altar and stretched out my neck under the knife. Will You not remember this on my behalf, and will You not have mercy on my children?

Next, Jacob began and said: Master of the universe, did I not stay in Laban's house for twenty years? When I left his house and wicked Esau met me and wished to slay my children, I risked my life for them.[5] And now they have been delivered into the hands of their enemies like sheep for slaughter—my children whom I had reared as tenderly as hens' chicks, and for whose sake I suffered the pain of parenting. Will You not remember this on my behalf, and will You not have mercy on my children?

Moses began and said: Master of the universe, was I not a faithful shepherd of Israel for forty years, trotting before them like a horse in the wilderness? Yet when the time came for them to enter the Land, You decreed for me that my bones were to fall in that wilderness. And now that they are exiled, You send for me to lament and weep over them. It is as the proverb puts it: "I have no share in my master's good fortune, but a full share of his misfortune."

Without waiting for a reply, Moses said to Jeremiah: You go before me, so that I may lead them [back to the Land of Israel] and see who dares to lay a hand upon them. Jeremiah replied: It is impossible to walk along the road because of the slain. Moses said: Nevertheless, let us go.

Forthwith, Moses went, Jeremiah walking before him, until they reached the rivers of Babylon. When the exiles saw Moses, one said to the other, "The son of Amram has come up from his grave to deliver us from the hand of our adversaries." But then a divine voice came forth and said, "It is a decree from My Presence." At that, Moses said to them, "It is impossible to bring you back now, since the decree has already been issued, but He who is everywhere will bring you back soon," and then he left them. Then the exiles lifted their voices in loud weeping, so that the sound of their weeping reached the heights above. Thus it is written, "By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down, yea, we wept" (Ps. 137:1).

When Moses returned to the fathers of the world, they asked him: What have the enemies done to our children? He replied: Some they slew with the sword; they bound the hands of others behind their backs; some were fettered with iron chains; others were stripped naked; some died by the way, their corpses serving as food for the birds of heaven and the beasts of the earth; and others were exposed to the burning sun, hungry and thirsty.

At once all the fathers began to weep and utter lamentations: Woe for what has befallen our children! How you have become like orphans without a father! How you had to sleep at noon during summer without garments or cover! How you were forced to walk over mountains and rocks without shoes, without sandals! How you were made to bear heavy loads of sand! How your hands were bound behind your backs! How you were [so parched by thirst] that there was no saliva left in your mouths to swallow!

Then Moses began to say: Cursed be you, O sun! Why did you not plunge into darkness when the enemy entered the Temple? The sun replied: By your life, O Moses, faithful shepherd, how could I have turned into darkness? I was not allowed to, for I was not left alone, but was beaten unceasingly with sixty whips of fire and told: Go forth, pour out your light.

Moses continued: Alas for your splendor, O Temple! How tarnished! Alas that the time has come for the Temple to be destroyed! The Temple Hall is burned, schoolchildren are massacred, and their parents are going into captivity and exile.

Moses again lifted up his voice and said: O captors, as you live, if you kill, do not kill with a cruel death; do not bring on them total extermination; do not kill a son in the presence of his father, or a daughter in the presence of her mother. For the time will come when the Holy One will requite you. But the wicked Chaldeans did even worse things: they put a child in its mother's bosom and said to the father, "Up, and kill it." As the mother wept, her tears fell on the child, while the father raised the child's head [to cut his throat].

Moses went on defying the Holy One: Master of the

---

1. The word anokhi begins with the alef.
2. Genesis begins with the letter bet in Bereshit ("In the beginning").
3. Isaac was born when Sarah was 90 (Gen. 17:17). She died at 127. She died, it is said, when she learned that Abraham had taken him to be sacrificed.
4. In rabbinic interpretation, the verse is construed as hinting that Isaac was to be the lamb for the burnt offering.
5. Jacob's passing in front of them (Gen. 33:2ff.) is construed as an attempt to defend them.

universe, in Your Torah You wrote, "Whether it be a cow or ewe, ye shall not kill it and its young both in one day" (Lev. 22:28). But have not mothers and sons been killed again and again? Yet You remain silent!

At that moment our mother Rachel broke forth into speech before the Holy One and said: Master of the universe, it is revealed and known to You that Your servant Jacob cherished a great love for me; indeed, because of me he worked for my father seven years. When the time for the marriage to my husband arrived, my father conspired to substitute my sister for me. Yet I was not jealous of my sister and did not expose her to shame. Now if I, who am flesh and blood, dust and ashes, was not jealous of my rival, then why should You—the King, living, enduring, merciful—be jealous of idols, which have no substance, and banish my children because of them?

At once the mercy of the Holy One crested, and he said: For your sake, O Rachel, I will restore Israel to their place. Of this it is said:

> Thus saith the Lord:
> A cry was heard in Ramah,
> Wailing, and bitter weeping,
> Rachel weeping for her children.
> She refuseth to be comforted for her children
> Who are gone
> (Jer. 31:15).

These words are followed by:

> Restrain thy voice from weeping,
> Thine eyes from shedding tears;
> For there is a reward for thy labor . . .
> There is hope for thy future,
> Thy children shall return to their country
> (Jer. 31:16).[1]

The Blood of Zechariah

13. R. Joshua ben Korhah said: An old man of the inhabitants of Jerusalem told me that Nebuzaradan, the captain of the guard, killed two hundred and eleven myriads in this valley, and in Jerusalem he killed ninety-four myriads on one stone, so that, as their blood flowed, it touched the blood of Zechariah. Nebuzaradan noticed that the blood of Zechariah kept seething and bubbling up. He asked, "What's the matter with this blood?" and was told, "It is the blood of sacrifices, which was spilled." So he said: Bring some blood of sacrifices, and I will check [the accuracy of what you say]. The blood was brought, and the two kinds were found not to be the same. Then Nebuzaradan said, "If you tell me the truth, well and good, but if not, I will scrape your flesh with iron combs." They replied, "What can we say to you? There was a priest among us who was also a prophet. He used to reprove us for the transgressions we committed, and so we rose up against him and killed him. It is now many years that his blood has not been still." Nebuzaradan said, "I will quiet it." At that, he brought the [members of the] Great Sanhedrin and the Small Sanhedrin[2] and slew them over the blood, but the blood did not become still. He then slaughtered young priests, but the blood did not become still; youths and maidens, but the blood did not become still; schoolchildren, but it did not become still—until he slew ninety-four myriads all together. Then Nebuzaradan drew near the blood and said, "Zechariah, Zechariah, I have slain the best of them. Will it please you to have me slay all of them?" The blood promptly became still.

In that instant, thoughts of remorse came to Nebuzaradan's mind as he said to himself: If such is the penalty for them who slew but one person, how much greater will be the punishment imposed on me, who have slain all these multitudes? He fled away, sent a last will and testament to his family, and became a convert.[3]

The Sufferings of the Exiles

14. "And [Jerusalem's] tears are on her cheeks" (Lam. 1:2)—on the cheeks of Jerusalem's young men. You find that when the foes entered Jerusalem, they seized young men and bound their hands behind their backs. They wept, and the tears ran down their cheeks. They were unable to wipe them, so the tears remained on their cheeks, smarting like the burn of a [skin] boil.[4]

15. "I called upon those who were supposed to love me, but they deceived me" (Lam. 1:19). R. Joshua ben Levi said: When the wicked Nebuchadnezzar abducted the children of Israel to Babylon—their hands tied behind their backs, chained together with iron chains, and going naked like beasts—the children of Israel, as they passed by Ishmael's land, said to Nebuchadnezzar's officers in charge, "Show us compassion and pity, and take us by way of our kinsmen, the children of our uncle Ishmael." And the officers did so. The children of Ishmael came out to meet them with salted bread and brine [to dip it in]. They also brought empty leather bottles made to appear as though filled with water and hung these at the entrances of their own tents. When the Israelites saw such seeming concern, their anxieties subsided, for they assumed that the leather bottles were filled with water. The Ishmaelites said, "First eat some bread, and then we will bring you water." After the Israelites had eaten the bread, the Ishmaelites came and said, "We could not find any water." So the Israelites tore with their teeth at those bottles, and, because the hot air in them rushed into their innards, they died.[5]

16. R. Yohanan said: Eighty thousand novice priests, bearing eighty thousand golden shields, broke through the ranks of Nebuchadnezzar's army and escaped to the Ish-

---

1. Lam. R., proem 24.

2. The first had seventy-one members; the second had twenty-three.

3. B. Git 57b; B. Sanh 96b.

4. Or: "fell upon the cheeks like the burn of a boil." Lam. R. 1:2, §25.

5. Tanhuma, Yitro, §5.

maelites, to whom they said, "You are our cousins. Give us water to drink." The Ishmaelites replied, "Eat first, and then you will drink water." What did the Ishmaelites do? They set before them salted foods. After the Israelites had eaten, the Ishmaelites brought forth empty leather bottles distended with air. As each Israelite untied a bottle's neck and put it into his mouth, the air in it penetrated the Israelite's innards, so that he was thrown into convulsions and died.[1]

By the Rivers of Babylon

17. "By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down, yea, we wept" (Ps. 137:1). What made Israel sit down and weep by the rivers of Babylon? R. Yohanan explained: It was the Euphrates, which slew more of the children of Israel than the wicked Nebuchadnezzar had slain. While the children of Israel were living in the Land of Israel, they drank only rainwater, running water, or spring water. But when they were exiled to Babylon, they had to drink the water of the Euphrates, and many of them died. And so the exiles wept—wept for the dead whom their enemies had slain, wept for the dead who had perished in the way and whom the Babylonians had not permitted to be buried, and wept for the dead whom the Euphrates had slain. They had even more cause to weep! For the wicked Nebuchadnezzar was seated in a ship—he and all his nobles and all his officers—and they had with them all kinds of instruments to sing with, as is said, "The Chaldeans, in the ships of their singing" (Isa. 43:14). At the same time, all the members of the royal house of Judah, who had been put into iron chains, were walking naked along the edge of the river. The wicked Nebuchadnezzar looked up and saw them. He said to his servants, "Why are such as these walking with their heads held high and without burdens? Have you no burdens to load upon their necks?" Instantly the servants brought Torah scrolls, shaped them into sacks, filled them with sand, and loaded them on the shoulders of the members of the royal house of Judah until their heads were bent low. At that, the members of the royal house of Judah said of themselves, "To our very necks we are pursued" (Lam. 5:5). And in that hour all Israel moaned loudly, until their cry came up to heaven.

R. Aha bar Abba taught: It was at this moment that the Holy One wished to return the world to chaos and emptiness, saying, "I will strike hand against hand, and will satisfy My fury" (Ezek. 21:22). By these words the Holy One meant" All that I created in the world, I created with My two hands—"My left hand hath laid the foundation of the earth, My right hand hath spread out the heavens" (Isa. 48:13)—I created only for the sake of Israel, and now I return it to chaos and desolation.

R. Tahalifa bar Keruya taught: It was at this moment that all the ministering angels came and stood before the Presence of the Holy One and said to Him: Master of the universe! The entire universe, and all that is in it, is Yours. Is it not enough for You that You have already destroyed Your dwelling place on earth? Must You also destroy Your dwelling place in heaven? God replied: Am I flesh and blood, that I require your comforting? I foresee the beginning, and I foresee the end: "Even to your old age I am He" (Isa. 46:4). "Therefore say I, 'Look away from Me, I will weep bitterly; labor not to comfort Me' " (Isa. 22:4). [The verse does not say, as in usual discourse, "Comfort Me no more," but says, "Labor not," employing an unusual verb, which signifies that] God said to the ministering angels, "These words of comfort with which you would console Me are as blasphemies[2] to Me. Go down out of My presence and lift the burden from My children." Instantly the ministering angels went down and lifted the burden from them. And not only the ministering angels, but the Holy One Himself, if one dare say such a thing, reached out to help in lifting the burden, as is said, "For your sake I have reached out to Babylon" (Isa. 43:14).

When Nebuchadnezzar came and burned the Temple and exiled Israel, taking them into captivity, he allowed [them] no halts for rest while traversing all the Land of Israel, for the Babylonians pressed hard upon the Israelites. Why did they press so hard upon them? Because the Babylonians feared for their own lives, saying, "The God of this nation is waiting for them to repent. It may be that they will repent while they are still in their own Land, and He will then deal with us as He dealt with Sennacherib." Therefore the Babylonians allowed no halts for rest in the entire Land of Israel. It was only when the children of Israel came to the rivers of Babylon, where the Babylonians felt that the Israelites were completely in their power on Babylonian land, that Nebuchadnezzar allowed a halt. At that, some Israelites turned to food and drink; and some turned to weeping and mourning.

Nebuchadnezzar asked, "Why do you sit weeping?" And he called to the tribe of Levi and said to them, "Get ready! While we eat and drink, I want you to stand and strike your harps before me, as you struck them in your Temple before your God." The Levites looked at one another and said, "Is it not enough [of a torment] for us that we destroyed His Temple by our sins? Must we now strike our harps for this dwarf?"[3] They all stood up with one accord, hung their harps upon the willows there by the river, and then, with extraordinary self-command, put their thumbs into their mouths and either mangled them or bit them off.

That this happened is implied in what David, quoting the Levites, says: "How shall we sing the Lord's song?" (Ps. 137:3–4). They did not say, "We shall not sing," but said, "How shall we sing?" The Levites showed the Babylonians their [mangled] fingers and said, "Are you not aware that our hands were so tightly manacled by the irons that our fingers were mangled? Look! How can we now sing?"[4]

18. "Mine eye shall weep sore, and run down with tears, because the Lord's flock is carried away captive" (Jer.

---

1. Lam. R. 2:2, §4; Yalkut, Isa., §421.

2. Rendering ta'itzu ("labor") as if it read tin'atzu ("blaspheme"): "Do not blaspheme in order to comfort Me."

3. See "the lowest of men" (Dan. 4:14).

4. PR 31:4 (YJS 2:606–7); Yalkut, Ps., §883.

13:17). You find that before Israel were exiled, they were made up of several flocks—flocks of priests unto themselves, flocks of Levites unto themselves, and flocks of lay Israelites unto themselves. But after they were exiled, they became one flock—"the Lord's flock is carried away captive."

R. Yohanan ben Zakkai used to say: Why should Israel have been exiled to Babylon more than to any of the other lands? Because Abraham's family came from there. By what parable may the matter be explained? By the one of a woman who was unfaithful to her husband. Where is he likely to send her? Back to the house of her father.[1]

Yearnings

19. "These things I remember and pour out my soul within me" (Ps. 42:5). Whom did the sons of Korah have in mind when they uttered this verse? None other than the congregation of Israel, for the congregation of Israel said to the Holy One: Master of the universe, I recall the trust and serenity in which I used to abide. Now these are far removed from me. I weep and sigh as I say: Who will restore me as in former days, when the Temple was standing, and You used to come down into it from the highest heaven and have Your Presence abide over me, and the peoples of the world spoke in praise of me; and when I sought compassion for an iniquity of mine, You answered me? But now I am covered with shame and humiliation.

The congregation of Israel said also: Master of the universe, my soul is desolate within me, for when I pass Your house, which is destroyed, and am plunged in utter silence, I ask myself: The place where the seed of Abraham used to bring offerings to You, where priests used to minister on the dais, where Levites used to intone praise with harps—is it right for foxes to be romping about in it?

"How I passed on with the throng (sakh), and led them (eddaddem) to the house of God" (Ps. 42:5). Here the congregation of Israel is saying to the Holy One: In the past, I used to go up with the throng (sakh) to Jerusalem along well-kept roads, but now [I have to make my way] through thorny hedges (sakh)—"I will hedge up (sakh) her roads with thorns" (Hos. 2:8). In the past, when I used to go up, trees furnished shade (mesakekhim) over my head, but now I am fully exposed to the sun.[2] In the past, I used to go up in the shade of the Holy One, but now I am in the shadow of [oppressive] kingdoms.

According to R. Berekhiah, the congregation of Israel also said to the Holy One: In the past, I used to go up carrying baskets of firstfruits on my head, but now [I go] "in silence" (eddaddem)[3]—I go up in silence (demumah) and come down in silence (demumah). In the past, I used to go up with songs and psalms of praise before the Holy One. But now I go up with weeping and come down with weeping. In the past, I used to go up in "a festive throng" (Ps. 42:5), throngs and throngs caught up in festivity—(Indeed, as R. Levi said, the congregation of Israel was then like a cataract whose flow stops neither day nor night)—but now I sneak up like a thief, and like a thief sneak down.[4]

Comforting

20. The words "Comfort ye, comfort ye My people" (Isa. 40:1) are, according to R. Berekhiah the Priest, to be read, "Comfort Me, comfort Me, O My people." In the world's use, if a man owns a vineyard and robbers come and cut it down, who is to be comforted, the vineyard or the owner of the vineyard? And so, too, if a man owns a house and robbers come and burn it down, who is to be comforted, the house or the owner of the house? You are My vineyard. But Nebuchadnezzar came and, having destroyed it, exiled you and burned My Temple; it is I that need to be comforted. Hence, "Comfort Me, comfort Me, O My people."[5]

21. "A Psalm of Asaph. O God, the heathen are come into Thine inheritance" (Ps. 79:1). Should not Scripture have used a phrase such as "weeping of Asaph," "lament of Asaph," "dirge of Asaph"? Why does it say "A Psalm [song] of Asaph"? Well, the use of the word "psalm" may be accounted for by the parable of a king who made a bridal bower for his son, which he plastered, paneled, and painted. But his son entered upon an evil course of living. So the king came up into the bower and tore the curtains and broke the rods. Then the son's tutor took a reed pipe and played on it. He was asked, "The king has just now overthrown his son's bower, and you sit here playing a tune?" The tutor replied, "I play a tune because the king overthrew his son's bower but did not pour out his wrath[6] upon his son." So, too, when it was said to Asaph, "The Holy One has just destroyed both Temple Hall and Sanctuary, and you sit here singing a psalm?" he replied, "I sing because the Holy One poured out His wrath upon sticks and stones, but did not pour out His wrath upon Israel."[7]

---

1. Lam. R., proem 25; Tos BK 7:3.
2. Reading not teluyah ("hung") but geluyah ("exposed"). So David Luria and Midrash Ekhah, ed. Buber (Vilma, 1899), p. 80.
3. JV: "led them."
4. Lam. R. 1:17, §52. The source of the first two paragraphs in this section is unknown to the translator.
5. PR 29/30:9 (YJS 2:586).
6. Play on words: huppato ("his bower") and hamato ("his wrath").
7. Lam. R. 4:11, §14.

CHAPTER EIGHT

THE ERA BETWEEN THE FIRST AND SECOND TEMPLES

Daniel and the Dragon in Babylon

1. "I will punish Bel in Babylon, and I will bring forth out of his mouth that which he hath swallowed up" (Jer. 51:44). Nebuchadnezzar had a great dragon, which swallowed up everything thrown to it. [Nebuchadnezzar said to Daniel, "How great is its might, that it swallows up everything thrown to it!"] "Give me permission," Daniel replied, "and I will deplete his strength." Nebuchadnezzar gave him permission. What did Daniel do? He took straw, hid nails in it, and threw the straw to the dragon, and the nails lacerated his innards.[1]

The Dead whom Ezekiel Brought Back to Life

2. Our masters taught: When Nebuchadnezzar threw Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah into the fiery furnace, the Holy One said to Ezekiel, "Go and bring the dead in the Valley of Dura back to life." As Ezekiel was quickening them, the [utensils made from] bones of the dead, [which Nebuchadnezzar had been using, also came to life and] began slapping Nebuchadnezzar in the face. When he asked, "What in the world are these? his courtiers replied, "Ezekiel, the companion of the three you threw into the fiery furnance, has brought the dead in the Valley of Dura back to life."

At that, Nebuchadnezzar broke into song:

> How great are His signs!
> And how mighty are His wonders!
> His kingdom is an everlasting kingdom,
> And His dominion is from generation to generation!
> (Dan. 3:33).

R. Isaac said: May molten gold be poured into the mouth of that wicked one! If an angel had not come and struck him upon his mouth, he would have sought to excel all the songs and praises that David had uttered in the book of Psalms.[2]

3. It is taught that R. Eliezer said: The dead whom Ezekiel brought back to life stood up on their feet, uttered song, and [immediately] died. What song did they utter? "The Lord slayeth in justice, and in mercy bringeth back to life." R. Joshua said that their song was: "The Lord killeth and maketh alive; He bringeth down to the grave, and bringeth up" (1 Sam. 2:6). R. Judah said: The account in Ezekiel[3] was the truth, and it was also a parable. R. Nehemiah asked him: If truth, how a parable? And if a parable, how truth? [R. Judah]: It was a true event that served as a parable.[4]

R. Eliezer son of R. Yose the Galilean said: The dead whom Ezekiel brought back to life went up to the Land of Israel, married, and begot sons and daughters. At this, R. Judah ben Betera jumped up on his feet and said: I am one of their descendants, and here are the tefillin that my grandfather left me [as an heirloom] from them.[5]

Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah

4. "My son, fear thou the Lord and the king" (Prov. 24:21). When Nebuchadnezzar ordered Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah to worship idols, and they refused to obey him, he said to them, "Did not the Holy One command you to obey the government in whatever it tells you to do, [as is said], 'I [counsel thee], keep the king's command' (Eccles. 8:2)?" They replied, "You are king over us in the matter of taxes and imposts. But to worship idols? O Nebuchadnezzar, in this respect you and a dog are alike."[6]

5. R. Simeon the Shilonite expounded: When the wicked Nebuchadnezzar cast Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah into the fiery furnace, Yurkami, the [heavenly] prince of hail, appeared before the Holy One and said, "Master of the universe, let me go down, cool the furnace, and thus save those righteous men from the fiery furnace." Gabriel spoke up, "The might of the Holy One will not be made evident this way, for you are the prince of hail, and everyone knows that water quenches fire. But I am the prince of fire. Let me go down, and I shall cool it within and heat it without,[7] and thus perform a miracle within a miracle." At that, the Holy One said to Gabriel, "Go down." It was then that Gabriel burst forth: "True is the Lord forever" (Ps. 117:2).[8]

6. "O Lord, goodness is Thine, but shame falls to us" (Dan. 9:7). R. Eleazar asked: Who uttered this verse? and he himself replied: Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah uttered it. When they came out of the fiery furnace, all the peoples of the world gathered and, slapping Israel on their faces, said jeeringly, "You have such a God, yet you were willing to worship the image [of Nebuchadnezzar]." They

---

1. Gen. R. 68:13.
2. B. Sanh 92b. Rabbinic tradition has a grudging admiration for Nebuchadnezzar as an outstanding personality.
3. Ezek. 32.
4. It foreshadowed the rebirth and revival of the Jewish people.
5. B. Sanh 92b.
6. Num. R. 15:14.
7. To burn those who put them into it.
8. At the time of Abraham's deliverance from the fire, God promised Gabriel that he would deliver Abraham's descendants, and God kept His word. B. Pes 118b.

spit in the faces of Israel until their entire bodies seemed to be covered with spittle. Then Hananiah and his companions lifted their eyes to heaven above and, justifying the [humiliating] punishment meted out to Israel, said, "O Lord, goodness is Thine, but shame falls to us."

After Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah came out of the furnace, where did they go?[1] They, so said R. Joshua, drowned in the spittle.[2]

7. R. Yohanan said: It is written, "The sun was darkened in his going forth" (Isa. 13:10). Would that it had been dark on that day and the sun had not risen at all! For Cyrus went out to walk through his capital and saw that the capital was deserted. He asked: What has gone wrong with this city, that it is so deserted? Where are the goldsmiths? Where are the silversmiths? He was answered: Are you not the one who decreed, "The Jews may leave and build the Temple"? Some of those Jews were goldsmiths and others were silversmiths, and they went up to rebuild the Temple. So Cyrus decreed, "He who has already crossed the Euphrates may remain across; but he who has not yet crossed may no longer cross." At that very moment Daniel and his followers had already [completed the crossing and] gone up to the Land, saying: [Instead of eating the abundant food of Babylon], it is better to eat the meager food of the Land of Israel and say grace in the Land of Israel. But Ezra and his followers did not go up at that time.

Why did Ezra not go up at that time? Because he had to clarify his grasp of Torah, which he learned from Baruch son of Neriah.[3] But should not Baruch son of Neriah himself have gone up? Yes, the sages said, but Baruch was so old[4] and so enfeebled that he could not travel even in a litter.

Resh Lakish suggested: Ezra did not go up at that time, in order that the Temple might retain its sanctity. Had Ezra gone up at that time, Satan would have been given an opportunity to make mischief by saying: It is better that Ezra should take over the high priest's office than that Joshua son of Jehozadak serve as high priest. But Joshua son of Jehozadak was high priest by right of descent, whereas Ezra, a righteous man to be sure, had no such hereditary claim to serve in that office. The Holy One, R. Simon said, is reluctant to disrupt claims of succession based on descent.[5]

8. It is taught that R. Eliezer ben Jacob said: Three prophets[6] went up with the Jews from exile in Babylon: one informed them about [the dimensions of] the altar and the site of the altar; another informed them that they could bring offerings, even though there was as yet no Temple; and the third informed them that the Torah should be written in Assyrian characters.[7]

Ezra

9. We learn that R. Yose said: Had Moses not preceded him, Ezra would have been worthy of having the Torah given to Israel through him. And even though the Torah was not given through him, its script was changed through him.[8]

10. "If she be a wall, we will build upon her a turret of silver; and if she be a door, we will enclose her with boards of cedar" (Song 8:9). If, in the days of Ezra, you had made yourselves solid like a wall and all of you had come up together in solid unity, you would have been likened to silver, which no rot can affect. But since you came up like doors, you are like cedarwood, which succumbs to rot.[9]

Men of the Great Assembly

11. R. Joshua ben Levi asked: Why were they called "Men of the Great Assembly?" Because, he answered, they restored the manner[10] [of praising God's greatness] to its ancient form. Moses said, "The great God, the mighty, the awesome" (Deut. 10:17). Then Jeremiah came and said: Heathens are battering at His Holy Place—where are the feelings of awe that He is said to inspire? Hence he did not say that God was awesome. Then Daniel came and said: Heathens are enslaving His children—where are His mighty acts? So he did not say that God was mighty.[11] Then came the Men of the Great Assembly, who said: On the contrary, the greatness of His might is in that He suppresses His wrath and is forbearing toward the wicked. His awesome deeds are in that but for the awe of the Holy One, how could a single people remain alive among the heathens?[12]

In the Days of Mordecai and Esther

12. In the verse "For the Leader; upon the hind of the dawn" (Ps. 22:1), Scripture speaks of the generation of Mordecai and Esther, [a time that was more dark than] the night. For though it is night, one has the light of the moon, the stars, and the planets. Then when is it really dark? Just before dawn! After the moon sets and the stars set and the planets vanish, there is no darkness deeper than the hour before dawn, and in that hour the Holy One answers the world and all that is in it: out of the darkness, He brings forth the dawn and gives light to the world.

---

1. The question is asked because they are not mentioned again.
2. A figurative way of saying that they died of broken hearts, humiliated as they were at Israel's acquiescence in idolatry. So Meir Ha-Levi, as quoted by Adin Steinsaltz in his edition of Sanh (Jerusalem, 1974). B. Sanh 93a; Tanhuma, Ki Tissa, §14.
3. Jeremiah's disciple. See Jer. 45.
4. The Ot Emet suggests that "stout" in the text be changed to "old."
5. Song R. 5:5, §1.
6. Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi.
7. The square form of Hebrew now in use. B. Zev 62a.
8. See preceding note. B. Sanh 21b.
9. B. Yoma 9b.
10. Literally, the crown [of God's greatness].
11. See Jer. 32:18 and Dan. 9:4.
12. B. Yoma 69b and En Yaakov, ad loc.

Then, too, why is Esther likened to the hind of the dawn? What is true of the light of dawn? Its light rays out as it rises; at the beginning, light comes little by little; then it spreads wider and wider, grows and increases; and at last it bursts into shining glory. So, too, Israel's redemption through Esther came about little by little. At the beginning "Mordecai sat in the king's gate" (Esther 2:21); then "the king saw Esther the queen" (Esther 5:2); then "on that night the king could not sleep" (Esther 6:1); then "Haman took the apparel and the horse" (Esther 6:11); then "they hanged Haman" (Esther 7:10); then Ahasuerus said to Esther and Mordecai, "Write concerning the Jews as you see fit" (Esther 8:8); then "Mordecai went forth from the presence of the king in royal apparel" (Esther 8:15); and at last "the Jews had light and gladness" (Esther 8:16).

The sages said: When a hind is thirsty, she digs a hole, fixes her horns in it, and in her distress cries softly to the Holy One. The Holy One causes the deep to come up, and the deep causes water to spring up for her. So, too, Esther: when wicked Haman decreed cruel decrees against Israel, she, in her distress, began to cry softly in prayer to the Holy One, and the Holy One answered her.

R. Assi said: As the dawn ends the night, so all miracles [recorded in Scripture] ended with Esther.[1]

Deborah and Esther

13. R. Judah bar Simon taught: You find that when a house in which a snake nests is fumigated with a hind's horn or a woman's hair, the snake immediately flees. So, too, Deborah and Esther were as effective as a hind's horn, for Deborah did not budge until she destroyed Sisera and his hosts; and Esther did not budge until she had Haman and his ten sons hanged.[2]

The Feast of Ahasuerus

14. His disciples asked R. Simeon ben Yohai: Why was Israel[3] of that generation deemed to deserve extermination? He said to them: You tell me. They replied: Because Israel relished the feast of that wicked one. He said: If so, the Jews in Susa should have been condemned to die, but not those in the rest of the world. They: You tell us then. He: Because they bowed down to the graven image.[4] They: Was there a show of favor toward them [on God's part] in this matter? He: No. Since they only pretended to worship the graven image, God only pretended that He was about to exterminate them.[5]

15. "The couches were of gold and silver" (Esther 1:6). It is taught that R. Judah said: He who was rated worthy of silver was invited to recline on a couch of silver, and he who was rated worthy of gold was asked to recline on a couch of gold. R. Nehemiah argued: Such show of favor would have stirred up resentment at the feast. Rather, what the verse really means is that all the couches were made of silver, and only their legs were of gold. These couches were placed "upon a pavement of . . . shell (dar) and onyx marble (tzoharet)" (Esther 1:6). Samuel said: In cities far across the sea, there is a precious pearl shell called darah, which Ahasuerus placed in the center of the pavement, and it provided the guests with light as bright as midday (tzahara).[6]

16. "And the drinking was according to the manner [of each country]; none did compel" (Esther 1:8). The first part of the verse implies that each guest was given the wine native to his own province. Of the verse's second part, R. Levi said: Such was the practice of the people of Persia: they had a large cup holding five-eighths of a kav,[7] which each guest was made to drink—even if he were to die or go out of his mind as a result, he was not allowed to return it until he had drunk all of it. The wine steward used to get rich from those guests who winked at him and gave him ever so many gold denars so that they would not be compelled to drink from it. But Ahasuerus did not have this cup brought to his banquet. Rather, he said: Whoever wishes to drink may drink as much as he chooses.[8]

17. "According to every man's wish" (Esther 1:8). The Holy One said: O wicked one, if two men wish to marry the same woman, can she possibly wed both? If two ships are sailing on the Great [Mediterranean] Sea, one seeking a southerly wind and the other a northerly wind, can the same wind drive both of them? Tomorrow two men, Mordecai and Haman, will come to you. Do you think you can possibly satisfy both as you might if there were only one? You will have no choice but to exalt one and hang the other.

No one except the Holy One can satisfy the wish of every human being. Of Him it is said, "Thou satisfiest the wish of every living thing" (Ps. 145:16).[9]

Bigthan and Teresh

18. "In those days, while Mordecai sat in the king's gate, two of the king's chamberlains, Bigthan and Teresh . . . had a grievance" (Esther 2:21). What brought on their grievance? R. Levi said: Bigthan and Teresh were Tarseans,[10] and both sat in the gate of the king. But the king removed them and put Mordecai in their place. So they felt they had a grievance. What did they do? They said: Let us put poison in the [king's] bowl, so that the king will die and everyone will say, "When Bigthan and Teresh guarded the king, all was well; but now that a Jew was put in their place, the king is murdered." They were stand-

1. MTeh 22:13; B. Yoma 29a.
2. Aggadat Esther on 7:11 (ed. Buber [Cracow, 1897], p. 68).
3. Literally (and euphemistically), "the enemies of Israel."
4. Set up by Nebuchadnezzar.
5. B. Meg 12a.
6. Ibid.
7. The equivalent of the contents of fifteen eggs.
8. Midrash Abba Gorion on Esther 1:8; Yalkut, Esther, §1048.
9. Midrash Abba Gorion on Esther 1:8; Esther R. 2:14.
10. There was a Tarsus in Cilicia and another in Cappadocia.

ing and talking of their scheme in the Tarsean language, not knowing that Mordecai was one of those who had sat in the Chamber of Hewn Stone[1] and therefore knew the seventy languages [of the world].[2]

19. "So they were both hanged on a tree" (Esther 2:23). "After these things did King Ahasuerus promote Haman" (Esther 3:1). [In explaining the sequence of these two verses], R. Phinehas used to tell a fable: A lion gave a feast for animals, tame and wild. He provided a tent covering for them made from skins of lions, wolves, and other ferocious animals. After they had finished eating and drinking, they said, "Who is going to sing for us?" and looked to the fox. He said, "Will you repeat the song after me?" They answered, "Yes." He lifted his eyes to the skins above their heads and said, "May He who has shown us what has become of those above[3] show us also what is to become of those below."[4] So, too, He who has shown us the hanging of Bigthan and Teresh will show us also the downfall of Haman.[5]

The Promotion of Haman

20. "After these things did King Ahasuerus promote Haman" (Esther 3:1). R. Levi said: Haman was promoted only for his downfall. Why then bother to promote him? The answer will be provided by the parable of a common soldier who cursed the king's son. The king said: If I put the scoundrel to death, everyone will say, "The king has executed a common soldier." I will first promote him, and then execute him. So he made him a tribune, then a general, and after that he cut off his head. Likewise, the Holy One said: Should Haman be put to death when he sank so low as to advise Ahasuerus to stop the building of the Temple, no one will know who he is. Let him therefore be promoted and then be hanged. So "he first set his seat above all the princes" (Esther 3:1), and after that "they hanged Haman" (Esther 7:10). This shows how the enemies of the Holy One become great only as prelude to their downfall. And so Scripture says, "Though the wicked bloom, they are like grass; though all evildoers blossom" (Ps. 92:8). What follows at the end of the verse? "It is only that they may be destroyed forever" (ibid.). Similarly it is said, "He exalts the nations, then destroys them" (Job 12:23).[6]

21. "King Ahasuerus promoted Haman . . . and set his seat above all the princes" (Esther 3:1). A parable of a man who had a filly, a she-ass, and a sow. He measured out fodder to the she-ass and to the filly, but let the sow eat as much as she wanted. The filly complained to the she-ass, "What is the idiot doing? To us, who do the work of the master, they ration food, but to the sow, who does nothing, they give as much as she wants." The she-ass replied, "The time will come when you will see that she is stuffed with fodder not out of deference to her but to her own harm." When the Roman Calends[7] came, they took the sow and stuck her. So, too, first "King Ahasuerus promoted," and in the end "they hanged Haman" (Esther 7:10).[8]

Haman's Intention

22. "Wherefore Haman sought to destroy all the Jews" (Esther 3:6). To what may the wicked Haman be compared? To a bird that made its nest at the edge of the sea, only to have it swept away when the tide was high. What did the bird do? It proceeded to take water into its beak and pour it out on the dry land, then take sand from the dry land and drop it into the sea. Its companion came, stood by, and asked: What are you doing, wearing yourself out so? The bird answered: I will not budge from here until I turn the sea into dry land and the dry land into sea. Its companion said: Biggest fool in the world! After all this effort, what do you think you can accomplish? So, too, the Holy One said to wicked Haman: You are the biggest fool in the world! I said I would destroy Israel, and found—if one dare ascribe such words to God—I could not. As Scripture says, "[God] intended to destroy them, but then Moses His chosen stood before Him in the breach, that . . . He should not destroy them" (Ps. 106:23). Yet you expect "to destroy, to slay, and to cause to perish." By your life, your head will be removed and not theirs! They are for deliverance, and you are for hanging.[9]

Haman's Slander and Ahasuerus's Decree

23. "Haman said: 'There is (yeshno) one people' " (Esther 3:8). Rava commented: There never was a slanderer as skillful as Haman. Haman said to Ahasuerus, "Come, let us engage them in battle." Ahasuerus answered, "I am afraid. Their God punishes anyone who engages them in battle." Haman: "But they are negligent (yashenu)[10] of God's precepts." Ahasuerus: "Nevertheless, there are righteous men in Israel who will seek mercy for the transgressors." Haman: "But they are 'one people' [ibid.]."[11] Should you argue [that by obliterating them] I will make a barren area in your kingdom, [please remember] that they are 'scattered' [ibid.]—scattered among many peoples. Should you say, 'But surely there is some benefit to be derived from them,' remember that they are meforad[12] [ibid.]—they are like a firdah, a mule that bears no progeny. Should you argue, 'But they are outside my domain,' and so you cannot act against them, they are 'in all the provinces of thy kingdom' [ibid.].

---

1. As a member of the Sanhedrin.
2. Midrash Panim Aherim on Esther 2:29; B. Meg 13b.
3. The skins of the dead beasts hung above their heads.
4. The host—the lion—himself.
5. Esther R. 7:3; Yalkut, Esther, §1054.
6. Midrash Abba Gorion on Esther 3:1; Esther R. 7:2.
7. The first day of the Roman month, usually observed as a feast.
8. Midrash Abba Gorion on Esther 3:1; Esther R. 7:1.
9. Midrash Abba Gorion on Esther 3:1; Esther R. 7:10.
10. Literally, "They are as negligent as if they were asleep."
11. All of them are transgressors; or, all of them bear responsibility for one another.
12. JV: "dispersed." The word meforad is construed as an adjectival form of firdah ("mule").

"Beside, 'their laws are diverse from those of every people' [Esther 3:8]—they do not eat with us, drink with us, or intermarry with us. 'Neither keep they the king's laws' [ibid.]—they spend the entire year dawdling and lolling about.[1] They say, 'It is the Sabbath, it is a festival,' and thus get out of doing the king's work." Haman then proceeded to reckon the Jewish festivals: the Feast of Unleavened Bread, Feast of Weeks, Feast of Tabernacles, New Year's Day, and the Fast of Atonement. At that, the Holy One said to Haman, "Villain, you would cast an evil eye on their festivals? I will cause you to fall down before them, and to celebrate your downfall they will add still another festival."

Haman went on, " 'It profiteth not the king to suffer them' [Esther 3:8], for they eat and drink, and hold the king in contempt. If a fly falls into the cup of one of them, he flings it out and drinks the wine. But if my lord king touches the cup of one of them, he dashes it to the ground and will not drink from it. Therefore, 'if it please the king, let it be written that they be destroyed; and I will pay ten thousand talents of silver,' " etc. (Esther 3:9).

"And the king said unto Haman: 'The silver is given thee, the people also, to do with them as it seemeth good to thee' " (Esther. 3:11). R. Abba said: By what may the give-and-take between Ahasuerus and Haman be illustrated? By the parable of two men, one of whom had a mound in the middle of his field, while the other had a ditch in the middle of his. The owner of the mound said: Who will sell me that ditch? The owner of the ditch said: Who will sell me that mound? One day the two met, and the owner of the ditch said to the owner of the mound: Sell me your mound. The other replied: I wish that such a request had been made long ago! Take it for nothing.[2]

24. "Then were the king's scribes called . . . and there was written . . . and letters were sent" (Esther 3:12–13). What was written in those letters? [The following]: To all peoples of diverse races and languages: May your well-being increase! Be it known unto you that there came to us a man, who is not of our city or of our land, an Amalekite, the son of distinguished forebears, and his name is Haman. He put a small—one may say, trifling—request to us, saying: In our midst there dwells a nation more despicable than any other nation. Arrogant in spirit, they are ever ready for treachery and corruption. They hold us in contempt and rejoice in our misfortune. Evening, morning, and noon the cursing of the king is habitual in their mouths. They keep saying, "The Lord is king forever and ever. May the nations vanish from His earth" (Ps. 10:16) when "He wreaks vengeance upon the nations, punishment upon the peoples" (Ps. 149:7).

The scions of this despicable and arrogant people are notorious ingrates. Look what they did to poor Pharaoh. When their forebears came down to Egypt, he welcomed them with extraordinary kindness—he even allowed them to settle in the very best part of his land. During years of famine he did not merely feed them, he gave them choice viands. Then, when he asked that they build him just one palace, they came with a trumped-up tale, saying, "Let us go, we pray thee, three days' journey into the wilderness and sacrifice unto the Lord our God" (Exod. 5:3); after that we will come back. In the meantime—they said—please lend us silver vessels, gold vessels, and garments. So the Egyptians lent them their silver, their gold, and their finest clothing. Then each one of these ingrates loaded ever so many asses, until they emptied Egypt. After that, they made their getaway. Naturally, Pharaoh—he and his entire camp—had no choice but to pursue them to retrieve their stolen treasure. What did these ingrates do? They had among them a certain person whose name was Moses son of Amram. By means of his witchcraft he took a staff, uttered incantations over it, and with it smote the sea, until it became dry. Then all of them went into the midst of the sea on dry land, and all of them got across. I do not know by what means they were able to cross the sea or by what means its waters were dried up. When Pharaoh saw this, he went in after them—I do not know how they managed to push him into the sea—but he and his entire host drowned in it. The ingrates, you see, chose not to remember the good things Pharaoh had done for them.

Then do you know what they did to Amalek, Haman's ancestor? After they had come up out of the sea, Amalek went to Balaam to seek advice from him, saying: Look what this people has done to Egypt. Now, if they have done this to Egypt, which bestowed so many boons upon them, how much more are they likely to do to other peoples! What do you advise? Balaam replied: Go and wage war against them. If you cannot prevail against them, no mortal will ever prevail against them, because they depend on the merit of Abraham, and so do you.

At that, Amalek went to war against them. What did their leader Moses do then? He had an understudy named Joshua son of Nun, cruel—utterly without mercy. Moses said to him, "Choose us men, and go out, fight with Amalek" (Exod. 17:9). I do not know the kind of men he chose—whether they were wizards or just mighty warriors. But Moses took a stick in his hand—I do not know precisely what he did with it—and also took a stone and sat on it—again I do not know what incantations he whispered over it. All I know is that Amalek's strength grew weak; and, powerless, they fell, slain by them.

Then they attacked Sihon and Og, the mightiest warriors in the world. No mortal could stand up to these two. I still do not know how they managed to slay them.

After that, what did Joshua, that person's understudy, do? He led Israel into the land of the Canaanites, not only taking their land, but slaying thirty-one of their kings. He then divided the land of the Canaanites among the Israelites. Even the Gibeonites, who made peace with them, they forced to become menservants and maidservants. Then Sisera and his multitude attacked Israel. What they did to him, I do not know, but the brook of Kishon swept away Sisera and his multitude, carried them off, and cast them into the Great [Mediterranean] Sea.

As their first king, they had a man named Saul. He went to the land of Haman's ancestor Amalek, where in

---

1. Hebrew: shihi pihi, which may be an acronym for Shabbat ha-yom, Pesah ha-yom, "Today is Sabbath, today is Passover."
2. B. Meg 13b–14a; Midrash Panim Aherim 3 (ed. Buber, p. 68).

one day Saul slew a hundred thousand horsemen—he had no pity on man or woman, child or suckling. How he managed to slay them, I do not know. Then what did they do to Haman's grandfather, Agag, whom they first had spared? After a while one of them, named Samuel, came forth, cut him in pieces, and served his flesh as food to the birds of heaven. I do not know why Samuel felt he had to inflict such a horrible death upon Agag.

After that, they had another king, David son of Jesse by name, who destroyed and exterminated ever so many realms, and showed no pity to their inhabitants.

After David, his son Solomon rose up and built for Israel an edifice he called "the sacred house." What they had in it, I do not know. But whenever enemies came to fight them, they entered that edifice and performed their witchcraft in it, and when they emerged from it, they killed [enough] to destroy the entire world. There was not a virtue they did not boast of having, and because of their extraordinary prosperity, no other people or tongue was deemed by them to amount to anything.

But when that God of theirs grew old, Nebuchadnezzar attacked them and burned that edifice of theirs, and their wizardry no longer availed them. Some he slew; others, after fettering in irons, he exiled from their Land and brought into our midst. But they still did not change their ugly ways. Even though they are in exile in our midst, they mock us and mock what we hold in awe. In their eyes, we are an abomination. So now all of us have agreed to cast lots to determine the best time to exterminate them from the world. The lot against them fell on the month of Adar, the thirteenth day in it. Accordingly, when these presents reach you, get ready for that day. He who draws a bow, let him draw it. He who wields a sword, let him wield it. Be ready to kill, to exterminate in one day all the Jews in your midst—young and old, little ones and women; do not allow even one of them to escape or get away.[1]

The following is the text of the letter Haman the Agagite wrote and sent to all the kingdoms of the world and to all the notables of the peoples of the world: I, chief officer of the king, second only to him, first of all prefects and most distinguished among the nobles in the realm, I, in full agreement with the king's eparchs and officers, satraps and governors, speaking as one, in the same language, using the same words, which King Ahasuerus has authorized, do herewith indite this writing, which is sealed with his signet and is therefore irreversible. The writing concerns the great vulture [Israel] whose wings had been spread over the whole world. No fowl, no beast, tame or wild, could withstand him. But then came the great lion [Nebuchadnezzar], who dealt the vulture a mortal blow. His wings were broken, his feathers plucked out, his feet hacked off. From the day the vulture was forced out of his eyrie until this day, the entire world, all of it, has had bestowed upon it calm, quiet, and serenity. But now we see the vulture determined to grow feathers and wings once again, determined to overshadow us and the entire world, all of it, as he once overshadowed and plundered our earliest forebears. Therefore we, all the foremost regents of Media and Persia, under the authority of King Ahasuerus, with common consent, are writing to you as follows: "Set snares for this vulture and trap him before he renews his strength and returns to his eyrie. We advise you to pluck his feathers and break his wings, to feed his flesh to the fowl of heaven, to crack his eggs, to crush his fledglings, and to root out his memory from the world. Let not our counsel be like Pharaoh's, who decreed only against males but let the females be; nor like Amalek's, who smote the stragglers and left the strong unscathed; nor like Sennacherib's, who exiled them to a land like their own; nor like Nebuchadnezzar's, who only exiled them but let them live, even seating some of them near his throne. Clearly aware [of the threat], we are resolved to slay, to exterminate all Jews, young and old, so that there be left of them no memorial, no name, no posterity in the world. Thus, they will be unable to do to us what they did to our forefathers and fathers. For whoever did them a favor, they paid back only with evil."

After the letters were sealed and given to Haman, he, together with his entire band of associates, left the royal palace, overjoyed.

When Mordecai met them [and learned of the fate in store for the Jews], he happened to see three Jewish children coming from school and hastened to catch up with them. Haman and his band, seeing Mordecai hasten after the children, followed him to find out what he might say to them.

When Mordecai caught up with the children, he asked one of them: Recite for me the verse in Scripture you studied today. He replied, "Be not afraid of sudden terror, neither of the destruction of the wicked, when it cometh" (Prov. 3:25). The second child followed him, saying: Today in school I studied the verse "Take counsel together, and it shall be brought to naught; speak the word, and it shall not stand; for God is with us" (Isa. 8:10). The third added, "Even to old age I am the same, and even to hoar hairs will I carry you; I have made and I will bear; yea, I will carry, and will deliver" (Isa. 46:4). When Mordecai heard these verses, he not only cheered up, he became jubilant. Haman asked him: What did the children say to you that made you so joyful? Mordecai replied: They gave me the good tidings that I need not fear the evil counsel you have devised against us. Enraged, wicked Haman said: I will make these children the first to feel the blow of my hand.

Then Haman said to Ahasuerus: The God of these people hates lewdness. So make a feast for them and seat women next to each one of them. Order that all of them come, eat and drink, and do whatever they desire. The king gave the order. At once Mordecai rose up and issued a proclamation: My children, go not to the place of Ahasuerus's feasting, so that Satan will not be given cause to make accusations against you. But they disregarded the words of Mordecai, and all of them went to the place of feasting.

---

1. "All this is a masterpiece of satirical parody of a people's history. I know only one other work in this genre—Count Alexis (no relation to Leo) Tolstoy's parody (in verse) of Russian history, as murderous in its characterization of the Russian czars as this is of the Jewish leaders. Perhaps there is an English counterpart—I cannot recollect a German or a French one (Voltaire? Heine?—I can't remember). There is certainly no Arabic one" (Leon Nemoy).

R. Ishmael said: Eighteen thousand five hundred men went to the place of feasting, where they ate, drank, became drunk, and committed acts of depravity, giving no thought whatever to the destruction of their Temple.

At once Satan rose up and, in the presence of the Holy One, brought charges against the Jews, saying bluntly to the Holy One: Master of the universe, how long will You cleave to this people, who keep provoking You? If You please, cause this people to perish from the world. The Holy One asked: But what will happen to the Torah? Satan replied: Master of the universe, You will have to make do with [the allegiance to it of] those on high. Indeed, the Holy One Himself, becoming reconciled with Satan's counsel, said: What need have I of this people, because of whom I have had so many reasons for anger? "I will make their memory cease from among men" (Deut. 32:26). At once the Holy One said to Satan: Bring Me a scroll and I will write in it: "Extermination." Satan went and brought God a scroll, which He inscribed and sealed.

At once the Torah went forth in a widow's garb and lifted her voice in weeping before the Holy One. At the sound of her weeping, the ministering angels too cried out to the Holy One and said: Master of the universe! If Israel were not in the world, of what use are we? When the sun and the moon heard this, they withdrew their brightness, and heaven and earth and all the works of creation went into mourning.

At that moment, Elijah, ever remembered on good occasions, ran in all haste to the fathers of the world and to the first prophets, and said to them: Fathers of the world, heaven and earth and all the host on high are weeping bitterly. The entire world is seized with pangs, like a woman in labor, and you lie here unruffled? They asked: What is happening? Elijah replied: A decree of extermination has been issued against Israel.[1] Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob said: If the decree against them has been sealed, what can we do? Elijah turned around and went to Moses, to whom he said: Alas, O faithful shepherd, how many times did you stand in the breach in Israel's behalf and cause a decree against them to be nullified, so that they were not destroyed. How will you respond to this present peril? Moses asked: Is there one virtuous man in this generation? Elijah: Yes, his name is Mordecai. Moses: Go and tell him about it, so that he might stand in prayer there, as we will here. Elijah responded quickly: But, O faithful shepherd, the decree against Israel is already indited, already sealed. Moses: If it is sealed with clay, our prayer will be heard; but if with blood, what must be, must be. Elijah: It is sealed with clay. Moses: Go and tell Mordecai.

At once Elijah went and told Mordecai.

"And in every province whithersoever the king's commandment and his decree came, there was intense mourning among the Jews" (Esther 4:3). Why is it spoken of as "intense mourning"? Because it is the way of mourning to be intense the first day, but, as it continues, it grows less intense. This mourning, however, kept growing more intense as it went on, for each man would say to himself: Tomorrow I am to be slain.

"And the thing pleased Haman, and he caused the gallows to be made" (Esther 5:14). What did he do? He went and cut down a cedar in the palace garden, and with chants and songs had it taken out and set up at the entrance to his house. Then he said: Tomorrow morning I will hang Mordecai upon it. After he had it set up, he measured himself against it; at that a divine voice spoke up, saying: These gallows fit you fine. Indeed, these gallows have been ready for you ever since the six days of creation.[2]

After Haman made the gallows, he went to Mordecai and found him seated in a house of study, with young children before him, their heads sprinkled with ashes, sackcloth about their loins, engaged in the study of Torah, even though they were crying aloud and weeping. Haman counted them and found that there were twenty-two thousand of them. He put iron collars about their necks, and fetters of iron on their legs, set guards over them, and said: Tomorrow I will slaughter these first, and then hang Mordecai.

The mothers of the children came to bring them bread and water, and said to them: Children, eat and drink before you die tomorrow—do not die hungry. The children put their hands on their scrolls and swore: By the life of our teacher Mordecai, we will neither eat nor drink, but will die worn out from fasting. Then each child rolled up his scroll, returned it to his teacher, and said: We thought that through the merit of Torah we would live long. But now that we have no such merit, take the scrolls from our hands. Then all moaned loudly as they wept, the mothers lowing like heifers outside the house of study, and the children bawling like calves within it, until their cry reached the height above. The Holy One heard the sound of their weeping at the end of the third hour in the night. In that instant the Holy One rose from the throne of justice, seated Himself on the throne of mercy, and asked: What is this loud noise I hear, like that of kids and lambs? Moses our teacher stood up before God and said: Master of the universe! These are neither kids nor lambs. They are the little ones of Your people, who have been fasting now for three days and three nights, and tomorrow, like kids and lambs, they will be made to stand up for slaughtering.

With that, the compassion of the Holy One crested, and He broke the seals, tore up the letters [of doom] and that night cast dismay on Ahasuerus.[3]

The Fall of Haman and the Exaltation of Mordecai

25. "On that night could not the king sleep" (Esther 6:1). R. Hama bar Gorion said: All those who wished to sleep had no sleep that night. Esther was busy with the feast for Haman; Mordecai was busy with his sackcloth and fasting; Haman was busy with his gallows. At that time

---

1. Literally (and euphemistically), "the enemies of Israel."

2. The assertion is the result of what appears to be an outrageous play on words: the phrase hmn h-'tz [ha-min ha-etz] "of the tree" (Gen. 3:11), is read, "For Haman the tree [Haman ha-etz]," hence, "the gallows."

3. Aggadat Esther, ed. Buber, pp. 38–40 and 45–46; Esther R. 7:13 and 9:4; Midrash Abba Gorion 4–5; Yalkut, Esther, §1055.

the Holy One said to the angel in charge of sleep: My children are in peril, yet this wicked king is sleeping in his bed. Go and cause his sleep to desert him. At once the angel came down, stood over Ahasuerus, and disturbed his spirit, saying to him: Ingrate, go and repay with favor him who deserves it. Ahasuerus began to muse: Who has served me well and has not been repaid? So "he commanded to bring the book of the records of the chronicles" (ibid.)

R. Levi said: Haman's son, who was the king's scribe, read the writ before the king. When he came to the parallel of Scripture's "It was found written, that Mordecai had told of Bigthana and Teresh" (Esther 6:2), he started rolling the scroll. But the words "Mordecai had told of Bigthana and Teresh" kept leaping into his sight, and, [agitated, he] continued rolling the scroll. The king asked, "How long must you keep rolling that scroll? Read what is before you." Haman's son said, "I cannot make myself read these words." At that, the words beginning "Mordecai had told" started reading themselves aloud. The instant Mordecai's name was recalled to Ahasuerus, sleep came over him. Near morning, as the king was sleeping, he saw in a dream Haman standing over him with an unsheathed sword in his hand, divesting him of the royal purple, removing the crown from his head, and aiming to slay him. In that instant Haman came and knocked on the door. Startled out of his sleep, the king called out, "Who is in the court?" and was told, "Behold, Haman standeth in the court" (Esther 6:4–5). So the king said to himself: That was no dream—it was the truth. "At once the king commanded: 'Let him come in' " (Esther 6:5).

When Haman came in, the king asked, "What shall be done unto the man whom the king delighteth to honor?" (Esther 6:6). Haman, puffed up by the pride in his heart, said to himself: Who is greater than I? Who deserves honor more than I? So whatever I ask, I ask for myself. Accordingly, he said, "My lord king, 'for the man whom the king delighteth to honor, let royal apparel be brought . . . and the horse . . . [and] a royal crown' " (Esther 6:7–8). The moment Haman asked for the crown, the king's countenance changed and he said to himself: That's it! That is what I saw in my dream—he wishes to slay me. So he told Haman, "Make haste, and take the apparel, etcetera, and do even so to Mordecai" (Esther 6:10). Haman said, "My lord king, there are many Mordecais in the world." The king: "Mordecai the Jew" (ibid.). Haman: "Among the Jews also there are many Mordecais." The king: "That sitteth at the king's gate" (ibid.). Haman: "If he is the one, the gift of a village or a river would be enough for him." The king roared at him like a lion and said, "Let nothing fail of all that thou hast spoken" (ibid.). The king summoned Hathach and Harbonah to accompany Haman, and ordered them: See to it that he omits nothing of all that he has mentioned. So the two went with Haman.

By the time Haman entered the king's storehouse, his body was bent low, his head covered like a mourner's; a hangdog look about his ears, his eyes lackluster, his mouth twisted, his spirit benumbed, and his knees knocking against each other. He took the king's apparel and the insignia of royalty from the storehouse, hurried out from there, and entered the royal stable, where out of its foremost stall he took the horse with a gold chain hanging from its neck. He seized the horse's halter and placed on its shoulders all the insignia of royalty. Then he went on to Mordecai.

When Mordecai saw Haman coming toward him leading a horse, he said to himself: I have a feeling that this wicked man is coming with his horse to trample me to death. Mordecai's disciples were then seated before him, studying. So he said to them, "Up, run off, lest you be scorched by the coal meant for me." They replied, "We will not part from you. Whether we live or die, we are with you." Then Mordecai wrapped himself in his prayer shawl and stood up to pray. In the meantime, Haman came in, sat down in the midst of the disciples, and asked, "What are you so busy with?" They replied, "With the precept of the omer,[1] which Israel used to offer in the days when the Temple was standing." He asked, "And what was that omer made of—silver or gold?" They replied, "Barley." He asked, "And what was its value?" They replied, "At the most, ten meah."[2] He said to them, "Your ten meah have prevailed over my ten thousand talents of silver."

Then, as soon as Mordecai finished praying, Haman said to him, "Rise up, righteous Mordecai, descendant of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Your sackcloth and ashes count for more than my ten thousand talents of silver. Rise up from your sackcloth and ashes, put on royal apparel, and ride the king's horse." Mordecai replied to Haman, "Wicked one, son of the seed of Amalek, wait a bit while I eat the bread of bitterness and drink the water of gall. Then take me out and hang me on the gallows." Haman said, "Rise up, righteous Mordecai, from of yore great miracles have been performed for your people. The gallows I prepared, I prepared for my own undoing. And now rise up, put on this purple robe, place this crown on your head, and ride this horse, for the king wishes to honor you." Then Mordecai understood that the Holy One had performed a miracle in his behalf. So he raised his voice and said to Haman, "You are the biggest fool in the world! Here I am seated in ashes, my body is filthy, and I am to wear royal apparel! It is not the seemly thing to do. I shall not put these on until I bathe and have my hair shorn." So Haman went looking for a bath attendant and a barber, but could find neither. Then he himself took Mordecai into a bathroom, girded his loins and rolled up his sleeves, and served as bath attendant for Mordecai. He brought all kinds of perfumes and fragrant oils, applied them carefully to Mordecai, and washed and anointed him. Afterward, he fetched a pair of shears from his house and served as Mordecai's barber. As he was cutting his hair, Haman began to sigh. Mordecai asked, "Why are you sighing?" He answered, "Alas for a man like me, who had been the greatest among the nobles, whose seat was above their seats, and now has become bath attendant and barber." Mordecai then said, "Wicked one, did I not know your father, who for twenty-two years was bath attendant and barber at the village of Kiryanos? In fact, these are his own instruments."

---

1. The sheaf of barley, also called the "sheaf of waving," brought on the sixteenth of Nisan. See Lev. 23:9–14 and below, part 1, chap. 9, §72–73.

2. Small silver coins.

After Haman groomed and clothed him, he said to Mordecai, "Rise up, mount this horse." Mordecai replied, "I am an old man, and because of the fast my strength is depleted." Haman bent down and lowered his neck. Mordecai stepped on Haman's back, mounted the horse, and sat on it. As Mordecai mounted the horse, he kicked Haman, at which Haman said, "Mordecai, 'Rejoice not when thine enemy falleth' " (Prov. 24:17). Mordecai replied, "Wicked one, my people were told, 'You shall tread on their backs' " (Deut. 33:29).

Now, as Mordecai rode on, Haman walked ahead of him, proclaiming, "Thus shall it be done to the man whom the king delighteth to honor" (Esther 6:11). From the royal palace twenty-seven thousand young men with golden cups in their right hand and silver goblets in their left also walked, proclaiming, "Thus shall it be done to the man whom the king delighteth to honor." As all these were singing his praise, others were carrying flaming torches ahead of him.

Haman's daughter looked out of a window, and when she saw her father in such degradation, she collapsed and died.

When Israel saw the honor bestowed on Mordecai, they too walked at his right and at his left, proclaiming, "Thus shall it be done to the man whom the King in heaven delighteth to honor."

Mordecai on his part chanted God's praise, saying, "I will extol Thee, O Lord; for Thou hast raised me up, and hast not suffered mine enemies to rejoice over me" (Ps. 30:2).

His disciples were saying, "Sing praise unto the Lord, O ye His godly ones, and give thanks to His holy Name. For His anger is but for a moment. His favor is for a lifetime" (Ps. 30:5–6).

Esther was saying, "Unto Thee, O Lord, did I call, and unto the Lord I made supplication: 'What is to be gained from my death?' " (Ps. 30:9–10).

And Israel cited, "Thou didst turn for me my mourning into dancing" (Ps. 30:12).

"But Haman hastened to his house" (Esther 6:12) with four skills in hand—bath attendant, barber, foot soldier, and herald.[1]

26. "For Mordecai was great in the king's house, and his fame went forth throughout all the provinces" (Esther 9:4). Coins bearing the name Mordecai circulated throughout [Persia's] provinces. What were the effigies on his coins? Sackcloth and ashes on one side, and a golden crown on the other.[2]

The Hanging of Haman

27. "The king said: 'Hang him' " (Esther 7:9). Haman spoke up and said to Mordecai: Before I am taken to the gallows, I beg you, O righteous Mordecai, that I not be hanged the way commoners are hanged. The mightiest men in the world were not considered very much in my presence, and potentates of the realm submitted to me like bondmen. With the words of my mouth I frightened regents, and with the breath of my lips I terrified provinces. I, Haman, was known as second only to the king. I, Haman, used to be called "the king's father–counselor." I now fear that you will do to me what I intended to do to you. Take pity on my honor, and do not slay me in the manner that my grandfather Agag was slain. Act in keeping with the kindness that is natural to you. After all, there are no deliberate murderers among you. Do not hold Agag's hatred and Amalek's jealousy against me. Do not bear a grudge as did my forebear Esau, who bore a grudge and took vengeance. My eyes, grown dim, can barely see your face, and I find it difficult to plead with you, because of the advice against you that I accepted from my friends and from my wife Zeresh. Still, I beg you! Have pity on my person, my lord, O righteous Mordecai, do not hang my gray head on a gallows. Have me put to death any other way, but not by hanging. Have my head severed with the king's sword, the way officers of the realm are usually executed.

Even though Haman cried out in anguish and wept, Mordecai did not incline his ear to him. When Haman saw that no heed was given to his pleas, he raised his voice in the palace garden in weeping and lamentation, exclaiming; O trees and saplings planted in the earth since the six days of creation, hearken unto me: The son of Hammedatha is about to be hanged from a tree.

All the trees gathered together to take counsel and concluded that the tree that was fifty cubits high should have Haman hanged from its top. The grapevine said: I am too short, and besides, I, from whom wine is taken for libations, will not have Haman hang from me. The fig tree said: I, from whom firstfruits are taken and from whom Adam and Eve made themselves loincloths, will not have Haman hang from my top. The olive tree said: I, from whom oil is taken for the [holy] lampstand, will not have Haman hang from me. The palm spoke up to the Holy One: Everyone knows that wicked Haman is a descendant of Agag, who is a descendant of Amalek—shall he be hanged from my top? The Holy One replied: May your strength continue to be firm. He will not be hanged from your top, for you are one of a pair[3] with the congregation of Zion who was favored by Me. The etrog said: I will not have Haman hang from me, to whom all nations come to take my fruit to praise Thee with it! The myrtle spoke up and said: I, being partnered with the etrog, over whom the words "joy and gladness" are spoken [in the benediction during Sukkot], will not have Haman hanging from my top. The oak cried out and said: I, under whom Deborah, Rebekah's nurse, is buried, will not have Haman hang from me. The terebinth cried out and said: I, in whose lower branches Absalom the son of David was caught and hanged, will not have Haman hanging from my upper branches. The pomegranate said: I, to whom the righteous are likened, will not have Haman hanging from me.

"Listen to me," said the cedar, "hang Haman on me, on the tree that he in fact prepared for himself."[4]

---

1. B. Meg 16a; Esther R. 10:4; Midrash Panim Aherim, ed. Buber, 6; Eccles R. 5:2, §1; PR 18:6 (YJS 1:389–91).
2. See Esther 4:1 and 8:15. Gen R. 39:11.
3. Perhaps an allusion to "Thy stature is like a palm tree" (Song 7:8).
4. Targum Sheni on Esther 9:7.

CHAPTER NINE

THE SECOND TEMPLE—ITS STRUCTURE AND ITS SERVICE

The Temple in Its Glory

1. Our masters taught: He who never saw Jerusalem in its glory has never seen an exquisite city. He who never saw the Temple in its final construction has never seen a magnificent building.[1]

2. The Land of Israel is the navel of the world, being situated at its center; Jerusalem is at the center of the Land of Israel; the Temple, at the center of Jerusalem: The Temple Hall, at the center of the Temple; the Ark, at the center of the Temple Hall. And in front of the Temple Hall is the foundation stone upon which the world was founded.[2]

3. The house in which God chose to dwell was built in the territory of Benjamin on a triangle[3] wedging out of his territory into Judah's, as implied in the words "And He dwelleth between [Judah's] shoulders" (Deut. 33:12).[4] Why did Benjamin merit having the Presence dwell in his territory? The answer is provided by the parable of a king who from time to time visited his sons, each of whom would say in turn, "The king is to dwell with me," except the youngest son, who [gloomily] said to himself: Is it conceivable that my father would disregard my older brothers and choose to dwell with me? So, his visage sad and his spirit low, he stood up and was about to leave. The king said [to the other sons], "Did you notice, when my youngest son stood up, that his visage was sad and his spirit low? Henceforth, my food and my drink are to come from you, my elder sons, but my dwelling is to be with him." Likewise, the Holy One said, "The house I chose to dwell in is to be in Benjamin's territory, but the offerings in it are to come from all the tribes."

Another explanation: Why did Benjamin merit having the Presence dwell in his territory? Because all the tribe fathers were in on the sale of Joseph, while Benjamin had nothing to do with it. So the Holy One said: Am I to tell these to build the house I choose to dwell in, so that they may pray to Me in it and I may be filled with compassion for them? No. They were not compassionate to their brother, so I shall not have My compassionate Presence dwell in their territory.

Another explanation: Why did Benjamin merit having the Presence dwell in his territory? The reason will be made clear by the parable of a king who had many sons. After they grew up, each went off and claimed the place that was his. But the father dearly loved the youngest of them all, so he ate and drank with him, leaned on him when he came into the house, and leaned on him when he went out. So it was with the righteous Benjamin, the youngest of the tribe fathers: Jacob ate and drank with him, leaned on him when he went out of the house, and leaned on him when he came in. Hence the Holy One said: The place where that righteous man laid his hands to receive support, there I shall have My Presence dwell. Hence, "He dwelleth between his shoulders."[5]

4. The shape of the Temple, like that of a lion, was narrow at the rear[6] and wide in front.[7]

5. All gates in the Temple had been changed to gold, except the Nicanor gate, because of the miracles wrought for its doors. But some say: Because the bronze of its doors had a golden hue, for, according to R. Eliezer ben Jacob, the bronze was Corinthian,[8] which shines like gold.

What miracles happened to the bronze doors of the Nicanor gate? It is reported: On Nicanor's way back from Alexandria in Egypt, where he went to fetch those doors,[9] a fierce gale arose and was about to sink the ship. [To lighten the load] the mariners picked up one of the doors and cast it into the sea, yet the sea would not cease its raging. As they were about to cast the companion door into the sea, Nicanor jumped up, clung to it, and said, "Cast me in with it." At that, the sea stopped raging. But Nicanor continued to grieve about the other door. When the ship arrived at the harbor of Acco, the other door, bursting through the water, emerged from under the sides of the ship.

Some say: A sea creature had swallowed it and disgorged it onto dry land.[10]

6. At the entrance to the Temple Hall stood a trellised vine laden with gold, for whoever presented a leaf, a berry, or a cluster of golden grapes would bring it and hang it there. [So abundant was the gold on the vine], said R. Eliezer son of R. Zadok, that on one occasion three hundred priests were delegated to clear it.

R. Simeon ben Gamaliel said in the name of R. Simeon, deputy [high priest]: The curtain[11] was a handbreadth thick and was woven on seventy-two strands, each

---

1. B. Suk 51a.
2. Tanhuma B, Kedoshim, §10.
3. Literally, "ox head."
4. Cf. above, chap. 3, §106, and chap. 4, §82.
5. Yalkut, Berakhah, §957.
6. The western side, whose width was seventy cubits.
7. The eastern side, whose width was one hundred cubits. Mid 4:7.
8. "Corinthian bronze was refined, hence the light weight, hence the golden hue, as against the duller tone of the heavier bronze" (Yoma, Soncino, p. 175, n. 2).
9. The doors for the great eastern gate of the Temple Court.
10. B. Yoma 38a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
11. Between the Holy of Holies and the Temple Hall, where the golden altar stood.

strand consisting of twenty-four threads. Its length was forty cubits and its breadth twenty cubits, made up in its entirety of eighty myriads [of threads]. They used to make two curtains every year, and three hundred priests were required to immerse them.[1]

R. Isaac bar Nahmani said in the name of Samuel: With regard to the curtain as well as the vine, the sages used hyperbole.[2]

7. Our masters taught: In the Sanctuary, from the days of Moses, there was a flute, which was smooth and thin, and made of reed. The king commanded that it be overlaid with gold, whereupon its sound was not as pleasant as it had been. When the overlay was removed, its sound was again pleasant as before.

In the Sanctuary, from the days of Moses, there was a cymbal made of bronze, and its sound was pleasant. Then it was damaged. The sages sent for craftsmen from Alexandria in Egypt who patched it, whereupon its sound was not as pleasant as it had been. When the patch was removed, its sound was again pleasant as before.

In the Sanctuary, from the days of Moses, there was a mortar made of bronze; the incense was pounded in it. Then the mortar was damaged. The sages sent for craftsmen from Alexandria in Egypt who patched it, but it no longer was possible to pound in it as well as before. When the patch was removed, the mortar became again what it had been before.

The latter two vessels were left over from the First Temple, but after they were damaged there was no way of repairing them.[3]

8. Samuel said: In the Sanctuary there was a [musical instrument called a] magrefah; it had ten holes, each of which produced ten different kinds of pitches—thus it produced altogether one hundred different kinds of pitches.

[In a differing tradition] the sages taught: The instrument was one cubit long and one cubit high; from it projected a handle that had ten holes, each producing one hundred different kinds of pitches. Thus it produced altogether one thousand different kinds of pitches.

R. Nahman bar Isaac said: With regard to this instrument also, the sages used hyperbole.[4]

9. There were two chambers in the Temple complex, one the Chamber of Secrets, and the other the Chamber of Utensils. The devout used to deposit their gifts secretly in the Chamber of Secrets, and the poor whose families had seen better days were able to receive support from there in secret. The Chamber of Utensils: whoever made a gift of any utensil used to toss it into that chamber, which the treasurers opened every thirty days. Any article that they found useful for the maintenance of the Temple, they left there; but the others were sold, and the money received went to the fund for the maintenance of the Temple.[5]

1. Like all holy things, it was immersed in water before being used.
2. B. Hul 90b; B. Tam 29b.
3. B. Ar 10b; Tos Ar 2:3–5.
4. B. Ar 10b–11a.
5. Shek 5:6.

10. R. Phinehas said in the name of R. Huna of Sephoris: The spring that issued from the Holy of Holies resembled at its source the [tiny] antennae of locusts; when it reached the entrance to the Temple Hall,[6] it became as wide as a thread of warp; when it reached the entrance to the Porch,[7] it grew as wide as a thread of weft; when it reached the entrance to the Temple Court, it became as wide as the mouth of a small narrow-necked jug. From there onward, it grew wider and wider as it rose, until it reached the entrance to the house of David.[8] After it reached the entrance to the house of David, it became a swiftly flowing brook in which those [who were ritually unclean] immersed themselves [in order to become clean].[9]

The Hiding of the Ark

11. There were five matters in which the First Temple differed from the Second: (1) the Ark, its cover, and the cherubim; (2) the fire;[10] (3) the Presence; (4) the Holy Spirit; and (5) the Urim and Tummim.

When the Ark was hidden, there were hidden with it the jar containing the manna,[11] the flask of anointing oil,[12] the staff of Aaron with its petals and almond blossoms, and the chest that the Philistines had sent as a gift to the God of Israel. Who hid the Ark? Josiah, king of Judah, hid it. What was his reason for hiding it? When he came upon the verse "The Lord will bring thee, and thy king whom thou shalt set over thee, unto a nation that thou hast not known" (Deut. 28:36), he rose up and hid it. Concerning his decision to hide it, Scripture says, "And he said unto the Levites . . . : 'Put the holy Ark in the house which Solomon . . . did build; it need be no longer carried upon your shoulders' " (2 Chron. 35:3). Josiah went on to say to the Levites: If the Ark should be exiled with you to Babylon, then [when you return] you will not be permitted to restore it to its place in the Holy of Holies.[13] And so, henceforth [without the Ark], "serve the Lord your God, and His people Israel" (ibid.).[14]

12. Members of the household of Rabban Gamaliel and of the household of R. Hananiah, deputy high priest, used to prostrate themselves in front of the Temple's woodshed, for among them was a tradition going back to their forebears that the Ark lay hidden there.[15]

13. Once, while working [in the woodshed], a priest became aware that a block of pavement sounded different from the others. He went to tell his friends, but before he

6. The hall where the golden altar stood.
7. The vestibule leading into the interior of the Temple Hall.
8. Mount Zion, outside Jerusalem.
9. B. Yoma 77b–78a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
10. In the First Temple it came from heaven.
11. See Exod. 16:33.
12. See Exod. 30:25.
13. The Ark's removal from the Land of Israel would have profaned it.
14. B. Yoma 21b and 52b; P. Shek 6:1, 49.
15. Shek 6:2.

had time to reveal the exact place, his soul left him. Thus they knew for certain that the Ark was hidden in the Temple's woodshed. What had the priest been doing? R. Helbo said: While chopping wood, he happened to strike the pavement with his ax.[1]

The school of R. Ishmael taught: Two priests, both physically blemished, were separating worm-eaten sticks from the other sticks of wood[2] when the ax of one of them slipped out of his hand and fell up on that [secret] place. At that, flame burst forth and consumed him.[3]

The Crown of Priesthood

14. In the Chamber of Hewn Stone, the Great Sanhedrin of Israel used to sit and [among other matters] investigate the [lineage of] priests. A priest in whom a disqualification [in lineage][4] was found would put on black garments, veil himself in black, and go away. He in whom no such disqualification was found would put on white garments, veil himself in white, go into the Temple area, and minister alongside his brother priests. They used to declare a day on which no disqualification was found in [the lineage of] any of the seed of Aaron the high priest a festal day and say: Blessed be He who is everywhere, blessed be He, that no disqualification has been found in the seed of Aaron. Blessed be He who has chosen Aaron and his sons to stand and serve before the Lord in the house most holy.[5]

15. "And the priest that is greatest among his brethren" (Lev. 21:10). Why was he called "greatest"? Because he was greatest in five matters—in comeliness, in strength, in wealth, in wisdom, and in personality.

It happened that Phinehas the Stonecutter was appointed high priest. When his brother priests went out and saw him still cutting stones, they did not allow him to go on and filled the quarry before him with gold denars.

How do we know that, if he has no means, his brother priests must make his means great? Because Scripture says, "The priest who has been made great by his brothers" (Lev. 21:10), which implies: Make his means great from the possession of his brother priests.[6]

Simeon the Righteous

16. Our masters taught: During the forty years that Simeon the Righteous ministered as high priest, the lot designating the goat for the Lord[7] would always come up in his right hand; after Simeon, it would sometimes come up in the right hand, sometimes in the left. [During those forty years] the crimson-colored strand[8] would turn white. After Simeon, it would at times turn white, at others not. Also during those forty years, the westernmost light[9] did not cease burning; after Simeon, it would at times burn and at other times go out. Also, the wood fire on the altar was burning so intensely [throughout the day][10] that the priests did not have to bring any wood other than the two logs[11] in order to fulfill the command of providing wood for the pile on the altar; after Simeon, however, the fire would at times remain intense, at other times not, so that throughout the day the priests had no choice but bring more wood for the pile [on the altar]. Also, [during those forty years], blessing was bestowed on the omer,[12] the two loaves of bread,[13] and the shewbread. Of the priests who ate a piece of the shewbread the size of an olive—some felt sated after eating it, some felt so sated that they even left a bit of it. After Simeon, however, a curse struck the omer, the two loaves of bread, and the shewbread, so that every priest received a portion as small as a cowpea. Those priests who were unassuming withdrew their hands from it, while the voracious ones took it [greedily] and devoured it. It happened that one such priest grabbed not only his portion but that of his fellow as well, and until his dying day he was called Ben Hamtzan, "the Grabber."[14]

17. It is taught: The twenty-fifth day of Tevet is the day of Mount Gerizim [when public mourning is permitted]. On that day the Cutheans sought permission from Alexander of Macedon to destroy the house of our God, and he granted it to them. So people came and informed Simeon the Righteous. What did he do? He put on priestly undergarments,[15] as well as his priestly outergarments;[16] then, with the nobility of Jerusalem carrying flaming torches in their hands alongside him, he and they set out to walk all night. It so happened that as the Jews were marching on one side of the road, Alexander's men marched on the other [each not seeing the other in the darkness], and did not come into contact until the break of dawn. At dawn, Alexander asked the Cutheans with him, "Who are these?" The Cutheans replied, "They are the Jews who rebelled against you."

---

1. And became aware of a hollow area underneath.
2. Being physically blemished, these priests were excluded from participation in the cult and were assigned to outside chores such as this.
3. Shek 6:2; B. Yoma 54a.
4. E.g., that his mother was a divorced woman.
5. Mid 5:4.
6. P. Yoma 1:2, 39a; Tanhuma B, Emor, §6.
7. The goat that was offered as a sin offering on the Day of Atonement; the other goat was designated by lot for Azazel (Lev. 16:6–10).
8. Tied between the horns of the he-goat sent off to the wilderness. Or possibly the one tied at the entrance to the Porch. The strand's turning white was taken to signify God's forgiveness. See Isa. 1:18.
9. The westernmost light in the lampstand, into which as much oil was put as into the others. Even though it was kindled first, the others were first to go out. The continuing light that it gave was a sign that the Presence rested in the midst of Israel.
10. The fire was kindled in the morning.
11. Two logs had to be presented daily in fulfillment of the command to bring wood to the altar. B. Yoma 26b.
12. Literally, "sheaf." The sheaf of barley offered on the sixteenth of Nisan; before that offering, the new cereals of that year were forbidden for use (Lev. 23:10).
13. Lev. 23:17ff.
14. B. Yoma 39a–b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
15. Breeches and sash.
16. Breastpiece, ephod, robe, fringed tunic, headdress, and gold frontlet. See Exod. 28:4 and 28:36.

By the time Alexander reached Antipatris,[1] the sun had risen and the two columns were face to face. When Alexander saw Simeon the Righteous, he descended from his chariot and bowed down before him. He was asked: Should a great king like you prostrate himself before this Jew? He answered: In my military campaigns, a vision of this man's likeness has always led me to victory.

Then Alexander turned to the Jews: "What brought you here?" They replied, "Is it possible that heathens should have wrongly induced you to destroy the house in which prayers are offered constantly that neither you nor your kingdom be destroyed? He asked the Jews, "Which heathens?" The Jews replied, "These [treacherous] Cutheans—the very ones standing in your presence." Alexander: "They are herewith put in your hands."

At once they pierced the heels of the Cutheans, tied them [through the holes] to the tails of their horses, and dragged them over thorns and thistles, until they reached Mount Gerizim, which they then plowed and planted with wild vetches, even as the Cutheans had intended to do to the house of our God.

That day was declared a festal day.[2]

The Temple of Onias

18. It is taught: The year in which Simeon the Righteous was to die, he foretold that he would die during that year. When asked, "How do you know?" he replied, "On every Day of Atonement an old man, dressed in white and veiled in white, would join me, enter [the Holy of Holies] with me, and leave with me; but this year the old man, dressed in black and veiled in black, joined me, entered [the Holy of Holies] with me, but did not leave with me." After the Festival [of Sukkot], Simeon was ill for seven days, and died. [That year] his brother priests refrained from mentioning the Explicit Name in the [priestly] blessing.[3] In the hour of his departure, he said to the priests, "My son Onias is to assume the high priesthood after me."

Being two and a half years older then he, Onias's brother Shimei was jealous of him and [pretending to be helpful] said to him, "Come, let me teach you the order of the Temple service." So he attired him in a woman's lounging gown,[4] tied a woman's sash around his waist, and had him stand near the altar. Then Shimei called out to his brother priests, "See what this one promised his ladylove and has now fulfilled. He vowed, 'The day I begin to serve in the high priesthood, I will put on your gown and tie your sash around my waist.' " His brother priests were about to kill Onias, but he ran away. Though they ran in pursuit of him, he outran them and managed to reach Alexandria in Egypt, where he built an altar and brought offerings to an idol upon it. When the sages heard of the incident, they said, "If this one [Onias], who had not yet been officially installed as high priest, has turned out to be such a turncoat [by apostatizing into idol-worship], what might have happened had he actually been installed as high priest?"[5] Such is the account of the events according to R. Meir. But R. Judah said to him: This is not what happened. Onias in fact refused to accept the office because Shimei was two and a half years older than he. Even so, Onias was jealous of his brother Shimei, to whom he said, "Come, let me teach you the order of the Temple service." So Onias attired Shimei in a woman's lounging gown, tied a woman's sash around his waist, placed him near the altar, and then called out to his brother priests, "See what this one promised his ladylove and has now fulfilled. He vowed, 'The day I begin to serve in the high priesthood, I will put on your gown and tie your sash around my waist.' " The priests were about to kill Shimei, but he explained to them all that had occurred. Then the priests sought to kill Onias, who ran away from them, and they ran in pursuit of him. Though he ran into the king's palace,[6] they continued to pursue him. Everyone who saw him said, "This is he, this is he!" Finally he managed to reach Alexandria in Egypt, built an altar there, and brought offerings upon it in honor of God, in fulfillment of the verse "In that day shall there be an altar to the Lord in the midst of the land of Egypt" (Isa. 19:19). When the sages heard of the incident, they said: If this is what happened [through the jealousy] of one [such as Onias] who had at first shunned the honor, what would happen [through the jealousy] of one who seeks the honor?[7]

Alexandria's Synagogue with the Double Colonnade

19. We are taught that R. Judah said: He who has never seen Alexandria in Egypt's synagogue with the double colonnade has never seen the glory of Israel. It is said that it was like a huge basilica, one colonnade within another, and it sometimes held twice the number of people that had gone out of Egypt. In it, corresponding to the seventy-one elders of the Sanhedrin, there were seventy-one golden cathedras, each of them weighing not less than twenty-one[8] talents of gold. In the middle of the synagogue was a wooden bimah, upon which the sexton of the synagogue stood with scarves in his hand. When the time came to answer, "Amen,"[9] he waved the scarves and the congregation responded with "Amen." Moreover, they

---

1. On the way from Jerusalem to Caesarea. It was built by King Herod and called Antipatris after his father, Antipater.
2. On it, public mourning was prohibited. B. Yoma 69a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
3. The Explicit Name could be pronounced only if the Presence rested in the Sanctuary. The priests took Simeon's death to indicate the departure of the Presence, and so that year they did not dare utter the Name. Tosafot on Sot 38a.
4. An egregious insult to the cult.
5. "Moral: let no high priest, even one as righteous as Simeon, appoint his successor. He may suggest one, but the candidate must be scrutinized and examined by the sages to ascertain his moral fitness for the office" (Leon Nemoy).
6. " 'The king's mount,' the region stretching from the Valley of Jezreel to the south of Judah, including the mountains of Samaria" (Git, Soncino, p. 254, n. 4).
7. B. Men 109b; B. Yoma 39b.
8. "Myriads of" omitted, as in mss.
9. As when the reader concluded a benediction.

were not seated haphazardly. Goldsmiths sat separately, silversmiths sat separately, blacksmiths separately, master weavers separately, and apprentice weavers separately, so that when a stranger or a poor man entered the synagogue, he was able to identify the members of his craft. He would then join them, and through them earn a livelihood for himself and the members of his family.[1]

Priestly Families

20. Our masters taught: The Garmu family were expert in preparing the shewbread but would not teach others [how to do it]. The sages sent for specialists from Alexandria in Egypt, who knew how to bake as well as they. However, they did not know how to take [the loaves] down [from the oven] as well as the Garmus, who heated the oven from the outside and baked the bread outside,[2] while the Alexandrians heated the oven from the inside and baked the bread inside—with the result that the bread of the Alexandrians would become moldy, while the bread of the Garmus did not turn moldy. When the sages heard that, they said: Everything the Holy One created, He created for His own glory [so that we need not insist upon having our way]. Let the Garmu family return to their task. The sages sent for them, but they would not come. Then they doubled their pay, and they came. Until that day they used to get twelve maneh;[3] after that day, twenty-four maneh. R. Judah said: Until that day, twenty-four maneh; after that day, forty-eight maneh.

The sages asked them: What reason do you have for not teaching [your art] to others? They replied: Our father's family knew that the Temple would be destroyed, and conceivably an unworthy man might learn the art and proceed to use it in serving an idol.

However, the memory of the Garmu family [who may appear to have been greedy] was held in high esteem for the following reason: fine bread was never found in their children's homes, lest people say: These feed from the preparation of the shewbread. Thus they endeavored to fulfill the command "Ye shall be clear before the Lord, and before Israel" (Num. 32:22).[4]

21. Our masters taught: The Avtinas family were skilled in preparing the incense but would not teach [their art]. The sages sent for experts from Alexandria in Egypt, who knew how to compound incense as well as they but did not know how to make the smoke rise as well as they. The smoke of the former ascended [as straight] as a stick, while the smoke of the latter was dispersed in every direction.

When the sages heard that, they said: The Holy One created everything for His own glory [so that we need not insist upon having our way]. Let the Avtinas family return to their task. The sages sent for them, but they would not come. Then they doubled their pay, and they came. Until that day they used to get twelve maneh; after that day, twenty-four maneh. R. Judah said: Until that day, twenty-four maneh; after that day, forty-eight.

The sages asked them: What reason do you have for not teaching [your art] to others? They replied: Our father's family knew that the Temple would be destroyed, and conceivably an unworthy man might learn the art and proceed to use it in serving an idol.

Nevertheless, the memory of the Avtinas family was held in high esteem for the following reason: never did a bride of their family go forth perfumed, and when they married a woman from elsewhere, they stipulated that she was not to go forth perfumed, lest people say: They perfume themselves from the preparation of the Temple incense. Thus they endeavored to fulfill the command "Ye shall be clear before the Lord, and before Israel" (Num. 32:22).

R. Ishmael said: Once I was walking on the way, and I met one of their descendants, to whom I said: [By refusing to teach their art], your forebears sought to enhance their own glory and to reduce the glory of their Creator. Nevertheless, the glory of Him who is everywhere remains, but their glory He reduced.[5]

R. Akiva said: R. Ishmael ben Logah told me the following: One day I and one of their descendants went to the field to gather herbs, and I saw him cry, then laugh. I asked, "Why did you cry?" He answered, "Because I recalled the glory of my ancestors." "And why did you laugh?" "Because the Holy One will restore it to us." "And what caused you to recall the glory that had been yours?" "A 'smoke raiser'[6] in front of me." "Show it to me." "We are under oath not to show it to any person."

R. Yohanan ben Nuri said: Once I met an old man who had a scroll [containing recipes] for the making of fragrant spices. I asked him, "From whom are you descended?" He replied, "I come from the family of Avtinas." I: "What have you in your hand?" He: "A scroll for the making of fragrant spices." I: "Show it to me." He: "As long as my father's house had the authority, they would not turn it over to anyone. Now you may have it. Take care [that no one else sees it]." [R. Yohanan ben Nuri concluded]: When I came and told my experience to R. Akiva, he said to me: From now on, I say, it is forbidden to speak disparagingly of these people.[7]

22. Our masters taught: Ben Kamtzar would not teach [his art] of writing. It is said of him that he would hold four pens between his five fingers, and if there was a word of four letters, he could write it in one movement.[8] He was asked, "What reason have you for refusing to teach [your art]?" The others mentioned earlier provided an explanation for their refusal, but Ben Kamtzar provided none. To the former apply the words "The memory of the righteous shall be for a blessing" (Prov. 10:7). While to

---

1. B. Suk 51b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. By slapping the flat cakes of dough to the heated outside of the oven wall.
3. One maneh equaled one hundred common shekels.
4. B. Yoma 38a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
5. Though the Temple was destroyed, God continues to be honored—but the art of the Avtinas family is no longer in demand.
6. The name of a plant used in the making of incense. Both its identity and the way it was used were known only to the Avtinas family.
7. B. Yoma 38a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
8. Perhaps a form of rapid lettering that the sages wished to become more widely known.

Ben Kamtzar and his like apply the words "But the name of the wicked shall rot" (ibid.)[1]

23. Hygros ben Levi excelled in the art of singing but would not teach others. It is told of him that when he was about to make a high trill, he would put his thumb into his mouth, place his index finger between the two parts of his mustache, and produce all kinds of sounds at such high intensity that, to a man, his brother priests would be thrown backward.[2]

24. Our masters taught: Four times did the Temple Court cry out. The first time: "Depart hence, ye sons of Eli, for you defiled the Holy Place of the Lord!" The Temple Court cried out another time: "Depart hence, Issachar of Kefar Barkai, who takes such care of himself that he profanes the sacred offerings to Heaven!"—he used to wrap his hands with silk while performing the service in the Temple.[3] The Temple Court cried out a third time: "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and let Ishmael ben Phiabi, a disciple of Phinehas,[4] enter and serve in the high priesthood." And still another time the Court cried out: "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and let Yohanan ben Narbai, a disciple of Pinkai,[5] enter and fill his stomach with the divine offerings." It is said of Yohanan ben Narbai that at his meal he would eat three hundred calves, drink three hundred bottles of wine, and consume forty seah of young pigeons for dessert.[6]

It is said: As long as Yohanan ben Narbai lived, notar[7] was never found in the Temple.

After R. Ishmael ben Phiabi died, the splendor of the high priesthood ceased.

What punishment befell Issachar of Kefar Barkai? It is related: As the king and queen[8] were dining, the king said; "Goat's flesh is best." The queen: "Lamb is best." Both said, "Who knows for certain? The high priest, who brings offerings every day." When Issachar came, he dismissed the question with a [contemptuous] flick of his right hand: "If the goat were best, it would be brought as the daily offering."[9] The king said, "Since he seems to have no respect for royalty, let his right hand be cut off." But Issachar bribed the executioners, and his left hand was cut off instead. When the king heard of it, he had them cut off his right hand also as well.

R. Joseph commented: Blessed be He who is everywhere, for having ordained that Issachar of Kefar Barkai receive his punishment in this world.[10]

25. We are taught that Abba Saul said: There were trunks of sycamore trees in Jericho, which strong-arm men used to grab for themselves, until the owners finally consecrated them to Heaven. Of such violent men and the likes of them, Abba Saul ben Botnit, quoting Abba Joseph ben Hanin, used to say:

Woe is me because of the family of Boethus! Woe is me because of their forked staves![11]

Woe is me because of the family of Hanin! Woe is me because of their whisperings![12]

Woe is me because of the family of Katros![13] Woe is me because of their pens!

Woe is me because of the family of Ishmael ben Phiabi! Woe is me because of their fists! They were high priests, their sons Temple treasurers, their sons-in-law trustees—and their servants beat people with sticks.[14]

26. It is told of R. Ishmael ben Phiabi that his mother made him a tunic worth one hundred maneh, which he put on to officiate at a "private" service and then handed over to the community.[15]

It is told of R. Eleazar ben Harsom[16] that his mother made him a tunic worth twenty thousand maneh, but his brother priests did not allow him to put it on, because it was so transparent that he appeared to be naked.[17]

27. A story concerning the sons of Martha daughter of Boethus. With but two fingers, each of the sons could grasp two legs of an ox bought for a thousand denars and walk heel touching toe as prescribed, until he placed the two legs of the ox on the altar.[18]

28. R. Yohanan said: What is implied by the verse "The fear of the Lord prolongeth days, but the years of the wicked shall be shortened" (Prov. 10:27)? "The fear of the Lord prolongeth days" applies to the First Temple, which remained standing for four hundred and ten years, and in which there served only eighteen high priests. "But

---

1. B. Yoma 38b.
2. Ibid.; Song R. 3:6, §6.
3. More than a desire to protect his hands may have been involved here. It is possible that Issachar imitated the pagan practice of veiling one's hands while performing rites in a temple. On the velum humerale, see Pearl F. Braude, " 'Cokkel in oure Clene Corn': Some Implications of Cain's Sacrifice," Gesta 7 (1968): 27, n. 29. Reprinted in Joseph Gutmann, ed., No Graven Images: Studies in Art and the Hebrew Bible (New York, 1971), p. 596, n. 29.
4. It is suggested that Agrippa appointed him. Though he sprang from a lower-class family of priests, his zeal and devotion won him praise. So Adin Steinsaltz in his translation of Pes. (Jerusalem, 1972–73), p. 239.
5. Pinkai may be a play on pinka, a meat dish, and thus suggest that he liked to eat well.
6. A hyperbolical way of paying tribute to his hospitality to poor people and to wayfarers.
7. Portions of sacrifices left over after the prescribed time during which they had to be eaten.
8. Hasmonean monarchs.
9. Which is contrary to law.
10. B. Pes 57b; B. Sot 49a.
11. With which they beat people.
12. During secret gatherings to devise oppressive measures.
13. Said to be identical with Cantheras (Josephus Antiquities 19.6.1 [Loeb ed., p. 355]), given to writing evil decrees.
14. The high priesthood meant considerable political power, which a high priest retained even after he was deposed. Even after being deposed, he may have retained his title. Hence, there were often several priests who held the title of high priest simultaneously. B. Pes 57a.
15. The removal of the spoon and coal pan may be done even when the community is absent. Hence, such activity is called a private service.
16. High priest in the days of Agrippa II.
17. B. Yoma 35b.
18. Tos Yoma 1:14.

the years of the wicked shall be shortened" applies to the Second Temple, which remained standing for four hundred and twenty years, and in which there served more than three hundred high priests. Deduct from those years the forty years Simeon the Righteous served as high priest, and the eighty years the high priest Yohanan [Hyrcanus] served, and the ten Ishmael ben Piabi served; some say also the eleven that R. Eleazar ben Harsom[1] served. Deducting the sum of the years during which the aforementioned served, you will find that not one of the others completed a year in office.

R. Yohanan ben Torta said: And why did the others not complete even one year in office? Because they bought the high priesthood for money. Thus R. Assi reported that Martha daughter of Boethus brought two kav of denars to King Yannai to get him to nominate Joshua ben Gamla as high priest.[2]

Alexander of Macedon

29. Our masters taught: When the Africans[3] came before Alexander of Macedon to sue the Jews, they said: The land claimed by Israel belongs to us, since it is described as "the land of Canaan with its various boundaries" (Num. 34:2), and our forebear was Canaan. At that, Gebiha ben Pesisa [a doorkeeper in the Temple] said to the sages: Give me permission, and I will go and contend with them before Alexander of Macedon. If they defeat me, say to them, "You defeated a mere commoner among us." If I defeat them, say, "The Torah of Moses defeated you."

The sages gave him permission, and he went and argued against the Africans, saying, "Whence do you bring proof?" They replied, "From the Torah." He said, "I, too, will bring proof only from the Torah, where it says, 'Cursed be Canaan, the lowest of slaves shall he be to his brothers' (Gen. 9:25). Now, if a slave acquires property, since he is a slave, to whom does the property belong?[4] Besides, you have not served us for ever so many years."[5] Alexander said to the Africans, "Answer him." "Give us three days' time," they requested. So he gave them the respite, during which they sought, but found no answer. At that, they fled, leaving behind their fields, which had been sown, and their vineyards, which had been planted.

That year was a sabbatical year.[6]

30. On another occasion, the Egyptians came to sue Israel before Alexander of Macedon. They pleaded, "Behold, the Torah says, 'The Lord gave the people favor in the sight of the Egyptians, and they lent them gold and precious stones' (Exod. 12:36). Return to us immediately the gold and silver that you took from us." Gebiha ben Pesisa said to the sages: Give me permission to go and contend with them before Alexander. If they defeat me, say to them, "You defeated a mere commoner among us." If I defeat them, say, "The Torah of Moses our teacher defeated you." The sages gave him permission, and he went and argued against the Egyptians, saying, "Whence do you bring proof?" They replied, "From the Torah." "Then I, too," he said, "will bring you proof only from the Torah, where it is said, 'The sojourning of the children of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years' (Exod. 12:40). Pay us wages for the toil of sixty myriads whom you enslaved in Egypt for four hundred and thirty years." Alexander of Macedon said to the Egyptians, "Answer him." "Give us three days' time," they requested. So he gave them the respite, during which they sought, but found no answer. At that, they left their fields, which had been sown, their vineyards, which had been planted, and fled.

That year was a sabbatical year.[7]

31. On another occasion, the Ishmaelites and the Ketureans brought suit against the Jews before Alexander of Macedon. They pleaded: The land of Canaan is ours as well as yours, for it is written, "Now these are the generations of Ishmael, Abraham's son" (Gen. 25:12); and it is written, "And these are the generations of Isaac, Abraham's son" (Gen. 25:19); and it is further written, "But he shall acknowledge the firstborn, the son of the hated, by giving him a double portion of all that he hath" (Deut. 21:17)—accordingly, Ishmael should by right take a double portion.

Gebiha ben Pesisa said to the sages: Give me permission, and I will go and argue against them before Alexander. Should they defeat me, say, "You defeated a mere commoner among us." Should I defeat them, say, "The Torah of Moses our teacher defeated you." The sages gave him permission, and he went and argued against them, saying, "Whence do you bring proof?" They replied, "From the Torah." He said, "I, too, will bring proof only from the Torah, where it is written, 'And Abraham gave all that he had unto Isaac. But unto the sons of the concubines, that Abraham had, Abraham gave gifts' [Gen. 25:5–6]. If a father, while still living, bequeaths his property to one of his sons and then sends the son who has been given only gifts away from the son who has received the bequest, can either have a claim upon the other?" Shamefaced, they departed.[8]

32. Alexander of Macedon wanted to go up to Jerusalem. But the Cutheans went and told him: Take heed—they will not let you enter their Holy of Holies. When Gebiah ben Kosem learned of this, he went and had a pair of felt shoes specially made, which he set with two precious

---

1. He is described elsewhere as a rich man who gave up his money to devote himself to Torah. See B. Yoma 35b.
2. B. Yoma 9a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
3. In Jewish tradition, they are taken to be Girgashites, one of the seven peoples of Canaan; they left Canaan and settled in Carthage, North Africa.
4. "Obviously to the owners. Therefore, even if the land was given to the Canaanites, it belongs to their masters, the Jews, descendants of Shem" (Sanh, Soncino, p.609, n. 3).
5. "So you owe us your toil too for all that time" (ibid.).
6. So that Jews, who had no crops of their own, appropriated the crops of the Africans. B. Sanh 91a; Megillat Ta 3.
7. B. Sanh 91a.
8. Ibid.; Gen. R. 61:7.

stones worth twenty thousand silver [zuz]. When Alexander reached the Temple Mount, Gebiah said to him, "My lord king, so that you should not slip, remove your shoes and put on these felt shoes—the pavement is slippery."[1] When they came to the area of the Holy of Holies, he said, "Thus far we may enter. From here on, even we may not enter."[2] Alexander replied, "When we come out, I will straighten your hump."[3] Gebiah: "If you can do that, you will be famed as a great surgeon and receive large fees."[4]

33. Alexander of Macedon put ten questions to the elders of the Negev, the south country. He asked: Which is farther—from heaven to earth or from east to west? They replied: From east to west. The proof is that when the sun is in the east, [it is so far away that] all can look at it, but when the sun is in the middle of the sky, [it is so close that] no one can look at it.

He asked: Was heaven created first, or the earth? They replied: Heaven was created first, as Scripture says, "In the beginning God created the heaven and then the earth" (Gen. 1:1).

He asked: Was light created first, or darkness? They replied: This question cannot be solved. (Why did they not reply that darkness was created first, since it is written, "Now the earth was unformed and void, and darkness" [Gen. 1:2], and after that, "God said, 'Let there be light,' and there was light" [Gen. 1:3]? They thought to themselves: Perhaps he will go on to ask what is above and what is below, what is before and what is after.)[5]

He asked: Who is called wise? They replied: He who discerns what is about to come to pass.

He asked: Who is called a mighty man? They replied: He who subdues his impulse to evil.

He asked: Who is called a rich man? They replied: He who rejoices in his lot.

He asked: What shall a man do to live? They replied: Let him mortify himself.

What should a man do to kill himself? They replied: Let him live it up.

He asked: What should a man do to make himself popular? They replied: Let him hate sovereignty and authority. He commented: I have a better answer than yours. Let him love sovereignty and authority, and confer favors on mankind.

He asked: Is it better to dwell on the sea or on dry land? They replied: It is better to dwell on dry land, because those who set out to sea are never free from anxiety till they reach dry land again.

He asked: Which among you is the wisest? They replied: All of us are equal, since we all concur in giving the same answers to your questions.

He asked: Why do you resist me [and refuse to submit to my authority]? They replied: [Authority is yours only because] Satan prevails.

He said to them: [For saying such a thing] I may have you put to death by royal command. They replied: Power is in the hands of the king, but it is not seemly for a king to be false [to his assurances of immunity]. At that, he clothed them in garments of purple and placed gold chains upon their necks.[6]

34. One time Alexander told his sages: I want to go to the province of Africa. They replied: You cannot go there, because the Mountains of Darkness are in the way. He said to them: The idea of not going is unacceptable. I only ask you how I am to go about it. They replied: Take Libyan asses, which can travel in the dark, and bring coils of rope and lay them down at the side [of the road], so that when you return you may hold on to them and thus get back to the place you came from. After providing himself with what his sages suggested, he set out. Presently he came to Carthage, a realm inhabited only by women. He was about to make war against them. But they said to him: If you slay us, people will say that he killed women; and if we slay you, they will speak of you as the king whom women killed. So he said: Bring me bread. They brought him bread of gold and apples and pomegranates of gold placed upon a golden table. He asked them: Do people in your realm eat bread of gold? They replied: If you wanted bread, did you have no bread in your own country, that you had to bestir yourself and come here?

When he left, he wrote on the gate of the city: "I, Alexander of Macedon, was a fool until I came to Carthage and learned good counsel from women."[7]

35. From there Alexander of Macedon paid a visit to a king at the end of the world,[8] who showed him much silver and gold. Alexander said, "I have not come to see your silver and gold—it is your legal customs I have come to observe."

As Alexander and the king were engaged in discourse, two men came before the king for judgment. One said: My lord king, I bought a ruin from this man, and while digging in it, I found a treasure; so I said to him, "Take your treasure. I bought a ruin—I did not buy a treasure." The other replied: Just as you are afraid of the punishment for robbery, so am I afraid of it. The fact is, I sold you the ruin and everything in it—from the depths of the earth to the heights of heaven.

The king addressed one of them and asked him, "Have you a son?" He replied, "Yes." The king asked the other, "Have you a daughter?" He replied, "Yes." "Go then," said the king, "wed the one to the other, and let the two make use of the treasure." Alexander showed his amazement. The king asked, "Why are you amazed? Have I not judged well?" Alexander: "Yes, well." The king asked, "If such a case had come up before you in your country, how would you have handled it?" Alexander replied, "I would have chopped off the head of the one and

---

1. The real reason was that one was not permitted to enter the Temple Mount wearing leather shoes.
2. The hint to Alexander was unmistakable.
3. Gebiah means "humpbacked."
4. Gen. R. 61:7; Yalkut, Hayye Sarah, §110.
5. Questions man was not to ask. See above, chap. 2, §1.
6. B. Tam 31b–32a.
7. B. Tam 32b; Lev. R. 27:1; Tanhuma B, Emor, §9.
8. Believed to have been Africa, where, according to authors of antiquity, men led ideal lives. The Aramaic Katzia is taken to mean "End-of-the-World Land." See Saul Lieberman's note in PRKM, p. 274.

the head of the other, and the treasure would have gone to the king's house." The king: "Does the sun shine where you dwell?" Alexander: "Yes." "Does rain come down upon you?" Alexander: "Yes." The king: "There are small cattle in your country, are there not?" Alexander: "Yes." The king: "May the breath of life in such a man as you be blasted out! It is only for the sake of the small cattle that the sun still shines for you, that the rain still comes down upon you."[1]

On his return, Alexander sat by a certain spring eating bread. When he washed some salted fish he had, they gave off a sweet odor. So, saying, "This spring seems to be coming from the Garden of Eden," he scooped up some of the water and washed his face with it. Then he followed the course of the spring until he came to the entrance to the Garden of Eden. He cried out, "Open the gate for me." They replied, "This is the gate of the Lord; only the righteous shall enter into it" (Ps. 118:20). He replied, "I, too, am a lord; I, too, am of some account. Give me a token [to show that I was here]." They gave him an eyeball.

When he returned to this place, he put all the silver and gold he had on a scale over against the eyeball, and the silver and gold did not tip the scale. He asked the sages, "How do you account for this?" They replied, "It is the eyeball of a human being, which is never satisfied." He asked, "How can you prove that this is so?" They replied, "Take a little dust and cover it." He did so, and at once the silver and gold tipped the scale.[2]

The Servitude under Greece and the Jews Who Betrayed the Covenant

36. The words "A leopard watcheth over their cities" (Jer. 5:6) allude to Greece, which fired at Israel a variety of decrees culminating with the demand: "Write on the horns of an ox that you have no share in the God of Israel."[3]

37. In the days of the wicked kingdom of Greece, it was decreed against Israel that he who had a bolt on a door of his house should inscribe on it, "I have neither portion nor heritage in the God of Israel." All Jews promptly went and removed all bolts from their houses.

It was also decreed that he who had an ox should write on its horns, "I have neither portion nor heritage in the God of Israel." All Jews promptly went and sold their oxen.[4]

38. "And when he took in the smell even of those false to Him,[5] he blessed him" (Gen. 27:27)—"those false to Him," such as Joseph Meshita and Yakum of Tzerorot.

Joseph Meshita: When the [Greek] enemies wished to enter the sacred area of the Temple Mount, they said, "Let one of their own go in first," and told Joseph, "Go in, and anything you bring out is yours." So he went in and brought out the golden lampstand. They said to him, "It is not fitting for a commoner to make use of such a thing. Go in a second time, and whatever you bring out will be yours." But he refused. Though they offered him remission of taxes for three years, so said R. Phinehas, he still refused, saying, "Is it not enough that I angered my God once? Am I to anger Him a second time?"

What did the enemies do to him? They tied him to a carpenter's sawhorse and sawed him apart, while he kept crying, "Woe, alas, alack! That I should have angered my Creator!"

Yakum of Tzerorot, the son of the sister of Yose ben Joezer of Tzeredah, became an apostate. Presently, when the decree was issued that Yose ben Joezer be hanged, the beam for the hanging was carried before him. Just then—it was the Sabbath—Yakum rode by on a horse; Yakum said to his uncle, "Look at the horse my master has given me to ride, and look at the horse your Master gives you to ride." R. Yose replied, "If so much is given to those who provoke Him, how much more shall be given to those who obey His will!" Yakum asked, "Is there anyone who obeys His will more than you?" R. Yose replied, "If such [affliction] is meted out to those who obey His will, how much more to those who anger Him!" The answer got to Yakum like the venom of a snake. He went away and imposed upon himself the four judicial death penalties of stoning, burning, beheading, and strangling. How did he do it? He brought a beam, drove it into the ground, and tied a rope to the beam. He placed sticks of wood in a row and built a wall of stones over them. Then he piled up the fuel in front of the beam and put a sword, pointing upward, in the midst of the fuel. After lighting a fire under the sticks of wood beneath the stones, he hanged himself from the beam and thus strangled himself. The rope broke, and he fell into the fire, the sword met him, and the wall of stones tumbled upon him. The soul of Yakum departed, and because of his repentance he was received. Yose ben Joezer, in the drowse of death, spied Yakum's bier flying through space and said, "See ye, this man by a brief hour precedes me into the Garden of Eden.[6]

39. A story: Miriam the daughter of Bilgah became an apostate and married a military officer of the royal house of Greece.[7] When the Greeks entered the Temple Hall, she struck the top of the altar with her sandal, crying out, "Lykos! Lykos![8] How long will you consume Israel's money and not stand by them in a time of distress?" When the

---

1. PRKM 9:1 (PRKS, pp. 171–72).
2. B. Tam 32b.
3. Lev. R. 13:5. The translator was unable to locate the source where Jer. 5:6 is used as the verse in the comment.
4. Midrash le-Hanukkah, BhM 6:1.
5. The commentator reads begaday, ("his clothes") as bogeday, ("those false to Him"). Isaac's blessing of Jacob, despite his awareness of the apostates that would spring out of Israel, is taken to point to the extraordinary qualities that even apostates were to have.
6. Gen. R. 65:22; MTeh 11:7, Yalkut, Toledot, §115.
7. Greece in Syria.
8. Greek for "Wolf! Wolf!" "For this expression applied to the altar with an allusion to its construction and situation rather than to its voraciousness, see Gen. R. 99 and [Nehemiah] Brüll" (Isidore Epstein in Suk, Soncino, p. 276, n. 6).

sages heard of the incident, they made the ring of her family immovable and blocked up its alcove.[1]

The Mother of Children

40. "Nay, but for Thy sake are we killed all the day; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter" (Ps. 44:23). R. Judah said: This verse applies to a certain woman and her seven children, specifically Miriam daughter of Tanhum, who, together with her seven sons, was taken captive. The seven sons were taken and placed within the innermost of the seven enclosures of a temple for idol-worship.

The eldest was brought before the emperor and told, "Bow down to the idol." He replied, "It is written in the Torah, 'I am the Lord thy God' " (Exod. 20:2). At once he was taken out and put to death. Then the second son was brought to the emperor and told, "Bow down to the idol." He replied, "It is written in the Torah, 'Thou shalt have no other gods before Me' " (Exod. 20:3). He was taken out and put to death. Then the third son was brought and told, "Bow down to the idol." He replied, "It is written in the Torah, 'Thou shalt bow down to no other god' " (Exod. 34:14). He was taken out and put to death. Then the fourth was brought and told, "Bow down to the idol." He replied, "It is written in the Torah, 'He that sacrificeth unto the gods shall be utterly destroyed' " (Exod. 22:19). He was taken out and put to death. Then the fifth son was brought and told, "Bow down to the idol." He replied, "It is written in the Torah, 'Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is one' " (Deut. 6:4). He was taken out and put to death. The sixth son was brought and told, "Bow down to the idol." He replied, "It is written in the Torah, 'Know therefore this day, and lay it to thy heart, that the Lord, He is God in heaven above and upon the earth beneath; there is none else' " (Deut. 4:39). He was taken out and put to death. The seventh son, the youngest, was brought, and the emperor said to him, "My son, bow down to the idol." He replied, "God forbid." The emperor asked, "Why not?" The lad replied, "Because it is written in our Torah, 'Thou hast avowed the Lord this day to be thy God . . . and the Lord hath avowed thee this day' [Deut. 26:17–18]. We have long ago sworn to the Holy One that we will not exchange Him for any other God, and He also has sworn to us that He will not exchange us for any other people." The emperor said, "Your brothers have had [in part] their fill of years, fill of life, and savored that which is sweet; you are but a child, you have not had your fill of years, your fill of life, and as yet not savored that which is sweet in the world. [Listen to me, and] bow down before the idol." He replied, "It is written in our Torah, 'The Lord shall reign forever and ever' [Exod. 15:18], and also, 'The Lord is King forever; the nations will perish out of His Land' [Ps. 10:16]. You will cease. Your kingdom will cease. But the Holy One lives and endures forever." The emperor said, "Look at your brothers lying dead before you. I will throw my ring to the ground in front of the idol—[bend over] just enough to pick up the ring, so that it will be said, 'He obeyed the emperor's command.' " The lad replied, "Alas for you, O emperor! Alas for you, O emperor! If your honor is so important, how much more and more the honor of the Holy One." As he was taken out and put to death, his mother pleaded, "Give me my son, that I may kiss him." They gave him to her. Then she said, "By the life of your head, O emperor, put me to death first, and then put him to death." The emperor replied, "I cannot agree to that, because in your Torah it is written, 'Ye shall not kill it and its young both in one day' " (Lev. 22:28). She said, "Wicked one, have you already fulfilled all the other commandments, and this one alone remains for you to fulfill?" At once the emperor ordered that the child be put to death. The mother threw herself upon the child, embraced and kissed him, and said, "My son, go to your father Abraham and tell him, 'This is what my mother said: "Do not be proud. You built one altar, but I built seven altars. Yours was only a test, but mine a reality." ' " Even as she was embracing and kissing her child, they put him to death in her arms.

Then she went up to the roof and jumped to her death. A divine voice proclaimed, "The mother of such children causeth rejoicing" (Ps. 113:9).[2]

The House of the Hasmoneans

41. At whose hand will the kingdom of Greece fall? At the hands of the Hasmoneans, who are of the tribe of Levi.

Levi (Lvy) is rightly matched with Greece (Yvn), the former being the third tribe, the latter the third kingdom.[3] The name of the former consists of three letters, and the name of the latter of three letters. The former blow horns, the latter trumpets.[4] The former wear turbans, the latter wear helmets. The former wear breeches, and the latter femorals.[5] Now the former are few, while the latter are many; yet the many came and fell by the hands of the few.[6]

42. On the twenty-third of Iyyar, the [heathen] occupants of Akra[7] withdrew from Jerusalem. They used to harass the Jewish inhabitants, who because of them could neither come nor go during the day—only in the night [did they dare go out]. When [the might of] the Hasmonean house grew strong, the heathens were banished. The day the Hasmoneans expelled them was declared a festal day.

---

1. Each of the twenty-four courses, or watches, of priests had its own ring and its own alcove in the area where the animals to be offered were slaughtered. The head of the animal to be slaughtered was placed in the ring; and the knives were kept in the alcove. The course (mishmar; "watch") of Bilgah was punished in that henceforth it had to make use of the rings and alcoves that belonged to other priestly courses. This was done, so it is explained, in keeping with the adage "Woe to the wicked and woe to his neighbor." B. Suk 56b, P. Suk 5:8, 55d.

2. B. Git 57b; Lam. R. 1:16, §50; Yalkut, Lam., §1029.

3. Egypt, Babylon, then Greece.

4. So Gen. R. TA, p. 1274.

5. Knee breeches for military use.

6. Gen. R. 99:2.

7. It lay just north of the Temple. In later years it was known as Antonia. See 1 Macc. 13:50–51.

On the twenty-seventh of Iyyar, the garlands were removed from Judea and from Jerusalem. In the days of the kingdom of Greece, garlands of roses used to be brought and hung at the doorways of their temples for idolatry, as well as at doorways of shops and at entrances to courtyards. Songs to idols were sung. The foreheads of oxen and the foreheads of asses bore the inscribed declaration that their owners had no portion in the God of Israel. When the might of the Hasmonean house grew strong, the garlands were abolished, and the day they were abolished was declared a festal day.

On the seventeenth of Sivan, the fortress of Tyre, later called Caesarea daughter of Edom,[1] situated in a sandy area, was conquered. In the days of the Greeks, it had been a painful thorn in Israel's side. When the might of the Hasmonean house grew strong, the Greeks were conquered and expelled, and the Jews were settled in its midst. The day the Hasmoneans conquered it was declared a festal day.

On the fifteenth and the sixteenth of Sivan, the [heathen] inhabitants of Beth Shean and of the Valley [of Jezreel] were expelled. In the days of the Greeks, they too had been a menacing threat whenever Israel sought to resist Arab [invaders]. In the early days these heathens were not adjudged as deserving expulsion. Therefore neither Joshua son of Nun nor David king of Israel expelled them. Then later, when they were adjudged to deserve expulsion, the might of the Hasmonean house grew strong, and they were expelled. Those two days were declared festal.[2]

43. When the Greeks entered the Temple Hall, they defiled all the oils that were in it. Hence, when the royal house of the Hasmoneans grew strong and defeated the Greeks, they searched [in the Temple Hall] and found only one cruse of oil that had the seal of the high priest intact upon it.[3] There was enough oil in it for only one day's lighting. But a miracle was wrought, and with that oil [a lamp] was lit for eight days. The following year, these eight days were fixed in the calendar as festal days to be celebrated with Hallel[4] and thanksgiving.[5]

44. It is taught: Nicanor was a Greek general. Every day he used to raise his hand in threat against Judea's Jerusalem and say, "When will it fall into my hands so that I may trample it to dust?" When the royal house of the Hasmoneans grew strong, and they conquered the Greeks, Nicanor's thumbs and great toes were cut off and hung at the gates of Jerusalem, as if to say: The mouth that spoke in arrogance and the hands that moved threateningly against Judea's Jerusalem—vengeance is wrought upon them![6]

45. Why are lamps kindled during Hanukkah? Because when the sons of the Hasmoneans triumphed and entered the Temple, they found there eight spits of iron. They grooved these out and kindled wicks in the oil they poured into the grooves.[7]

46. On the third of Tishri, the mention [of God's Name] in legal bonds was abolished. For at one time the wicked government of Greece had issued a decree against Israel that at no time should the Name of Heaven be mentioned by them. When the royal house of the Hasmoneans grew strong, and they triumphed, they ordained that the Name of Heaven might be mentioned even in legal bonds. Thus they used to write: "In the year such-and-such of Yohanan [Hyrcanus], high priest, priest to God Most High." When the sages heard of it, they said: The day after someone pays his debt, the [canceled] bond might be thrown on a dung hill. So they stopped the mention of the Name of Heaven on such bonds. That day was declared a festal day.[8]

47. It is taught: There is the [memorable] story of King Yannai,[9] who went to Kohalith in the wilderness and conquered sixty towns there. On his return, he celebrated with great rejoicing and, after a while, summoned all the sages of Israel, to whom he said, "Our forefathers ate mallows while they were engaged with the building of the [Second] Temple; let us likewise eat mallows[10] in memory of our forefathers." So mallows were served on golden tables, and they ate. Now, there was a man there, frivolous, evil-hearted, and worthless, named Eleazar ben Poirah, who said to King Yannai, "O King Yannai, the hearts of the Pharisees are against you."

The king: "Then what shall I do?"

Eleazar: "By wearing the high priest's frontlet between your eyes, force them to stand up in deference."[11]

So he tested them by putting the high priest's frontlet between his eyes. An elder who was present, named Judah ben Gedidiah, said to King Yannai, "O King Yannai! Let the royal crown suffice you, and leave the high priestly crown to the seed of Aaron." [Judah spoke thus], voicing the rumor that Yannai's mother had been taken captive [by Greeks] in Modiim [and raped by them]. The rumor was investigated, but proved untrue. Small wonder that the sages of Israel had to depart in royal disfavor.[12] Upon their departure, Eleazar ben Poirah [dissatisfied with the mildness of the punishment] said to King Yannai, "O King

---

1. As an outpost of the Roman Empire, it was called "Daughter of Edom," i.e., of Rome.
2. The conquests referred to probably took place during the reigns of Simon (142–135 B.C.E.) and Yohanan Hyrcanus (135–104 B.C.E.). Megillat Ta 2–3; B. Meg 6a.
3. Hence not tampered with, undefiled.
4. P. 113–18.
5. The lighting took place in 165 B.C.E. (see 1 Macc. 4:50 and 2 Macc. 10:3). B. Shab 21b.
6. B. Ta 18b.
7. PR 2:1 (YJS 1:5).
8. Megillat Ta 7; B. BH 18b.
9. Alexander Yannai (103–76 B.C.E.).
10. After the king had feasted sumptuously, he invited the sages to "feast" on a poor man's salad.
11. You will then see how they react to your being high priest.
12. "There is probably a lacuna in the narrative, which may be supplied from Josephus Antiquities B.10.6. That rabbis sentenced [Judah ben Gedidiah] to flagellation, in accordance with the law of slander; but Eleazar urged that this was altogether inadequate, in view of Yannai's exalted position, and proved that [the sages] secretly [agreed] with the slanderer (Lazarus Goldschmidt)—in fact, the status of a person is taken into account when bodily injury is sustained (BK 83b), but not for slander" (Kid, Soncino, p. 333, n. 10).

Yannai! That is the law for the most humble man in Israel, but you, King and high priest—shall such a law be applied in your case also?"

The king: "Then what shall I do?"

Eleazar: "If you will take my advice, trample them to death."

The king: "But what will become of the Torah?"

Eleazar: "Look, it is rolled up and lying in a corner. Whoever wishes to study, let him come and study!"

Right away, evil sprouted through Eleazar ben Poirah. All the sages of Israel were massacred, and the world was desolate until Simeon ben Shetah came and restored the Torah to its pristine [glory].[1]

48. It is told: When King Yannai took sick, he had seventy elders of the elders of Israel seized, confined them in prison, and told the warden: If I die, put these elders to death, so that while the Jews rejoice at my death, they will at the same time be forced to grieve for their teachers. It is further told that King Yannai had a good wife whose name was Shalmonin.[2] The instant her husband died, she removed a ring from his hand and sent it to the warden with the message: As a result of a dream, your master has ordered the elders released. He released them, and they went back to their homes. It was only then that she announced: King Yannai is dead.

The day King Yannai died was declared a festal day.[3]

49. On the twenty-eighth of Tevet, a [qualified] Sanhedrin was seated again to dispense justice. For when the Sadducees sat in the Sanhedrin, which they controlled, King Yannai was with them, with his wife Queen Shalmonin seated next to him; and, except for Simeon ben Shetah, no one [who was not of their party] sat with them. Hence, when responsa concerning legal questions were solicited, no one knew how to adduce the required proof from the Torah.

Then Simeon ben Shetah said: Whoever knows how to adduce such proof from the Torah deserves to be seated in the Sanhedrin. Nevertheless, [nothing was done about it until] a certain occasion, when there arose a practical issue concerning which again no one knew how to adduce proof from the Torah—no one, except an old man who babbled in opposition to R. Simeon. Finally, the old man said, "Give me time; by tomorrow, I will have the answer." Simeon gave him the time asked, and the old man meditated in private on the issue. When he realized the next day that he still had no proof from the Torah, he was too embarrassed to come and sit in the Great Sanhedrin. At that, Simeon ben Shetah summoned one of his disciples and seated him in the old man's place, explaining: The Sanhedrin may not have fewer than seventy-one men. He kept doing this day after day, until all the Sadducees were removed, and a Sanhedrin of like mind to his was seated in authority.

When the Sanhedrin of the Sadducees was finally removed and a Sanhedrin of Jews [who were Pharisees] was seated, that day was declared a festal day.[4]

50. Our masters taught: When the princes of the Hasmonean house were contending with one another, Hyrcanus was outside [the wall of Jerusalem], and Aristobulus inside [the wall]. Every day those inside the wall would let down a sum of denars in a basket to those outside the wall, and, in exchange, lambs for the daily sacrifice were sent up. There happened to be [among the besiegers] an old man who had some knowledge of Greek wisdom. So, citing this wisdom to them in the original Greek, he said: As long as they carry on the daily services, they will never surrender to you.

The following day, when the sum of denars was let down in the basket, a swine was sent up. When it reached halfway up the wall, it thrust its nails into the wall, and an area in the Land of Israel four hundred by four hundred parasangs was shaken.

At that time it was declared: Cursed be the man who breeds swine, and cursed be the man who teaches his son Greek wisdom.[5]

Herod's Temple

51. Herod, a slave of the Hasmonean house, set his eyes on a certain maiden of that house. One day he heard a divine voice proclaim, "Every slave who rebels now will succeed." So he rose up and slew everyone in his master's household, leaving alive only that maiden. When she saw that he wanted to marry her, she went up on a roof and cried out, "Anyone who appears and says that he is of the Hasmonean house is really a slave, since I am the only one left of it." Then the maiden threw herself from the roof, fell to the ground, and died.

Herod preserved her body in honey for seven years, so that it could be said, "Herod wed a king's daughter."

"Who are they," he said, "who expound the verse 'From the midst of thy brethren thou shalt set up a king over thee' [Deut. 17:15]? The sages." Then he rose up and slew all the sages, leaving alive only Bava ben Buta, so that he might take counsel of him. He placed a garland of leeches around his head and put out his eyes.

One time Herod came, sat down before Bava, and [disguising his voice] said to him, "Did you see what this wicked slave [Herod] has been doing?"

Bava asked, "What do you expect me to do to him?"

"Curse him."

"It is said, 'Curse not the king, not even in thy thoughts' " (Eccles. 10:20).

"But he is not a [rightful] king."

"Even if he is no more than a rich man, for it is said, 'Curse not the rich in thy bedchamber' " (Eccles. 10:20).

"But in saying, 'A prince of thy people thou shalt not curse' [Exod. 22:27], Scripture has in mind a prince who conducts himself as your people are expected to, and not one who does not so conduct himself."

---

1. B. Kid 66a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. She was the sister of Simeon ben Shetah (fl. 1st century B.C.E.). See below, part 2, chap. 11, §2.
3. Megillat Ta 11.
4. Megillat Ta 10.
5. B. Sot 49b; B.BK 82b.

"Still, I fear that someone will hear and go and tell him."

"But, except for you and me, there is no one here who might go and tell him."

"A bird of the air shall carry the voice" (Eccles. 10:20).

Then Herod said, "I am he. Had I known that the sages were so circumspect, I would not have slain them. Now tell me what amends one such as I can make."

Bava ben Buta replied, "He who has extinguished the light of the world [the sages], who in their persons give reality to the words 'The commandment is a lamp, and the Torah is light' [Prov. 6:23), should go and occupy himself with the light of the world [the building of the Temple], of which it is written, 'All the nations shall have light through it' " (Isa. 2:2). Some say that Bava replied, "He who has blinded the eye of the world should occupy himself with the eye of the world [the Temple]."

Herod said, "But I fear the government of Rome." Bava replied, "Send an envoy to Rome, let him take a year on the way, stay in Rome a year, and take a year in coming back. In the meantime, you can pull down the old Temple and rebuild it." Herod did so, and received word from Rome: "If you have not pulled it down, do not do so. If you have pulled it down, do not rebuild it. If you have pulled it down and already rebuilt it, you are one of those who, after doing something wrong,[1] ask permission. Though you strut with your sword, the record of your birth is here for all to see: 'Neither king nor son of a king—before he made himself a freedman, he was Herod the slave.' "

In the days of Herod, while the people were occupied with building the Temple, rain fell during the night, but in the morning the wind blew, the clouds dispersed, and the sun shone, so that the people were able to go out to their work. Thus, they knew that what they were doing was work for the sake of Heaven.

It is said: He who has not seen the Temple of Herod has never seen a beautiful building. Of what did he build it? Rabbah said: Of yellow and white marble. Some say: Of blue, yellow, and white marble. The building rose in tiers,[2] in order to provide a hold for the plaster. Herod originally intended to cover it with gold, but the sages said to him: Leave it alone, for it is more beautiful as it is, since it has the appearance of the waves of the sea.[3]

The Service in the Temple

52. Until the Temple was built, the world rested on a [shaky] throne with only two legs; after the Temple was built, the world stood firm, its well-being assured.[4]

53. "If any man of the House of Israel slaughtereth an ox or sheep or goat in the camp . . . [he is to] offer them as . . . peace offerings" (Lev. 17:3 and 17:5). R. Phinehas said in the name of R. Levi: The precept may be understood by the parable of a king's son who thought he could do what he liked, and so fell into eating animals improperly slaughtered or torn by wild beasts. The king said: "I shall have him always at my table, and, thus learning to restrain himself, [he will be weaned from improper conduct]. So, too, because Israel in Egypt came to lust for idolatry and used to bring offerings to satyrs, they were told, "They shall no more sacrifice their sacrifices unto the satyrs" (Lev. 17:7). The word "satyrs" here can refer only to demons, as indicated by the assertion "Satyrs shall dance there" (Isa. 13:21).[5] Then, too, Israel used to bring their offerings in private high places, which were forbidden, and on account of which punishments came upon them. So the Holy One said, "Let them bring their offerings to Me at all times in the Tent of Meeting, and thus be weaned from idolatry and saved from punishments."[6]

54. It is taught that R. Simeon ben Azzai said: Pause and consider what is stated in the chapter on sacrifices. Neither the term El nor the term Elohim is found there—only "Lord," so as not to give a would-be disputant the opportunity to differ [with regard to God's unity].[7] Furthermore, of the ox, which is large, it is said, "An offering made by fire, of a sweet savor" (Lev. 1:9); of a bird, which is small, "an offering made by fire, of a sweet savor" (Lev. 1:17); and of a meal offering, "an offering made by fire, of a sweet savor" (Lev. 2:2)—to teach you that it is the same whether a man offers much or little, so long as he directs his heart to Heaven.

Lest you say, He needs the offering for food, Scripture states, "If I were hungry, I would not speak to thee of it" (Ps. 50:12). I did not bid you offer sacrifices, that you might be able to say, "I will do His will, so that He will do my will." You sacrifice not for My sake, but for your own sake, as is said, "You shall sacrifice it for your sake" (Lev. 19:5).[8]

55. Rava said: R. Joseph used to test us with the following question: If a priest snatches the priestly dues,[9] is he considered zealous in performing the precept or disdainful of the precept? We replied: Scripture says, "They shall give" (Deut. 18:3), not, "He shall take on his own."

Abbaye said: At first I used to snatch the priestly portions, saying to myself, "I thus show my zeal for the precept"; but when I heard the Baraita "In asserting, 'They shall give' [Deut. 18:3], Scripture implies that the priest is not to take them on his own," I no longer snatched them, but would merely say, "Give them to me." And when I heard another Baraita that taught, "The verse 'They turned aside after lucre' [1 Sam. 8:3] means, according to R.

---

1. In BR, the Aramaic "one of those who, after doing something wrong" is mistranslated "one of those bad servants."
2. Literally, "It sent forth an edge, and drew in an edge."
3. Because of the differing hues of marble, B. BB 3b–4a; B. Ta 23a; B. Suk 51b.
4. Tanhuma, Terumah, §9.
5. Dance in the ruins to which Isaiah refers earlier. Demons were said to inhabit empty places. Instead of Isa. 13:21, BR cite "They sacrificed unto demons" (Deut. 32:17).
6. Lev. R. 22:8.
7. The absence of other names for God is intended to make it clear that there is only one God and that names such as el and elohim are no more than other designations for Him.
8. B. Men 110a.
9. From children on their way to give it to another priest.

Meir, that Samuel's sons used to ask right out for the portions due them,"[1] I decided not to ask for them, but would accept them only when given to me. But when I heard a third Baraita that declared, "The [priests who were] modest withdrew their hands from them, but the greedy took them," I decided not to accept them at all, save on the day before Yom Kippur, so as to establish myself as one of the priests.[2]

56. The priests on duty, the Levites on their dais and the Israelites at their lay posts[3]—they did not turn their backs completely as they were leaving but, half turning, kept their faces looking sideways as they left.[4]

57. The watch of priests leaving the Temple used to say to the watch coming in, "May He who has made His Name dwell in this house make love and brotherliness, peace and friendship dwell in your midst."[5]

58. R. Eleazar said: To what do the seventy bullocks [that were offered during the seven days of Sukkot] correspond? To the seventy nations [of the earth]. To what does the single bullock [offered on the Eighth Day Festival—Shemini Atzeret] correspond? To the unique nation [Israel]. A parable of a king of flesh and blood who [for seven days] said to his servants, "Prepare a great feast for me." Then on the eighth day he said to the special friend who loved him, "Prepare a simple meal for me, that I may have the pleasure of your company."

R. Yohanan observed: Woe to the nations of the world who sustained a loss[6] and are not even aware of what loss they sustained. When the Temple stood, the altar made atonement for them. But now who makes atonement for them?[7]

59. According to R. Judah bar Simon, the Holy One said to Israel: My children, I have made available as food for you ten clean beasts—three of these subject to your control, and seven not subject to your control. Three subject to your control: the ox, the lamb, and the goat. Not subject to your control: the deer, the gazelle, the roebuck, the wild goat, the ibex, the antelope, and the mountain sheep. I have not burdened you—I have not told you to climb up mountains or to tramp through forests in order to fetch Me an offering out of those that are not subject to your control. I told you to fetch only such as are subject to your control—those reared at your trough.

R. Judah bar Simon said in the name of R. Yose bar Nehorai: A bullock is pursued by the lion, a lamb by the wolf, a goat by the leopard. But the Holy One said: Bring no offering to Me from those who pursue, only from those who are pursued.[8]

60. R. Isaac taught: Why is the meal offering distinguished in that the word "soul" is used in connection with it (Lev. 2:1)?[9] Because the Holy One said: Who is it that usually brings a meal offering? It is the poor man. I account it for him as though he had offered his very soul to Me.

R. Isaac said further: Why is the meal offering distinguished in that five kinds of oil dishes[10] are listed in connection with it? A parable provides the answer: A king of flesh and blood had a friend who was about to prepare a feast for him. Since the king knew that his friend was poor, he said: Prepare for me [whatever you have] as five kinds of flour[11] dishes, so that I may enjoy your company longer.[12]

61. King Agrippa[13] once desired to bring a thousand burnt offerings in one day and sent word to the high priest: "Let no man except me bring an offering on that day." And so, when a poor man with two doves in his hand came and said to the high priest, "Offer up these doves for me," the high priest answered, "The king charged me, saying, "No man other than I is to bring an offering this day." But the poor man said, "My lord high priest, each day I capture four doves; two I offer up, and two I eat. If you do not offer these up for me, you cut off my livelihood." So the high priest took the doves and offered them up.

It was disclosed to Agrippa in a dream: "A poor man's offering has preceded yours!" So he sent word to the high priest: "Did I not command you: Let no man except me bring an offering on that day?" The high priest replied, "My lord king, a poor man came with two doves in his hand and said to me, 'Offer these up for me.' I said to him, 'The king has charged me, saying, 'Let no man except me bring an offering this day,' and he said to me, 'Each day I capture four doves; two I offer up, and two I eat. If you will not offer these up for me, you cut off my livelihood.' Should I not have offered them up?" Agrippa replied to the high priest, "You have done well."

It happened that a woman brought one handful of fine flour for a meal offering, and the priest ridiculed her, saying, "See what such people offer up! What is there in this to eat? Indeed, what is there in this to offer up?" Later on, it was disclosed to the priest in a dream: "Do not despise her. I reckon it for her as if she had offered up her very soul."[14]

---

1. See above, chap. 6, §70.
2. So that it should not be forgotten that he was a priest. B. Hul 133a.
3. Delegations from the people out in the country. Some of the lay post accompanied the daily offerings in the Temple by gathering for services in Jerusalem, while others assembled for such services in the provinces.
4. B. Yoma 53.
5. B. Ber 12a.
6. The Temple.
7. B. Suk 55b.
8. Tanhuma B, Emor, 13; Tanhuma, Pinhas, §12; Lev. R. 27:6.
9. JV: "And when anyone bringeth a meal offering" is literally in the Hebrew "And when a soul bringeth a meal offering."
10. Each of the five kinds of meal offerings is prepared with oil. See Lev. 2.
11. Prepared with coarse flour fried in olive oil, which even the poorest person could afford.
12. B. Men 104b.
13. Probably Agrippa I (ca. 10 B.C.E.–44 C.E.), who treated religious law with respect. See JE, s.v.
14. Lev. R. 3:5; MTeh 22:31.

62. [The details concerning] the lay posts are as follows. It is said, "Command the children of Israel and say unto them: My food which is presented unto Me" (Num. 28:2). Now, how can a man's offering be brought on the altar and he not be present? The earlier prophets[1] therefore instituted twenty-four watches.[2] During each watch, there was present in Jerusalem a post of priests, of Levites, and of lay Israelites. When the time came for a particular watch to go up to Jerusalem, the priests and Levites [as well as the lay Israelites of that watch] went up to Jerusalem, while the bulk of Israelites belonging to that watch assembled in their cities and read the story of creation (Gen. 1). On Sunday they read "In the beginning" and "Let there be a firmament"; on Monday, "Let there be a firmament" and "Let the waters be gathered together"; on Tuesday, "Let the waters be gathered together" and "Let there be lights"; on Wednesday, "Let there be lights" and "Let the waters swarm"; on Thursday, "Let the waters swarm" and "Let the earth bring forth"; on Friday, "Let the earth bring forth" and "The heavens and the earth were finished."

Between them, two persons read a long section[3] and one person read a short section. This procedure was followed only at the morning and at the Musaf services, but at the afternoon service everybody entered and recited the entire text for himself by heart, in the same way one recites for himself the Shema. On Fridays, the gathering in synagogues for the afternoon service did not take place, because the time was needed for preparations in honor of the Sabbath.

Our masters—as already said—taught: There were twenty-four priestly watches in the Land of Israel. When the turn of a particular watch arrived, half of the watch would go up from everywhere in the Land to Jerusalem, and the other half would go to Jericho, in order to provide [from there] water and food for their brethren in Jerusalem.

Only four priestly families returned from the [Babylonian] exile. They were: Jedaiah, Harim, Pashhur, and Immer.[4] The prophets of that generation divided these four families into twenty-four watches in the following manner: [twenty-four] lots [numbered from one to twenty-four, six for each of the four families] were mixed and placed in an urn. A member of the family of Jedaiah was the first to draw a lot. He was followed by five other members of his family, thus determining the sequence of the watches for the six families of Jedaiah. The same procedure was carried out by Harim, then Pashhur, and finally Immer.[5] The prophets who were among those who returned from Babylon stipulated that even if the house of Jehoiarib, which at the time of the First Temple was the foremost of all the watches, were to decide to go up to Jerusalem, Jedaiah should not be removed from his newly acquired place—he should remain foremost, and Jehoiarib subsidiary to him.[6]

The men of the lay post used to fast on four days of the week, from Monday through Thursday. On Friday they did not fast, out of respect for the Sabbath; nor did they fast on Sunday, so that they not go suddenly from rest and delight into fasting, and, as a result, die. Another reason: Because of the Christians, who should be given no reason to say, "Because we rejoice on Sunday, they fast on it." But of this reason the sages said: At the time the lay posts existed, there could have been no fear of Christian hostility.[7]

Our masters also taught: The men of the [lay post attached to the] watch of priests on duty prayed over the sacrifices of their brethren, that they might be favorably accepted, while the bulk of the men of the lay post assembled in their synagogues [throughout the Land] and also observed four fasts, on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday during that week. On Monday [they fasted] for the safety of those who were on the high sea; on Tuesday, for those who were traveling in the deserts; on Wednesday, that croup would not attack children; on Thursday, for pregnant women and nursing mothers—that the pregnant women would not miscarry and that the nursing mothers would safely nurse their children.[8]

The Miracles in the Temple

63. Ten miracles were wrought for our fathers in the Temple: No woman miscarried from the odor of the sacrificial meat; the sacrificial meat never became putrid; no fly was seen in the Temple slaughterhouse; no nocturnal emission of semen ever happened to a high priest on the eve of Yom Kippur; the rain never quenched the fire of the woodpile [on the altar, which was under the open sky]; no wind ever prevailed against the column of smoke [from the altar fire, so that the smoke was not blown downward]; no disqualifying defect was ever found in the omer [of new barley, offered on the second day of Passover] or in the two loaves [baked of the first grain of the wheat harvest and offered up on the Feast of Weeks] or in the shewbread [which was changed on the Sabbath];[9] though the people

---

1. Samuel and David.
2. Twenty-four watches of lay people, as well as of priests and Levites.
3. Containing at least six verses.
4. Ezra 2:36–39.
5. At bimonthly intervals during the year, the six families of each watch were to serve in the Temple in the order in which the lots bearing their numbers were drawn.
6. Among the priestly families that returned with Ezra (Ezra 2:36–39), Jehoiarib, which headed the watches in the First Temple, is not mentioned. Hence it is presumed that the family refused to return.
7. Since it was much later that Christianity became the official religion of the Roman Empire.
8. B. Ta 26–27 and En Yaakov, ad loc.; Sof 17.
9. "Lehem ha-panim, 'bread of the Presence,' the unleavened bread that the priest placed before the Lord in the Sanctuary (Exod. 25:30). This consists of twelve loaves, representing the twelve tribes of Israel, and was expressive of man's constant indebtedness to God, who is the source of every material blessing. It had to be baked before the Sabbath; if there had been anything wrong with it, they could not have changed the bread for another week. Similarly, if the omer had been found defective, it would have been impossible to provide another supply in time for the offering. The baking of the two loaves of the new grain of wheat had to be done before the commencement of Shavuot, the Feast of Weeks; had they been defective, others could not have been prepared. The permission to bake on holy days is restricted to food required for those days" (Philip Birnbaum, The Daily Prayer Book [New York, 1949], pp. 513–14). Avot 5:5.

stood in closely pressed rows, they found ample space to prostrate themselves; never did a serpent or a scorpion injure anyone in Jerusalem; and no man ever said to his fellow, "There is no room for me to lodge overnight in Jerusalem."

64. Though the people stood in close rows, they found ample space to prostrate themselves. R. Aha said: Each person had four cubits, a cubit on each side, so that no one should hear his neighbor's prayer.[1]

65. It is taught: Five things were reported about the fire of the woodpile on the altar: It lay like a lion,[2] it was clear as the sun, its flame was of solid substance, it consumed freshly cut wood as though it were dry wood, and it caused no smoke to rise from it. It lay like a lion? But has it not been taught that R. Hanina, deputy high priest, had said: I myself saw it, and it lay low like a dog? [The answer is]: The first description refers to the First Temple, the second to the Second Temple.[3]

66. Rabbah bar Bar Hana said: It is a distance of ten parasangs[4] from Jerusalem to Jericho. The turning of the door hinges in the Temple Hall was heard eight Sabbath limits away,[5] while [the fragrance of the incense in the Temple Hall traveled all the way to Jericho], so that the goats in Jericho used to sneeze because of the fragrance of the incense, and the women of Jericho had no need to perfume themselves because of that fragrance. Neither did a bride in Jerusalem.[6]

Diligent Priests

67. With torches before him, the officer of the Temple Mount used to make the rounds during every watch, and if any priest in the watch failed to rise and say, "Officer of the Temple Mount, peace be unto you," it was clear that he was asleep, and the officer would strike him with his staff; the officer was also permitted to burn his clothes. The other priests would ask, "What noise is that in the Temple Court?" [They were told], "It is the cry of a son of Levi who is being beaten, and whose garments are being burned, because he was asleep at his post." R. Eliezer ben Jacob said: Once they found my mother's brother asleep, and they burned his clothes.[7]

68. Originally, whatever priest [of the family on duty] desired to remove the ashes from the altar did so. If such priests were many, they would run up the ramp of the altar,[8] and he who came first within four cubits [of its top] won that privilege. It once happened that as two priests were running neck-and-neck up the ramp, one pushed the other, who fell and broke his leg. When the High Court saw that the rivalry exposed priests to physical danger, it ordained that the ashes from the altar be removed only by lot.

Our masters taught: [Before the lot was instituted] it once happened that two priests were running neck-and-neck up the ramp. When one of them came first within four cubits of the top of the altar, the other took a knife and thrust it into his rival's heart. At this, R. Zadok, standing on the steps of the Porch, cried out in anguish, "Our brethren of the House of Israel, hear ye! Behold, Scripture says, 'If one be found slain in the Land . . . then thy elders and judges shall come forth' [Deut. 21:1]. Who is to assume the guilt and provide the heifer whose neck is to be broken—the city of Jerusalem or the priests in the Temple Courts?" All the people burst out weeping. The father of the young priest who was knifed came and, finding his son still in his death throes, said, "Look, he is atonement for you! See, my son is still moving [not yet dead]; the knife has not become unclean."[9]

The cleanness of their utensils, it would seem, was of greater concern to them than the shedding of blood.[10]

The Paschal Lamb

69. The paschal lamb was slaughtered by the people in three groups.[11] After the first group entered and the Temple Court was filled, they closed the doors of the Temple Court; then they sounded tekiah, teruah, and tekiah.[12] The priests stationed themselves in two rows, facing each other; in their hands were basins of silver and basins of gold.[13] The row of priests who held the silver basins, held only silver basins; and the row of priests who held the gold basins, held only gold basins. The vessels were not intermixed—[silver vessels were in one row and gold vessels in the other]. The basins had no flat bottoms, lest the priests put them down and the blood become congealed.

As an Israelite slaughtered [his own lamb], the priest caught [the blood] in the basin; he handed it to the colleague next to him, and that colleague to his colleague, each receiving the basin full and returning it empty.[14] The priest nearest the altar dashed the blood in one movement against the base [of the altar].[15]

As the first group of Israelites went out, the second entered; as the second went out, the third entered. Like the procedure with the first [group] was the procedure with the second and with the third. [In the meantime] the Levites chanted the Hallel;[16] if they finished it before a group

---

1. Gen. R. 5:7
2. So powerful was the flame.
3. B. Yoma 21b.
4. Approximately thirty miles.
5. Approximately five miles.
6. B. Yoma 39b.
7. B. Tam 27b–28a.
8. At the south of the altar; it was thirty-two cubits long.
9. Since only a dead body can render a weapon unclean.
10. B. Yoma 22a and 23a.
11. Irrespective of the number sacrificing.
12. Tekiah is a long, straight blast on the shofar (ram's horn); teruah is a series of three consecutive short blasts.
13. To receive the blood.
14. After the blood in it had been dashed against the altar.
15. On the north and west sides of the altar, where its base projects. See Mid 3:1.
16. Ps. 113–18. Literally, "praise."

was done slaughtering, they repeated it; and if, after repeating it, that group was still not done, they would have to chant it a third time, though in fact it never was necessary to chant it a third time. R. Judah said: Never during the turn of the third group did the Levites reach the words "I love that the Lord should hear", etc. (Ps. 116:1), because the people in that group were so few.

How did they hang up the carcasses and flay them? There were iron hooks fixed in the walls and in the pillars, on which the carcasses were suspended and flayed. If anyone found no place to suspend and flay his animal, there were thin, smooth staves that a man could rest on his own shoulder and on the shoulder of his neighbor, and so hang and flay it.

After the Israelite slit the animal and took out its sacrificial portions,[1] he placed them on a tray, and [a priest] burned them on the altar.

[When Passover eve fell on a Sabbath], the first group went out [from the Temple Court] but remained on the Temple Mount.[2] The second remained in the rampart,[3] while the third group remained where they were [in the Temple Court]. After it grew dark, they all went home and roasted their paschal lambs.[4]

70. Our masters taught: No man was ever crushed in the Temple Court,[5] except during one Passover in the days of Hillel, when an old man was crushed, and they called it "the Passover of the Crushed."

King Agrippa once wished to number the hosts of Israel.[6] After he told the high priest, "Number the paschal lambs," the high priest took a kidney from each paschal lamb, and six hundred thousand pairs of kidneys were found to have been there, twice as many as the number of people who departed from Egypt. The total [it goes without saying] does not include those Jews who were unclean and those who were on a distant journey and therefore [could not bring paschal lambs]. One must also realize that there was not a single paschal lamb for which more than ten people had not registered. That Passover came to be known as "the Passover of Dense Throngs."[7]

71. A story is told of a certain idolater who used to go up and partake of the meat of paschal lambs in Jerusalem. Once he came to R. Judah ben Betera and boastfully said, "It is written, 'No foreigner shall eat of it' [Exod. 12:43], and, 'No uncircumcised person shall eat of it' [Exod. 12:48], yet I manage to eat its very best portions!" R. Judah ben Betera asked him, "Did they give you a big chunk of the fat-tail?" "No," he replied. "Then," said R. Judah, "when you journey up there again, say to them, 'Give me a big helping of the fat-tail.' " When he went up, he said, "Give me a big chunk of the fat-tail." They replied, "How can you make such a demand? The fat-tail belongs to the Most High!" Then they asked, "Who told you to ask for it?" He answered, "R. Judah ben Betera." They wondered: What in the world is going on here? Upon investigating his background, they discovered that he was a foreigner, and they immediately put him to death. Then they sent word to R. Judah ben Betera: "Peace be with you, R. Judah ben Betera, for though you may be in Nisibis, your net is spread out all the way to Jerusalem."[8]

The Sheaf of the Omer (Lev. 23:9–11)

72. What was the procedure for preparing the omer? Messengers of the High Court used to go out on the day before Passover and tie the unreaped stand of barley grain in bunches to make it easier to reap. [On the night following the first day of Passover] all the inhabitants of the nearby towns assembled at a particular field so that the sheaf of the omer might be reaped in the midst of great commotion.[9] As soon as it became dark, the one assigned to reap the barley called out, "Has the sun set?" And they shouted, "Yes!" "Has the sun set?" And they shouted, "Yes!" "[Shall I reap] with this sickle?" And they shouted, "Yes!" "[Shall I reap] with this sickle?" And they shouted, "Yes!" "Into this basket?" And they shouted, "Yes!" "Into this basket?" And they shouted, "Yes!" If it was the Sabbath, he called out further, "On this Sabbath?" And they shouted, "Yes!" "On this Sabbath?" And they shouted, "Yes!" "Shall I reap on the Sabbath?" And they shouted, "Reap!" Three times he inquired concerning each act, and three times they answered, "Yes!" "Yes!" "Yes!" And why was it necessary to inquire three times? By way of demonstrating against the Boethusians,[10] who maintained that the reaping of the omer was not to take place at the conclusion of the [first day of the] Passover festival.

After they reaped the omer, they put it into baskets

---

1. See Lev. 3:3–4.
2. Since on the Sabbath they could not carry the paschal lambs home, they had to wait for the evening.
3. A place within the fortification of the Temple (Jastrow). See Mid 2:3.
4. B. Pes 64a–b.
5. In spite of the enormous crowds that thronged it.
6. Literally, "to cast his eyes on the hosts of Israel." Such "casting of eyes" is regarded in Jewish tradition as casting an evil eye, as Satan did when he "moved David to number Israel" (1 Chron. 21:1). "In addition, a census was looked upon with suspicion as being the possible precursor of fresh levies and taxation, and the decision of Quirinius, the governor of Syria, to take a census in Judea (ca. 6–7 C.E.) nearly precipitated a revolt; see [Heinrich] Graetz. According to Graetz, the present census was undertaken by Agrippa II in the year 66 C.E. as a hint to the Roman powers not to underrate the strength of the Jewish people, and therefore avoid driving them too far by the cruelty and greed of the Procurator, at that time Gessius Florus" (Pes, Soncino, p. 326, n. 2).
7. B. Pes 64a–b and En Yaakov, ad loc. The actual census figure of Israel was thus considerably more than twice six hundred thousand.
8. B. Pes. 3b.
9. To impress the Boethusians. See the following note.
10. "A sect in opposition to the Pharisees and often regarded as synonymous with the Sadducees. They held that the expression (Lev. 23:11) 'the morrow after the Sabbath' must be taken in its literal sense, the day following the first Saturday in Passover. The Pharisees, however, argued that the Sabbath meant here 'the day of cessation from work', i.e., the Festival of Passover. Accordingly the omer was to be offered on the second day of the Festival, and the reaping of [the sheaf of barley] on the night preceding, at the conclusion of the first day of the Festival" (Men, Soncino, p. 384, n. 4).

and brought it to the Temple Court. They singed it over fire by putting it in a [copper] pipe, which was perforated so that the fire might get at all of the grains. Then they spread it out in the Temple Court, so that the wind blew over it.[1] Next they put it into a grist mill,[2] and out of it they took a tenth [of an ephah of flour], which was then sifted through thirteen sieves [and was finally offered up].

As soon as the omer [of the new harvest] had been offered, they would go out and find the markets of Jerusalem already filled with both flour and parched grain.[3]

73. The precept for the omer requires that it be brought [from barley] that grows near Jerusalem. If the crop near Jerusalem was not yet ripe, it could be brought from any place.

Once, when the time arrived, they did not know where to find newly grown barley.[4] So they had a herald announce the difficulty. A deaf-mute came forward and pointed with one hand to a [flat] roof, and with the other to a cone-shaped hut. Mordecai[5] inquired, "Is there a place anywhere named Gaggot Tzerifin[6] or Tzerifin Gaggot?" They searched and found the place [and the newly grown barley].

Another time, when they had to bring the two loaves [baked of the new wheat harvest and offered on the Feast of Weeks], they did not know where to find newly grown wheat. So they had a herald announce the difficulty. A deaf-mute came forward and put one hand over his eye and the other hand over a bolt. Mordecai inquired, "Is there a place anywhere named En Sokher[7] or Sokher En?" They searched and found the place [and the newly grown wheat].[8]

The Bringing of the Firstfruits

74. How are the firstfruits set aside? When a man goes down to his field and sees a ripe fig[9] or a ripe cluster of grapes or a ripe pomegranate, he ties reed grass around it and says, "Let these be firstfruits."[10] R. Simeon differs: Even so, he should again designate them as firstfruits after they are plucked from the soil where they grew.

How are the firstfruits taken up [to Jerusalem]? All [the inhabitants of] the towns that make up a lay post assemble in the city of the [head of that] post, but spend the night in its open place without entering any of the houses.[11] Early in the morning, the head of the post says, "Let us arise and go up to Zion, unto the house of the Lord our God" (Jer. 31:6).[12]

Those who live near [Jerusalem] bring fresh figs and grapes, but those from a distance bring dried figs and raisins.[13] Before them walks an ox, its horns overlaid with gold, a crown of olive leaves on its head.[14] A flute strikes the tempo for their procession until they approach Jerusalem. When they arrive close to Jerusalem, they send messengers to announce their coming. Meanwhile, they arrange their firstfruits in an ornamental display.[15] Governors of priests, chiefs of the Levites, and treasurers [of the Temple] go out to meet them. The number of those going out varies in keeping with the number of the entrants. All the skilled artisans of Jerusalem are required to rise up before them and greet them:[16] "Brethren, men of such-and-such a place, peace be upon you in your coming."

The flute continues to strike the tempo before them until they reach the Temple Mount. When they reach the Temple Mount, even King Agrippa places a basket on his shoulder and walks as far as the Temple Court. As they approach the Court, the Levites sing, "I will extol Thee, O Lord, for Thou hast raised me up, and hast not suffered mine enemies to rejoice over me" (Ps. 30:2).

The turtledoves [tied to] each basket[17] are [offered up as] burnt offerings, but the baskets of firstfruits that the people hold in their hands they present to the priests.

While the basket is yet on his shoulder, each man recites the passage beginning: "I profess this day unto the Lord thy God" (Deut. 26:3), until he reaches the end of the passage (Deut. 26:10). R. Judah said: Until he reaches "A wandering Aramean sought to slay my father" (Deut. 26:5). When he reaches these words, he takes the basket off his shoulder and holds it by its rim, and the priest places his hand under it and waves it. Then the Israelite begins to recite "An Aramean sought to slay my father," until he completes the entire passage. He then deposits the basket by the side of the altar,[18] prostrates himself, and departs.

Originally, all who knew how to recite the prescribed words [in Hebrew] would recite them, while those unable to do so repeated them after the priest. But when people began to refrain from bringing firstfruits in shame [of their ignorance], it was decided that both those who could as

---

1. To cool and dry the grains.
2. Which grinds very coarsely, so that only the husk is separated from the grain.
3. See Lev. 23:9–14. To have it ready on the same day, the shopkeepers must have prepared it in advance, thus handling the new crop while it was yet prohibited. B. Men 65a and 66a; Pes 10b.
4. Because of the devastation around Jerusalem wreaked by Roman forces.
5. A high Temple official, who on account of his sagacity bore the name of Mordecai. See Shek 5:1.
6. A place-name whose literal meaning is "[flat] roofs, cone-shaped huts."
7. The literal meaning is "eye of a bolt."
8. B. Men 64b.
9. Though the vine is listed first in Deut. 8:8, the fig is the first to ripen. Cf. Song 2:13.
10. He is now exempted from further designation at the time of harvesting.
11. Lest impurity be contracted through contact with the dead.
12. On their way to the Temple Mount, they recite various psalms (Bertinoro). According to Israel Lipschütz, Tiferet Yisrael (Vilna, 1935), the fifteen Songs of Ascents (Ps. 120–134) are recited.
13. Fresh fruit would rot on the way.
14. The ox is to serve as the peace offering.
15. "Fresh figs would be placed as the top layer of a basket containing dried ones, and raisins would be covered by fresh grapes; while the choicest of the fruit would be placed on top of a basket containing only fresh fruits" (Bik, Soncino, p. 400, n. 7).
16. Men working at their craft were not required to rise for a scholar, but they were to rise before the procession of firstfruits.
17. They were suspended from the sides of the basket so as not to soil the fruit.
18. At its southwest corner.

well as those who could not recite them [in Hebrew] should repeat the words after the priest.

The rich bring their firstfruits in baskets overlaid with silver and gold, while the poor bring them in wicker baskets made of peeled willow branches and give both baskets and firstfruits to the priests.[1]

The Service of Yom Kippur [the Day of Atonement]

75. Seven days before the Day of Atonement, the high priest is removed from his house to the counselors'[2] chamber, and another priest is held ready to take his place should anything befall him to render him unfit.[3] From the elders of the High Court, they appoint for him a few elders, who [throughout the seven days] read to him [Lev. 16, which sets forth] the rites for the day. Then they say to him, "Most esteemed high priest, now you yourself, with your own mouth, read these words, in case you may have forgotten them or may never have learned them."

The morning of the eve of Yom Kippur, they have him stand at the eastern gate and have oxen, rams, and sheep pass before him, so that he may scrutinize them and rehearse in his mind what he must do during the service.

Throughout the seven days, they do not withhold food or drink from him. But on the eve of Yom Kippur toward nightfall, they do not let him eat much, because food induces sleep.

The elders of the High Court hand him over to elders of the priesthood, and they escort him to an upper chamber in the house of Avtinas.[4] They adjure him, then take their leave, saying to him, "Most esteemed high priest, we are messengers of the High Court, and you are our messenger as well as the messenger of the High Court. By Him that made His Name dwell in this house, we adjure you not to change anything of what we have said to you."[5] He turns aside and weeps, and they turn aside and weep.[6]

If he is a sage, he expounds [Scripture]; if not, disciples of the wise expound it before him. If he is familiar with reading [Scripture], he reads it; if not, they read it to him. From what books do they read to him? From Job, Ezra, and Chronicles.[7] Zechariah ben Kevutal said: Often have I read to the high priest from Daniel.

If he tries to doze off, novices in the priesthood snap their middle finger before him and say, "Most esteemed high priest, rise up and drive sleep away by taking a turn on the [cool] pavement." The novices also engage him in conversation to divert him until the time for slaughtering [the daily burnt offering] has come.

(Some of the nobility of Jerusalem do not go to sleep all night, in order to make the high priest hear the reverberating noise [made by many people] and so prevent him from being suddenly overcome by sleep.)

The officer on duty says to the priests, "Go forth and see whether the time for slaughtering [the burnt offering] has come." If it has come, he who perceives it says, "It is daylight!" Matia ben Samuel used to ask, "Has the dawn lighted up the entire east, even as far as Hebron?" And the lookout would answer, "Yes."

(And why is it necessary to make the inquiries so precise? Because once the light of the moon rose so bright that they thought the east was alight with sunrise,[8] and they slaughtered the daily burnt offering, which then had to be taken away at once to the place where unfit offerings are burned.)

[When it is announced, "The whole east is alight,"] the high priest is led down to the place of immersion. The high priest undergoes five immersions and ten washings of hands and feet that day.

A sheet of byssus [linen] is hung between him and the people. Then he strips off [his ordinary clothes], goes down and immerses himself, and comes up and dries himself. They bring him his golden vestments;[9] he puts them on, and washes his hands and feet. They bring him the lamb for the daily burnt offering. He makes the initial incision,[10] and someone else finishes it for him. He receives the blood and sprinkles it. He goes inside [the Temple Hall] to burn the morning incense[11] and to trim the lamps.[12]

If the high priest is either old or in delicate health, they prepare boiling water for him, which they pour into the cold water [of the pool] to temper its chill.

They escort him to the Parvah[13] Chamber—which is on holy ground[14]—where a sheet of byssus linen is hung

---

1. Bik 3.
2. The name "counselors" is used to designate high priests, who changed so frequently that they had become in effect like officers of the crown who come and go. See B. Yoma 8b.
3. By becoming ritually unclean or suffering certain bodily defects. See above in this chapter, §63.
4. "There the famly of Avtinas prepared the incense, there the high priest was taught the skillful manipulation that would enable him to take up the incense without spilling one grain" (Yoma, Soncino, p. 80, n. 7).
5. That he would not follow the practices of the Sadducees, but hold fast to those of the Pharisees.
6. The elders, because they had such suspicions; and he, because they found it necessary to voice them.
7. These books, less known, might arouse his interest and keep him awake. Sleep was to be prevented because of the risk of a seminal emission during the night, making him unclean.
8. "When the sky is clouded, the light coming from the moon may be confused with that of the sun. But it never reaches as far as the latter, hence the question of the officer whether the horizon is alight even unto Hebron" (Yoma, Soncino, p. 131, n. 6).
9. For the daily service they were: tunic, breeches, headdress, sash, breastpiece, ephod, rode, and frontlet. See Exod. 28:2ff.
10. "To enable the high priest to put the knife aside and to take hold of the holy bowl in which he receives the blood. On other days one priest would slaughter, and another receive the blood. Both functions were to be performed by the high priest on the Day of Atonement" (Yoma, Soncino, p. 145, n. 8).
11. See Exod. 30:7.
12. I.e., clean them and provide them with wick and oil; according to Maimonides, also light them.
13. Parvah is the name of a Persian magus who, according to Menahem Ha-Meiri, became a proselyte (as quoted in Yoma, ed. Adin Steinsaltz [Jerusalem, 1977], p. 146).
14. "The first immersion, on top of the water gate, took place on profane ground; this one, however, had to be performed on holy ground, as part of the service of the Day of Atonement" (Yoma, Soncino, p. 161, n. 1).

between him and the people. He washes his hands and feet, and strips. Then he goes down, immerses himself in the pool, and comes up and dries himself. Afterward, they bring him white garments.[1] He puts them on and again washes his hands and feet. The white garments that he puts on at dawn are made of Pelusium linen worth twelve maneh, and at twilight, of Indian linen worth only eight hundred zuz.[2] These garments are paid for by the community, but if he wants to spend more on them from his own money, he may do so.

The high priest comes to his bullock,[3] which is already standing between the Outer Hall leading into the Temple's interior and the altar,[4] its body north to south and its face turned to the west. The high priest, his back to the east,[5] his face to the west, stands [by the bullock]. He presses both hands [between its horns] and makes confession, saying: I beseech Thee, O Lord![6] I have committed iniquity, I have transgressed, I have sinned before Thee, I and my house. I beseech Thee, O Lord! cleanse the iniquities, the transgressions, the sins that I have committed, transgressed, and sinned before Thee, I and my house, for in the Torah of Moses Thy servant it is written, "On this day shall atonement be made for you, to cleanse you; from all your sins shall ye be clean before the Lord" (Lev. 16:30). [And the priests and the people in the Temple Court, prostrating themselves],[7] respond after him: Blessed be the Name of His glorious kingdom forever and ever!

He then goes back to the eastern side of the Temple Court, to the north of the altar, the deputy high priest at his right and the head of the priestly family ministering that week at his left. Two he-goats are there (Lev. 16:5 and 16:7), and an urn containing two lots. (At one time they were made of boxwood. Ben Gamla made them of gold, and he was praised.)

The high priest shakes the urn and brings up the two lots. On one is inscribed, "For the Lord," and on the other, "For Azazel." The deputy high priest is at his right hand, the head of the ministering family at his left. If the lot with the inscription "For the Lord" comes up in his right hand, the deputy high priest says to him: Most esteemed high priest, raise your right hand! If the lot with the inscription "For the Lord" comes up in his left hand, the head of the ministering family says: Most esteemed high priest, raise your left hand! Then the high priest places his hands on both he-goats and says: To the Lord! And the two priests respond: Blessed be the name of His glorious kingdom forever and ever.

He ties a strand of crimson wool on the head of the he-goat that is to be sent away,[8] and he places it at the gate through which it will be sent away; and [he ties another strand around the neck of] the he-goat that is to be slaughtered. Then he returns to his bullock, presses his two hands on it, and makes confession, saying: I beseech Thee, O Lord! I have committed iniquity, I have transgressed, I have sinned before Thee, I and my house, and the children of Aaron, Thy holy company. I beseech Thee, O Lord, cleanse the iniquities, the transgressions, and the sins that I have committed, transgressed, and sinned before Thee, I and my house, and the children of Aaron, Thy holy company, for in the Torah of Moses Thy servant it is written, "On this day shall atonement be made for you, to cleanse you," etc. And the two priests respond: Blessed be the name of His glorious kingdom forever and ever.

Then the high priest slaughters the bullock and receives its blood in a bowl. He gives it to the priest standing in the Temple Court on the fourth block of pavement [the one closest to the Outer Hall's entrance], who keeps stirring the blood so that it will not congeal. He then takes the coal pan and goes up to the top of the altar, where he clears away the cinders to both sides and scrapes out a panful of glowing coals from below. Then he comes down and places the coal pan in the Temple Court on the fourth block of pavement [away from the altar].

On other days in the year, he scrapes out the glowing coals with a silver coal pan and empties it into one of gold. But this day he scrapes them out with the same golden coal pan in which he is to bring the glowing coals into the Holy of Holies. On other days the coal pan is of yellowish gold. On this day it is of red gold.

They bring the empty ladle and the incense pan to him. From the pan he fills both hands with incense, which he puts into the ladle—more incense if he is a man of large build, and less if of small build. The amount of incense required is determined by the high priest's size. Then he takes the pan with the glowing coals in his right hand and the ladle with the incense in his left hand. He goes through the Temple Hall until he comes to the area between the two curtains that separate the Temple Hall from the Holy of Holies; between these is [a cubit's space]. The outer curtain is looped up on the south side, and the inner curtain on the north side.[9] He walks along between them until he reaches the north side. When he reaches the north, he turns to the south and walks along with the curtain at his left, until he reaches the Ark. When he reaches the Ark, he puts the pan with the glowing coals between the two bars of acacia wood.[10] He heaps the incense upon the glowing coals, and the whole house comes

---

1. The four garments prescribed for the special service of the Day of Atonement: the tunic, the breeches, the sash, and the headdress. See Lev. 16:4.
2. Equal to eight maneh.
3. "Two bullocks were offered up on that day, one from community funds at the additional sacrifice (Num. 29:8), the other from the high priest's own means: the latter, here dealt with, is therefore called 'his bullock.' " (Yoma, Soncino, p. 164, n. 7).
4. The outer altar in the Temple Court.
5. The altar was at his back, and he faced the Temple Hall.
6. Literally, "O, the Name."
7. On hearing him pronounce the Ineffable Name of God, they prostrated themselves.
8. "Destined for Azazel, in the wilderness, where it was hurled to its death from a rock. The word Azazel has been variously interpreted, but it seems to be the name of a place (a rough rock) rather than that of a demon" (Yoma, Soncino, p. 196, n. 7).
9. "The two curtains formed a corridor one cubit wide. Access from the Sanctuary, or Holy Place, to the corridor was on the left side, and from the corridor to the Holy of Holies on the right (north) side" (Yoma, trans. Herbert Danby [Oxford, 1933; repr. 1974], p. 167, n. 7.)
10. See Exod. 25:13 ff.

to be filled with the fragrance of burning incense. He comes out by the same way he went in, and in the outer area [the Temple Hall] he utters a short prayer. He does not make the prayer long, so as not to frighten Israel.[1]

(After the Ark had been taken away, a stone remained there from the days of the early prophets,[2] called the Foundation Stone.[3] It was higher than the ground by three fingerbreadths. On this stone he puts the coal pan.)

He then takes the bowl from the priest who has been stirring it, enters again into the place where he had entered previously, and stands where he had stood previously [between the two bars of the Ark]; he sprinkles the blood from the bowl by moving his hand[4] palm up one time and palm down seven times, each time lowering his hand closer to the ground in the manner of one giving the lash (ke-matzlif), who begins at the upper part of the body and proceeds downward. At each movement of his hand, he counts: one, one and one, one and two, one and three, one and four, one and five, one and six, one and seven. Then he goes out and puts the bowl with its remaining blood on a golden stand in the Temple Hall.

The he-goat marked "For the Lord" is brought to him. He slaughters it and receives its blood in a bowl. He enters again into the place where he had entered previously and stands in the place where he had stood previously, and he sprinkles the blood from the bowl by moving his hand palm up one time and palm down seven times . . . in the manner of one giving the lash (ke-matzlif). . . . Then he goes out and puts the bowl with its remaining blood on the second golden stand in the Temple Hall.

He then comes to the he-goat to be sent away, lays his two hands on it, and makes confession, in which he says: I beseech Thee, O Lord, Thy people the House of Israel have committed iniquity, transgressed, and sinned before Thee. I beseech Thee, O Lord, cleanse the iniquities, the transgressions, and sins that Thy people the House of Israel have committed, transgressed, and sinned before Thee, for in the Torah of Moses Thy servant it is written, "On this day shall atonement be made for you, to cleanse you," etc.

And when the priests and the people standing in the Temple Court hear the Explicit Name come forth from the mouth of the high priest, they bend their knees and, prostrating themselves, fall on their faces as they call out: Blessed be the name of His glorious kingdom forever and ever.

He hands over the he-goat that is to be sent away to him who is to lead it on a ramp provided to protect the goat from the Jews of Babylonia, who were apt to pull at its hair, shouting to it, "Take our sins, and be off with you! Take our sins, and be off with you!"

Some of the nobility of Jerusalem go up to the first booth with the man who leads the he-goat. There were ten booths from Jerusalem to the tzok,[5] a distance of ninety ris.[6] At every booth, those within it say to the man, "Here is food and here is water." Then they accompany him from each booth to the next, but not from the last booth. The one in the last booth does not go up with the man to the tzok, but stands at a distance and watches what he is doing.[7]

What does he do? He cuts the strand of crimson wool in half, tying one half to the rock and the other half between the horns of the goat. Then he pushes the goat from behind, and it goes rolling down over and over. Before it reaches halfway down the hill, it is dashed to pieces. Then the man comes back and sits down inside the last booth until it grows dark.

Meanwhile, the high priest comes to the bullock and the goat that are to be burned . . . and burns them.

Presently the high priest is told: The he-goat has reached the wilderness. How do they know that the he-goat has reached the wilderness? They set up sentinel posts. From these posts scarves are waved, and thus they learn that the he-goat has reached the wilderness.

The high priest then comes to [the Women's Court] to read two passages in Scripture. If he wishes to read them while wearing byssus linen, he may do so; otherwise, he reads them while wearing his own white robe. The synagogue sexton takes a Torah scroll and gives it to the head of the synagogue, the head of the synagogue gives it to the deputy high priest, the deputy high priest gives it to the high priest, and the high priest stands up to receive it and reads the passage beginning "After the death . . ." (Lev. 16) and the passage beginning "Howbeit on the tenth . . ." (Lev. 23:27–32). Then he rolls up the Torah scroll and, holding it at his bosom, says, "Much more is written here than what I have read before you."

The golden vestments are brought to him. He puts them on, washes his hands and feet, goes out, and brings his own ram and the ram of the people as burnt offerings.[8]

He then washes his hands and feet, and immerses himself.

The white vestments are brought back to him; he puts them on and washes his hands and feet. Then he goes in [to the Holy of Holies] to bring out the ladle and the coal pan. He again washes his hands and feet, and immerses himself. The golden garments are brought back to him. He puts them on, washes his hands and feet, and goes into the Temple Hall to burn the twilight incense on the altar and to trim the lamps. He again washes his hands and feet, and takes off the golden garments. After that, they bring him his own garments, which he puts on. Finally they accompany him to his house, where, together with his friends, he celebrates his having come forth from the Holy of Holies unscathed.[9]

---

1. If the prayer were long, they might fear that something untoward had happened to him in the Holy of Holies.
2. This term includes Samuel, David, and Solomon (B. Sot 48b).
3. See above, chap 6, §142, and chap. 9, §2.
4. In the direction of the Ark cover but not on it.
5. Literally, "the peak," the mountain from which the scapegoat was cast down.
6. The equivalent of twelve mil.
7. Possibly to signal to the sentinel posts the completion of the act.
8. See Lev. 16:24.
9. Yoma, selections from chaps. 1–7.

76. R. Simeon said in the name of R. Joshua: Why does the high priest not enter the Holy of Holies clad in garments of gold?[1] Because whatever invites accusation should not be in sight when defense is required. [Hence no garments of gold], in order that Satan not be given the opportunity to say in accusation: Only yesterday these people made themselves a god of gold [the calf], and today they have the temerity to serve God in garments of gold.

But R. Joshua of Sikhnin said in the name of R. Levi: It is because the Holy One is greatly concerned not to have Israel's possessions go to waste.[2]

77. Our masters taught: At one time, a strand of crimson wool would be tied on the outside of the entrance to the Porch.[3] If it turned white, they rejoiced; if it did not turn white, they were sad and shamefaced. Then it was arranged to have it tied on the inside of the entrance to the Porch. But people still managed to have a look at it, and if it became white, they rejoiced, but if it did not become white, they were sad and shamefaced. Then it was ordained to have one half of the strand tied to the rock and the other half tied between the horns of the he-goat that is sent away.

R. Nahum bar Papa said in the name of R. Eleazar ha-Kappar: At one time the strand of crimson wool would be tied on the inside of the entrance to the Porch. As soon as the goat reached the wilderness, the strand turned white; then people knew that the precept concerning the he-goat that is sent away had been performed, in keeping with the promise "If your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white wool" (Isa. 1:18).[4]

78. Our masters taught: It once happened that [after leaving the Holy of Holies] a high priest was so long at his prayer that his brother priests voted to go into [the Temple Hall] to find out what happened to him. As they were about to enter, he walked out. They asked, "Why were you so long at your prayer?" He replied, "Do you object to my having prayed at greater length for you and for the Temple, that it not be destroyed?" They said, "Please make no habit of this, for we have been taught: 'The high priest does not make the prayer long, so as not to frighten Israel.' "[5]

79. Our masters taught: There was a Sadducee [high priest] who prepared the incense outside and brought it inside [the Holy of Holies]. As he was leaving, greatly exuberant, his father met him and said: My son, even though we are Sadducees, yet [we are not to prepare the incense outside] for fear of the Pharisees. The son replied: All my days I have been troubled by the verse "I appear in the cloud upon the Ark cover" (Lev. 16:2), saying to myself: When shall the opportunity come my way, and I will be able to fulfill the precept?[6] Now that it came my way, should I not have fulfilled it?

It is reported: In but a few days he died, his body was thrown on a dungheap, and worms came crawling out of his nose. Some say: He was smitten as he came out [of the Holy of Holies]. For R. Hiyya taught: Some sort of noise was heard in the Temple Court because an angel came and struck him, so that he fell face down. When his brother priests came in, they found the imprint of something like a calf's foot on his shoulder.[7] For of angels it is written, "Their feet were straight feet; and the sole of their feet was like the sole of a calf's foot" (Ezek. 1:7).[8]

80. It is told of [the high priest] R. Ishmael ben Kimhit that one day, while he was talking with an Arab king,[9] a spray of saliva spurted from the king's mouth on R. Ishmael's garments, making him ritually unclean.[10] So his brother Yeshevav entered and ministered in his stead. Thus, their mother saw both her sons high priests on the same day. According to our masters, Kimhit had seven sons, and all of them served in the office of high priest. The sages asked her: What good deeds are there to your credit [that you should be so honored in your sons]? She replied: The ceiling beams of my house have never seen the hair of my head or the skirt of my petticoat.[11] They responded: Others were equally careful, but it did not avail them.

It used to be said: Flour (kemahim) is flour, but Kimhit is the very flower of flowers.[12]

81. Our masters taught: Once a high priest was going out of the Temple, followed by a great multitude. Upon seeing Shemaiah and Avtalion, however, they left him and followed Shemaiah and Avtalion instead.[13] After a while, when Shemaiah and Avtalion called upon the high priest

---

1. See Exod. 28:6ff.
2. The garments the high priest wore on the Day of Atonement had to be stored away and were never to be worn again. Lev. R. 21:10.
3. The vestibule leading into the Temple Hall.
4. B. Yoma 67a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
5. Because they feared either that he did not obtain forgiveness or that something untoward had happened to him. B. Yoma 53b.
6. "The Sadducees interpreted the passage 'For I appear in the cloud' as if it said: For I am to be seen only with the cloud (of incense) upon the Ark cover. The whole verse, according to them, is to mean: 'Let him not come into the Holy Place except with the cloud' (of incense), for only thus, with the cloud, 'am I to be seen on the Ark cover.' Hence the Sadducees' effort to enter the Holy of Holies with the fire pan asmoke, prepared and lit outside" (Yoma, Soncino, p. 84, n. 5).
7. "The high priest, in coming out of the Holy of Holies, walked backward so as not to turn his back on the Holy of Holies. When he reached the threshold and his back first emerged behind the curtain, the angel who was outside the curtain struck him on his back between the shoulders and threw him down, making him fall forward into the Holy of Holies with his face to the ground. There he lay till his brother priests came and threw him out. Cf. B. Yoma, 1, 5. J. Z. Lauterbach" (Yoma, Soncino, p. 84, n. 6).
8. B. Yoma 19b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
9. Who may have come to observe the rites of the Day of Atonement.
10. The spittle defiled him, and he was unable to minister further.
11. Uncovering the hair was an act of immodesty, particularly for a married woman.
12. An attempt to reproduce the pun of kemahim and Kimhit. Literally: "All flours (kemahim) are coarse flours, but the flour of Kimhit is fine flour," that is, "Smiths are Smiths, but this one is a Smythe." B. Yoma 47a; PRKM 26:10; Lev. R. 20:11.
13. The teachers of Hillel and Shammai. According to one tradition, they were descendants of Sennacherib, a heathen.

to ask permission to leave, he said to them: May the descendants of heathens go in peace.[1] They replied: May the descendants of heathens who do the work of Aaron go in peace, but descendants of Aaron who do not do the work of Aaron are not to go in peace.[2]

The Lulav Cluster

82. In time past, how was [the rite of] the lulav fulfilled [on the Sabbath]? If the first day of the [Sukkot] Festival[3] fell on a Sabbath, the people brought their lulavim to the Temple Mount [on Friday], and the sextons received them and arranged them in rows on the benches that surrounded the Temple Mount,[4] while the elders laid theirs in a special chamber.[5] And the people were instructed to say, "Should anyone get my lulav in his hand, let it be his as a gift."[6] The next day, the people arrived early [at the Temple Mount], and the sextons threw the lulavim before them. They snatched at them and in doing so often came to blows. When the High Court saw that bringing the lulavim to the Temple Mount on a Friday had consequences that endangered human life, they ordained that [when the Festival fell on a Sabbath] each man should say the blessing over the lulav in his own home.

How was [the rite of] the willow branch carried out? There was a place below Jerusalem called Moza.[7] [Every day of the Festival] the people went down there and cut themselves young willow branches. Then they came and set these up at the sides of the altar, so that their tops were bent over the altar. After that, they sounded on the shofar a tekiah [a long blast], a teruah [tremulous blast], and again a tekiah. Every day [of the first six days of the Festival] they went around the altar once, saying, "We beseech Thee, O Lord, save now! We beseech Thee, O Lord, make us now to prosper!" (Ps. 118:25). But on the seventh day [Hoshana Rabbah], they went around the altar seven times. Before they departed, what did they say? "Yours, O altar, is the beauty! Yours, O altar, is the beauty!"[8]

As the rite was carried out on a weekday, so was it carried out on the Sabbath, except that the willow branches were cut on the eve of the Sabbath and placed in golden basins [filled with water], so that they might not wither. R. Yohanan ben Beroka said: On the seventh day, not willow branches but branches of palms were brought and beaten on the ground at the sides of the altar. That day was called "the Day of Beating the Palm Fronds."

Upon the conclusion of the rite, youngsters would pull the lulav clusters apart and eat the etrogim.[9]

1. An expression of his malice.
2. B. Yoma 71b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
3. Also referred to in this work as Feast of Tabernacles or Booths.
4. Above them there was a cover that provided shelter from rain.
5. To avoid the crush on the following day.
6. Since the blessing recited over it would be invalid if it belonged to someone else.
7. Cf. Josh. 18:26.
8. Since upon you are placed offerings that cleanse us of sin.
9. Suk 4:4–7.

The Water Libation

83. How was the water libation [performed]? A golden flagon with the capacity of three log was filled with water from the Siloam.[10] When they arrived at the water gate,[11] they sounded on the shofar a tekiah, a teruah, and again a tekiah. The priest [whose turn of duty it was] then went up the ramp [on the south side] of the altar and turned to his left, where there were two silver bowls. (R. Judah said: They were of plaster [but they looked like silver] because their surfaces were darkened from the wine.) Each bowl was pierced by a small snout; the snout of one bowl was wide and the snout of the other was narrow, so that both bowls could be emptied simultaneously [into the pits of the altar].[12] The bowl farther to the west was for water [and the libation was to be poured into it]; the bowl east of it was for wine. To [the priest] who performed the libation, they used to say, "Raise your hand high";[13] for one time a certain priest[14] poured out the water [not into the bowl, but] on his feet, and all the people pelted him with their etrogim.

As the rite was performed on weekdays, so was it performed on the Sabbath, except that on the eve of the Sabbath an unhallowed golden jar[15] was filled with water from the Siloam and put in a special chamber. If the water in that jar was spilled or uncovered, the jar had to be refilled from the laver,[16] for, upon being uncovered, both wine and water are unfit for the altar.[17]

84. Our masters taught: It once happened that a Sadducee [priest] poured the water libation on his feet, and all the people pelted him with their etrogim. On that day a horn of the altar was damaged.[18] A handful of salt was brought and the hole was stopped up; not that the altar was thereby rendered fit for use in the service, but merely in order that it not be seen in a damaged state. For, it should be noted, an altar that does not have its ramp, its horn,[19] its base,[20] and its square shape[21] is unfit for the service.[22]

10. A pool near Jerusalem.
11. One of the gates of the Temple Court.
12. The water was poured through the narrow snout, and the wine, being thick, through the wide snout. See B. Suk 48b.
13. So all may see that the water is poured into the bowl.
14. "A Sadducee. Josephus Antiquities 13.13.5 ascribes the incident to Alexander Yannai, king and high priest 107–76 B.C.E. The Sadducees denied the validity of this precept, and in this way he showed his contempt of the Pharisees" (Suk, Soncino, p. 226, n. 15).
15. That is, a jar in ordinary or household use. Water remaining in it overnight is fit for the rite. If, however, the water is in a hallowed jar—a vessel used in the Temple—water remaining in it overnight becomes unfit for use in the rite. See Men 7:4.
16. The laver (see Exod. 30:18) was, of course, a hallowed vessel. But on the eve of a festival it was lowered into a well, giving the water in it the status of well water and therefore fit for Temple use, even though it had remained in the laver overnight. See B. Yoma 37a.
17. Suk 4:9–10.
18. Because some of the etrogim struck it.
19. A projection of one cubic cubit at each of the four corners.
20. "A ledge of one cubit in width and one cubit in height from the ground round the altar" (Suk, Soncino, p. 229, n. 8).
21. See Exod. 27:1.
22. B. Suk 48b–49a.

The Rejoicing at the Place of the Water-drawing

85. He who has not seen the rejoicing at the place of the water-drawing has never in his life seen true rejoicing. At the conclusion of the first day of Sukkot, the priests and the Levites went down to the Women's Court,[1] where they put up an elaborate structure [to separate men from women].[2] In the Women's Court were also installed golden lampstands, each with four golden bowls at its top. Each lampstand had four ladders by which four novices of the priesthood, holding jars of oil, each jar containing one hundred and twenty log, were able to ascend to its top[3] and pour oil into each of its bowls. The wicks used by the novices to kindle the lamps were made out of priests' worn-out undergarments and sashes, which they tore into strips. [So abundant was the light that] there was no courtyard in Jerusalem that was not illumined by the light coming from the place of the water-drawing.

With burning torches in their hands,[4] men of piety and good deeds[5] used to dance in front of the people, singing songs and praises.[6] And Levites without number, with harps, lyres, cymbals, trumpets, and other musical instruments were there on the fifteen steps leading down from the Court of the Israelites to the Court of the Women. (The steps corresponded to the fifteen Songs of Ascents in the Psalms.)[7] It was on these steps[8] that the Levites stood with their musical instruments and played their music. Two priests stood by the upper gate, which leads down from the Court of the Israelites to the Court of the Women, each with a trumpet in his hand. When the cock crowed, they sounded a tekiah, a teruah, and again a tekiah.[9] When they reached the tenth step, they sounded a tekiah, a teruah, and a tekiah. When they reached the floor of the Women's Court, they sounded a tekiah, a teruah, and a tekiah. They proceeded, sounding their trumpets, until they reached the gate that leads out to the east. When they reached that gate, they turned their faces from east to west [toward the Temple] and proclaimed "[In the days of the First Temple] our forebears who were in this place [stood] with their backs toward the Temple of the Lord, their faces to the east, and they bowed low to the sun in the east.[10] But we—our eyes are turned to the Lord!" R. Judah stated: They used to repeat the last words and then say, "We are the Lord's, and our eyes are turned to the Lord."

When they separated one from the other, what did they say to one another? "The Lord bless thee out of Zion; and see thou the good of Jerusalem all the days of thy life; and see thy children's children. Peace be upon Israel!" (Ps. 128:5–6).[11]

86. It is taught of Hillel the Elder: When he celebrated during the rejoicing at the place of the water-drawing, he used to recite, "When I am here, everyone is here; but when I am not here, who is here? To the place that I love, there my feet lead me." The Holy One's response: If you come into My house, I will come into your house; if you come not into My house, I will not come into your house: "In every place where I cause My Name to be mentioned, I will come to thee and bless thee" (Exod. 20:21).[12]

87. Our masters taught: Some used to say, "Happy our youth, which has not disgraced our old age." These were the men of piety and good deeds. Others used to say, "Happy our old age, which has atoned for our youth." These were the penitents. Both the former and the latter used to say, "Happy is he who has not sinned; but let him who has sinned return, and the Lord will pardon him."[13]

88. It is reported of R. Simeon ben Gamaliel: When he celebrated during the rejoicing at the place of the water-drawing, he used to take eight burning torches in one hand and throw them into the air; as he threw one, he caught another, and not one torch touched the other. When he prostrated himself, he used to fix his thumbs firmly on the ground [and, while leaning on them], lower himself, kiss the ground, and draw himself up again, a feat that no other man could perform, and this is what is meant by the genuflexion called kiddah.[14]

89. R. Joshua ben Hananiah said: When we used to celebrate at the place of the water-drawing, we never had a wink of sleep. Why not? Because the first hour [was occupied with] the daily morning sacrifice; then we proceeded to prayers; then to the additional sacrifice; then to the prayers at the additional sacrifice; then to the house of study; then to eating and drinking; then to the afternoon prayer; then to the daily twilight sacrifice; after that to the [all night] celebration at the place of rejoicing.[15]

The King's Passage in Scripture

90. At the end of the first day of Sukkot in the eighth year following a seven-year cycle, a wooden dais upon which the king is seated is erected in the Temple Court. The synagogue sexton takes a Torah scroll and gives it to the head of the synagogue, the head of the synagogue gives it to the deputy high priest, the deputy high priest gives

---

1. See Mid 2:5.
2. Above the Court, balconies were erected for the women.
3. Each lampstand was fifty cubits high.
4. They threw up and caught again four or eight torches. So Rashi, ad loc.
5. Or, "miracle workers." See below in this chapter, §87, and part 2, chap. 11, §68.
6. See below in this chapter, §87.
7. Ps. 120–134.
8. And not at the side of the altar, where they served when sacrifices were offered.
9. The signal to set out for the Siloam to draw the water of libation.
10. Cf. Ezek. 8:16.
11. Suk 5:1–5; Tos Suk 4:9.
12. B. Suk 53a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
13. Ibid.
14. B. Suk 53a.
15. Ibid.; P. Suk 5:2, 55b.

it to the high priest, and the high priest gives it to the king. The king stands up to receive it and then sits down and reads.

King Agrippa[1] stood up as he received it, and read standing, for which the sages praised him. When he reached "Thou mayest not put a foreigner over thee who is not thy brother" (Deut. 17:15), tears flowed from his eyes.[2] They said to him: Fear not, Agrippa, you are our brother, you are our brother.

It is taught in the name of R. Nathan: In that instant, Israel[3] made themselves liable to extermination, because they flattered Agrippa.[4]

The Eighth Day Festival [Shemini Atzeret] and the Night Following the Seventh Day of Sukkot

91. "On the eighth day ye shall have a festival for yourselves" (Num. 29:35). This verse is to be considered in the light of what Scripture says elsewhere: "In return for my love, for prayer offered by me, they nevertheless are my adversaries" (Ps. 109:4). During the seven days of Sukkot, Israel offer seventy bullocks for the seventy nations. One might therefore have expected them to love us. But not only do they not love us—they hate us. Therefore the Holy One said to Israel: During the seven days of Sukkot, you have been bringing offerings to Me in behalf of the seventy nations. Now bring offerings in your own behalf only. "On the eighth day ye shall have a festival for yourselves."

"Ye shall present a burnt offering . . . one bullock, one ram" (Num. 29:36). A parable: A king arranged a feast to last seven days and invited all the people of the province to the seven days of feasting. After the seven days of feasting were over, he said to his friend: Now that we have discharged our obligation to the people of the province, you and I will make do with whatever you find—a bit of meat, a fish, some greens. So, too, the Holy One said to Israel: All the offerings you brought during the seven days of Sukkot you brought in behalf of the nations of the world. But now—"on the eighth day—ye shall have a festival for yourselves." Make do with what you find—one bullock, one ram.[5]

92. R. Isaac bar Avdimi said: On the night following the seventh day of Sukkot, all gazed upon the smoke rising from the pile of wood [on the altar]. If the smoke inclined toward the north, poor people rejoiced and the prosperous ones were dejected, because the rains of the coming year were going to be excessive, and fruits would have to be left to rot.[6] If the smoke inclined toward the south, poor people were dejected and the prosperous ones rejoiced, because the rains of the coming year were going to be scanty, and the fruit would be preserved. If the smoke turned toward the east, everyone rejoiced;[7] if toward the west, all were dejected.[8]

Festival Pilgrimage to Jerusalem

93. Rava said: What is meant by "How beautiful are thy feet in sandals" (Song 7:2)? How beautiful are the feet of Israel when they go up in pilgrimage.[9]

94. "No man shall covet they land when thou goest up [to appear before the Lord thy God]" (Exod. 34:24). The verse implies that your heifer will graze in the pasture and no wild beast will hurt it; your hen will go grubbing in the dungheap and no weasel will harm it.

Once, a man forgot to lock the doors of his house when he went up on a pilgrimage. When he returned, he found a serpent entwined in the ring handles of his door.

On another occasion, a man forgot to bring his chickens into the house when he went up on a pilgrimage. When he returned, he found some cats torn to pieces in front of them.

On still another occasion, a man forgot to bring a stack of wheat into the house when he went up on a pilgrimage. When he returned, he found lions standing guard around it.

There is a story of two wealthy brothers in Ashkelon who had two invidious gentile neighbors. The neighbors said: When these Jews go up to pray in Jerusalem, we will go into their houses, ransack them, and take everything they have. The time came when the two brothers went up on their pilgrimage, whereupon God appointed two angels in their likeness to go in and out of their houses. When the brothers returned from Jerusalem, they sent their neighbors gifts out of all they brought back with them from Jerusalem. The neighbors asked, "Where have you been?" The brothers, "In Jerusalem." "When did you go up?" "On such-and-such a day." "When did you come back?" "On such-and-such a day." "Whom did you leave in your house?" "We left no one." The neighbors: "Blessed be the God of the Jews, who did not leave them and does not ever leave them."[10]

95. R. Isaac said: Why are there no fruits like those of Gennesaret[11] in Jerusalem? So that the pilgrims should not say, "Had we gone up to Jerusalem only to eat the fruits of Gennesaret, it would have been enough," with the result that the pilgrimage would not have been undertaken for its own sake.

Similarly, R. Dostai son of R. Yannai said: Why are hot springs like those of Tiberias not found in Jerusalem? So that the pilgrims should not say, "Had we gone up only in order to bathe in the hot springs of Tiberias, it would

---

1. Agrippa I, probably in 41 C.E.
2. On his father's side, he was not of Jewish descent.
3. Literally (and euphemistically), "the enemies of Israel."
4. B. Sot 41a–b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
5. Tanhuma B, Pinhas, §14–15.
6. So the poor would be able to buy them cheaply.
7. Since it indicated normal rainfall and normal prices.
8. Because the east wind dries up the seeds and causes famine. B. BB 147a; B. Yoma 21b.
9. They must wear sandals for such a journey. B. Hag 3a.
10. B. Pes 8b; P. Pe 3:7, 17d; Song R. 7:2, §1.
11. A lake so named from the fertile plain lying on its western side. The biblical and modern name is Yam Kinneret.

have been enough," with the result that the pilgrimage would not have been undertaken for its own sake.[1]

Pilgrimage to Jerusalem during the Time of an Adverse Decree

96. It is reported that the ruling power once decreed that Israel not bring their firstfruits to Jerusalem and, to prevent Israel from going up on pilgrimages for the festivals, placed guardposts on the roads, as Jeroboam son of Nebat had done. What did the pious and sin-fearing men of that generation do? They took the baskets of firstfruits, covered them with dried figs, and put them, as well as a pestle, on their shoulders. When they reached the guardposts and were asked, "Where are you going?" they replied, "We are going to make two cakes of pressed figs in the mortar yonder with the pestle on our shoulders." As soon as they passed the guards, they rearranged their baskets in ornamental display and brought them to Jerusalem.[2] These pious men are known as the family of pestle smugglers and fig pressers.[3]

Another time, the ruling power decreed that Israel should not bring wood for the altar and, to prevent Israel from going up on pilgrimage for festivals, placed guardposts on the roads, as Jeroboam son of Nebat had done. What did the pious and God-fearing men of that generation do? They took cuts of wood and made them into ladders (sullamot), which they put on their shoulders and proceeded thus. When they reached the guardposts and were asked, "Where are you going?" they replied, "We are going with these ladders on our shoulders to fetch young pigeons from the dovecote yonder." As soon as they passed the guards, they took the ladders apart and brought the wood to Jerusalem. They are known as "the family of Sulmai ha-Netotzati [the family that took ladders apart]."[4]

It is of them and of men like them that Scripture says, "The memory of the righteous shall be for a blessing" (Prov. 10:7); and of Jeroboam and his companions, the verse adds, "But the name of the wicked shall rot.[5]

97. On the twenty-second of Shevat the decree requiring worship of idols, which the enemy intended to bring into the Temple Hall, was nullified. On that day, there is to be no public mourning.

The news that on a certain day Caligula had sent idols to be set up in the Temple Hall[6] reached Jerusalem on the eve of the first day of Tabernacles. Simeon the Mild[7] said: Observe the days of your Festival with joy, for not one of the things you heard will come to pass. For He who has made His Name dwell in this house will perform miracles for us at this time, even as He performed miracles for our fathers in each and every generation. At that, a voice was heard out of the Holy of Holies, saying, "The worship of idols in the Temple is nullified—Caligula has been slain, and his decrees are nullified." The precise hour these words were spoken was set down in writing.

When it became evident that [Caligula] Caesar's soldiers were slowly coming closer to Jerusalem, one of the Jewish leaders said, "Go and meet them [and attempt to stop them].[8] As soon as the leader's word became known, all the Jewish notables assembled, went out to Caligula's legate, and said, "All of us are ready to die rather than have this decree imposed upon us." As they kept crying aloud and beseeching the legate, he responded, "Instead of crying aloud and beseeching a mere emissary, why don't you plead and cry aloud to your God in heaven to help you?"

As the legate approached one city after another, he saw people coming toward him from each city. At the sight of them he was overwhelmed, saying, "How numerous they are!" The informers told him, "These are Jews going out from each of the cities to confront you." However, when the legate came into each city, he saw men lying in sackcloth and ashes in its marketplaces.

No sooner did he reach Antipatris than a letter came apprising him that Caligula had been assassinated and his decrees nullified. At that, the Jews seized the idols and dragged them through the streets.

That day was declared a festal day.[9]

The Cleverness of the People of Jerusalem

98. "She that was numerous among the nations" (Lam. 1:1). But has it not just been said, "She whose people was numerous"? What, then, is implied by saying again, "She that was numerous (rabbati) among the nations"? Here rabbati means not "numerous" but "superior in intellect." R. Huna said in the name of R. Yose: Whenever a Jerusalemite went into the provinces, they provided him with a high-backed chair to sit on, in order to listen to his wisdom.

Once, when a Jerusalemite went to a certain province, he became aware that the time of his death was near. So he summoned the owner of the house where he was lodging and entrusted him with his money, saying, "If my son comes from Jerusalem and performs three clever acts in your presence, give him the money; otherwise, do not give it to him." Presently the man died and departed to his eternal rest. After a while, his son arrived. (Now, it was the practice among the inhabitants of this city that not one of them would point out the house of a neighbor to any stranger who inquired for it.) When the son reached the gate of that city and saw a man carrying a load of twigs, he asked, "Will you sell me that load?" The man answered, "Yes." "Then take the money for it and carry it to So-and-so." The man took the money and set out to carry the

---

1. P. Pes 8b.
2. See above in this chapter, §74.
3. Ta 4:5.
4. See Ezra 2:46 and 1 Chron. 2:54.
5. B. Ta 28a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
6. In 41 C.E.
7. A high priest under Agrippa I. See Josephus Antiquities 19.7.4 and Ben-Zion Luria, ed. Megillat Ta (Jerusalem, 1964), p. 186.
8. Unlike Simeon, who believed in miracles, he relied on political action (Luria, ed. Megillat Ta, p. 187).
9. Megillat Ta 11.

twigs to the courtyard named. As he walked, the son followed him, until they arrived at that courtyard. Then the man called to the owner of the house, "Ho, there, come and receive this load of twigs!" The owner of the house replied, "Did I ask you to bring me a load of twigs?" The man said, "True, you did not tell me to do so; but the person behind me did—the load belongs to him." Immediately the owner of the house opened his home to the son, and they greeted each other.

This was the first clever act.

Then the owner of the house asked him, "Who are you?" He replied, "I am the son of the man who died in your house." The householder took him in and prepared a meal for him. Now, this householder had two sons and two daughters. When the meal was ready, the householder set before the Jerusalemite's son five young chickens as the main course, and as they were about to begin the meal, the host said to his guest, "You divide the portions and serve." The guest answered, "It is not mine [that I should be serving]." The householder said, "Please, it is my wish that you divide and serve." At that, the guest divided one chicken between the man and his wife, a second between the two sons, a third between the two daughters, and set two before himself. They ate without making any comment.

That was the second clever act.

In the evening the host brought in a fat hen for supper and again asked the guest to serve it. Again he replied, "It is not mine." The host again said, "It is my wish that you divide the hen and serve it." At that, the guest served the head to the host, the entrails to the wife, the two legs to the two sons, and the two wings to the two daughters, and set the rest of the hen's body before himself.

That was the third clever act.

The host inquired, "Is this how people portion out food where you come from? The first time you served, I said nothing to you. So now you do it again the same way." The Jerusalemite's son replied, "Did I not say to you that the food was not mine? Nevertheless, what I was asked to serve, I apportioned properly. The first time, five chickens were served for the meal. You, your wife, and one chicken add up to three; your two sons and one chicken add up to three; your two daughters and one chicken add up to three; and I and two chickens add up to three. So can you say that I have taken any part of your portion? This time, a hen was served for supper. I took the head and gave it to you, because you are the head of the household. I took the entrails and set them before your wife, because children issue from the womb. I took the two legs and gave them to your two sons, because they are the pillars of the house. I took the two wings and gave them to your two daughters, because in the future they will fly away from your house and go to their husbands. I took the [rest of the hen's body, which is shaped like a] boat, because I came in a boat and will leave in a boat. Now come and give me my money, which my father entrusted to you, and I will leave right away." The host turned over his money to him, and he departed in peace.[1]

99. Our masters taught: It once happened that two Jerusalemites were taken captive on Mount Carmel, and their captor was walking behind them. One of them said to the other, "The camel walking in front of us is blind in one eye and is laden with two skins, one containing wine and the other oil. And of the two men who lead it, one is a Jew and the other a heathen." Their captor, sharply, "You arrogant fellows, how do you know this?" They replied, "Because, from the grasses in front of him, this camel eats only on the side he can see, and not on the side he cannot see. He is laden with two skins, one containing wine and the other, oil—wine drips and is absorbed [into the ground], while oil drips and remains on the surface. As for the two men leading it, one is a Jew, the other, a heathen—a heathen eases himself on the roadway, while a Jew turns aside."

The captor hastened after the two men leading the camel and found that it was as his captives had said. At that, he kissed the captives on their heads, brought them to his house, and prepared a great feast at which he danced in attendance before them as he exclaimed, "Blessed be He who chose the seed of Abraham and imparted to them some of His wisdom, so that, wherever they go, they tower over their masters!"

Then he freed them, and they returned to their homes in peace.[2]

100. A story of a heathen who in the Land of Israel took two children captive and made them run before his horse. When the heathen reached the gateway of Rome, one child said to his companion, "I smell Judean leek-heads cooking in a pot made in Kefar Hananiah." This angered their master, who said, "Your God could not put up with you, so how will I be able to?" As he was cursing them, a royal emissary approached and the heathen asked him, "Where did you come from?" The emissary: "I have just come from Judea in one day." The heathen: "How could you come in one day from Judea, a distance of four hundred parasangs?" The emissary: "A wind favored the ship, and I arrived in one day. If you don't believe me, here are some Judean leek-heads being cooked in a pot. I have not yet tasted them."

When the children's captor came into his home, his mother got busy and killed a lamb, preparing all kinds of dishes for her son, and opened a cask of wine. As he was reclining for the meal, with the two children standing over him, one said to his companion, "Look, the smell of this meat is like the smell of a dog, and the smell of the wine is like the stench of a corpse." [When the heathen heard these words], he asked his mother, "What kind of meat is this?" She replied, "I had a ewe that was giving birth to a lamb, and it died while giving birth. So our bitch suckled the lamb until it grew up. Now I killed it, and you are dining on it." Then he asked, "What kind of wine is this?" She replied, "This wine is from the vineyard that extends over your father's grave. Of all the vineyards your father left you, no other yields wine as good. So I filled one cask for you from that vineyard. I plugged the cask, sealed it, and said: I will not open it until my son comes back. Now, when I saw you, I rejoiced greatly and opened the cask."

[1] Lam. R. 1:1, §4.

[2] B. Sanh 104a–b.

The heathen ate and drank, greatly pleased with the two children he had brought back with him.

After he got through eating and drinking, he stood up and danced around. One of the children said to his companion, "Look, the feet of our master are like the feet of a circus clown—his mother must have fornicated with a song-and-dance man to give birth to this one."

When the heathen heard this, he grabbed a sword, went to his mother, and asked her, "Whose son am I?" She: "My son, you are your father's son." He: "If you won't tell me the truth, I will kill you." She: "Don't kill me. I'll tell you the truth. Your father was unable to beget, and I was afraid that the kinsmen might take away my estate.[1] One day your father brought this song-and-dance man, whose singing was sweet. So I conceived from him and gave birth to you. Did I not do well by bringing you to inherit all this wealth?" Upon hearing what she told him, he said, "I brought with me a pair who may reveal my shame to the neighbors."

He went out to the children and said, "Go in peace. I am not worthy of being waited on by such as you." He gave them all kinds of food and provisions for the journey, escorted them, and then returned to his home. After that, his mind was at peace.[2]

101. A Jerusalemite went to see a certain merchant in Athens. On his arrival, he put up at a shop[3] where he found several persons sitting and drinking wine. After he had eaten and drunk, he wished to go to bed. They said to him, "We have agreed among ourselves not to allow a guest to stay until he has made three long-distance jumps." He replied, "How do I know what you consider a long-distance jump. Let one of you get up, do it before me, and I will do likewise." One of them stood up and jumped, and found himself in the middle of the shop; he jumped again, and found himself at the shop's entrance; he jumped a third time, and found himself outside. The Jerusalemite got up, bolted the door in his face, and said to the others, "By your lives, what you intended to do to me, I have done to you.[4]

102. An Athenian came to Jerusalem, where he met a child to whom he gave a few coppers, saying, "Go and bring me something of which I can eat my fill and have enough left over to take on my journey." The child went and brought him salt. The man asked the child, "Did I tell you to bring me salt?" The child replied, "But did you not tell me to go and bring you something of which you can eat your fill but have enough left over to take on your journey? By your life, there is enough for you here to eat your fill and leave an ample supply to take on your journey!"[5]

103. An Athenian came to Jerusalem, where he found a broken mortar which had been thrown away. He picked it up and took it to a tailor, saying, "Sew this broken mortar for me." The tailor scooped up a handful of sand and said, "Twist this into threads for me, and I will sew it."[6]

104. An Athenian came to Jerusalem, where he met a child, to whom he gave a few coppers, saying, "Bring me eggs and cheese." On the child's return, the man said to him, "Show me which cheese is from a white goat and which from a black goat." The child replied, "You are a man well on in years, so show me which egg is from a white hen and which from a black hen!"[7]

105. An Athenian came to Jerusalem and went into a school, where he found the children sitting without their teacher. He put some questions to them, which they answered. Then they said to him, "Come, let us agree among ourselves that if one of us asks a question that the other is unable to answer, he will win the other's garments." He said, "Very well." They said, "You ask first, since you are older than we." He replied, "You ask first, since you belong here." So they said to him, "Identify the following: nine go out but only eight come in, two pour but only one drinks, while twenty-four are ready to serve." He was unable to respond, and so the children took his garments from him. He then went to the home of R. Yohanan, their teacher, and complained to him, "Hey, master, what dreadful mischief there is among you! When a stranger comes into your midst, you apparently rob him of his garments!" R. Yohanan answered, "Did the children put a question to you that you were unable to answer, and they took your garments from you?" "Yes." "What was the question they asked you?" He related it to him, and the teacher explained, "My son, the nine that go in are the nine months of gestation, and the eight that come out are the eight days of circumcision; the two that pour are the two breasts, and the one who drinks is the child that is born; and the twenty-four that are ready to serve are the twenty-four months of nursing." At that, the Athenian went back to the school, gave the answer, and regained his garments. The children, taunting him, quoted, "If ye had not plowed with my heifer, ye had not found out my riddle" (Judg. 14:18).[8]

106. An Athenian went to Jerusalem and upon his return ridiculed its inhabitants. When the Jerusalemites heard this, they said, "Who will go and bring him back to us?" One volunteered: "I will go and bring him back with his head shaved." The Jerusalemite went to Athens and was

1. That is, her widow's right to her husband's estate.
2. Yalkut, Lam., §1004.
3. A food and wine shop with rooms for overnight guests.
4. Lam. R. 1:1, §5.
5. Lam. R. 1:1, §7.
6. Lam. R. 1:1, §8.
7. Lam. R. 1:1, §9.
8. Lam. R. 1:1, §11.

given hospitality by that man. In the morning, the two went out to walk in the marketplace. When one of the Jerusalemite's sandals broke, he said to a workman, "Take this tremis[1] and repair the sandal." The Athenian asked, "Are sandals so costly where you live?" "Yes." "How many denars do they cost?" "Nine or ten. Even when cheap, seven or eight denars." The Athenian asked, "If I were to come to your city with a stock of sandals, would they sell?" "Certainly," he answered, "only do not enter the city without first informing me."

So the Athenian went and bought a stock of sandals, set forth for Jerusalem, and sat down at the gate of the city. He sent for the Jerusalemite, who came to him. When he arrived, the Jerusalemite said, "We have agreed among ourselves that nobody may enter to sell his wares unless his head is shaved and his face blackened." The Athenian replied, "What do I care if my head is shaved, so long as I sell my goods!" After shaving his head, the Jerusalemite took him and seated him in the middle of the marketplace. When a customer came to buy sandals of him and asked him, "How much is this pair of sandals?" he would answer, "Ten denars—well, nine denars; but I will not take less than eight." On hearing this, each would-be purchaser struck him on his head with a sandal and went away without buying. The Athenian said to the Jerusalemite, "Did I treat you so badly when you were in my place?"[2] The Jeusalemite replied, "Henceforth, do not ridicule the men of Jerusalem."[3]

107. It happened that Israel had need of a Red Heifer and could not find one; at long last they found one at a heathen's. They went to him and said, "Sell us the heifer you have." He replied, "Give me my price for her and take her." "And what is your price for her?" "Four gold coins at the most." They replied, "We shall pay it." While they went to fetch the money, the heathen guessed for what purpose they needed the heifer. And so when they came back and brought the money, he said to them, "I will not sell her to you." They asked, "Perhaps you wish to increase the price? If so, we will pay you all you require."

When the scoundrel realized that they were pressing for the heifer, he kept raising the price. When they said, "Take five gold coins," he did not want to. "Take ten, take twenty, thirty, fifty, a hundred," he still refused to sell, until they reached a thousand. He consented to sell them the heifer for a thousand gold coins. Having finally come to an agreement, they once again went to fetch the gold coins for him.

What did the wicked man do then? He said to another heathen, a boon companion of his, "Come and see how I shall fool these Jews. The only reason they are trying to get the heifer from me and are willing to pay me all that money is because a yoke has never been put on her neck. I will take the yoke, put it on her neck, have some fun at their expense, and get their money just the same." Here is what he did: he took the yoke and put it on the heifer for the entire night. Now, this is the sign that shows that a heifer has never borne a yoke: on her neck, in the place where the yoke is set, are two particular hairs which stand upright as long as she has never borne a yoke. But as soon as a yoke is set upon her neck, the two hairs are at once bent down. And there is still another sign of her never having borne a yoke. As long as no yoke has been on her, both eyes look straight ahead. After a yoke has been upon her, her eyes have an anxious look as she turns her head and rolls her eyes, straining to see the yoke.[4]

When they came back with all the gold in their hands to take the heifer from the heathen, he went in and, first removing the yoke from the heifer, led her out to them. As soon as he led her out, they proceeded to examine her and saw that the two particular hairs that should have been straight were bent down and that her eyes were rolling back because the yoke had been on her.

They said to him, "Take your heifer. We cannot use her now. We will not accept her even if you give her to us for nothing."

When the wicked heathen saw that they were returning his heifer to him and that he had come out with hands empty of all those gold coins, the very mouth that had said, "I will have my fun at their expense," proceeded to say, "Blessed be He who has chosen this nation." Then he went into his house, strung up a rope, and hanged himself.[5]

108. R. Joshua was once walking along a highway and met a child holding a covered dish. He asked, "What have you in that covered dish?" The child replied, "If my mother had wanted you to know, she would not have said to me, 'Cover it.' "

When R. Joshua entered the city, he met a little girl standing and filling her pitcher from a well. He said to her, "Give me some water to drink." She: "For you as well as for your ass."

After he had drunk and was turning to go on his way, he said, "My daughter, you acted like Rebekah." She: "I acted like Rebekah, but you did not act like Eliezer."[6]

---

1. A Roman coin, a third of an aureus, which was a gold piece. He paid him an absurdly high price.
2. He understood now that a trick had been played on him.
3. Lam. R. 1:1, §13.
4. See H. Yalon, "PLL and PLPL in Hebrew and Aramaic" [Hebrew], Tarbitz 6 (1935): 225–26.
5. PR 14:1 (YJS 1: 280–81); Tanhuma B, Hukkat, §3.
6. Isaac's servant who rewarded Rebekah's kindness with the gift of a gold nose ring and gold bands for her arms; see Gen. 24. Lam R. 1:1, §19.

CHAPTER TEN

THE DESTRUCTION OF THE SECOND TEMPLE AND OF THE LAND

The Years before the Destruction

1. Our masters taught: During the forty years preceding the destruction of the Temple, the lot "For the Lord"[1] did not come up in the high priest's right hand, nor did the crimson strand turn white, nor did the westernmost lamp burn continually. And [ominously] the doors of the Temple Hall would open by themselves, until Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai reprimanded them, saying, "Temple Hall, Temple Hall, why do you yourself keep sounding the alarm? I already know about you, that you are to be destroyed, for long ago Zechariah, a descendant of Iddo, prophesied to you, 'Open thy doors, O Lebanon[2] [whitener of sins], that the fire may devour thy cedars' " (Zech. 11:1).[3]

Why the Land Was Destroyed

2. R. Yohanan said: What demonstrates the truth of the verse "Happy is the man that feareth alway, but he that hardeneth his heart shall fall into mischief" (Prov. 28:14)? The fact that the destruction of Jerusalem came about through a Kamtza and a Bar Kamtza, that the destruction of King's Mountain[4] came about through a cock and a hen, that the destruction of Bethar came about through the shaft of a royal litter.

The destruction of Jerusalem came about through a Kamtza and a Bar Kamtza in this way. A certain man, who had a friend named Kamtza and an enemy named Bar Kamtza, once arranged a banquet and said to his servant, "Go and bring Kamtza." But the servant [mistakenly] went and brought Bar Kamtza. When the host found his enemy Bar Kamtza seated in his home, he said, "You hate me, so what are you doing here? Pick yourself up and get out!" Bar Kamtza: "Now that I am here, let me stay, and I will pay you for whatever I eat and drink." The host: "No!" Bar Kamtza: "Then let me give you half the cost of your banquet." "No, sir!" "I will pay the full cost for your entire banquet." "Under no circumstances!" Then the host grabbed Bar Kamtza by his arm, pulled him up from his seat, and threw him out.

The ousted Bar Kamtza said to himself: Since the sages sitting there did not stop him, it would seem that what happened met with their approval. So I will go to the king and inform against them. He went and said to Caesar, "The Jews are about to rebel against you." Caesar: "How can one prove such an accusation?" Bar Kamtza: "Send them an offering [for their Temple] and see whether they will be willing to offer it." So Caesar sent a fine calf with Bar Kamtza. While on the way, Bar Kamtza inflicted a blemish on its upper lip, or, some say, injured its eye, in a place where we [Jews] count it a blemish but heathens do not. The sages were inclined to offer it in order to maintain peace with the government. But R. Zechariah ben Avkulas protested, "People will say that blemished animals may be offered on the altar." Then it was proposed to have Bar Kamtza assassinated, so that he would not continue to inform against them. Again R. Zechariah ben Avkulas demurred: "Is one who makes a blemish on consecrated animals to be put to death?" (R. Yohanan was to remark: The scrupulousness of R. Zechariah ben Avkulas, as well as his forebearance, destroyed our [holy] house, burned our Temple Hall, and caused us to be exiled from our Land.)

Presently Nero Caesar advanced against the Jews. When he got close [to Jerusalem], he shot an arrow toward the east, and it turned back and fell in Jerusalem. He then shot another arrow toward the west, and it too turned and fell in Jerusalem. And the same thing happened when he shot toward the other points of the compass. Then he said to a [Jewish] boy, "Recite [the last] verse of Scripture you learned." The boy: "And I will lay My vengeance upon Edom by the hand of My people Israel" (Ezek. 25:14). Hearing that, Nero said to himself: The Holy One desires to lay waste His house and wipe His hands clean on me. So he ran away and became a proselyte. R. Meir was descended from him.

Then Vespasian [who was eventually to become] Caesar advanced against them. He laid siege to Jerusalem for three years. Three men of great wealth, Nakdimon ben Gorion, Ben Kalba Savua, and Ben Tzitzit ha-Keset, lived in Jerusalem. Nakdimon ben Gorion was so called because the sun continued shining (nakedah) for his sake.[5] Ben Kalba Savua was so called because one would go into his house hungry as a dog (kelev) and come out full (savea). Ben Tzitzit ha-Keset was so called because his fringes (tzitzit) used to trail on cushions (keset).[6] One of the three said, "I will keep the people of Jerusalem in wheat and

---

1. See above, chap. 9, §75.
2. Lebanon is another name for the Temple Hall, because the word Levanon means "whitener [of sins]."
3. B. Yoma 39b.
4. "The whole mountainous region stretching from the Valley of Jezrael to the south of Judah, including the mountains of Samaria (Israel Horowitz, as cited by Isidore Epstein in Git, Soncino, pp. 254–55, n. 4).
5. An official of the Roman government offered Nakdimon water from cisterns for the use of pilgrims, with the stipulation that on a certain day that water was to be replenished by Nakdimon. If unable to do so, Nakdimon was to pay gold in lieu of the water. When the due day came, Nakdimon had no water. But as the day was drawing to a close, rain began to fall, and for Nakdimon's sake the sun broke through the clouds, thus lengthening the day, until the cisterns were filled again—on the day promised.
6. Which were put on the pavement before him as he walked.

barley." A second said, "I will keep them in wine, oil, and salt." The third said, "I will keep them in firewood." (The sages considered the offer of wood the most generous. They pointed out that R. Hisda [used to hand all his keys to his servant, except the one to the woodbin, for, he] would say, "To bake one load of wheat requires sixty loads of wood.")

When the three men inspected their storehouses, they figured they could maintain the city for twenty-one years.

At that time the Zealots dominated the city. When the sages said to them, "Let us go out and make peace with the Romans," they did not allow them to, saying, "No, we will go out and fight them." The sages countered, "Such an attempt will accomplish nothing at all for us." But the Zealots rose up and burned the stores of wheat and barley, so that presently a famine ensued [in the city].

Martha daughter of Boethus, who was one of the richest women in Jerusalem, sent out her manservant, saying, "Go and bring me some fine flour." By the time he went, the fine flour was sold out. He came back and told her, "There is no fine flour, but there is plain white bread." She said to him, "Go and bring me some." By the time he went, he found the white bread also sold out. He came back again and told her, "There is no white bread, but there is coarse black bread." She said to him, "Go and bring me some." By the time he went, that, too, was sold out. He returned and said to her, "There is no coarse black bread, but there is barley flour." She said, "Go and bring me some." By the time he went, this also was sold out. Even though [she was partly undressed], having taken off her shoes, she said, "I will go out and see if I can find anything at all to eat." [So out she rushed.] Then, when some dung stuck to her foot, [her revulsion was such] that she died. To the way she died, Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai applied the verse "She who is most tender and delicate among you, so tender and delicate that she never ventured to set a bare foot on the ground" (Deut. 28:56). Some report that she found a bone-dry fig discarded by R. Zadok, tried to eat it, choked, and died. As Martha was dying, she brought out all her gold and silver, and threw it into the street, saying, "What good is this to me?" To her applies the verse "They shall cast their silver in the streets" (Ezek. 7:19).

What was special about a dried fig discarded by R. Zadok? R. Zadok observed [continual] fasts for forty years, in order that Jerusalem might not be destroyed. He became so emaciated that when he ate anything at all, the food could be seen going down his gullet. When he wanted to restore himself, they would bring him dried figs, and he could only suck the juice and throw the figs away.

When Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai went out to walk in the marketplace and saw men of Jerusalem stewing straw and drinking its water, he said to himself: Can men who are reduced to cooking straw and drinking its water withstand Vespasian's troops? Matters cannot be remedied unless I go out of the city [and attempt to make peace with the Romans].

Abba Sicara[1] ben Battiah, head of the Zealots in Jerusalem, was the son of Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai's sister. Rabban Yohanan sent word to him: "Come to visit me in secret." When Abba Sicara came, Rabban Yohanan asked him, "How long will you men continue what you are doing? You are killing all the people by famine." Abba Sicara replied, "What choice have I? If I dare object to them, they will kill me." Rabban Yohanan: "Devise a scheme for me to leave the city. Perhaps the saving of a few lives may still be possible." Abba Sicara: "We have agreed among ourselves that no man may leave the city except as a corpse." Rabban Yohanan: "Then have me taken out as a corpse." Abba Sicara ben Battiah: "Pretend to be ill, and let everyone come to visit you. Have something foul-smelling brought and put at your side, so that they will say, 'Rabban Yohanan is dead!' Then let your disciples come and carry the casket [with you in it]. Make sure that others are not allowed to carry it, so that your body's light weight will not be noticed. It is well known that a living body weighs less than a corpse."

Rabban Yohanan acted on Abba Sicara's advice. He sent for his disciples R. Eliezer and R. Joshua, and said to them, "Bestir yourselves, my children, and have me taken out of Jerusalem. Make a coffin for me, and I will lie down in it." Presently R. Eliezer took hold of the upper part of the coffin and R. Joshua of its lower part, and they carried it slowly along until the setting of the sun, when they reached the gates of Jerusalem. Some of the Sicarii guards asked, "Who is this?" The disciples: "A dead body. Don't you know that dead bodies may not be kept overnight in Jerusalem?"[2] Some of the Sicarii wanted to drive a dagger through the body, but Abba Sicara restrained them: "It will be said of you, 'They pierced their master.' " Then they wanted to push the body about, but again he restrained them: "It will be said of you, 'They pushed their master about.' " So they opened the gate for the coffin, and it left the city.

The disciples continued to carry the coffin until they got to Vespasian. When they opened the coffin, R. Yohanan stood up before him and said, "Peace to you, O king! Peace to you, O king!" Vespasian replied, "Your life is forfeit on two counts. To begin with, you call me king, and I am not a king. Moreover, if I am a king, why did you not come to me until now?" R. Yohanan replied, "As for your saying that you are not a king, you are in fact a king. If you were not a king, Jerusalem would not be delivered into your hand, for it is written, 'And Lebanon[3] shall fall by a mighty one' [Isa. 10:34], and the epithet 'mighty one' is applied only to a king. As for your question, 'If I am a king, why did you not come to me till now?'—the Zealots among us did not let me." Vespasian asked, "If there is a jar of honey around which a draco[4] is coiled, would not the jar be broken to get rid of the draco?" Rabban Yohanan did not respond. (R. Joseph—some say R. Akiva—applied to him the verse "[God] turneth wise men backward, and maketh their knowledge

[1] Abba Sicara means "the chief of the Sicarii, (daggermen)," the epithet given to the Zealots.

[2] See below, part 3, chap. 2, §116.

[3] The Temple, "that which makes Israel's sins white (malbin)."

[4] A brilliantly colored flying lizard. The idea is a metaphor for the Zealots.

foolish" [Isa. 44:25]. He should have responded, "We take a pair of tongs, grip the draco, and kill it, leaving the jar intact.")

Some say there were four generals at that confrontation: the general of the Arabs, whose name was Pangar; the general of Africa; the general of Alexandria; and the general of Palestine. These began setting forth parables before Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai: "If a snake nests in an amphora, how is the snake[1] to be dealt with?" He replied, "A charmer should be brought to charm the snake and leave the amphora intact." To which Pangar retorted, "The snake should be killed, even if that means breaking the amphora." Then the generals asked, "If a snake nests in a tower, how is the snake to be dealt with?" Rabban Yohanan replied, "A charmer should be brought to charm the snake, and leave the tower intact." Again Pangar retorted, "The snake should be killed, even if the tower has to be set on fire." Rabban Yohanan then said to Pangar, "All neighbors who do harm [to others] find that they have done it to themselves.[2] Not only do you not speak in our defense, you even argue for the prosecution against us." Pangar replied, "I seek only your good, for so long as the Temple stands, the heathen kingdoms will strive against you. Once it is destroyed, they will no longer do so." Rabban Yohanan said to him, "Only your heart knows whether you are on the level or in league with the devil."[3]

At this point a messenger came from Rome to Vespasian and said, "Arise! Caesar is dead, and the notables of Rome have decided to make you head of the state." Vespasian had just finished putting on one boot, but when he tried to put on the other, his foot could not get into it; then, when he tried to take off the first boot, he could not pull his foot out of it. Vespasian said, "What is the meaning of this?" Rabban Yohanan replied, "Be not distressed. The good news has done it, as Scripture says, 'Good tidings make the bones fat' [Prov. 15:30]. How may your condition be remedied? Let someone you dislike come and pass before you, for Scripture also says, 'A broken spirit drieth up the bones' " (Prov. 17:22). Vespasian did so and was able to get his foot into the second boot. Then he asked Rabban Yohanan, "Seeing that you are so wise, why did you not come to me till now?" Rabban Yohanan said, "Have I not already told you?" Vespasian: "I, too, told you."

Then Vespasian said to Rabban Yohanan, "I am now going away from here and will send someone else to take my place. You may, however, make a request of me, and I will grant it." Rabban Yohanan: "Give me Yavneh and its sages,[4] the dynasty of Rabban Gamaliel,[5] and physicians to heal R. Zadok." (R. Joseph—some say R. Akiva—applied to him the verse "[God] turneth wise men backward, and maketh their knowledge foolish" [Isa. 44:25]. He should have said, "Let Jerusalem off this time." But Rabban Yohanan thought that Vespasian would deny such a request, and so there would not even be the saving of a few.)

[Some say that Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai answered Vespasian as follows]: "I beg you to let this city be." Vespasian: "Did the Romans proclaim me king so that I should let this city be? Make another request of me, and I will grant it." Rabban Yohanan: Let the western gate, which leads to Lydda,[6] remain open, and let everyone who departs up to the fourth hour in the day be spared."

When Vespasian was laying siege to Jerusalem, he asked Rabban Yohanan, "Have you any friend or relative in the city? Send for him and bring him out before my troops enter." Rabban Yohanan sent R. Eliezer and R. Joshua to bring out R. Zadok. They went and found him at the city gate. When R. Zadok arrived, Rabban Yohanan stood up before him. Vespasian asked, "You stand up in deference before this emaciated old man?" Rabban Yohanan: "By your life, if there had been one more like him in Jerusalem, you would not have been able to conquer it, even if your army were twice its size." Vespasian: "What is his power?" Rabban Yohanan: "He eats one ripened fig, and with the strength he derives from it, he teaches one hundred sessions at the academy." "But why is he so emaciated?" "Because of his numerous abstinences and fasts." Vespasian sent for physicians, who came and fed R. Zadok small portions of food and small doses of liquid until his normal weight was restored. R. Zadok's son, Eleazer, said to him, "Father, give them their reward in this world, so that they will have no merit on your account in the world-to-come."[7] So R. Zadok taught the Romans how to calculate by using one's fingers and how to weigh by means of a balance beam.[8]

When Vespasian had subdued the city, he assigned the destruction of its four ramparts to the four generals, the western gate being allotted to Pangar. Now, it had been decreed by Heaven that this gate should never be destroyed. Why not? Because the Presence abode in the west. The other three demolished the parts assigned to them, but Pangar did not demolish his. Vespasian sent for him and asked, "Why did you not destroy the part assigned to you?" He replied, "By your life, I acted as I did for the honor of Rome. If I had demolished it, mortals would never have known what fortified installations you destroyed.[9] But now when people look [at the western wall], they will exclaim, 'Behold Vespasian's might! What a strong fortification he demolished!' " Vespasian: "You have done well. But since you disobeyed my command, you are to ascend the roof and throw yourself down. If you live, you live; and if you die, you die." Pangar ascended,

---

1. The snake is Israel in rebellion against Rome, the amphora is Jerusalem, and, in the next question, the tower is the Temple. R. Yohanan's answer was a plea for leniency in behalf of the Jews.
2. After he was done with the Jews, Vespasian would presently turn on the Arabs, who were their neighbors.
3. Literally, "Only the heart knows whether you are akel ('weaving') or akalkalot ('twisting')."
4. I.e., permission to found a seminary at Yavneh (Jamnia).
5. Rabban Yohanan was particularly solicitous for Rabban Gamaliel and his family, as they were said to be of the house of David.
6. A town to the southeast of Jaffa.
7. It was Eleazar's reaction to the way the Romans had dealt with Jerusalem.
8. The crossbar of a balance from which scales are suspended.
9. There would have been no relic to show how strong the walls had been.

threw himself down, and died.[1] Thus the curse of Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai struck him down.

Vespasian went away and sent the wicked Titus in his place. When Titus arrived, he stood up and said, "Where is their God, the Rock in whom they trusted?" (Deut. 32:37). What did Titus do? He took hold of a harlot, entered the Holy of Holies, spread out a Torah scroll, and fornicated with her on it. He then took a sword and slashed the curtain [in front of the Holy of Holies]. At this, a miracle happened: blood began to spurt from the curtain, so that Titus thought he had slain God Himself.

Then he began to revile and curse Him above, saying: One who wages war against a king in the wilderness and is victorious is not as mighty as one who wages war against a king in his own palace and is victorious.

(Abba Hanan said, "Who is a mighty one like unto Thee, O Lord?" [Ps. 89:9]. Who is like You, mighty in self-restraint? Though You heard the insults and revilings of that scoundrel, yet You kept silent! In the school of R. Ishmael, it was taught: "Who is like Thee among the gods [elim]?" [Exod. 15:11]. Who is like You among the silent ones [illemim]!)

Then Titus took the curtain, folded it to serve as a sack, fetched all the vessels of the Temple, packed them in it, and put them on board ship to accompany him at the triumphal procession in his city.

A giant wave rose up, threatening to sink his ship. So Titus said: Apparently the power of the God of these people is only over water: when Pharaoh came, He drowned him in water; when Sisera came, He drowned him in water. I, too—when I was in His house and in His domain, He could not stand up to me. But now here He has overtaken me and rises up against me, trying to drown me in water. If He is really mighty, let Him come up on dry land and fight with me. A voice went forth from heaven, saying, "O wicked man, son of a wicked man, descendant of the wicked Esau! I have a tiny creature in My world called a gnat. Go up on dry land and wage war against it." Presently Titus succeeded in reaching dry land. When he got to Rome, all the people of Rome went out and hailed him as conqueror of the barbarians. Then they heated a bath for him. He went in and washed himself, and when he came out, they mixed a cup of wine for him. At that moment a gnat appeared, entered through his nose, and proceeded to burrow into his brain for the next seven years.

One day, as Titus was passing by a blacksmith's shop, the gnat heard the noise of a hammer and stopped its burrowing. Titus said: I see there is a remedy! So every day they brought a blacksmith, who hammered away before him. If the blacksmith was a pagan, he was paid four zuz a day; if he was a Jew, he was told, "It is enough payment that you see your enemy in such distress." This went on for thirty days, but then the creature got used to the hammering[2] [and went back to its burrowing].

(It is taught: R. Phineas ben Aruva said: I was in company with the notables of Rome and was told that when Titus died, his skull was split open, and inside it there was found a creature resembling a sparrow, two sela in weight. Abbaye said: We have a tradition that its beak was of brass and its claws of iron.)

When Titus lay dying, he said: Cremate me and scatter my ashes over the seven seas, so that the God of the Jews should not find me and bring me to trial.

Onkelos son of Kalonikos was the son of Titus's sister. He was thinking about becoming a proselyte. So he went and, with the aid of a necromancer, raised Titus from the dead and asked him, "Who is held in greatest repute in the other world?" Titus: "Israel." "What then," Onkelos asked, "would you say about my joining them?" Titus: "Their observances are so numerous that it is impossible to endure them. Instead, go and attack the Jews in your world, and you will become master over them, for it is written, 'Her adversaries are now masters' [Lam. 1:5]; whoever harasses Israel becomes a master of men." Onkelos asked Titus, "What is your punishment [in the other world]?" Titus: "What I decreed for myself. Every day my ashes are collected and sentence is passed upon me; I am cremated and my ashes are scattered again over the seven seas."

Then Onkelos went and, with the aid of a necromancer, raised Balaam from the dead. He also asked him, "Who is held in greatest repute in the other world?" Balaam: "Israel." "What then," Onkelos asked, "do you say about my joining them?" Balaam: "Thou shalt not seek their peace nor their prosperity all thy days forever" (Deut. 23:7).

Then Onkelos went and, with the aid of a necromancer, raised Jesus [a sinner in Israel] from the dead. He asked him, "Who is held in greatest repute in the other world?" Jesus: "Israel." "What do you say about my joining them?" Jesus: "Seek their welfare, seek not their harm. Whoever touches them touches the apple of God's eye." Observe the difference in behavior between the sinners in Israel and the prophets among the nations of the world.

It is taught that R. Eleazar said: [From the aforementioned tale about the humiliation of Bar Kamtza] you can see what a serious offense it is to put a man to shame. For take note—the Holy One espoused the cause of Bar Kamtza and, as an aftermath, destroyed His house and burned His Temple.[3]

3. Another story [that accounts for Jerusalem's destruction]: A certain man—a carpenter's apprentice—conceived a desire for the wife of his master. There came a time when his master needed to borrow some money. The apprentice said, "Send your wife to me, and I will lend the money to her." The master sent his wife to the apprentice, and she stayed three days with him. Finally, the master went to the apprentice's home and asked, "My wife, whom I sent to you, where is she?" The apprentice replied, "I sent her away at once, but I heard that on her way back some young men had their will with her." "What shall I do?" the master asked. "If you listen to my advice," the apprentice replied, "divorce her." "But," the master said,

---

1. His fate proved that his intentions against Israel were hostile.
2. Literally, "once it begins threshing, it keeps threshing."
3. B. Git 55b–57a; Gen. R. 10:7; Lam. R. 1:5, §32; ARN 4 and 6; Lev R. 22:3; Eccles. R. 5:8, §4; Yalkut, Haazinu, §546.

"she has a large marriage settlement [payable to her upon divorce]." The apprentice: "I will lend you money to pay her settlement." So the master divorced his wife, and the apprentice immediately married her. When the loan fell due and the master was unable to repay it, the apprentice said, "Come and work off your debt with me." Then the apprentice and his wife would sit eating and drinking, while the master waited on them, tears flowing from his eyes and dropping into their cups. From that hour, the doom [of Jerusalem] was sealed.[1]

4. Why was the First Temple destroyed? Because of three evils in it: idolatry, immorality, and bloodshed. But why was the Second Temple destroyed, seeing that during the time it stood people occupied themselves with Torah, with observance of precepts, and with the practice of charity? Because during the time it stood, hatred without rightful cause prevailed. This is to teach you that hatred without rightful cause is deemed as grave as all the three sins of idolatry, immorality, and bloodshed, together.[2]

5. Because of a cock and a hen, King's Mountain was destroyed. How did it happen? It was the custom that when a bride and a bridegroom were being escorted [to the nuptial chamber], a cock and a hen were carried before them, as if to say: Be fruitful and multiply like these fowl. One day, when a band of Roman soldiers passed by, they snatched the cock and the hen from the bridal procession. The Jews fell on the soldiers and beat them up. The soldiers came to Caesar and reported, "The Jews are rebelling against you." So Caesar marched against them.

There was at that time among the Jews a certain Bar Deromi who would leap a mil's distance and was thus able to kill many Romans. So Caesar took off his crown, placed it on the ground, and said, "Master of the universe, may it please You not to deliver me and my kingdom into the hands of one man." Presently Bar Deromi was tripped up by his own mouth, for he bragged, "Mayest thou not just as well, O God, cast us off, since there is no need for Thee, O God, to go forth with our hosts?" (Ps. 60:12).[3] Then, when Bar Deromi went into a privy, a draco came and pulled out his lower bowel, and he died. At that, Caesar remarked, "Since a miracle has been wrought for me, I will let them off this time." So he left them and went away. They leaped for joy; they ate and drank and lit so many lamps that the design on a seal a mil away could be made out by their light. [Informed of their rejoicing] Caesar said, "These Jews are making merry at my expense and ridiculing me!" And he returned to attack them. According to R. Assi, three hundred thousand men with drawn swords invaded King's Mountain, and for three days and three nights kept up the slaughter on one side of the city, while on the other side dancing and feasting were still going on. So big was the area that the people on one side were unaware of what was happening on the other side.

"The Lord hath swallowed up all the habitations of Jacob and hath not pitied" (Lam. 2:2). R. Yohanan said: The verse refers to the sixty myriads of towns that King Yannai had on King's Mountain. Each of them had as many inhabitants as had come out of Egypt. Ulla said: I saw that area—it cannot hold even sixty myriads of reeds. As a matter of fact, a certain heretic taunted R. Hanina: You tell a heap of lies. R Hanina replied: Palestine is called "land of the deer" (Jer. 3:19).[4] Just as the skin of a deer shrinks after the animal is killed, so that it cannot hold its flesh, so the Land of Israel has ample room when it is inhabited; but when not inhabited, it seems to shrink.[5]

6. It is told that when Trajan[6] was about to execute Lilianus and his brother Pappus in Laodicea [Lydia], he said to them, "If you are of the people of Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, let your God come and deliver you from my hand, as He delivered Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah from the hand of Nebuchadnezzar." They replied, "Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah were utterly righteous men, and they merited having a miracle wrought for their sake. Besides, Nebuchadnezzar was a worthy king, deserving to have a miracle wrought through him. But as for you, you are a wicked and mindless man—you do not deserve to have a miracle wrought through you. As for us, no doubt we have been condemned by Him who is everywhere to be put to death. So even if you do not execute us, He who is everywhere has many other executioners—many bears, many lions, many leopards—who can attack and kill us. The only reason the Holy One handed us over to you is that He intends to exact vengeance from you for our blood." Because they dared speak thus, he killed them at once. It is reported that hardly had Trajan's entourage moved from there than two officials arrived from Rome and split Trajan's skull with clubs.[7]

7. Another tale: The wife of Trajan—may his bones be ground to dust—gave birth to a child on the night of the ninth of Av, while the Jews [of Rome] were mourning [the destruction of the Temple]. The child died on Hanukkah.[8] The Jews wondered: What shall we do? Shall we kindle the lights or not? They decided: Let us kindle them, come upon us what may. And they kindled them. Certain persons maligned the Jews to Trajan's wife, saying, "Those Jews! When your child was born, they mourned; and when it died, they kindled lights!" She sent a letter to her husband: "Instead of subduing the barbarians, come back and subdue these Jews who have revolted against you." He boarded a ship, figuring to make the voyage in ten days, but the wind favored him and brought him home in five. On his arrival, he entered an academy where he found

---

1. B. Git 58a.
2. B. Yoma 9b.
3. JV: "Hast not Thou, O God, cast us off, and Thou goest not forth, O God, with our hosts?"
4. JV: "land, the goodliest." But tzevi ("the goodliest") also means "deer."
5. B. Git 57a.
6. It is suggested by Paul Cassell that Trajan is a misreading for Seron, a commander of the army of Syria in the days of Judah Maccabee (Ben-Zion Luria, Megillat Ta, p. 191).
7. B. Ta 18b.
8. The Feast of Dedication, which marks the victory of Judah Maccabee over Antiochus Epiphanes. It is observed by kindling lights for eight days.

Jews occupied with the verse "The Lord will bring a nation against thee from far . . . as the vulture swoopeth down" (Deut. 28:49). So Trajan said to them, "I am that vulture. I figured to come in ten days, but the wind brought me in five." He surrounded them with his legions and slaughtered them. Then he said to the women, "Yield to my legions, or I will do to you what I did to your men." They replied, "Do to the women what you did to the men!" He promptly surrounded them with his legions and slaughtered them, so that their blood mingled with that of the men and kept streaming as far as the river Kypris.[1] And the holy spirit kept crying out, "For these things I weep" (Lam. 1:16).[2]

8. "Bethar[3] was destroyed through the shaft of a royal litter."

When a boy was born, it was the custom to plant a cedar tree; and when a girl was born, an acacia. When they wed, the tree [planted at birth] was cut down and the wedding canopy made from its branches. One day, as Caesar's daughter was passing [through Bethar], the shaft of her litter broke. Her servants cut down a cedar tree and repaired the litter with it. Immediately, the Jews fell upon the servants and beat them up. The Romans went and told Caesar, "The Jews are rebelling against you." And so he marched against them.

According to R. Yohanan, eighty thousand trumpeters besieged Bethar. Ben Koziva was located in the city, and he had with him two hundred thousand men, each with an amputated finger.[4] The sages sent him the message: "How long will you continue to maim the men of Israel?" He said, "How else are they to be tested?" They answered, "Let anyone who cannot uproot a cedar from Lebanon while riding a horse be denied enrollment in your army."

Thus, Ben Koziva came to have an army composed of two hundred thousand men with amputated fingers and another two hundred thousand who had uprooted cedars of Lebanon. No matter how many troops Hadrian sent against them, these men would go forth and slay them. So the Romans decided: There is no way of remedying the situation unless we bring a crown for Hadrian, place it on his head, and hail him as emperor.

One day, as Ben Koziva's men went out to battle, an old man met them and said, "May your God be your help." Their mouths tripped them up, and they said in reply, "May He neither help nor hinder—'Mayest Thou not, O God, just as well cast us off, since there is no need for Thee, O God, to go forth with our hosts?' " (Ps. 60:12).

How great was the strength of Ben Koziva? He would intercept the stones shot by Roman catapults with one of his knees, heave them back, and thus slay ever so many Roman soldiers. When R. Akiva beheld Ben Koziva, he exclaimed, " 'A star (kokhav) has risen out of Jacob' [Num. 24:17]—Koziva[5] has risen out of Jacob! He is the king Messiah." R. Yohanan ben Torta responded, "Akiva, grass will be growing out of your cheeks and David's son the Messiah will still not have come."[6]

Hadrian Caesar laid siege to Bethar for three and a half years.[7] In the city was R. Eleazar of Modiim,[8] who day after day wore sackcloth and fasted.[9] Day after day, he prayed, "Master of the universe, sit not in judgment this day!" After a time, Hadrian seriously considered returning home.[10] But just then a Cuthean came and said to Hadrian, "My lord, so long as that old rooster wallows in ashes, you will not conquer the city. Give me time, and I will do something that will enable you to subdue it today." He entered Bethar through the gate of the city, where he found R. Eleazar standing and praying. He [walked over to him and] pretended to whisper in his ear. People went and informed Ben Koziva, "Your uncle, R. Eleazar, wishes to surrender the city to Hadrian." Ben Koziva had the Cuthean brought before him and asked him, "What did you say to R. Eleazar, and what did he say to you?" The Cuthean replied, "If I tell you, the king will kill me; and if I do not tell you, you will kill me. It is better that I kill myself, so that the secrets of the government will not be divulged." Ben Koziva was thus convinced that R. Eleazar wanted to surrender the city. So he sent for R. Eleazar, had him brought into his presence, and asked him, "What did that Cuthean tell you?" He answered, "I do not know what he whispered in my ear. I was standing in prayer, so that I did not hear a thing." "And what did you say to him?" "Not a word." Ben Koziva flew into a rage and kicked him once with his foot so fiercely that he killed him. At this, a divine voice came forth and proclaimed, "Woe to the worthless shepherd who abandons his flock! The sword shall descend upon his arm, and upon his right eye" (Zech. 11:17). It intimated to Ben Koziva: "You smashed the arm of Israel and blinded their right eye; therefore shall your arm wither and your right eye be utterly darkened!" (ibid.). The sins [of the people] caused Bethar to be captured, and Ben Koziva was slain.

When his head was brought to Hadrian, he asked, "Who killed him?" A Cuthean said, "I killed him." "Bring his body to me," he ordered. The Cuthean went off to get it and found a snake curled around its neck. When Hadrian heard about the snake, he exclaimed, "If his God had not slain him, who else could have?"

The eighty thousand trumpeters entered Bethar and went about slaying men, women, and little children, so that their blood flowed in streams out of doorways, even out of grates and pivots. Horses waded in blood up to their nostrils, and the blood flow was so swift that it rolled stones weighing forty seah over and over, until it finally flowed into the sea, coloring the sea a distance of four mil. You

---

1. Perhaps a misreading of Tybris (Tiber). So Leon Nemoy.
2. Lam. R. 1:16, §45; Lam. R., ed. Buber, p. 83; P. Suk 5:1, 55b.
3. In southern Palestine, the center of the revolt of Bar Kokhba (Bar Kozeva).
4. As a test of fortitude, he ordered each recruit to cut off a finger.
5. Hence, not Koziva ("false hope") but kokhba ("star").
6. You will be dead in your grave a long time.
7. "This is not historically correct and is a reminiscence of Vespasian's siege of Jerusalem. The siege lasted about a year and the whole campaign three and a half years. It is probable, however, that the Midrash includes in this period the battles preceding the actual siege" (Lam. R., Soncino, p. 158, n. 4).
8. A small town near Jerusalem, famous as the home of the Maccabees.
9. In order to avert the fate that was threatening the people of Bethar.
10. So great was the power of R. Eleazar's piety.

might suppose that Bethar was close to the sea. Not at all—it was a whole mil distant from it.

Now, Hadrian owned a large vineyard eighteen mil square, covering an area equal to the area from Tiberias to Sepphoris. They surrounded it with a kind of fence made up of the corpses of Bethar's slain, their bodies placed upright with arms spread out. By Hadrian's decree, those corpses remained unburied, until finally another king came to power and ordered their burial.

It is taught that R. Eliezer the Elder said: [From that blood] two streams formed in the valley of Yadaim, one flowing in one direction and the other in the opposite direction. The sages estimated that the streams were two parts water and one part blood.

We are taught: For seven years the nations of the world harvested their vineyards without manuring them, because they were so well fertilized by Jewish blood.

It is reported in the name of Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel: There were five hundred schools in the city of Bethar. In the smallest there were no fewer than five hundred children, who used to say: Should the enemies come at us, we will go forth with our styluses and gouge out their eyes. When Israel's sins brought it about that the enemies did prevail and were able to capture the children, they wrapped them in the scrolls they had been studying and set them on fire.

R. Yohanan said: Three hundred brains of children were found on a single stone.

R. Assi said: Four kav of brains were found on a single stone.[1]

The Wickedness of Hadrian

9. A Jew passed in front of Hadrian and greeted him. The king asked, "Who are you?" He answered, "I am a Jew." Hadrian exclaimed, "How dare a Jew pass in front of Hadrian and greet him?" and ordered, "Off with his head!" Another Jew passed and, seeing what happened to the first man, did not greet him. Hadrian asked, "Who are you?" He answered, "A Jew." He exclaimed, "How dare a Jew pass in front of Hadrian without giving a greeting?" and again ordered, "Off with his head!" His senators said, "We cannot understand your actions. He who greeted you was put to death, and he who did not greet you was put to death!" Hadrian replied, "Do you dare advise me how I am to execute those I hate?" And the holy spirit kept crying out, "O Lord, Thou hast seen my wrong. . . . Thou hast seen all their vengeance and all their devices against me" (Lam. 3:59–60).[2]

10. Hadrian—may his bones be ground to dust—set up three garrisons, one in Emmaus, another in Kefar Lekatia, and the third in Bethlehem of Judea,[3] saying, "He who succeeds in evading the one will be captured by the other, and he who succeeds in evading the other will be captured by the third." He also sent out heralds to proclaim, "Wherever there is a Jew in hiding, let him come forth—the king is pleased to give him assurance [of safety]." Those who understood [the ruse] did not come out [from their hiding places]; but those who did not understand—the sort described in Scripture as "Ephraim has acted like a silly dove, without understanding" (Hos. 7:11)—came out and found themselves trapped. All of these were presently gathered in the valley of Beth Rimmon.[4] Hadrian said to the captain in command, "By the time I consume this slice of white bread and the leg of this fowl, I expect to find not even one of them still standing on his two feet." At once his legions surrounded the Jews and slaughtered them, so that their blood streamed [to the coast and colored the sea] as far as Cyprus.[5]

Those who remained hidden [in caves] used to go out at night, follow the scent of the corpses of their dead, and bring back some, which they ate. Every day one of their number would go out and forage for a corpse. Once one of them, a young man, went out and found the corpse of his slain father. He picked it up, hid it, and put a marker over it. Then he came back to the cave and reported, "I found nothing." So they said, "Let another person go." The other scout went out and, led by the scent of that same corpse, found it and brought it back. After they had eaten, he was asked, "Where did you bring this corpse from?" He replied, "From such-and-such a corner." The young man who went out first asked him, "What kind of marker was over it?" "Such-and-such a marker." The young man moaned, "Woe to him who has consumed the flesh of his own father."[6]

Zion's Precious Children

11. The story of Doeg son of Joseph, whose father died, leaving him a small child with his mother. Every day his mother would measure his height by handbreadths, estimating the weight he had gained, and give its equivalent in gold to the Sanctuary. Yet when the enemy prevailed, she slaughtered him and ate him. Concerning her, Jeremiah lamented, "Alas, women eat their fruit, the children that are dandled in their arms!" (Lam. 2:20). The holy spirit replied, "Shall the priest and the prophet be slain in the Sanctuary of the Lord?" (ibid.).[7]

12. A story of four hundred boys and girls who were carried off for immoral purposes. They sensed what they were wanted for and said among themselves, "If we drown in the sea, we shall attain life in the world-to-come." The eldest among them cited the verse "The Lord said: 'I will bring back from Bashan, I will bring them back [to life]

---

1. Lam. R. 2:2, §4; P. Ta 4:5, 68d; B. Git 57 and 58; Lam. R., ed. Buber, pp. 101–4.
2. Lam. R. 3:60, §9. Cf. Romans 8:26–27, where the holy spirit, as it were, personifying Israel, prays to God on Israel's behalf. Brother Caedmon Holmes (Abbey of St. Gregory the Great, Portsmouth, R.I.).
3. Strategic points in preventing the escape of Jews from the country.
4. See 2 Kings 5:18. The valley where the temple to the idol Rimmon was located.
5. The text has "the river of Cyprus." See above, p. 194, n. 1.
6. Lam. R. 1:16, §45; Lam. R., ed. Buber, p. 82.
7. The reference is to the prophet Zechariah son of Jehoiada the Priest. See above, chap. 7, §13. B. Yoma 38b and En Yaakov, ad loc.

from the depths of the sea' " (Ps. 68:23) and interpreted it as promising: "I will bring back from Bashan," from between the lion's teeth (ba-shen [ben shinne]); "I will bring them back from the depths of the sea"—those who drown in the sea. When the girls heard this, all of them jumped up and leaped into the sea. The boys then drew an inference for themselves, saying: If they—for whom being mounted for the sexual act is natural—prefer death to submission, we—for whom being mounted is unnatural—should all the more prefer death to submission. At that, they also leaped into the sea. Of them, Scripture says, "It is for Thy sake that we are slain all day long, that we are regarded as sheep to be slaughtered" (Ps. 44:23).[1]

13. It is related that the son and daughter of R. Ishmael ben Elisha were carried off [and bought] by two masters, who happened to meet after a while. One said, "I have a manservant—in the entire world, no man is his equal in appearance." The other said, "I have a maidservant—in the entire world, all of it, no woman is her equal in beauty." So they decided: Let us wed them to each other and share the children. [That night] they put them in a darkened chamber, where the boy sat down in one corner and the girl sat down in the opposite corner. The boy said to himself: Am I, a priest, descended from high priests, to wed a slavegirl? The girl said to herself: Am I, a priestess, descended from high priests, to be wed to a slave? And so all night they wept. When day dawned, they recognized each other, fell on each other's neck, and continued to weep bitterly until their souls left them. For them, Jeremiah lamented, "For these I weep; mine eye, mine eye runneth down with water" (Lam. 1:16).[2]

14. A story of a certain woman named Zaphenath daughter of Peniel (she was called Zaphenath because all gazed [tzophin] at her beauty, and "daughter of Peniel" because she was the daughter of a high priest privileged to minister in the inner shrine [lifne ve-lifnim]). It is told that after she was taken captive, her captor abused her the entire night. In the morning he put seven wraps around her and took her out to sell her. A certain man, who was exceptionally ugly, came by and said, "Show me her beauty." The captor replied, "You good-for-nothing, if you want to buy, buy her. I can assure you that in the entire world, all of it, no woman equals her in beauty." "Nevertheless," the would-be buyer said, "I want to have a look." The captor took six wraps off her, and she herself tore off the seventh, sprinkled ashes upon herself, and cried out, "Lord of the universe, even if You have no pity on us, why have You no pity on the sanctity of Your mighty Name?"[3] With her in mind, Jeremiah quoted God as saying, "O daughter of My people, gird thee with sackcloth and sprinkle ashes upon thyself . . . for the spoiler shall suddenly come upon us" (Jer. 6:26). Jeremiah ended by saying not "upon thee" but "upon us"—meaning: the spoiler is come, if one dare say such a thing, upon Me and upon thee.[4]

15. A story of a young girl taken captive together with her ten maidservants. A Gentile bought her, and she was brought up as part of his household. One day, when he gave her her pitcher and said, "Go out and bring me some water," one of the girl's maidservants jumped up and took it from her. "What is the meaning of this?" he demanded. "By the life of your head, master!" the maidservant replied. "I was one of five hundred maidservants of this girl's mother!" When he heard these words, he set the girl free, along with her ten maidservants.

Another story: A young girl was taken captive. A Gentile bought her, and she was brought up as part of his household. The angel in charge of dreams appeared to him and told him, "Send this girl from your house." But the Gentile's wife said, "Do not send her away." Then the angel in charge of dreams appeared to him again and said, "If you do not send her away, I will kill you."

So he sent her away but followed after her. I will go, he said to himself, and see what happens to this girl.

As she was walking along the road, she grew thirsty and stepped down to drink water from a fountain. But when she put her hand on the fountain's wall, a serpent leaped at her and bit her, and she died, her body left floating on the surface of the water. The Gentile came down, took hold of the body, lifted it, and buried it. Then he came home and said to his wife, "This people whom you have just seen something of—none other than their Father in heaven Himself is angry with them."[5]

16. It is taught: It was said of Nakdimon ben Gorion that when he walked from his home to the academy, woolen cloths were spread beneath his feet, and the poor, following behind, rolled them up [and kept them for themselves].

It is told of the daughter of Nakdimon ben Gorion that, to provide perfumes for her toilet, the sages granted her four hundred gold denars a day [out of her deceased husband's estate]. Nevertheless, dissatisfied, she said, "May you grant such skimpy allowances to your own daughters!" They replied, "Amen."

Another story. When the sages granted to the daughter-in-law of Nakdimon an allowance from Sabbath eve to Sabbath eve of two seah of wine for her puddings, she, dissatisfied, said to them, "May you grant such skimpy allowances to your own daughters!" This time they did not say, "Amen," because she was then a woman awaiting [the decision whether or not] her brother-in-law [would marry her].[6]

R. Eleazar son of R. Zadok said: May I [not] behold the consolation [of Zion] if I have not seen the daughter of Nakdimon ben Gorion picking up barley grains in Acco from among horses' hoofs. I then applied to her the verse "If thou know not, O thou fairest of women, go follow the

---

1. B. Git 57b.
2. B. Git 58a.
3. Such desecration of a woman's honor is deemed desecration of God's Name.
4. B. Git 58a.
5. ARN 17.
6. They did not wish their own daughters to be widows and await the decision of a brother-in-law to marry them or free them by the rite of halitzah.

tracks of the sheep and graze thy kids" (Song 1:8). Read not, "Thy kids" (gediyyotayikh), but, "Thine own person" (geviyyotayikh).

Another story. When Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai left Jerusalem riding on an ass, with his disciples following him, he saw a girl picking barley grains out of the dung of some Arabs' cattle. The moment she saw him, [not wishing to be recognized] she wrapped her hair about her face and stood up before him: "Master, feed me." "My daughter," he asked her, "who are you?" She remained silent. When he asked her again, "Who are you?" she replied, "I am the daughter of Nakdimon ben Gorion." "My daughter, where did the wealth of your father's house go?" "Master, is there not a proverb current in Jerusalem: 'Money has no (hsr) salt to preserve it'?" (Others read: Only hsd,—"charity"—can preserve money.)[1] "And where is the wealth of your father-in-law's house?" "Master, the one came and caused the other to disappear.[2] Do you remember, Master, when you signed my ketubbah?" "I remember," he said to his disciples, "that when I signed the ketubbah of this woman, I read therein, 'A thousand thousand gold denars from her father's house besides [the amount] from her father-in-law's house.' "[3] Then Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai wept and said, "How fortunate are Israel! When they do the will of Him who is everywhere, no nation or tongue can prevail over them. But when they do not do the will of Him who is everywhere, He delivers them into the power of an ignoble people; indeed, not only into the power of an ignoble people, but into the power of beasts belonging to an ignoble people.[4]

The Holy One Mourns

17. It is reported in the name of R. Joshua ben Levi: The Holy One summoned the ministering angels and asked them, "When a king of flesh and blood loses a dear one and he wishes to mourn, what is customary for him to do?" They replied, "He hangs sackcloth over his door." God said, "I will do likewise." Hence it is written, "I clothe the heavens with blackness, and I make sackcloth their covering" (Isa. 50:3).

"What else does a king of flesh and blood do [when mourning]?" They replied, "He extinguishes the lanterns." God said, "I will do likewise." Hence it is written, "The sun and the moon are become black, and the stars withdraw their shining" (Joel 4:15).

"What else does a king of flesh and blood do?" They replied, "He walks barefoot." God said, "I will do likewise." Hence it is stated, "The Lord, in the whirlwind and in the storm is His way, and the clouds are the dust beneath His [bare] feet" (Nah. 1:3).

"What else does a king of flesh and blood do?" They replied, "He rends his purple robe." God said to them, "I will do likewise." Hence it is written, "After the Lord did what He purposed, He rent His purple robe (bitza imrato)"[5] (Lam. 2:17).

"What else does a king of flesh and blood do?" They replied, "He sits in silence." God said, "I will do likewise." Hence it is stated, "He sitteth alone and keepeth silence, because he was taken away" (Lam. 3:28).[6]

18. "My soul shall weep in a secret place for pride" (Jer. 13:17). What is meant by "a secret place"? R. Samuel bar Unia said in the name of Rav: The Holy One has a place where He weeps—it is called the "secret place." And what is meant by "for [your] pride"? R. Samuel bar Isaac said: For Israel's pride, which was taken from them and given to the heathen. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said: For the pride of the kingdom of Heaven, which was taken away.

"Mine eye shall drop tears after tears, and run down with tears, because the Lord's flock is carried away captive" (Jer. 13:17). R. Eleazar asked: Why are tears mentioned here three times? Once for the First Temple, once again for the Second Temple, and once more for Israel exiled from their home.[7]

19. R. Aha said: The Presence will never move from the Temple's western wall, for it is said, "Behold, He standeth behind our wall" (Song 2:9).[8]

Menahem the Comforter

20. The day the Temple was destroyed, the redeemer was born.

It happened that while a certain man was plowing, his heifer lowed. An Arab passed by, heard the lowing, and asked, "Who are you?" He answered, "I am a Jew." The Arab said, "Jew, O Jew, unharness your heifer and unhitch your plow [and go into mourning]." "Why?" "Because the Temple of the Jews is destroyed." "How do you know this?" "I know it from the lowing of your heifer." While they were conversing, the heifer lowed again. The Arab said, "Jew, O Jew, harness your heifer and hitch up your plow, because the Messiah, deliverer of Israel, has been born." "What is his name?" "His name is Menahem, 'Comforter.' " "What is his father's name?" "Hezekiah." "Where does he live?" "In Birat Arba, in Bethlehem of Judah."[9]

The man immediately sold his heifer, sold his plow, and became a merchant for children's felt garments. He journeyed from one region to another and from one city to another until he reached that place. Women came from all the villages in the area to buy felt garments from him,

---

1. Because the members of her family were not charitable, they lost their money.
2. The two were mixed together, so that when one estate was lost, the other disappeared with it.
3. The addition made to her ketubbah by the bridegroom.
4. B. Ket 65–67; ARN 17.
5. JV: "He performed His word." But bitza, ("performed") may also mean "rent," and imrato ("His word") may be read "His robe." This is an allusion to the curtain before the Holy of Holies, which He allowed Titus to rend.
6. Lam. R. 1:1, §1.
7. B. Hag. 5b.
8. Tanhuma B, Shemot, §10.
9. In P. Ber. 5a, the reading is: "in the royal capital of Bethlehem."

except for one woman—the mother of Menahem the Comforter—who bought nothing. Then he heard the voices of the other women urging her, "Mother of Menahem, mother of Menahem, come and buy felt garments for your son." The mother: "I would rather have Israel's enemies strangled." They asked, "Why [do you say such things]?" She: "Because the day he was born, the Temple was destroyed." The man said to her, "I am confident that even as at your son's arrival it was destroyed, so because of his arrival it will be rebuilt." The mother: "But I have no money." The man: "That is of no concern to me. Come and take for your son whatever he needs. After a while, I will come to your house, and you will pay me." Some time later, he came back to the city and said to himself: I will go and see that child to find out what has been happening to him. When he came to the woman and asked, "Your child—what has been happening to him?" she replied, "Right after you saw me, winds and storms came, snatched him out of my hand, and carried him off and away."

Of the foregoing, Scripture says, "Menahem the Comforter is far from me, even he who should revive my spirit" (Lam. 1:16).[1]

The Mourners for Zion

21. Our masters taught: When the Temple was destroyed the second time,[2] large numbers in Israel became ascetics, binding themselves neither to eat meat nor to drink wine. R. Joshua got into conversation with them and said, "My sons, why do you eat no meat and drink no wine?" They replied, "Shall we eat meat, which formerly was brought as an offering on the altar, now that the altar has ceased to be? Shall we drink wine, which formerly was poured as a libation on the altar, now that it is poured no longer?" He said to them, "If so, we should eat no bread, because the meal offerings have ceased." They: "Perhaps we will manage with fruit."

"We should not eat fruit either, because firstfruits are offered no more."

"Perhaps we will manage with other fruits.[3]

He: "Well, then, we should not drink water, because the rite of pouring water[4] is no longer observed. [Since they had no answer] they kept silent. So he said to them, "My sons, come and let me advise you. Not to mourn at all is impossible, because the decree that the Temple be destroyed has been executed [and requires mourning]. But to mourn too much is also impossible, because we may not impose a hardship on the community unless the majority can endure it. Therefore the sages have ordained the following: A man may plaster his house, but he should leave a small space uncovered. A man who is preparing all that is needed for a feast should leave out some small ingredient. And if a woman is putting on all her ornaments, she must omit one of them. For it is said, 'If I forget thee, O Jerusalem . . . let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth' [Ps. 137:5–6]. He who mourns for Jerusalem will merit seeing the renewal of her joy, as is said, 'Rejoice ye with Jerusalem . . . join in her jubilation, all ye that have mourned for her' " (Isa. 66:10).

It is taught that R. Ishmael ben Elisha said: Since the day of the destruction of the Temple, we should by rights bind ourselves to eat no meat and drink no wine. However, we may impose no hardship on the community unless the majority can endure it. And from the day that a foreign government has come into power, which issues cruel decrees against us and forbids us to observe the Torah and its precepts, and does not allow us to enter into the "week of the son"[5]—some say, "the deliverance of the son"[6]—we ought by rights to bind ourselves not to marry nor to beget children. But the result would be that the seed of our father Abraham would of itself come to an end. Rather, let Israel go their way—it is better that they should err in ignorance than in presumptuousness.[7]

22. R. Akiva said: He who works on the ninth of Av will never see a sign of blessing. But the sages differed: Only he who works on the ninth of Av and does not mourn for Jerusalem will not see the renewal of her joy, as is said, "Rejoice ye with Jerusalem . . . join in her jubilation, all ye that have mourned for her" (Isa. 66:10). Hence it is said: He who mourns for Jerusalem will merit seeing the renewal of her joy; and he who does not mourn for Jerusalem will not see the renewal of her joy.[8]

23. "Weeping she maketh weep (Lam. 1:2).[9] She weeps and makes the Holy One weep with her. She weeps and makes the ministering angels weep with her. She weeps and makes heaven and earth weep with her. She weeps and makes mountains and hills weep with her.[10]

24. "She weepeth, yea, she weepeth in the night" (Lam. 1:2).[11] Why this double weeping? Rabbah said in the name of R. Yohanan: Once for the First Temple and once for the Second. "In the night"—because of the goings-on during a particular night, the night of which it is written, "All the congregation lifted up their voice, and cried, and the people wept that night" (Num. 14:1).[12] The Holy One said to Israel, "You wept without cause; and so I will make for you an occasion for weeping that will continue throughout the generations." Another interpretation: "In the night"—when a man weeps at night, his voice is heard better.[13] And another interpretation: When a man weeps at night, the stars and planets weep with him. Still another interpretation: When a man weeps at night, whoever hears him weeps [in sympathy.]

---

1. P. Ber 2:4, 4a; Lam. R. 1:16, §51.
2. In 70 C.E.
3. Fruit ripening later than the firstfruits.
4. On Sukkot. See above, chap. 9, §83.
5. The male infant is circumcised on the eighth day after his birth.
6. Yeshuat-pidyon ha-ben, the redemption of the firstborn son on the thirty-first day after his birth. See Exod. 13:13 and Num. 18:16.
7. B. BB 60b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
8. B. Ta 30b.
9. JV: "She weepeth sore in the night."
10. Lam. R. 1:2, §23.
11. Literal meaning of Lam. 1:2.
12. After the discouraging report of the spies.
13. Because of the stillness of the night.

A story of a woman who was a neighbor of Rabban Gamaliel: When her child died, she wept for him during the night. On hearing her, Rabban Gamaliel was reminded of the destruction of the Temple and wept in sympathy with her, so much that his eyelids seemed to disappear. The next day, when his disciples noticed how swollen his eyes were, they removed the woman from his neighborhood.[1]

25. Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] was once holding the book of Lamentations and reading in it. When he came to the verse "He hath cast down from heaven unto the earth the beauty of Israel" (Lam. 2:1), the book slipped from his hand as he said, "From a vault so high to a pit so deep."[2]

26. Rav said: A sigh breaks down half of the human body [as witness this story]: A Jew and an idolater were once walking together on the same road, and the idolater could not keep pace with the Jew. When the idolater reminded him of the destruction of the Temple, the Jew [grew faint] and sighed, but still the idolater was unable to keep pace with him. "Do you Jews not say," the idolater asked, "that a sigh breaks down half of a person's body?" "This applies only," the Jew replied, "to a fresh calamity, not to one with which we are already familiar. As people say: A woman accustomed to miscarriages is not alarmed when another occurs."[3]

27. "All conversation (siah) is of the field" (Gen. 2:5).[4] All conversation of mortals concerns the growth of crops in the fields: "Have the fields yielded produce? Have the fields not yielded produce?" The prayers of mortals, too, concern the growth of crops in the fields: "My Lord, may the fields yield produce! My Lord, may the yield of the fields prosper." But Israel's prayer is concerned solely with the "field" that is the Temple: "Master of the universe, may the Temple be rebuilt. Master of the universe, when will the Temple be rebuilt?"[5]

28. R. Hisda quoted the verse "Thus saith the Lord God: 'When the miter is removed, the crown is taken off' " (Ezek. 21:31) and asked: What has the miter to do with the crown? It is to teach you that when the miter is worn by the high priest, there is a crown on the head of every man; but when the miter has been removed from the head of the high priest, the crown is removed from the head of every man.[6]

1. B. Sanh 104b; Lam. R. 1:2, §24.
2. How great Israel's downfall—from heaven to earth. B. Hag 5b.
3. B. Ket 62a.
4. JV: "No shrub of the field." But siah ("shrub") may mean "conversation" and also, as later in the comment, "prayer"; while "field" will be taken to refer to the Temple. See Gen. R. 22:7 and above, chap. 2, §34.
5. Gen. R. 13:2.
6. B. Git 7a.

Since the Temple Was Destroyed

29. Since the day the Temple was destroyed, there is no laughter for the Holy One, nor does the firmament appear in its full clarity.

R. Eleazar said: Since the day the Temple was destroyed, a wall of iron has been interposed between Israel and their Father in heaven.

R. Phinehas ben Yair said: Since the Temple was destroyed, sages and freemen are put to shame and walk with covered heads, and men of good deeds have grown feeble, while men of violence and men given to slander prevail. Nobody inquires [about Israel's plight]; nobody prays [in Israel's behalf]; and nobody asks [about the welfare of his neighbor]. Upon whom then are we to rely? Upon our Father in heaven.

The elder R. Eliezer said: Since the day the Temple, our beloved house, was destroyed, the sages began to be like schoolteachers, schoolteachers like synagogue sextons, synagogue sextons like disciples, and disciples like common people; and common people are becoming more and more debased. And there is none to inquire [about Israel's plight] and none to pray [in Israel's behalf]. Upon whom then are we to rely? Upon our Father in heaven.

Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel said in the name of R. Joshua: Ever since the Temple was destroyed, there is no day without a curse.

Rava said: And the curse of each day is greater than that of the preceding day.[7]

30. R. Jeremiah ben Eleazar said: Ever since the Temple was destroyed,[8] it is enough for the world to use only two letters[9] [of the tetragrammaton], yod and he, as is said, "Let everything that hath breath praise by saying Yah"[10] (Ps. 150:6).[11]

Consolations

31. "If fire break out . . . he that kindled the fire shall surely make restitution" (Exod. 22:5). Hence the Holy One said: It is for Me to make restitution for the fire that I kindled. It was I who kindled the fire in Zion, as is said, "He hath kindled a fire in Zion, which hath devoured the foundations thereof" (Lam. 4:11); and it is I who one day will build it anew by fire, as is said, "For I, saith the Lord, will be unto her a wall of fire round about, and I will be the glory in the midst of her" (Zech. 2:9).[12]

7. B. AZ 3b and B. Ber 59a (conflated); B. Ber 32b; B. Sot 49a and 48a.
8. And the priests stopped using the tetragrammaton YHVH. See B. Hag 16a.
9. In extolling God, or in ordinary greeting.
10. Spelled YH. To this day, Jews do not pronounce God's full name, YHVH, substituting for it Adonai or Adoshem. Such names as Jehovah or Yahveh, which attempt vocalizing YHVH, are not accepted by the Jews because they do not know how the Ineffable Name was pronounced in the days of the Temple.
11. B. Er 18b.
12. B. BK 60b.

32. As Rabban Gamaliel, R. Eleazar ben Azariah, R. Joshua, and R. Akiva were walking on the road at Puteoli,[1] they could hear the noise of the crowds in Rome, one hundred and twenty mil away. Three of the sages burst into weeping, but R. Akiva continued to be cheerful. They asked him: Why are you so cheerful? He replied: Why are you weeping? They: These heathen, who bow down to images and burn incense to idols, live in safety and tranquility, whereas we—whose Temple, the "footstool" of our God,[2] is burned down by fire—are we not to weep? He replied: For that very reason, I am cheerful. If they who offend Him fare thus, how much better by far will fare those who please Him!

Another time, the same sages were coming up to Jerusalem together, and when they reached Mount Scopus they rent their garments. When they got to the Temple Mount and saw a jackal emerging from the Holy of Holies, they began to weep, but R. Akiva laughed. Why, they asked him, are you laughing? He replied: Why are you weeping? They: The place of which Scripture says, "The common man that draweth nigh shall be put to death" (Num. 1:51), is now become the haunt of jackals. Should we not weep? He said to them: For that very reason, I am laughing. For it is written, "And I call reliable witnesses, Uriah the Priest and Zechariah the son of Jeberechiah" (Isa. 8:2).[3] Now what connection is there between Uriah and Zechariah? Did not Uriah live during First Temple, while Zechariah [lived and prophesied] during the Second Temple? Still, Scripture links the [later] prophecy of Zechariah with the [earlier] prophecy of Uriah. In the [earlier] prophecy, [in the days] of Uriah, it is written, "Because of you, Zion shall be plowed as a field, Jerusalem shall become heaps of ruins, and the Temple Mount a shrine in the woods" (Mic. 3:12),[4] and in Zechariah, it is written, "Thus saith the Lord of hosts: There shall yet old men and old women sit in the broad places of Jerusalem" (Zech. 8:4). So long as Uriah's [dire] prophecy had not yet had its fulfillment, I feared that Zechariah's prophecy would not be fulfilled; now that Uriah's prophecy has been fulfilled, it is quite certain that Zechariah's prophecy also is to be fulfilled. They said to him: Akiva, you have comforted us! Akiva, you have comforted us![5]

---

1. A great seaport in Italy. The incident took place during their journey to Rome in the year 95 C.E.
2. Ps. 99:5 and 132:7; Lam. 2:1.
3. Cf. Zech. 1:1.
4. See Jer. 26:18–20.
5. B. Mak 24a–b and En Yaakov, ad loc.; Sif Deut., §43.

PART II

CHAPTER ONE

THE DEEDS OF THE SAGES

R. Simeon ben Shetah (fl. 1st century B.C.E.)

1. After King Yannai[1] massacred the sages, the world was desolate, until Simeon ben Shetah set to and restored the Torah to its pristine glory.[2]

2. Three hundred Nazirites came up [to Jerusalem] in the days of Simeon ben Shetah and sought to bring nine hundred offerings.[3] For one hundred and fifty of the Nazirites, he found grounds for absolution;[4] but for the other one hundred and fifty, he found no such grounds. Then he went to King Yannai and said to him: Three hundred Nazirites have come up, and they look for nine hundred[5] offerings, which they cannot afford. May I suggest that you provide half out of your means, and I shall provide the other half out of mine, so that they will be able to bring the required offerings. King Yannai provided the half out of his means, and the offerings were brought. But then some people came to King Yannai and informed on R. Simeon ben Shetah, saying: You should know that whatever was offered was offered out of your means only, for Simeon ben Shetah provided nothing at all out of his own means. At that, King Yannai became very angry. When R. Simeon ben Shetah heard that the king was angry at him, he fled in fear.

Soon after, some notables from the kingdom of Persia, who were dining at King Yannai's table, said to him, "Our lord king, we remember that there used to be a venerable man here who regaled us with wise sayings. [We miss him.]" Yannai said to his wife, R. Simeon's sister, "Send for him to come back." She replied, "Swear to me that you will not cause him distress, and send him your signet ring, so that he may feel it is safe to come." He swore to her and sent his ring to R. Simeon, who came back at once.

The king asked, "Why did you flee?" R. Simeon replied, "I heard that my lord king was angry with me and I was afraid you were going to put me to death, and so I took the advice in the verse 'Hide thyself but a little moment, until the indignation be overpast' " (Isa. 26:20).

The king asked, "Why did you make a fool of me?" R. Simeon replied, "God forbid! I had no intention of making you appear foolish. You contributed your share out of your wealth and I out of my Torah [my wisdom]. Thus it is said, 'For wisdom extendeth its shade [freely to those who seek relief from the burning sun], just as wealth extendeth its shade' " (Eccles. 7:12).

"But why didn't you tell me?"

"Had I told you, you would not have contributed."

Yannai seated R. Simeon between himself and the queen, and said, "See what honor I pay you." R. Simeon replied, "It is not you who honor me—it is the Torah that honors me, as Ben Sira put it: 'Exalt her and she shall raise thee high, and make thee sit among great men' " (Prov. 4:8 and Ecclesiasticus 11:1). Yannai said to his queen, "You see, he still does not accept [my] authority." Presently he gave R. Simeon a cup [of wine] with which to say grace.[6] R. Simeon said, "How shall I word the grace? Shall I say, 'Blessed be He of whose sustenance Yannai and his companions have eaten'?" Yannai said, "You persist in your contrariness. Never before have I heard Yannai's name included in the grace." R. Simeon: "What do you expect me to say? [The customary] 'Let us say grace for what we have eaten'? [How can I], since I have not eaten?" So food was brought to him, which he ate, and then he uttered the [customary] blessing, "For what we have eaten."[7]

3. One of King Yannai's slaves killed a man. Simeon ben Shetah said to the sages, "Set your eyes [boldly] on him and let us sit in judgment upon him." So they sent word to the king, "Your slave has killed a man." The king sent him to them [to be tried]. But they again sent word to the king, "You, too, must come here, for the Torah says, 'If warning has been given to its owner' [Exod. 21:29], meaning that if an ox has done damage, the owner must come and stand by his ox."[8] The king came, was given a seat next to Simeon ben Shetah, and sat down.

Then Simeon ben Shetah said, "Stand up on your feet, King Yannai, and let the witnesses testify against you." The king replied, "[I shall do it] not when you say so, but when your colleagues say so." Simeon turned to the right, and they looked down to the ground; he turned to the left, and they too looked down to the ground. Simeon ben Shetah said to them, "You appear to be sunk in deep thought. Let the Master of men's thoughts come and requite you." Gabriel immediately came down and smote them to the ground, so that their souls left them. The king was visibly shaken.

---

1. A Hasmonean king (103–76 B.C.E.).
2. He was responsible for setting up schools for children from the age of five or six (P. Ket, 8, end). B. Kid 66a.
3. At the conclusion of his Naziriteship, a Nazirite was expected to bring a male lamb for a burnt offering, a ewe lamb for a sin offering, and a ram for a peace offering. See Num. 6:14.
4. From the Nazirite vow. Since such absolution was retroactive, it was as though these had never been Nazirites and so were under no obligation to bring offerings.
5. Because one hundred and fifty were absolved from their vows, Simeon in fact needed only one-half the amount he asked the king to pay for. By asking him to contribute one-half of nine hundred, Simeon was actually asking the king to underwrite the entire project.
6. Even though he had not partaken of the meal.
7. Gen. R. 91:3; B. Ber 48a; P. Ber 7:2, 11b.
8. The owner is responsible for his slave, since the latter's legal status is that of a chattel.

Simeon ben Shetah said to him once more, "Stand up on your feet and let the witnesses testify against you. It is not before us that you stand, but before Him who spoke and the world came into being, as is said, 'Both the men, between whom the controversy is, shall stand before the Lord" (Deut. 19:17). At that, King Yannai stood up.[1]

4. It is told of R. Simeon ben Shetah that he once purchased an ass from an Ishmaelite. When his disciples came, they found a jewel suspended from its neck and said to him, "Master, 'The blessing of the Lord, it maketh rich' " (Prov. 10:22). Simeon ben Shetah replied, "I purchased an ass—I did not purchase a precious stone." He went and returned the jewel to the Ishmaelite, who thereafter used to say, "Blessed be the Lord God of Simeon ben Shetah."[2]

5. After R. Simeon ben Shetah was designated head of the Sanhedrin, some people came and told him, "There are eighty witches in a cave in Ashkelon, bent on destroying the world." On that day there was a heavy rainstorm. Still R. Simeon ben Shetah arose at once, gathered eighty young men of tall stature, and took them with him. He gave each one a new jug with a cloak folded up in it, and they placed the jugs upside down on their heads. Then R. Simeon said to them, "When I chirp the first time,[3] put on your cloaks. When I chirp a second time, all of you enter the cave together. After you enter, each of you is to take one of the witches into his arms and lift her off the ground." For such is the way of a witch—once you lift her off the ground, she can do nothing at all.

Then R. Simeon went and stationed himself at the entrance to the cave and called to the witches, "Oyim, oyim,[4] open for me, for I am one of you." They asked, "How did you manage to come here bone-dry at such a rainy hour?" He replied, "I walked between the raindrops." They: "What did you come to do here?" He: "To study and to teach, and to have each of you do what she knows." So one intoned whatever [incantation] she intoned and produced a loaf of bread; another intoned something else and produced a cut of meat; a third produced a cooked dish; and a fourth produced wine. Then they asked him, "And you, what can you do?" He said, "I can chirp twice and produce for you eighty young men wearing dry cloaks. They will find joy in you and give joy to you." He chirped once, and the young men put on their cloaks. He chirped a second time, and all of them entered the cave together. R. Simeon said, "Let each select his mate." They picked them up, went out, and hanged them.

The kinsmen of the eighty women were thereby provoked to anger. Two of them came and bore witness to a charge against R. Simeon ben Shetah's son, which made him liable to the death penalty, and he was sentenced to be put to death. On his way to be stoned, he said, "If I am guilty of this iniquity, let not my death be my expiation; but if I am not guilty, may my death be expiation for all my iniquitous deeds and may the collar [of perjury] encircle the necks of the witnesses."

When the witnesses heard what he had said, they retracted and confessed, "We are false witnesses." The father wished to bring his son back [from the place where he was to be stoned]. But the son said, "If you really wish to bring deliverance during your regime,[5] regard me as though I were not your son[6] [and let the Sanhedrin decide my fate].[7]

Honi the Circle Maker and His Progeny (fl. 2d half of 1st century B.C.E.)

6. Our masters taught: Once it happened that most of [the month of] Adar passed by, and rain did not come down. So the people sent word to Honi the Circle Maker: "Pray for rain to fall." He replied, "Go out and bring in the ovens [in which you roast] the paschal lambs, so that they do not disintegrate."[8] He then prayed, but no rain fell. What did he do? He drew a circle, stationed himself within it, as the prophet Habakkuk had done—Habbakkuk, who is quoted as having said, "I will stand upon my watch, and station me within a circle" (Hab. 2:1). Then Honi exclaimed before the Holy One, "Master of the universe, Your children have turned to me because they regard me as a member of Your household. By Your great Name I swear that I will not move from here until You have mercy on Your children." At once rain began to fall drop by drop. His disciples said, "Master, only because of your merit have we been allowed to see you [cause such a miracle] without being struck dead. But it seems to us that the rain is coming down merely to release you from your vow." In reply, he exclaimed, "Not for this [gentle] rain did I pray, but for pouring rain that would fill cisterns, ditches, and caves." The rain immediately came down so furiously that each drop was the size of the mouth of a cask, and the sages estimated that no drop was less than a log[9] in bulk. Again the disciples said, "Master, only because of your merit have we been allowed to see you without being struck dead. But it seems to us that the pouring rain is coming down to destroy the world."

Again Honi exclaimed before God, "It is not for this that I prayed, but for rains of benevolence, benediction, and grace." At once the rain moderated to a normal volume but continued so steadily that all the people had to go up to the Temple Mount [to escape the rising waters]. Then they said to Honi, "Master, just as you have prayed for rain to come down, pray now for it to cease." He replied, "I have it by tradition that one may not pray for the cessation of superabundant good. Nevertheless, bring me a bullock for a thank offering." They brought him the bullock. He laid both his hands upon it and said to the Holy One, "Master of the universe, Your people Israel, whom

---

1. The king was thus made to submit to the jurisdiction of the Sanhedrin. B. Sanh 19b; Tanhuma B, Shofetim, §6.
2. Deut. R. 3:3.
3. From the cave, which he was to enter alone.
4. A cry used by sorcerers to summon thier creations.
5. In his days, lawlessness prevailed.
6. Literally, "as ownerless as a threshold."
7. P. Hag 2:2, 77d; Rashi on B. Sanh 44b.
8. These portable ovens were usually made of clay.
9. The equivalent in volume of six eggs; one pint.

You brought out of Egypt, cannot endure either superabundant good or superabundant punishment. When You are angry with them, they cannot endure it; and when You shower superabundant good upon them, they cannot endure it. May it be Your will that the rain cease and there be relief for the world." Immediately a wind blew, the clouds dispersed, and the sun shone. The people went out into the fields and began to gather mushrooms and truffles.

Simeon ben Shetah sent word to Honi: "Were you not Honi, I would place you under a ban.[1] But what can I do to you, seeing that you ingratiate yourself with Him who is everywhere, who then grants you your wish, just like a son who ingratiates himself with his father, who then grants him his wish. Thus the son may say, 'Father, take me to where I may bathe in warm water,' and he takes him there; 'to where I may shower in cold water,' and he takes him there; 'Give me walnuts, almonds, peaches, and pomegranates,' and he gives them to him. Of you [Honi], Scripture says, 'Thy Father-and-thy-Mother[2] is glad, therefore she [the congregation of Israel] that bore thee must likewise rejoice' " (Prov. 23:25).

Our masters taught: They who sat in the Chamber of Hewn Stone [the Sanhedrin] sent the following missive to Honi the Circle Maker: "Thou decreest a thing, and because of thee it is established" (Job 22:28ff.)—[on the earth] below you decree, and [in heaven] above the Holy One fulfills your word. "And light shines upon thy ways" (ibid.)—with your prayer you give light to a generation in darkness. "When they were cast down, thou saidst, 'There is lifting up' " (ibid.)—with your prayer you lifted the spirit of a generation that was cast down. "The lowly person thou savest" (ibid.)—with your prayer you saved a generation whom [sin] brought low. "Thou didst deliver him that is not innocent" (ibid.)—with your prayer you delivered a generation that is not innocent. "Yea, it was delivered through the cleanness of thy hands" (ibid.)—you, through the deeds of your clean hands, have delivered it.[3]

7. R. Yohanan said: Through all the days of that righteous man, he was troubled about the meaning of the verse "A Song of Ascents. When the Lord brought back those that returned to Zion, we were like unto them that dream" (Ps. 126:1). Is it possible for a man to doze off and dream continuously for seventy years?[4] [But the following incident clarified the verse's meaning for him.] One day, as he was walking on the road, he saw a man planting a carob tree. He asked him, "How long will it take this tree to bear fruit?" The man replied, "Seventy years." He asked, "Are you quite sure you will live another seventy years to eat its fruit?" The man replied, "I myself found fully grown carob trees in the world; as my forebears planted for me, so am I planting for my children."

Once, when Honi sat down for a meal, sleep overcame him, and he dozed off. During his sleep, a grotto formed itself about him and hid him from sight, so that he continued sleeping for seventy years. When he awoke, he saw a man gathering the fruit of that same carob tree. He asked, "Are you the man who planted this tree?" The man replied, "That was my grandfather." Next, when Honi saw the herds and herds descended from his own she-ass, he exclaimed, "No doubt I slept for seventy years." He went to his home and inquired, "Where is the son of Honi the Circle Maker?" He was told, "Honi's son is no longer in this world, but his grandson is." At that, he announced, "I am Honi the Circle Maker," but no one believed him. Next he went to the house of study, where he overheard the sages say, "This tradition is as clear to us now as it was in the days of Honi the Circle Maker," for whenever he came to the academy, he would settle any difficulty the sages had. Hearing these words, he cried out, "But I am Honi!" Since the sages neither believed him nor accorded him the honor due him, he was so mortified that he besought God's mercy—and he died.

Rava observed: For this reason mortals say, "The fellowship of men or the fellowship of death."[5]

8. Abba Hilkiah was Honi the Circle Maker's grandson. Whenever the world was in need of rain, the sages sent word to him, and he besought God's mercy and rain fell. Once, when there was urgent need for rain, the sages sent a pair of scholars to ask him to beseech God's mercy. When they came to his home and did not find him, they went on to his field, where they found him hoeing. They greeted him, but he took no notice of them. Toward evening, he gathered sticks of wood, and, after loading the sticks of wood and the hoe on one shoulder, and his cloak on the other shoulder, he started for home. On the way, he did not wear his shoes, but when he got to a body of water, he put them on; when he came to thorns and thistles, he lifted up his garments. When he reached the city limit, his wife, bedecked in her finery, came out to meet him. When he arrived at the entrance to his house, his wife entered first, then he, and then the sages. He sat down to eat but did not say to the sages, "Please join me." When he distributed the bread[6] among his children, he gave one portion to the elder son and two to the younger.

Then Abba Hilkiah whispered to his wife: I know that the sages have come to me on account of rain. So [without making them aware of it] let us go up to the roof and beseech God's mercy. Perhaps the Holy One will be reconciled and rain will fall, and in that event you and I will not be credited for it. When they went up to the roof, he stood in one corner and she in another, both beseeching God's mercy, and a cloud appeared first over the corner where his wife stood. When he came down, he said to the sages, "Blessed be He who is everywhere, who has not made you depend on Abba Hilkiah." They replied, "We know that the rain has come because of your merit—be that as it may. But, sir, we would like to have explained

---

1. God must have imposed the drought in punishment for Israel's transgressions, and pressing Him to cancel His judgment would have been sinful.
2. In speaking of God as "Father-and-Mother," Simeon ben Shetah resorts to a very bold epithet for God the Creator.
3. B. Ta 19a and 23a; En Yaakov, ad loc.
4. The number of years the exile in Babylon lasted.
5. B. Ta 23a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
6. Literally, "doubled the bread" [after placing salt and herbs upon it].

those actions that so baffled us: Why did you take no notice of us when we greeted you?"

He answered, "I was working as a hired man for the day, and felt I had no right to take any time out."

"Why did you load the sticks of wood on one shoulder and the cloak on the other?"

"The cloak was borrowed—borrowed to be worn, not to serve as padding for some sticks of wood."

"Why did you not wear your shoes the entire way, but when you came to a body of water, you put them on?"

"Everything on the road I could see; I could not see what was in the water."

"Why did you lift up your garments when you came to thorns and thistles?"

"A scratch on the body heals itself, but a rent in clothing does not."

"When you reached the city limit, why did your wife come out to meet you wearing all her finery?"

"So that I would not set my eyes on any other woman."

"Why did she enter [the house] first, you after her, and then we?"

"You are not known to me."[1]

"When you sat down to eat, why did you not say, 'Please join us?"

"The food was not abundant, and I preferred not to have the sages thank me for something they could not have had."

"Why did you give one portion to the elder son and two portions to the younger?"

"The elder one stays at home, but the younger is usually away at school."[2]

"Why did the cloud appear first in the corner where your wife stood and then in the corner where you stood?"

"My wife, staying at home, gives bread to the poor, which benefits them right away, while I give them money, which does not benefit them right away."[3]

9. Honi the Circle Maker's daughter had a son called Hanan ha-Nehba. When the world was in need of rain, the sages would send schoolchildren to him; they would take hold of the hem of his garment and say to him, "Father, father, give us rain." Then he would plead with the Holy One, "Master of the universe, do it for the sake of these who do not know the difference between a Father who can give rain and a father who cannot." And why was he called Hanan ha-Nehba? Because he used to hide (mahbi) himself.[4]

Hillel the Elder (fl. end of 1st century B.C.E.)

10. R. Levi said: In Jerusalem there was found a genealogical scroll in which was written, "Hillel is of David's stock."[5]

1. And so I preferred not to leave her unchaperoned.
2. Where he gets little food.
3. Immediate relief is best. B. Ta 23a–b.
4. Out of modesty and humility.
5. P. Ta 4:2, 68a.

11. Hillel and Shebna were brothers. Hillel engaged in the study of Torah [in dire poverty], while Shebna engaged in trade [and prospered]. Eventually [after Hillel became famous], Shebna said to Hillel, "Come, let us be partners and share [the profits]."[6] A divine voice went forth and proclaimed, "If this man were to give all the substance of his house for the love [of Torah, which he now professes], he would be utterly contemned" (Song 8:7).[7]

12. It is reported about Hillel the Elder that every day he used to work and earn one tropaic,[8] half of which he would give to the watchman at the house of study; the other half he used on food for himself and the members of his household. One day he was unable to earn anything, so the watchman at the house of study did not let him in. He then climbed [to the roof] and hung on, sitting over the opening of the skylight, so that he could hear the words of the living God from the mouths of Shemaiah and Avtalion. It is said that the day was a Sabbath eve in the winter solstice, and snow came down on him from heaven. When the dawn rose, Shemaiah said to Avtalion, "Brother Avtalion, every day this house is bright with light, but today it is dark. Is the day cloudy?" When they looked up, they saw the figure of a man in the skylight. They climbed to the roof and found Hillel, covered with three cubits of snow. They removed the snow from him, bathed and anointed him, and, as they seated him in front of an open fire, they said, "This man deserves to have the Sabbath profaned on his behalf."[9]

13. Our masters taught: On one occasion, the fourteenth of Nisan fell on a Sabbath, and the Bene Betera[10] forgot the law, so that they did not know whether offering the paschal lamb does or does not override the Sabbath. They asked, "Is there anyone at all who knows whether or not the paschal lamb overrides the Sabbath?" They were told, "There is a certain man who has come up from Babylonia—he is known as Hillel the Babylonian. Since he ministered to the two notables of the generation, Shemaiah and Avtalion, he must know whether or not offering the paschal lamb overrides the Sabbath." So they sent for him and asked, "Do you know whether or not the paschal lamb overrides the Sabbath?" He replied, "Have we only one lamb—the lamb offered on Passover—that might override the Sabbath? Have we not in fact more than two hundred so-called paschal lambs during the year that override the Sabbath?"[11] The Bene Betera, taken aback, asked, "How can you make such a statement?" He replied, "In con-

6. The reward for Torah in the world-to-come and the profits of business in this world.
7. So Iyyun Yaakov, ad loc. B. Sot 21a.
8. Half a denar.
9. The Sabbath may be profaned to save a human life. B. Yoma 35b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
10. Sages of Judea who were at the helm after the death of Shemaiah and Avtalion until the appointment of Hillel as patriarch (1st century B.C.E.)
11. The lamb offered in the morning and evening of fifty Sabbaths during the year plus the two additional daily offerings on a Sabbath add up to more than two hundred during a year.

nection with the paschal lamb, Scripture prescribes that it be offered 'in its appointed time' [Num. 9:2], and in connection with [its analogue] the daily lamb, Scripture likewise prescribes that it be offered 'in its appointed time' [Num. 28:2]—just as 'its appointed time' said in connection with the daily lamb involves overriding the Sabbath, so 'its appointed time' said in connection with the paschal lamb involves overriding the Sabbath. Besides, there is an argument a fortiori: if the daily lamb, whose omission is not punished by excision, overrides the Sabbath, then should not the paschal lamb, whose neglect is punished by excision, without question override the Sabbath? Immediately Hillel was placed foremost in the house of study and appointed patriarch over them, and the rest of the entire day he sat and lectured concerning the laws of Passover. In the course of his remarks, he was moved to chide the people of Jerusalem, saying, "Who brought it about that I have come from Babylonia and have been made patriarch over you? It was your own indolence—you did not minister to the two notables of the generation, Shemaiah and Avtalion, who dwelled in your very midst." No sooner did he rebuke them than the answer to a question in Halakhah was hidden from him, so that when they asked him, "Master, what is the rule if a man forgot to bring in a knife on the eve of the Sabbath?" he had to reply, "I have heard the answer to this question but forgotten it. But depend on the people of Israel: if they themselves are not prophets, they are the children of prophets!" Indeed, the next day, one whose Passover offering was a lamb stuck the knife in its wool; one whose Passover offering was a goat tied the knife between its horns.[1] When Hillel saw what was being done, he recollected the Halakhah and said, "What these men are doing is in line with the tradition I received from the mouths of Shemaiah and Avtalion."[2]

14. Our masters taught: It once happened that two men made a wager with each other, agreeing that he who was able to arouse the anger of Hillel would win four hundred zuz. So one of them said, "I will go [first] and arouse his anger." Since it was before the onset of Sabbath, Hillel was washing his head. The man went, passed by the door of Hillel's house, and called out, "Is there a Hillel[3] here? Is there a fellow named Hillel around this place?" Hillel pulled his robe on and went out to him, saying, "My son, what do you wish?" "I have a question to ask." "Ask, my son, ask."

"Why are the heads of the Babylonians round?"[4]

"My son, you have asked quite a question. The answer is that their midwives are unskilled."

The man left, stayed away for a while, then came back, calling out, "Is there a Hillel here? Is there a fellow named Hillel here?" Again Hillel pulled on his robe and went out to him, saying, "My son, what do you wish?" "I have a question to ask." "Ask, my son, ask."

"Why are the eyes of the Palmyrians bleary?"

"My son, you have asked quite a question. The answer is that they live in a [windswept] sandy country."

The man left, stayed away for a while, and again came back, calling out, "Is there a Hillel here? Is there a fellow named Hillel around this place?" Once again Hillel pulled on his robe and went out to him, saying, "My son, what do you wish?" "I have a question to ask." "Ask, my son, ask."

"Why are the feet of the Ethiopians so wide?"

"My son, you have asked quite a question. The answer is that they live in watery marshes."[5]

"I have many questions to ask," said the man, "but I am afraid that you may become angry [at me]." At that, Hillel wrapped his robe around himself, sat down before the man, and said, "All the questions you have to ask, go ahead and ask." The man: "Are you the Hillel who is called patriarch of Israel?" Hillel: "Yes." The man: "If you are the one, may there not be many like you in Israel." Hillel: "Why, my son?" The man: "Because on account of you I just lost four hundred zuz." Hillel: "Calm your spirit. Losing four hundred zuz, and even an additional four hundred zuz, was well worth it, [for you have learned that, whatever the provocation], Hillel will not lose his temper."[6]

15. Our masters taught: A certain heathen once came before Shammai and asked him, "How many Torahs have you?" "Two," he replied, "the Written Torah and the Oral Torah." "I will believe you about the Written Torah, but not about the Oral Torah. Take me as a proselyte, on condition that you teach me only the Written Torah." In response, Shammai scolded him and angrily ordered him to get out. When he went before Hillel, the latter accepted him as a proselyte. On the first day he taught him the letters of the alphabet in order: Alef, bet, gimmel, dalet [and so on to tav]. The following day he reversed the order of the letters. "But yesterday you did not teach them to me in this order," the heathen protested. "Is it not upon me," Hillel asked, "that you have to rely to know the correct order of letters in the alphabet? Then you must also rely upon me for the validity of the Oral Torah."

On another occasion, it happened that a certain heathen came before Shammai and said to him, "Take me as a proselyte, but on condition that you teach me the entire Torah, all of it, while I stand on one foot." Shammai instantly drove him away with a builder's measuring rod he happened to have in his hand. When the heathen came before Hillel, Hillel said to him, "What is hateful to you, do not do to your fellow man. This is the entire Torah, all of it; the rest is commentary. Go and study it."

On another occasion, it happened that a certain heathen passing behind a synagogue heard the voice of a teacher reciting, "And these are the garments which they shall make: a breastpiece, and an ephod" (Exod. 28:4).

---

1. And thus avoided having to carry the knife on the Sabbath.
2. B. Pes 66a and En Yaakov, ad loc.: P. Pes 6:1, 33a.
3. Insolently, without the courtesy of a prefixed title, besides being contemptuous, as if Hillel were an unknown nobody and not the premier scholar of his age.
4. Intended as a dig at Hillel, who was a Babylonian.
5. Just as ducks' feet are webbed, so the feet of Ethiopians must be wide to enable them to get about.
6. B. Shab 30b–31a.

He asked: "For whom are these intended?" He was told, "For the high priest." The heathen said to himself: I will go and become a proselyte so that I may be appointed high priest. He went before Shammai and said to him, "Take me as a proselyte, on condition that you appoint me high priest." Shammai promptly drove him away with a builder's measuring rod he happened to have in his hand. When the heathen went before Hillel, Hillel made him a proselyte, but then asked, "Is a king appointed unless he knows the details of governance? Go now and study details of [the Temple's] governance!" The new proselyte went and read Scripture. When he came to the verse "The layman that cometh nigh shall be put to death" (Num. 1:51), he asked Hillel, "To whom does this verse apply?" "Even to David, king of Israel." At that, that proselyte applied to himself an argument a fortiori: Israel are called sons of Him who is everywhere—indeed, He speaks of them as "Israel, My firstborn son" (Exod. 4:22) out of the love He has for them. Yet of them it is written, "The layman that cometh nigh shall be put to death." Surely how much more and more do these words apply to a lowly proselyte, who comes with his staff and his shoulder bag! Then he went before Shammai and said to him, "Could I ever have been eligible to become high priest?[1] Is it not written in the Torah, 'The layman that cometh nigh shall be put to death'?" Next, he went before Hillel and said to him, "O gentle Hillel, may blessings rest on your head for bringing me under the wings of the Presence!"

Some time later, when the three aforementioned proselytes happened to meet in one place, they said, "Shammai's severity nearly drove us from the world [-to-come], but Hillel's gentleness brought us under the wings of the Presence." [Hence, say the sages]: A man should always be as flexible as Hillel, not as inflexible as Shammai.[2]

16. "He who does good to his own person is a man of piety" (Prov. 11:17),[3] as may be inferred from what Hillel the Elder once said. After concluding a session of study with his disciples, he kept walking along with them. His disciples asked him, "Master, where are you going?" He answered, "To perform a precept." "What precept?" He replied, "To wash up in the bathhouse." "But is this a precept?" "It is indeed. Kings' statues set up in theaters and circuses have to be scoured and washed down by a man specially appointed to look after them, who receives maintenance for the work. More—he is esteemed as being among the notables of the kingdom. How much more and more am I required to scour and wash myself, I who have been created in God's image and likeness—I, of whom it is written, 'In the image of God made He man'!" (Gen. 9:6).

Another exposition: "He who does good to his own person is a man of piety," as may be inferred from what Hillel the Elder once said. After concluding a session of study with his disciples, he walked along with them. His disciples asked him, "Master, where are you going?" He replied, "To do a good turn to a guest in my house." They said, "You seem to have a guest every day." He replied, "Is not my poor soul a guest in my body—here today, and tomorrow here no longer?"[4]

17. It is related of Hillel the Elder that, for a certain poor man who was of good family, he hired[5] a horse to ride on and a slave to run before him. Once, when he could not find a slave to run before the man, he himself ran before him a distance of three mil.[6]

18. On one occasion Hillel the elder had a meal prepared for a certain man. [Before they were called to sit down] a poor man came by, stood at Hillel's doorway, and said, "I am scheduled to marry today and have no provisions whatever." Hearing that, Hillel's wife took the entire meal and gave it to the poor man [without telling her husband]. Then she kneaded fresh dough, cooked another pot of stew, and, when it was ready, placed it before Hillel and his guest. Hillel asked, "My dear, why did you not bring it sooner?" She told him what happened. He said, "My dear, in asking about the delay, I meant to judge you not on the scale of guilt but on the scale of merit, because I was certain that everything you did, you did for the sake of Heaven."[7]

19. Our masters taught: It once happened that Hillel the Elder, while returning from a journey, heard a cry of anguish in the city and said to himself: I am confident that this cry does not come from my house. To him apply the words "He shall not be afraid of evil tidings; his heart is steadfast, trusting in the Lord" (Ps. 112:7).[8]

20. When the Torah was forgotten in Israel, Ezra came up from Babylon and reestablished it. [Some of] the Torah was again forgotten, and Hillel the Babylonian came up and he, too, reestablished it.

Hillel came up from Babylonia at the age of forty, ministered to the sages for forty years, and guided Israel for forty years.

It is said of Hillel that there were no sages' words that he put aside and did not study. Then, too, [he studied] all languages, even those of mountains, hills, and valleys; of trees and herbs; of beasts, wild and tame; and of demons; as well as the parables of fullers and [fables of] foxes.[9]

21. Our masters taught: Hillel the Elder had eighty disciples. Thirty of them were worthy of having the Presence rest upon them, as it did upon Moses our teacher. Thirty were worthy of having the sun stand still for them, as it did for Joshua son of Nun; and the remaining twenty were more moderately competent. The oldest was Jonathan ben Uzziel;[10] the youngest was Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai.[11]

---

1. Meaning: "I apologize to you for demanding something you could not possibly grant me."
2. B. Shab 31a.
3. JV: "The merciful man doeth good to his own soul."
4. Lev. R. 34:3.
5. "He hired"—Alfasi; BR: "bought."
6. B. Ket 67b.
7. DER 6.
8. B. Ber 60a.
9. B. Suk 20a; Sif Deut., §357; Sof 16.
10. It is said he wrote a Targum to the Prophets. B. Meg 3a.
11. B. Suk 28a and En Yaakov, ad loc.

22. Once, when Hillel took sick, all his disciples came to visit him, but Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai remained in the courtyard. Hillel asked, "Where is the youngest of you, the one who is father of wisdom, father of the generations, and, needless to say, the most distinguished among you?" They replied, "He is in the courtyard." Hillel: "Let him come in." When he came in, Hillel said to his disciples, "To this one apply the words 'I [Torah] cause those that love me to inherit substance, and I fill their treasuries' " (Prov. 8:21).[1]

23. Our masters taught: After the death of the last prophets, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi, the holy spirit departed from Israel; yet they were still served by the divine voice. Once, when the rabbis were gathered in the upper chamber of Guria's house in Jericho, a divine voice sounded above them from heaven, saying, "There is one among you who is worthy of having the Presence rest upon him as it did upon Moses our teacher, but his generation does not merit it." The sages set their eyes on Hillel the Elder. When he died, they lamented and said, "Alas for the pious man, alas for the humble man, the disciple of Ezra [is no more]!"[2]

Akavia ben Mahalalel (fl. middle of 1st century C.E.)

24. Akavia ben Mahalalel testified to the validity of four legal opinions. He was told: Akavia, retract what you said about these four legal matters, and we will make you president of Israel's High Court. He replied: Better for me to be called a fool all my days than to be wicked in the sight of God even for one hour, so people would say of me, "He retracted for the sake of advancement in office." At that, they put him under a ban, and when he died while still under the ban, the court put a stone on his coffin.[3] R. Judah said: God forbid saying that Akavia was put under a ban, for [on a Passover eve] when the Temple Court [was so filled with people that it] had to be closed, there was not a man in the multitude who was equal to Akavia ben Mahalalel in wisdom and in the fear of sin.

In the hour of Akavia's death, he said to his son, "Retract the four opinions I used to maintain." His son asked, "Why did you yourself not retract them?" He replied, "I heard them from the mouths of a majority of my teachers, and my opponents heard [the contrary] from the mouths of a majority [of their teachers].[4] I stood fast by the tradition I had heard, and my opponents stood fast by the tradition they had heard. But you have heard [my tradition] from the mouth of only one individual [myself], and [my opponents' tradition] from the mouths of a majority. It is better to leave the opinion of an individual and take hold of the opinion of the majority." The son then said, "Father, commend me to your colleagues." Akavia replied, "I will not commend you." The son: "Have you found some wrong in me?" "No," said Akavia, "but your own deeds may bring you near to them, and your own deeds may remove you far from them."[5]

Rabban Gamaliel the Elder (fl. 90–110 C.E.)

25. We have been taught: One may not register simultaneously for two paschal lambs.[6] Yet it once happened that the king and queen instructed their servants, "Go out and slaughter a paschal offering on our behalf." However, the servants [on their own] slaughtered two offerings [a lamb and a goat]. When they went to ask the king [which one he desired], he answered, "Go ask the queen." When they went to ask the queen, she said, "Go ask Rabban Gamaliel." They went and asked Rabban Gamaliel, who said, "The king and queen, who [having much food] are not greatly concerned [and therefore cannot be said to have committed themselves], may eat the first animal slaughtered; but [in a similar case] we may eat neither the first nor the second."

On another occasion, a lizard was found in the slaughterhouse of the palace, and they were ready to declare the entire repast about to be served unclean.[7] They went and asked the king, who answered, "Go ask the queen." When they went and asked the queen, she said, "Go ask Rabban Gamaliel." So they went and asked Rabban Gamaliel, who said, "Was the lizard lying in hot water or in cold water?" "In hot water." "Then pour a glass of cold water over it." They poured a glass of cold water over it, and it began to stir.[8] At that, Rabban Gamaliel declared the entire repast clean.

Thus, the king was dependent on the queen, and the queen was dependent on Rabban Gamaliel. Hence the entire repast [for king and queen], all of it, was dependent on Rabban Gamaliel.[9]

R. Zadok and His Son R. Eleazar (fl. 2d half of 1st century C.E.)

26. R. Zadok observed fasts for forty years in order that Jerusalem not be destroyed [and he became so emaciated that] when he ate anything, the food could be seen [as it passed through his gullet]. When he wanted to restore himself, they used to bring him figs, and he would suck their juice and throw the rest away.

When Vespasian was laying siege to Jerusalem, Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai came before him. Vespasian said, "If you have any friend or relative in the city, send for him and bring him out before my troops enter." Rabban Yohanan sent R. Eliezer and R. Joshua to bring out R. Zadok. They went and found him at the city gate. When

---

1. P. Ned 5:7, 39b.
2. B. Sanh 11a.
3. As a symbolic gesture of stoning.
4. The controversy between Akavia and the sages was over what had been the opinion of the majority of the sages before them.
5. Ed 5:6–7.
6. To subsequently eat whichever one chooses, since choosing one or the other later is not deemed to have retroactive power.
7. A dead lizard (haltaah) defiles anything in contact with it.
8. They now saw that it was alive.
9. The king and queen in the two stories may have been Agrippa I and his wife. B. Pes 88b.

R. Zadok arrived, Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai stood up before him. Vespasian asked, "You stand up in deference to this emaciated old man?" Rabban Yohanan: "By your life, if there had been one more like him in Jerusalem, you would have been unable to conquer it, even if your army were twice its size." Vespasian: "What is his power?" Rabban Yohanan: "He eats one ripened fig and, with the strength he derives from it, he teaches one hundred sessions at the academy." "But why is he so emaciated?" "Because of his numerous abstinences and fasts." Vespasian sent for physicians, who fed R. Zadok small portions of food and small doses of liquid until his normal weight was restored.[1]

27. R. Zadok was the greatest man of the generation. When he was taken captive, a certain Roman noblewoman acquired him and assigned him a beautiful maidservant. The moment he saw her, he turned his eyes to the wall, so as not to look at her. And he sat studying all night. In the morning she went and complained to her mistress, saying, "I would rather die than be given to this man." The mistress sent for him and asked, "Why did you not do with that woman as men are accustomed to do?" He replied, "How else could I have acted—I who come from a line of high priests, from a family of great distinction?" When she heard what he said, she ordered that he be freed with great honor.[2]

28. R. Eleazar bar Zadok said: When I was studying Torah with R. Yohanan the Horonite,[3] I noticed that during a year of drought he used to eat dry bread with salt. I went home and told it to my father, who said, "Bring him some olives." When I brought them and he noticed that they were moist,[4] he said to me, "I do not eat olives."[5] I came back and told my father, who said to me, "Go tell him that the jar was broached,[6] only the lees had blocked up the breach."[7]

29. R. Eleazar bar Zadok said: When my father was dying, he gave me the following instructions: "My son, bury me first in a fosse. In due time, gather my bones and put them in an ossuary; but be sure not to gather them with your own hands."

And thus did I do for him: Yohanan entered the fosse, gathered the bones, and spread a sheet over them. Then I entered, rent my garments [in mourning] over the bones [as though they were the original corpse of my deceased father], and sprinkled dried herbs over them.

As my father had done for his father, so I did for him.[8]

30. It is said of R. Eleazar bar Zadok and of Abba Saul ben Batnit, who throughout their lives were shopkeepers in Jerusalem, that on the eve of a festival they would fill their measures [with oil][9] and give it to their customers on the day of the festival. In order to avoid neglect of the house of study—so said R. Hananiah ben Akavia—the same thing used to be done [on the eves of] the intermediate days of the festival.[10] On weekdays also—said the sages—the same thing was done by tipping the vessel beforehand, so that it emptied completely into the buyer's vessel. In fact, Abba Saul ben Batnit had collected three hundred jars of oil from what clung to the vessel after it was measured, and his companion, Eleazar bar Zadok, had collected three hundred jars of wine from the foam left over in the measures they used; they brought these to the treasurers dispensing charity. The treasurers said, "You are not required to do so."[11] They replied, "But we do not wish to keep them." The treasurers: "Since you are determined to be stringent with yourselves, the liquids will be turned over to the community, to be used for communal purposes.[12]

The School of Shammai and the School of Hillel (middle of 1st century C.E.)

31. When the disciples of Shammai and Hillel who had not studied sufficiently grew numerous, disputes multiplied in Israel, and the Torah became two Torahs.[13]

32. R. Abba said in the name of Samuel: For three years there was a dispute between the school of Shammai and the school of Hillel, the ones asserting, "The law is according to our views," and the others asserting, "The law is according to our views." Then a divine voice went forth and said, "The utterances of the one and those of the other are both the words of the living God, but the law is according to the school of Hillel."

Since both are the words of the living God, what entitled the school of Hillel to have the law fixed according to their rulings? Because they were kindly and humble; they taught their own rulings as well as those of the school of Shammai.[14] And even more, they taught the rulings of the school of Shammai before their own.

---

1. B. Git 56a; Lam. R. 1:5, §31.
2. ARN 16.
3. Perhaps from Hauran, mentioned in Ezek. 47:18, between Damascus and Gilead.
4. Moisture renders fruit susceptible to ritual uncleanness.
5. He hesitated to eat them because of the possibility that the earthen jar in which they were kept had been touched by an am ha-aretz (an ignorant man who gave little heed to the laws of ritual purity); thus, according to rabbinical enactment, the jar would have become unclean. Upon being moistened, the olives receive uncleanness from the jar.
6. "Keeping olives in a broached container is clear evidence that the owner had no desire to retain the sap that exudes from the olives, and only liquids which are desired by the owner render the fruit susceptible to Levitical uncleanness" (Yev, Soncino, p. 83 n. 1).
7. "And thus the undesired moisture remained in the olives. . . . Such may safely be eaten even by the scrupulous" (Yev, Soncino, p. 83, n. 2). B. Yev 15b.
8. Sem 12 (YJS 17:82).
9. Measuring out oil during the festival was prohibited.
10. Measures would be filled in the evening.
11. Those who purchased the wine and the oil were assumed to have resigned what was left in the measures.
12. Tos Betz 3:8; P. Betz 3:8, 62b.
13. There was controversy concerning many matters. B. Sanh 88b.
14. E.g., in saying the Shema, R. Tarfon, a member of the school of Hillel, followed a Shammaitic ruling at the risk of his life. B. Ber 10b.

This should teach you that he who humbles himself is exalted by the Holy One, and he who exalts himself is humbled by the Holy One.[1]

33. Although the school of Shammai and the school of Hillel were in disagreement—what the one forbade, the other permitted—nevertheless the school of Shammai did not refrain from marrying women of the families of the school of Hillel, nor did the school of Hillel refrain from marrying those of the school of Shammai. This should teach you that they showed love and friendship toward one another, thus putting into practice the injunction "Love ye truth, but also peace" (Zech. 8:19).[2]

Jonathan ben Uzziel (fl. middle of 1st century C.E.)

34. It is said of Jonathan ben Uzziel that when he sat and occupied himself with Torah, every bird that flew over him was instantly incinerated.[3]

35. The Targum of the Five Books of Moses—Onkelos the Proselyte composed it under the guidance of R. Eliezer and R. Joshua. The Targum of the Prophets—Jonathan ben Uzziel composed it under the guidance of Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi.[4] At the time [of its completion], the Land of Israel quaked over an area four hundred parasangs by four hundred parasangs, and a divine voice went forth and exclaimed, "Who is this that has revealed My secrets to mankind?"[5] Jonathan ben Uzziel stood up and said, "It is I who have revealed Your secrets to mankind. It is revealed and known to You that I did so not for my own honor nor for the honor of my father's house, but I have done it for Your honor alone, so that dissension may not increase in Israel."[6]

He further sought to reveal by a Targum [the inner meaning of] the Writings. But a divine voice went forth and said, "Enough!" What was the reason? Because in that part of Scripture, the exact time of the Messiah's coming is foretold.[7]

36. Our masters taught: A tale is told of a certain person whose sons did not conduct themselves properly. He got busy and assigned his estate in writing to Jonathan ben Uzziel. What did Jonathan ben Uzziel do? One third he sold;[8] one third he consecrated;[9] and the remaining third he returned to the man's sons. Shammai came at him with staff and bag.[10] Jonathan replied, "Shammai, if you think you have the right to take back what I sold and what I consecrated, then you also have the right to take back what I returned to the sons. But if not, you cannot take back what I returned."[11]

Shammai exclaimed, "The son of Uzziel has insulted me![12] The son of Uzziel has insulted me!"

R. Yose son of R. Bun said: What actually happened was the following: Jonathan ben Uzziel's father vowed that his son was to derive no benefit from his estate and proceeded to assign it in writing to Shammai. What did Shammai do? A part he sold, a part he consecrated, and the remainder he gave to Jonathan as a gift. Then he said, "Let whoever finds fault with this gift first take back what the purchasers and the Temple got, and then take back what Jonathan got.[13]

Samuel the Little (fl. 1st century C.E.)

37. It is told that Rabban Gamaliel [II] once said, "Early in the morning, seven scholars are to meet me in the upper chamber[14] [to intercalate a month in the year]." But when he came in early that morning, he found eight. So he said, "Whoever has come without permission should leave." Samuel the Little stood up and said, "It is I who came without permission. I came up not to participate in the intercalation of the year, but because I felt the need to learn the practical application of the law." Rabban Gamaliel answered, "Sit down, my son, sit down. You are worthy of intercalating all the years that require it. However, the rabbis have declared, 'Years may be intercalated only by those specially invited for the purpose.' "

In reality, it was not Samuel the Little [who was the uninvited one] but another man; Samuel merely wished to save the intruder from humiliation.[15]

38. Once Samuel the Little ordained a fast [for the following day], but rain fell before sunrise [before the people had begun to fast and to pray]. The people thought that it was due to the merit of the congregation.[16] But Samuel said to them: To have you understand what happened, I will tell you the parable of a servant who asked his master for a gratuity, and the master said to his other servants, "Give it to him, just so I do not have to listen to his whining."

Another time, Samuel the Little ordained a fast [for the following day], and rain fell the next day after sunset

---

1. B. Er 13b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. B. Yev 14b.
3. Burned by the fire of the ministering angels, who gathered to listen to his teaching. So Rashi, ad loc. B. Suk 28a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
4. He may have used traditions ascribed to them. Samuel Edels.
5. "Jonathan ben Uzziel's Targum is very paraphrastic and applies many of the prophetic verses to the Messianic Age" (Meg, Soncino, p. 9, n. 8).
6. "Through different interpretations being placed on the prophetic allusions" (Meg, Soncino, p. 9, n. 9).
7. In the book of Daniel. B. Meg 3a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
8. And kept the money.
9. For Temple use.
10. In vehement objection. Shammai maintained that Jonathan had no right to return any part of the money to the sons, for in doing so he flouted the father's last wish.
11. "If the sale and the transaction are valid, it follows that the estate has passed into the absolute ownership of Jonathan. Consequently he is entitled to dispose of it in any way he pleases. Hence his gift to the sons of the deceased is also legally valid" (BB, Soncino, p. 562, n. 7).
12. Literally, "covered me with plaster."
13. B. BB 133b–134a and En Yaakov, ad loc.; P. Ned 5:7, 39b.
14. The meeting place of the rabbis.
15. B. Sanh 11a.
16. Inasmuch as rain came even before their prayers of entreaty.

[after the people had fasted and entreated God]. The people thought that it was due to the merit of the congregation. But Samuel said to them: To have you understand what happened, I will tell you the parable of a servant who asked his master for a gratuity, and the master said to his other servants, "Keep him waiting until he is made submissive by hunger and is wracked by pain. Then give it to him."

Then, according to Samuel the Little, how is one ever to determine whether a congregation's own merit is responsible for the coming of rain? Only when a congregation recites the prayer "He causeth the wind to blow" and the wind blows at once; and when it recites "He causeth the rain to fall," and rain falls at once.[1]

39. Our masters taught: In Yavneh, at the request of Rabban Gamaliel, Simeon ha-Pakuli[2] fixed the order of the Eighteen Benedictions.

Later Rabban Gamaliel asked the sages: Is there anyone here who can compose [a nineteenth] benediction—[the imprecation] against heretics? Samuel the Little arose and composed it. The next year [while reciting the benedictions in the synagogue service], he forgot this nineteenth benediction. He tried for two or three hours to recall it. Still, he was not removed [from his post as reader].[3]

40. Once the sages were reclining at a meal in an upper chamber in Yavneh, and a divine voice from heaven came over them: One man here is worthy of having the Presence rest upon him, but his generation does not merit the privilege. The sages set their eyes on Samuel the Little. And when he died, they said: Alas for the pious man, alas for the humble man, the disciple of Hillel [is no more]!

Why was he called "the Little"? Because he made little of himself. Some say: Because he was just a little less than the other Samuel, the one of Ramah.[4]

41. When Samuel the Little died and left no heir, his key and ledger were suspended from his coffin.[5] Rabban Gamaliel the Elder and R. Eliezer eulogized him, saying:

> Over him it is well to weep.
> Over him it is well to mourn.
> When kings die,
> They leave their crowns to their children.
> When the rich die,
> They leave their wealth to their children.
> Samuel the Little
> Took all the world's treasures and went off [with them].

(The words "They will be thine alone; others have no part with thee" [Prov. 5:17] apply to his death.)

1. B. Ta 25b.
2. The word may mean "cotton seller."
3. Because his piety was unquestioned. Another person would have been suspected of heresy and removed immediately. B. Ber 28b–29a.
4. B. Sanh 11a; P. Sot 9:13–14, 24b.
5. The key and the ledger symbolized the fact that Samuel the Little was taking all his property with him. So Gedaliah Alon, quoted in Sem, YJS 17:15.

In the hour of his death, Samuel the Little spoke thus: "Simeon and Ishmael,[6] for the sword; their companions, for execution; the rest of the nation, for plunder. And afterward, great disasters will come to the world." He said this in Aramaic.[7]

Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai (1st century C.E.)

42. All the years of Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai were one hundred and twenty: forty years he engaged in business; forty years he studied; and forty years he taught.[8]

43. It is said of Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai that during his entire life he never used profane speech, nor walked four cubits without studying Torah or without wearing tefillin; nor did any man arrive earlier than he at the house of study, nor did he sleep or even doze while there; nor, when he went out, did he leave anyone in the house of study; nor when he happened to be in a filthy alleyway did he meditate [on sacred subjects]; nor did anyone ever find him sitting silent—he was always engaged in study; no one but himself opened the door to his disciples; never in his life did he say anything that he had not heard from his teacher;[9] and, except on the eve of Passover,[10] or the eve of Yom Kippur,[11] he never said, "It is time to leave the house of study." After him, his disciple R. Eliezer conducted himself likewise.[12]

44. It is said of Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai that no man ever greeted him first, not even a heathen in the marketplace.[13]

45. It is said of Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai that he did not leave unstudied Scripture, Mishnah, Gemara,[14] Halakhah,[15] Aggadah,[16] details of the Torah,[17] details of the scribes,[18] inferences from the minor to the major, analogies,[19] calendrical computations,[20] gematrias,[21] the speech

6. Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel and R. Ishmael the High Priest. See below in this chapter, §180.
7. So that those around him would not understand his prophecy. B. Sanh 11a; Sem 8:7 (YJS 17:59).
8. B. RH 31b.
9. That is, at public gatherings he offered no decision on law unless he had heard it from his teacher. So Adin Steinsaltz in his edition of Suk (Jerusalem, 1979), ad loc.
10. When it was necessary to hurry home, so that the seder could start early and the children stay awake through it.
11. When the last meal had to be eaten early.
12. B. Suk 28a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
13. B. Ber 17a.
14. Explanations of the Mishnah.
15. Decisions of law.
16. The nonhalakhic parts of the Talmud, including homilies, ethics, folklore, legends, etc.
17. Minute details and subtle points in exposition of Scripture.
18. Subtle implications of rabbinic enactments.
19. The second of the thirteen hermeneutical principles of R. Ishmael.
20. The calculations of the solstice, etc.
21. Inferences derived from the numerical equivalents and other computations of letters.

of ministering angels, the speech of demons, the speech of palm trees,[1] fullers' parables and fables of foxes, great matters or small matters. ["Great matters" means the Work of the Chariot[2] and "small matters" means the discussions of Abbaye and Rava],[3] in order to fulfill "That I [Torah] may cause those that love me to inherit substance, and that I may fill their treasuries" (Prov. 8:21).

It was also related of him that he said: If all the heavens were sheets [of parchment], all trees pens, and all the seas ink, they would not suffice to record the wisdom that I acquired from my masters; and yet I drew of their wisdom no more than a fly, dipping in the Great Sea, diminishes it by the tiniest drop.[4]

46. Our masters taught: Once, when on a journey, Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai was riding an ass and his disciple R. Eleazar ben Arakh was driving the ass from behind. R. Eleazar said: Master, teach me a chapter in the Work of the Chariot. He answered: My son, have I not instructed you that the Work of [the Chariot] is not to be taught even to one person, unless he is a sage and able to draw inferences on his own? R. Eleazar entreated: Master, then permit me to say something before you that you already taught me. He answered: Say it.

Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai immediately dismounted from the ass, wrapped his cloak around himself, and sat down on a stone beneath an olive tree. R. Eleazar said to him: Master, why did you dismount from the ass? Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai: While you are expounding the Work of the Chariot, the Divine Presence might be with us, and the ministering angels might accompany us—is it proper that I should continue riding an ass? As soon as R. Eleazar ben Arakh began his exposition of the Work of the Chariot, fire came down from heaven and lapped at all the trees in the field, which then burst into song. What was the song they sang? "Praise the Lord from the earth, ye sea monsters, and all deeps . . . fruitful trees and all cedars. . . . Hallelujah" (Ps. 148:7, 148:9, and 148:14). And an angel was heard from the fire, saying: "Surely this is the very Work of the Chariot!"

Then Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai arose, kissed him on his head, and said: Blessed be the Lord, the God of Israel, that has given to Abraham our father a son who knows how to speculate upon, to examine, and to expound the Work of the Chariot. There are some who expound well but do not carry out precepts well; some who carry them out well but do not expound well. But you expound well and carry out precepts well. Happy are you, O Abraham our father, that R. Eleazar ben Arakh has come forth from your loins![5]

47. Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai had five [distinguished] disciples: R. Eliezer ben Hyrcanus, R. Joshua ben Hananiah, R. Yose the Priest, R. Simeon ben Nathaniel, and R. Eleazar ben Arakh.

He used to sum up their merits: Eliezer ben Hyrcanus—[his memory is so retentive that he is like] a cemented cistern that does not lose a drop; Joshua ben Hananiah—happy is she that bore him;[6] Jose the Priest—the embodiment of piety; Simeon ben Nathaniel—the embodiment of sin-fearing; Eleazer ben Arakh—[his originality is so great that he is like] a spring with ever-welling strength.

Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai said to them: Go into the world and observe the right course a man should steadfastly follow. R. Eliezer came back and said: Be generous with your means.[7] R. Joshua said: Be a good friend; R. Yose said: Be a good neighbor. R. Simeon said: Consider the consequences of your actions. R. Eleazar said: Cultivate an unselfish heart. Rabban Yohanan said to them: I prefer what Eleazar ben Arakh said to what you have said, because his definition includes all of yours.[8]

48. When his disciples asked Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai a question, he replied, "Thus-and-thus." They reminded him, "But this is not what you taught us before." He said, "Even if I taught you something that is constructed by hand and seen by the eyes—even such an unforgettable experience I could have forgotten. How much more easily could I have forgotten something that had imprinted itself only on my sense of hearing [the least retentive of man's five senses]!"

Not that he didn't know. But he sought to spur his disciples [to be wary in the issuance of rulings].[9]

49. Simeon of Sikhnin, and [more precisely] of Itzah, used to dig wells, trenches, and caves in Jerusalem. Once he said to Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai, "I am as great a man as you." Rabban Yohanan: "How is that?" Simeon: "Because, like you, I am occupied with the public weal." Then Simeon explained, "When a man comes to you for a decision or with an inquiry, you tell him to drink from a certain well [which I dug], because its waters are pure and cold. Or when a woman asks you concerning her ritual uncleanness, you say to her: Immerse yourself in a certain well [which I dug], because its waters cleanse."

At that, Rabban Yohanan applied to Simeon the verse "Be ready to hearken; it is better than the 'offering' of fools [like Simeon], who are not even aware that they say things that are wrong" (Eccles. 4:17).[10]

---

1. On a windless day, if a man stands between two palms and observes how they incline, signs that afford information may be discerned. So Hai Gaon.
2. Esoteric lore concerning the divine chariot described in Ezek. 1.
3. They lived long after Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai. "Rashi suggests that they were forgotten, and Abbaye and Rava retaught them" (Suk, Soncino, p. 124, n. 3).
4. B. Suk 28a; Sof 16:8.
5. B. Hag 14b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
6. "Great credit for his scholarship was due to his mother, who is said to have taken him as an infant to the academy of learning so that his ears might become attuned to the sound of Torah. Rabbi Joshua ben Hananiah successfully debated with Greek philosophers and was famous as the representative of Jewish wit and wisdom" (Birnbaum, The Daily Prayer Book, p. 488).
7. Literally, "a good eye."
8. Avot 2:10–11 and 2:13.
9. Tos Oh 16:8.
10. Eccles. R. 4:17, §4.

50. R. Ulla said: Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai spent eighteen years in Arav,[1] and only two inquiries on matters of law came before him. So he said: Galilee, O Galilee, you have no use for the Torah. In the end you will have to cope with malfeasants.[2]

51. Once, when Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai was going up to Maon in Judea, he saw a girl picking barleycorn out of a horse's excrement. Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai said to his disciples: Look at this poor child. Who is she? They replied: She is a Jewish girl. And to whom does the horse belong? To an Arab horseman. Then Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai said to his disciples: All my life I have been troubled by this verse: "If thou understandest not, O thou fairest among women, thou wilt be forced to follow the tracks of the sheep" (Song 1:8). I read it over and over but failed to grasp its meaning [until now. The verse says]: You were unwilling to subject yourselves to Heaven; behold, now you are subjected to the heathen. You were unwilling to pay the head tax to heaven, "a mere beka[3] a head" (Exod. 38:26); now you are paying a head tax of fifteen shekels under a government of your enemies. You were unwilling to repair the roads and highways for pilgrims going up to the Temple; now you have to keep in repair [Roman] road posts and way stations for travelers to the royal plantations. And thus it says, "Because thou didst not serve the Lord thy God" (Deut. 28:47) with love, "therefore shalt thou serve thine enemy" (ibid.) with hatred; "because thou didst not serve the Lord thy God" in time of plenty, "therefore shalt thou serve thine enemy . . . in hunger and in thirst, in nakedness, and in want of all things" (ibid.).[4]

When Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai's son died, his disciples came in to comfort him. R. Eliezer entered, sat down before him, and said, "Master, by your leave, may I say something to you?"

"Speak," he replied.

R. Eliezer said, "Adam had a son who died, yet he was comforted for the loss of him. How do we know that he was comforted for him? Because it is said, 'And Adam knew his wife again' [Gen. 4:25], and [after she bore a son, Adam said], 'God has provided me with another offspring in place of Abel' [ibid.]. You, too, must be comforted."

Rabban Yohanan said to him, "Is it not enough that I grieve over my own? Do you have to remind me of Adam's grief?"

R. Joshua entered and said, "Master, by your leave, may I say something to you?"

"Speak," he replied.

R. Joshua said, "Job had sons and daughters, all of whom died in one day, and he was comforted for the loss of them. You, too, must be comforted. How do we know that Job was comforted? Because Job said, 'The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the Name of the Lord' " (Job 1:21).

Rabban Yohanan said to him, "Is it not enough that I grieve over my own? Do you have to remind me of Job's grief?"

R. Yose entered, sat down before him, and said, "Master, by your leave, may I say something to you?"

"Speak," he replied.

R. Yose said, "Aaron had two grown sons, both of whom died in one day, yet he was comforted for the loss of them, as it is said, 'And Aaron was silent' [Lev. 10:3]—his silence implies a willingness to be comforted. You, too, must be comforted."

Rabban Yohanan said to him, "Is it not enough that I grieve over my own? Do you have to remind me of Aaron's grief?"

R. Simeon entered and said, "Master, by your leave, may I say something to you?"

"Speak," he replied.

R. Simeon said, "King David had a son who died, yet he allowed himself to be comforted for the loss of him. How do we know that David was comforted? Because it is said, 'And David comforted Bathsheba his wife, and went in unto her, and lay with her; and she bore a son, and he called his name Solomon [Peace, Consolation]' [2 Sam. 12:24]. You, too, Master, must be comforted."

Rabban Yohanan said to him, "Is it not enough that I grieve over my own? Do you have to remind me of King David's grief?"

R. Eleazar ben Arakh entered. As soon as Rabban Yohanan saw him, he said to his servant, "Take my clothing and follow me to the bathhouse,[5] for he is a great man, and I shall be unable to resist him."

Having entered, R. Eleazar sat down before him and said, "May I tell you a parable? To whom may you be likened? To a man with whom the king deposited an object. Each and every day the man would weep and cry out, saying, 'Woe is me! When shall I be safely relieved of this trust?' You too, master, had a son: he studied the Torah, the Prophets, the Writings; he studied Mishnah, Halakhah, and Aggadot, and departed from this world without sin. You should be comforted because you have returned unimpaired what was given you in trust."

Rabban Yohanan said to him, "Eleazar, my son, you have comforted me the way men should give comfort!"[6]

52. When Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai fell ill, his disciples went in to visit him. The moment he saw them, he began to weep. His disciples asked: O our master, lamp of Israel, pillar at the right side,[7] mighty hammer! Why are you weeping? He replied: If I were being taken before a king of flesh and blood, who is here today and in the

---

1. Near Sepphoris in Upper Galilee.
2. P. Shab 16:7, 15d.
3. Half a shekel.
4. Mek, Yitro, Ba-hodesh, 1 (La 2:193–95).
5. "R. Yohanan realized that R. Eleazar would succeed in consoling him and therefore he prepared to go to the bathhouse, a luxury normally forbidden to a mourner. The phrase 'Take my clothing,' etc., was suggested (according to Professor Louis Ginzberg) by the reference to 2 Sam. 12:20, where it is said that David terminated the mourning for his son by bathing and putting on his clothes" (ARN, YJS, p. 192).
6. ARN 14.
7. The reference is to Jachin, one of the two pillars in the Temple. See 1 Kings 7:21.

grave tomorrow, whose anger if he is angry with me does not last forever, who if he imprisons me does not imprison me forever, who if he puts me to death does not put me to everlasting death, and whom I can persuade with words or bribe with money—even so I would weep. Now that I am being taken before the supreme King of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He, who lives and endures forever and ever and ever, whose anger if He is angry with me is an everlasting anger, who if He imprisons me imprisons me forever, who if He puts me to death puts me to death forever, and whom I cannot persuade with words or bribe with money—even more, now that there are two ways before me, one leading to the Garden of Eden and the other to Gehenna, and I do not know by which I shall be taken—should I not weep?

They said to him: Our master, bless us. He said to them: May it be God's will that the fear of Heaven shall be as much upon you as the fear of flesh and blood. His disciples asked: Is that all?[1] He replied: Would that you attained no less than such fear! You can see for yourselves the truth of what I say: when a man is about to commit a transgression, he says, "I hope no man will see me."

At the moment of his departure, he said to them: Remove the vessels [from this chamber] so that they will not become unclean [by contact with my dead body], and prepare a seat for Hezekiah king of Judah, who is coming [to attend my funeral].[2]

53. After Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai died, the radiance of wisdom ceased.[3]

54. As long as Raban Yohanan ben Zakkai made his home [in Berur Hayyil],[4] his five disciples remained in his presence. After he passed away, four went to Yavneh.[5] However, Eleazar ben Arakh joined his wife at Emmaus,[6] a place of good water and beautiful situation, where he waited for the others to come to him, but they did not. When they failed to come, he wanted to go to them, but his wife would not let him, saying, "Who needs whom?" He answered, "They need me." She said, "When there is a leather vessel [containing food] and there are mice, who goes to whom—the mice to the vessel, or the vessel to the mice?" He listened to her and remained there until he forgot his learning.

After a while the other disciples came to him and asked him about a matter in Torah, but he was unable to answer.[7]

1. Should not the fear of God exceed fear of a mortal?
2. Perhaps Rabban Yohanan's way of saying that even Hezekiah, who did not submit to Assyria, approves of Rabban Yohanan's submission to Rome (see above, part 1, chap. 10, §2). So Rabbi Isaac Herzog, as quoted by Adin Steinsaltz in his translation of Ber (Jerusalem, 1967). B. Ber 28b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
3. He is said to have embraced all the sciences known in his day (see above in this chapter, §48). B. Sot 49a.
4. A small town near Yavneh.
5. Where Rabban Yohanan had established an academy after the destruction of the Temple.
6. A town on the road between Jerusalem and Jaffa.
7. Eccles. R. 7:7, §2; ARN 14.

R. Dosa ben Horkinas (fl. 1st century C.E.)

55. In the days of R. Dosa ben Horkinas [word came to the academy, presumably in his name, of] a ruling that if a man dies leaving two widows—one of them his brother's daughter—then his brother is permitted to marry the other widow.[8] The ruling was very disturbing to the sages[9] because R. Dosa was a great sage [who had previously supported the rule that forbade such marriages]. But now, because of his advanced years and his failing eyesight, he was unable to come to the academy. Hence they deliberated about who should go and tell him [that his recent ruling would be disregarded]. R. Joshua said, "I will go." "And who will go along to back him up?" "R. Eleazar ben Azariah." "And who will back up R. Eleazar?" "R. Akiva." The three of them went and sat down at the entrance of R. Dosa's house. His maidservant entered the house and told R. Dosa, "Master, the sages of Israel are come to you." He said, "Bid them enter." When they came in, he took hold of R. Joshua and had him sit on a gilded couch. The latter said to R. Dosa, "My master, will you ask another disciple of yours to sit?" R. Dosa asked, "Who is he?" R. Joshua replied, "R. Eleazar ben Azariah." R. Dosa asked, "Does our colleague Azariah have a son?" [He was told, "Yes."] At that, R. Dosa quoted, "I have been young and now am old, and [knowing that Azariah is blessed with a son, I can affirm] I have not seen the righteous forsaken" (Ps. 37:25). R. Dosa took hold of R. Eleazar and had him sit on a gilded couch. Then R. Eleazar said, "Will you ask one more disciple of yours to sit?" R. Dosa asked, "Who is he?" R. Eleazar replied, "Akiva son of Joseph." R. Dosa said, "Are you really Akiva son of Joseph, whose name has gone forth from one end of the world to the other? Sit down, my son, sit down. May there be many like you in Israel!" And he applied to him the verse "A good name is better than precious oil" (Eccles. 7:1).

Then the sages began to encircle R. Dosa with all sorts of legal questions until they came around[10] to the subject of the special case mentioned above. When they reached it, they asked him, "What is the ruling that applies

8. The other widow—co-wife of a relative whom one is forbidden to marry—is herself deemed such a relative and is therefore, according to law, exempt from both halitzah and levirate marriage (Yev 1:1–2; Maimonides, Code IV, iii, vi, 14–15 [YJS 19:307–8]). Still, because of neglect of the study of Torah, the prohibition against such marriages—imposed, as will be presently stated, in the days of Haggai (4th century B.C.E.)—came to be lifted, purportedly in the name of Dosa ben Horkinas, the highest legal authority in the land.
   In rabbinic law, an uncle may marry his niece (but an aunt may not marry her nephew).
9. They were reluctant to act against his decision without having consulted him first.
10. "This is a shining example of the sages' mastery of style and of pregnant brevity—multum in parvo.
    "Being polite, the disciples did not attack Dosa frontally with the query "What about the co-wife of a daughter?" Rather, they began with utterly irrelevant points of law, going in concentric circles until they reached forbidden marriages, then levirate marriage, and finally, perhaps a whole hour later, co-wife of a daughter. This is, of course, when a man with two wives dies and his brother—who is the father of one of the widows—wishes to marry the other widow?" "This," he answered, "is a question in dispute between the school of Shammai and the school of Hillel." "And what is the final ruling?" "The ruling is in keeping with the opinion of the school of Hillel [that such a marriage is forbidden]."[1] "But it has been said in your name that [such a marriage is permitted], in accordance with the ruling of the school of Shammai." Dosa asked, "Did you hear the name given as 'Dosa' or 'the son of Horkinas'?" "By the life of our master," they replied, "we heard no first name given." "I have a younger brother," Dosa said, "who is a 'limb of Satan'[2] [first in stubborn debate], and his name is Jonathan, one of the disciples of the school of Shammai. Beware lest he overwhelm you on questions of established practice, because he has three hundred answers to prove that the sort of marriage we are discussing is permitted. But I call heaven and earth to witness that the prophet Haggai[3] sat on this very seat and declared that marriage between one widow of a man and his brother, who is the father of the man's other widow, is forbidden.

It is taught: When the sages came, they had all entered through one door, but when they left, they left through three different doors [to avoid Jonathan].[4] But Jonathan accosted R. Akiva and put a difficult question to him, which R. Akiva answered. [Dissatisfied with the reply], Jonathan said, "Are you the Akiva whose name has gone forth from one end of the world to the other? You are lucky that you have achieved such fame [for, judging by your answer], you are not even the equal of one of the cattle herdsmen." R. Akiva replied [with the sort of soft answer that turns away wrath], "I beg your pardon, not even the equal of one of the [more lowly] shepherds."[5]

R. Hanina ben Dosa (fl. 1st century C.E.)

56. Every day a divine voice goes forth and declares: The whole world is supplied with food only on account of My son Hanina, while My son Hanina is satisifed with just one kav[6] of carobs from Sabbath eve to Sabbath eve.[7]

57. Every Friday the wife of R. Hanina ben Dosa would heat the oven by burning smoke-producing fuel in it, because she was ashamed [to have it known that she had nothing to bake for the Sabbath]. But she had a malicious neighbor, who said, "I know that these people have nothing; let me go and see what causes that smoke." She went and knocked on the door. Embarrassed by the unexpected visit, the wife of R. Hanina withdrew to an inner room. A miracle was wrought [for her], so that the neighbor found the oven full of bread and the kneading trough full of rising dough. Seeing that, she called out, "Madam, madam, bring your shovel, your bread is about to get charred." R. Hanina's wife called back, "Yes, I just went to the other room to fetch one."

Once Hanina's wife said to him, "How long are we to go on suffering so much?" He replied, "What shall we do?" She said, "Pray that some of what is stored up for the righteous in the world-to-come may be given you here and now." He prayed, and [from above] there emerged the semblance of a hand, which gave him the leg of a golden table. That night in a dream he saw each of the other righteous men [in the world-to-come] dining at a table with three legs, but he and his wife were dining at a table with only two legs. So he said to his wife, "Are you content to have all the righteous dine at three-legged tables, while you and I will be dining at a table with one of its legs missing?" She: "What shall we do? You have no choice but to pray that the leg be taken from you." He prayed, and it was taken back.

The sages taught: The latter miracle was greater than the former. For we have a tradition that Heaven gives but never takes back.[8]

58. Once, on a Friday eve at dusk, when R. Hanina noticed that his daughter looked sad, he asked her, "My daughter, why are you so distressed?" She replied, "I mistook a vessel containing vinegar for a vessel containing oil, and used the vinegar to light the Sabbath lamp." He replied, "My daughter, why should you be concerned? He who ordained that oil should burn will ordain that even vinegar should burn." The sages taught: Indeed, the lamp continued burning, so that [on Saturday evening] they were able to use its light for the Havdalah.

59. R. Hanina ben Dosa had some goats and was told, "Your goats are damaging people's property." He replied, "If they really cause damage, may bears devour them; but if not, in the evening may each of them bring a bear impaled on its horns." That evening each of the goats did bring home a bear on its horns.

How did R. Hanina ben Dosa [who was poor] come to have goats? R. Phinehas said: Once it happened that a man passed by his house and [inadvertently] left behind some hens there, and R. Hanina ben Dosa's wife found them. However, he said to her, "Do not eat their eggs." The eggs and the hens increased so much that they distressed R. Hanina and his wife. So he sold them and bought the goats with the proceeds. One day, the man who had lost the hens passed by [the house] again and typical Near Eastern good manners, especially toward an esteemed and venerated elder.

---

"What took me a whole paragraph, the sages expressed in one word—'encircled' and 'came around' are feeble shadows of the Hebrew word mesovevim, but at least they try to reproduce the pregnant meaning of svv in such a context" (Leon Nemoy).

1. According to this school, one widow may not marry her deceased husband's brother if he is the father of the other widow.
2. Literally, "the firstborn of Satan." R. Dosa seems to be playing upon the rhyme ah katan, bekhor satan, and Yonatan ("younger brother," "firstborn of Satan," "Jonathan").
3. "This means that he had an incontrovertible tradition on the matter" (Menahem ha-Meiri, as quoted in B. Yev 16a, Soncino).
4. Or, conversely, in the hope that at least one of them might meet him.
5. B. Yev 16a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
6. Four pints.
7. B.Ta 24b.
8. B. Ta 24b–25a.
9. B. Ta 25a.

said to a companion, "It was here I left my hens." R. Hanina overheard him and asked him, "Have you any mark [by which to identify them]?" The man said, "Yes." He told him what the mark was and took the goats away.

These are the same goats that brought home bears on their horns.[1]

60. R. Hanina ben Dosa had a neighbor, a woman who was building a house and found that the beams were not long enough to reach from wall to wall. She came to him and said, "I am building a house, but the beams do not reach far enough." He asked, "What is your name?" She replied, "My name is Eikhu." He said, "Eikhu,[2] may your beams reach [farther]." Immediately, they reached [the walls].

Pelimo said: I saw that house, and its beams projected a cubit on each side; and I was told: This is the house that, through his prayer, R. Hanina ben Dosa framed with beams.[3]

61. Once R. Hanina, seeing the men of his town taking vowed offerings and free-will offerings up to Jerusalem, exclaimed, "All of them take vowed offerings and free-will offerings up to Jerusalem, and I [being poor] can take up nothing! What did he do?" He went out to the grazing area near his town and found a stone, which he proceeded to chisel, polish, and scour, and then said, "I vow to take this up to Jerusalem." He wanted to engage some carriers. Five men happened to come along. He asked them, "Will you take this stone up to Jerusalem for me?" They said, "Pay us fifty sela and we will take it up to Jerusalem." He would have been willing to pay them, but he had no such sum, so the five men left him and went away. Immediately the Holy One placed in his path five angels in the guise of men. He asked them, "Will you take up this stone for me?" They replied, "Give us five sela and we will take your stone up to Jerusalem, but you must give us a hand." He no sooner put his hand to the stone than they all found themselves standing in Jerusalem. Then he wanted to pay them their hire, but he could not find them. He entered the Chamber of Hewn Stone,[4] asked about them, and was told, "It would appear that ministering angels brought your stone up to Jerusalem." To him was applied the verse "Seest thou a man diligent in his work, he shall stand before kings (melakhim)" (Prov. 22:29)—stand before mal'akhim, angels.[5]

62. R. Hanina ben Dosa was walking along the road with a basket of salt on his head, when it began to rain. He exclaimed, "Master of the universe, the whole world is at ease, but Hanina is in distress!" The rain stopped. When he reached his home, he said, "Master of the universe, the whole world is in distress, but Hanina is at ease." The rain fell again.[6]

63. Our masters taught: In a certain place there was once a lizard[7] who used to injure human beings. People came and told R. Hanina ben Dosa about it. He said: Show me its hole. They showed it to him, and he put his heel over the hole. The lizard came out, bit him, and died. He put the dead lizard on his shoulder, brought it to the house of study, and said: See, my children, the lizard does not kill; it is sin that kills!

On that occasion they said: Woe to the man who meets up with a lizard, and woe to the lizard that meets up with R. Hanina ben Dosa![8]

64. Once R. Hanina ben Dosa saw a lion and said to him, "O you weakling of a king, have I not adjured you not to be seen in the Land of Israel?" At once the lion fled. R. Hanina ran after him and said, "Forgive my having called you weakling, while He who created you called you mighty when He spoke of you as 'the lion, which is mightiest among beasts' " (Prov. 30:30).[9]

65. It is said of R. Hanina ben Dosa that when he prayed in behalf of the sick, he would say, "this one will live," "That one will die." When he was asked, "How do you know?" he would reply, "If my prayer comes fluently to my mouth, I know that the patient is accepted [for recovery]; if not, I know he is rejected."

A story is told that when the son of Rabban Gamaliel fell ill, the father sent two scholars to R. Hanina ben Dosa to ask him to beseech mercy for his son. As soon as R. Hanina saw them, he went up to his upper chamber and besought mercy for him. When he came down, he said, "Go, the fever has left him." The scholars asked, "Can it be that you are a prophet?" He replied, "I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but I learned this from experience: if my prayer comes fluently to my mouth, I know that the patient is accepted [for recovery]; but if not, I know that he is rejected." They sat down and made a note of the exact moment [when, according to R. Hanina, the fever left]. When they came to Rabban Gamaliel, he said to them, "By the Temple service! The time you put down is not an instant before or after what happened—at that very moment the fever left my son and he asked us for a drink of water."

On another occasion it happened that R. Hanina ben Dosa went to study Torah with Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai. When the son of Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai fell ill, the father said to R. Hanina, "Hanina my son, beseech mercy for me, that he may recover." R. Hanina lowered his head between his knees and besought mercy for him, and the son recovered. Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai said, "If I, Ben Zakkai, had kept knocking my head between my knees the entire day, no one would have heeded me." His wife asked, "Is Hanina greater than you?" He replied,

---

1. Ibid.
2. The name Eikhu suggested to him the Greek eike, ("would that"). So Henry Malter in his translation of Ta (Philadelphia, 1928), p. 188, n. 351.
3. B. Ta 25a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
4. The room in the Temple where the Sanhedrin sat.
5. Eccles. R. 1:1, §1; Song R. 1:1, §4.
6. B. Ta 24b.
7. Perhaps a crossbreed of a snake and a lizard.
8. B. Ber 33a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
9. Tanhuma, Va-yiggash, §3.

"No, but he, like a servant attending the king [can go in and out before the royal presence], while I, like a nobleman attending the king [may appear only at fixed times]."[1]

66. Our masters taught: There is a story about the daughter of Nehonia, the digger of cisterns.[2] When she fell into a large pit [that he had dug], people came and reported the accident to R. Hanina ben Dosa. During the first hour, he said to them, "She is all right." During the second hour, he again said, "She is all right." In the third, he said, "She has got out safely." Her father asked her, "My daughter, who saved you?" "A ram,[3] with an aged man[4] leading it, came to my help." "Are you a prophet?" the people asked R. Hanina ben Dosa. He replied, "I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet; but I said to myself: It is inconceivable that his own seed should come to grief through the very same beneficent work in which a righteous man is engaged!"

(R. Abba stated: [To be sure, Nehonia's daughter was saved, but] Nehonia's son died of thirst, for the Holy One deals strictly with those round about Him, even [if they stray] by a hairsbreadth, as is said, "Round about Him, it is by a hairsbreadth"[5] [Ps. 50:3]).[6]

67. A story: The ass of R. Hanina ben Dosa was stolen by brigands, who tied it up in a yard and put straw, barley, and water before it. But the ass would neither eat nor drink. So, asking themselves, "Why would we let it die and stink up our yard?" they opened the gate before it and chased it out.

The ass walked along braying until it reached the house of R. Hanina ben Dosa. As soon as it reached the house, his son heard its voice. "Father," he said, "that sounds like our beast." R. Hanina said to him: "My son, open the gate for it—it is almost dead of hunger." He rose up, opened the gate, and put before it straw, barley, and water, and it ate and drank.

Therefore people say: Even as the righteous of old were saintly, so their beasts, like their masters, were saintly.[7]

68. When R. Hanina ben Dosa died, men of deed[8] ceased to be.[9]

1. B. Ber 34b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. Because of the large influx of pilgrims during the festivals, the water in the year-round wells did not suffice. Nehonia devoted himself as a volunteer to provide additional sources of water.
3. The ram of Isaac, according to Rashi.
4. Abraham, according to Rashi.
5. JV: "feared by all them that are round about Him." But s'r ("fear") also means "hairsbreadth."
6. B. Yev 121b.
7. ARN 8.
8. "Men capable of performing miracles; or men who devoted their lives to deeds of lovingkindness" (Adolf Büchler, as quoted in Sot, Soncino, p. 265, n. 13).
9. B. Sot 49a.

Rabban Gamaliel II (fl. 90–110 C.E.)

69. A vignette about Rabban Gamaliel: When he got married, he recited the Shema on his wedding night. His disciples said to him: Our master, did you not teach us that a bridegroom is exempt from the recital of the Shema? He replied: I will not listen to the suggestion that I should cast off the kingship of Heaven from myself even for a moment.

[Years later] Rabban Gamaliel bathed on the first night after his wife's death. His disciples said to him: Our master, did you not teach us that a mourner is forbidden to bathe? He replied: I, being very delicate, am not like other people.[10]

70. Rabban Gamaliel[11] was once a passenger on board ship with R. Joshua [who was traveling to earn his living]. Rabban Gamaliel had taken only bread with him, while R. Joshua had taken bread and flour. When Rabban Gamaliel's bread gave out and he had to depend on R. Joshua's flour, he asked him, "Did you know that we could be so much delayed that you decided to bring flour?" R. Joshua answered, "There is a certain star that rises once in seventy years and leads mariners[12] astray, and I said to myself: Perhaps it will rise this time and lead us astray." Rabban Gamaliel: "You possess so much knowledge and yet must travel on board ship to earn your livelihood!" R. Joshua: "Before you marvel about me, marvel first at two disciples you have on land, R. Yohanan ben Gudgada[13] and R. Eleazar Hisma, who can calculate how many drops there are in the sea and yet have no bread to eat nor clothes to wear."

Rabban Gamaliel decided to appoint them to high official posts [where they could earn a living]. When he landed, he sent for them, but they could not come.[14] He sent for them again, and they came. He said to them, "Do you imagine that I offer you mastery? It is servitude [the true status of a person in authority] that I offer you, as indicated by the elders' saying to Rehoboam, 'If thou wilt be a servant unto this people this day' " (1 Kings 12:7).[15]

71. Rabban Gamaliel used to have a diagram of the phases of the moon on a tablet [hung] on the wall of his upper chamber, and he used to show it to the unlearned[16] and say, "Did the new moon look like this or like that?"[17]

72. Our masters taught: Once the heavens were overcast with clouds, and the likeness of the new moon was visible on the twenty-ninth of the month. The public wanted to

10. His bathing was thus medicinal. B. Ber 16a–b.
11. On his journey to Rome in the year 95 C.E.
12. Who steer their course by the stars.
13. "R. Yohanan ben Gudgada belonged to a much earlier generation, and the reference must be to R. Yohanan ben Nuri; see Wilhelm Bacher (Isidore Epstein in Hor, Soncino, p. 71, n. 3.
14. They were too modest to accept a position of authority.
15. B. Hor 10a–b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
16. Who came to testify that they had seen the new moon.
17. B. RH 24a.

declare the day New Moon, and the court was about to sanctify the new month, but Rabban Gamaliel said: I have it on the authority of my father's house that the renewal of the moon takes place not before twenty-nine and a half days, two-thirds of an hour, and seventy-three halakin[1] of the old month have elapsed.

On that day, the mother of Ben Zaza died, and Rabban Gamaliel delivered a lengthy funeral oration for her—not because she merited it, but so that the public would know that the court had not yet sanctified the new month.[2]

73. On one occasion, two witnesses came and said, "We saw the new moon in the morning in the east and in the evening in the west."[3] R. Yohanan ben Nuri said curtly, "They are false witnesses."[4] However, when they came to Yavneh, Rabban Gamaliel accepted their testimony.

On another occasion, two witnesses came and said, "We saw the new moon at its proper time,"[5] but on the night that should have been New Moon,[6] it was not visible. However, by that time Rabban Gamaliel had already accepted their testimony [and declared the thirtieth day as New Moon]. R. Dosa ben Horkinas said, "They are false witnesses. How can it be testified that a woman has given birth if on the next day her belly is still swollen?"[7] R. Joshua said to him, "I agree with what you say."

Then Rabban Gamaliel sent word to R. Joshua: "I order you to come to me with your staff and your money on the day that according to your reckoning should be Yom Kippur.[8] When R. Akiva went [to R. Joshua] and found him distraught,[9] he asked, "Master, why are you so distraught?" R. Joshua replied, "Akiva, that man [Gamaliel] deserves to be laid up in a sickbed for twelve months without the opportunity to issue such an order." R. Akiva: "I can bring proof [from Scripture] that whatever Rabban Gamaliel has done is valid, because it says, 'These are the appointed seasons of the Lord, holy convocations which ye shall proclaim in their appointed seasons' [Lev. 23:4], meaning that God says: Whether they are proclaimed at their proper time or not at their proper time, I have no appointed seasons other than these." R. Joshua then went to R. Dosa ben Horkinas, who said to him, "If we call in question the decisions of the court of Rabban Gamaliel, we may very well question the decisions of each and every court that has arisen since the days of Moses up to now. For Scripture says, 'Then went up Moses and Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel' [Exod. 24:9]. Why are the names of the elders not expressly mentioned if not to teach that every three judges who have risen up as a court over Israel are to be deemed like the court of Moses."[10]

Hearing that, R. Joshua took his staff and his money, and went to Yavneh to Rabban Gamaliel on the day on which, according to his own reckoning, Yom Kippur fell. As soon as Rabban Gamaliel saw him, he rose up from his chair, kissed R. Joshua on his head, and said to him, "Come in peace, my master and my disciple—my master in wisdom and my disciple because you adopted my decision. Blessed is the generation in which men of great distinction obey those of little distinction."[11]

74. R. Zadok [a priest] owned a firstling for whom he set down barley in a wicker basket made of peeled willow twigs. While it was eating, it split its lips. R. Zadok came before R. Joshua to inquire whether he, as a fellow (haver), would not be suspected of having deliberately caused a blemish in the firstling he owned, so that, since it was blemished, he would be allowed to eat it.[12] By way of arguing for R. Joshua's approval, he asked, "Have we not said that there was a difference between [a priest who is] a fellow (a haver) and [a priest who is] 'unlearned' (an am ha-aretz)?" R. Joshua replied, "Yes."[13] Then R. Zadok came before Rabban Gamaliel, whom he also asked, "Have we not said that there was a difference between [a priest who is] a fellow (a haver) and [a priest who is] 'unlearned' (an am ha-aretz)?" Rabban Gamaliel replied, "No." R. Zadok said to him, "But R. Joshua told me yes!" Rabban Gamaliel: "Wait until the expert debaters[14] enter the house of study." When they entered the house of study, R. Zadok arose and asked, "Have we not said that there was a difference between [a priest who is] a fellow (a haver) and one who is 'unlearned' (an am ha-aretz)?" R. Joshua replied, "No."[15] At that, Rabban Gamaliel asked, "Was not the answer yes reported to me in your name? Joshua, stand on your feet and let the facts as reported testify against you." R. Joshua stood up and said [to himself]: What am I to do? If I were alive and he dead, the living might conceivably contradict the dead; but since he is alive and I am alive, how can the living successfully con-

---

1. "Lit., 'parts' (sc. of one hour), i.e., $^{73}/_{1080} \times 60$ m = 4 m 3⅓ sec. The new moon, therefore, could not be seen in the twenty-ninth day" (RH, Soncino, p. 110, n. 7).
2. A funeral oration may not be delivered on the New Moon, regarded as a holy day. B. RH 25a.
3. "We should naturally suppose this to mean that they saw the old moon in the morning and the new moon in the evening" (RH, Soncino, p. 108, n. 1).
4. "Presumably because according to what has been stated above the old moon is never visible for twenty-four hours before the new appears" (RH, Soncino, p. 108, n. 2).
5. "Apparently this must have been on the thirtieth day shortly before nightfall" (RH, Soncino, p. 108, n. 3).
6. "Lit., 'the night of its carryover,' i.e., after the nightfall with which the thirty-first day begins, when it should have been clearly visible" (RH, Soncino, p. 108, n. 4).
7. "Lit., 'between her teeth.' Similarly the old moon would still be 'between the teeth' of the new" (RH, Soncino, p. 108, n. 6).
8. "The New Moon in question was that of Tishri, and consequently the Day of Atonement according to R. Joshua would fall a day later than according to R. Gamaliel" (RH, Soncino, p. 108, n. 7).
9. Because he was ordered to profane the Day of Atonement.
10. Seeing that most of the members of the Moses' court also bore no names of distinction.
11. B. RH 24b–25a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
12. An unblemished firstling must be brought as an offering. See Deut. 15:19 and Joseph Reider's comment in Deut. (Philadelphia, 1937), p. 156.
13. There is a difference, and therefore you, being a haver, are not suspected of deliberately blemishing your firstling.
14. Literally, "shield bearers."
15. Not wishing to give a contrary decision in the presence of Rabban Gamaliel.

tradict the living?[1] In the meantime, while R. Joshua remained on his feet, Rabban Gamaliel, seated, continued his discourse until all the people began to grumble and finally told Hutzpit, Rabban Gamaliel's interpreter,[2] "Stop interpreting Rabban Gamaliel's words," and he stopped.[3]

75. Our masters taught: A certain disciple came before R. Joshua and asked him, "Master, is the evening Tefillah optional or obligatory?" He replied, "It is optional." Then the disciple presented himself before Rabban Gamaliel and asked him, "Is the evening Tefillah optional or obligatory?" He replied, "It is obligatory." "But," said the disciple, "what if R. Joshua told me that it is optional?" Rabban Gamaliel: "Wait until the expert debaters enter the house of study." When they came in, the disciple arose and inquired, "Is the evening Tefillah optional or obligatory?" Rabban Gamaliel replied, "It is obligatory," and then asked the sages, "Is there anyone who disputes me in this matter?" R. Joshua: "No." Rabban Gamaliel: "Was not the answer Optional reported to me in your name?" He then went on: "Joshua, stand on your feet and let the facts as reported testify against you!" R. Joshua stood up and said [to himself]: Were I alive and he dead, the living might conceivably contradict the dead; but since he is alive and I am alive, how can the living successfully contradict the living? In the meantime, while R. Joshua remained standing on his feet, Rabban Gamaliel, seated, continued his discourse, until all the people there began to grumble and finally said to Hutzpit, Rabban Gamaliel's interpreter, "Stop interpreting his words," and he stopped. Then the people said to R. Zinon, the precentor: "Read [verses that are appropriate]." After he began reading, the people stood up and said, "Read 'Upon whom hath not thy wickedness passed continually?' " (Nah. 3:19). Then they said, "How long is Rabban Gamaliel to go on insulting R. Joshua? On New Year's Day last year, he insulted him; in the matter of the firstborn in the affair of R. Zadok, he insulted him; now he insults him again! Come, let us depose him! Whom shall we appoint in his place? Shall we appoint R. Joshua? [No], because he is one of the parties involved. Shall we appoint R. Akiva? [No], because since he has no ancestral merit, Rabban Gamaliel may bring a curse on him. Let us then appoint R. Eleazar ben Azariah, who is wise and rich and tenth in descent from Ezra." [He is wise, so that if anyone puts a question to him, he will be able to answer it. He is rich, so that if occasion rises for paying court to Caesar, he will be able to do so. He is tenth in descent from Ezra, so that he has ancestral merit, and Rabban Gamaliel will be unable to bring a curse on him.] They went and said to him, "Will it please the master to become head of the academy?" He replied, "Let me go and consult the members of my family." He went and consulted his wife. She said to him, "Perhaps they will depose you too." He replied to her, "[There is a proverb]: Let a man use a crystal cup for one day, even if it be broken the next." She said to him, "You have no hoary hair." He was only eighteen years old that day, but a miracle was wrought for him, and he was adorned with eighteen streaks of gray hair. (That is why R. Eleazar ben Azariah said: Behold, I am like a seventy-year-old—he did not say: I am seventy years old.)

R. Akiva, seated there, was distressed and said, "R. Azariah is not my superior in learning, but he is my superior in lineage.[4] Happy is the man whose forebears convey such merit on him. Happy is the man who has an ancestral peg to hang on to."

A Tanna taught: On that day the doorkeeper was removed and the disciples were allowed unrestricted entry—previously Rabban Gamaliel had issued a proclamation: "No disciple whose inner self does not live up to his acceptable exterior[5] may enter the house of study." On that day several benches were added.

Before that, Rabban Gamaliel had become alarmed and said, "I may, God forbid, be depriving Israel of Torah!"[6] But in a dream he was shown white casks[7] filled with ashes.[8]

We have been taught: Eduyyot[9] was formulated on that day—wherever the expression "on that day" is used, it refers to that day—and there was no Halakhah about which any doubt existed in the house of study that was not fully elucidated. Rabban Gamaliel also did not absent himself from the house of study a single hour, as we have been taught: On that day, Judah, an Ammonite proselyte, came before them in the house of study and asked, "Am I permitted to [marry a Jewess, and thus] enter the assembly [of the Lord]?" Rabban Gamaliel said, "You are forbidden to enter the Lord's assembly." R. Joshua, however, said to him, "You are permitted to enter the Lord's assembly." "But," said Rabban Gamaliel to R. Joshua, "has it not been laid down long ago, 'An Ammonite or a Moabite shall not enter into the assembly of the Lord' " (Deut. 23:4)? R. Joshua replied, "But now, do Ammon and Moab still reside in their original homes? Long ago, did not Sennacherib king of Assyria come up and mingle all the nations, as it says, 'I have removed the bounds of the peoples, and have robbed their treasures, and have brought down as one mighty their inhabitants'?" (Isa. 10:13). Rabban Gamaliel replied to him, "But has it not already been said, 'Afterward I will bring back the captivity of the children of Ammon' [Jer. 49:6]? So, then, they have returned." To this R. Joshua replied, "But it has also been said, 'And I will turn the captivity of My people Israel' [Amos 9:14], and as yet they have not returned. Rather, Scripture means that in time Israel will return; even as in time Ammon will return." They per-

---

1. "I did say it and now withdraw" (Rashi). Tosafot: "I had in mind concealing what I said but am unable to do so now."
2. The man who expounded the ideas of the teacher to the public. In later usage he is called amora.
3. B. Bekh 36a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
4. R. Akiva's father, Joseph, was a proselyte. So Maimonides, in the introduction to his Code.
5. Literally, "whose inside is not as his outside."
6. By keeping out so many disciples.
7. Or, "stone jars."
8. Those kept out did not deserve to be admitted.
9. Literally, "testimonies," not necessarily the tractate Eduyyot we now have.

mitted the Ammonite [to marry a Jewess, and thus] to enter the Lord's assembly.

Rabban Gamaliel then said, "Since the decision sides with R. Joshua, I will go and apologize to him." When he reached R. Joshua's house, he saw that its walls were coal-black. He said to him, "From the walls of your house, it is apparent that you are a charcoal burner."[1] R. Joshua replied, "Woe to the generation whose leader you are, and woe to the ship whose pilot you are! For you know nothing of the troubles of the scholars, how they make their living, and how they sustain themselves!"

Rabban Gamaliel: "In all humility, I ask you to forgive me."

But R. Joshua was unmoved.

"Do it, then," Rabban Gamaliel said, "out of respect for my father."

At this, R. Joshua made his peace with Rabban Gamaliel.

They asked, "Who will go and tell the sages?" A certain fuller said to them, "I will go." R. Joshua sent word [through him] to the house of study, saying, "Let him who is accustomed to wear the robe wear it again; for is it conceivable that he who is not accustomed to wear the robe should keep saying to him who is accustomed to wear it, 'Take off your robe, and I will put it on'?" At this, R. Akiva said to the sages, "Lock the doors, so that the servants of Rabban Gamaliel may not enter and [in support of their master's reinstatement] resort to violence against the sages."

R. Joshua said, "I had better get up and go to them myself." He came, knocked at the door, and called out to them, "Let the sprinkler, son of a sprinkler, sprinkle.[2] Shall he who is neither a sprinkler nor the son of a sprinkler dare say to a sprinkler son of a sprinkler, 'Your water is cave water[3] and your ashes are oven ashes'?"[4] R. Akiva said to him, "R. Joshua, you are now reconciled with Rabban Gamaliel, and since we have done nothing except out of regard for your honor, [we, too, are reconciled with Rabban Gamaliel's reinstatement]. Early tomorrow morning, you and I will wait on R. Eleazar ben Azariah [to inform him]."

Nevertheless, they did not remove R. Eleazar ben Azariah entirely from his office. For after that, Rabban Gamaliel lectured on two Sabbaths, and then R. Eleazar ben Azariah lectured on one Sabbath. It is in reference to this that a master inquired, "Whose Sabbath was it?" and was told, "It was the Sabbath of R. Eleazar ben Azariah."[5]

76. Such was Rabban Gamaliel's conduct: When he walked into [the academy] and said, "Ask,"[6] it had been made known to him [in advance] that there would be no remonstrance. But when he entered and did not say, "Ask," it had been made known to him that remonstrance was to be expected.[7]

77. It once happened that while traveling from Acco to Chezib, Rabban Gamaliel was riding on an ass and R. Ilai was following behind him on foot. Noticing a loaf of white bread on the road, Rabban Gamaliel said, "Ilai, pick up the loaf from the road." Later, he met a certain heathen. "Mavgai,"[8] he said, "take that loaf from Ilai." R. Ilai then approached the heathen and asked, "Where are you from?" The other replied, "From one of the settlements in the vicinity of the road station for travelers." "What is your name?" "My name is Mavgai." "Did R. Gamaliel ever meet you before?" "No," the other replied.

From this incident we learned that R. Gamaliel divined [the heathen's name] by the holy spirit. At the same time, we learned three other things. We learned that edibles lying on the ground may not be passed by [but must be picked up];[9] that one must assume that the loaf belongs to one of the majority of those traveling on that road, namely, to a heathen;[10] and that it is permitted to derive benefit from a heathen's leavened bread after the Passover.[11]

When Rabban Gamaliel arrived at Chezib, a man approached him and asked to be absolved from a vow he had made. At that, Rabban Gamaliel asked R. Ilai, who accompanied him, "Have we perchance [during our journey] drunk a quarter of a log of Italian wine?" "Yes," the other replied. "In that case," he said, "let this man walk behind us until the effect of the wine we drank has been dissipated." The man walked behind them for three mil, until Rabban Gamaliel reached the Ladder of Tyre.[12] Having arrived at the Ladder of Tyre, R. Gamaliel dismounted the ass, wrapped his cloak around himself, sat down, and absolved the man from his vow.

From that incident we learned many things. We learned that a quarter of a log of Italian wine causes intoxication; that an intoxicated man may not render decisions in legal matters; that a journey causes the effects of wine to dissipate; and that absolution from vows may not be granted while riding, walking, or standing, but must be done sitting.[13]

78. We have been taught: Rabban Gamaliel had a tube through which he could see at a distance of two thousand cubits across land, and likewise two thousand cubits across the sea.[14]

79. It once happened that at a banquet in the home of Rabban Gamaliel's son, R. Eliezer, R. Joshua, and R.

---

1. Or, "blacksmith."
2. That is, a priest, son of a priest, should sprinkle the water of purification—Rabban Gamaliel, who has a hereditary claim to the patriarchate, should be reinstated.
3. And not "living water" from a stream, as required. See Num. 19:17.
4. And not from the Red Heifer.
5. See B. Hag 3a. B. Ber 27b–28a; P. Ber 4:1, 7c–d; En Yaakov.
6. Questions may be asked.
7. Sif Deut., §16.
8. A Samaritan proper name. Cf. B. Mak 11a.
9. Since R. Ilai was requested to pick up the loaf.
10. And therefore was forbidden to an Israelite.
11. The loaf was nevertheless presented to a heathen. But he would naturally be grateful for the gift and likely to reply to it by some act of kindness.
12. Scala Tyriorum, a promontory south of Tyre.
13. B. Er 64b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
14. B. Er 43b and En Yaakov, ad loc.

Zadok were reclining on couches, while Rabban Gamaliel was standing over them and serving drinks. He offered a cup to R. Eliezer, but he would not take it; then he offered it to R. Joshua, who did take it. R. Eliezer said to him, "How can we allow this, Joshua? We are seated, while Gamaliel Berabbi[1] is standing over us and serving us drinks!" R. Joshua replied, "In Scripture we find one even greater than he acting as servitor. Abraham was the greatest man of his generation, yet of him it is written, 'And he stood over them'[2] [Gen. 18:8]. Do you suppose that his guests appeared to him openly as ministering angels? They appeared to him disguised as mere Arabs.[3] Then should not Rabban Gamaliel Berabbi stand over us and serve us drinks?"

Now R. Zadok spoke up: "How long will you disregard the honor due Him who is everywhere and concern yourselves with the honor due to His creatures? The Holy One causes winds to blow, clouds to rise, rain to fall, and the earth to sprout, and before each and every one of us He sets a table, and we—should not Rabban Gamaliel, even though a Berabbi, stand and serve us drinks?"[4]

80. Rabban Gamaliel gave his daughter in marriage. "Father," she requested, "pray for me." He replied, "May [it be God's will that] you not come back here." When she gave birth to a son, she asked, "Father, pray for me." He replied, "May [it be God's will that] 'Woe' never leave your mouth." She cried out, "Two joys befell me, and you curse me!" "Both were prayers for you," he replied. "[My prayer was] that peace reign for you in your home, so that you will not return here; and that your son may survive, so that 'Woe' will not leave your mouth, [so that you will not have to wail] 'Woe, my son has not eaten! Woe, my son has not drunk! Woe, my son has not gone to the synagogue!' "[5]

81. It happened that by accident Rabban Gamaliel put out an eye of his slave Tabi.[6] He rejoiced over it greatly [eager as he was to have his meritorious slave set free]; and when he met R. Joshua, he said, "Do you know that my slave Tabi is getting his freedom?" "How did it happen?" R. Joshua asked. "Because I [accidentally] put out his eye."[7] R. Joshua: "Your admission is not legally effective, since there are no witnesses testifying for the slave.[8]

82. Male and female slaves are not customarily addressed as "Father So-and-so" or "Mother So-and-so." However, those of Rabban Gamaliel were addressed as "Father So-and-so" and "Mother So-and-so."

When his slave Tabi died, he accepted condolences for him. His disciples asked, "But did you not teach us, our master, that condolences are not to be accepted for a slave?" He replied, "My slave Tabi was not like other slaves. He was a worthy man."[9]

83. Proclos son of Philosophos put a question to Rabban Gamaliel while he was bathing in Acco in the bath of Aphrodite.[10] Proclos asked, "It is written in your Torah, 'And there shall cleave nought of the devoted thing to thy hand' [Deut. 13:18]; why, then, are you bathing in the bath devoted to Aphrodite?" Rabban Gamaliel replied, "Questions relating to Torah may not be answered in a bath."[11] When he came out, he said to Proclos, "I did not come into her domain—she has come into mine.[12] People do not say, 'The bath was made as an adornment for Aphrodite,' but rather, 'Aphrodite was made as an adornment for the bath.' "[13]

84. When the wicked tyrant Rufus plowed the site of the Temple Hall, Rabban Gamaliel was condemned to death. A certain general then appeared, stood up in the house of study, and said, "The man with the nose,[14] the man with the nose is wanted." When Rabban Gamaliel heard this, he hid himself [from the Romans]. But the general called on him secretly and said, "If I save you, will you bring me into the world-to-come?" Rabban Gamaliel: "Yes." "Swear it to me." And Rabban Gamaliel so swore. At that, the general went up to the roof, threw himself down, and died. [The decree against Rabban Gamaliel was then annulled], in keeping with the practice among the Romans that when a decree is issued and one of their own leaders dies, that decree is annulled.[15] Then a divine voice went forth and declared, "This general is destined for life in the world-to-come.[16]

85. Our masters taught: From the days of Moses down to Rabban Gamaliel, the Torah was studied only while standing. When Rabban Gamaliel died, feebleness descended on the world, and they studied the Torah sitting. Such is the implication of what we learned: "From the time that Rabban Gamaliel died, [full] honor ceased to be paid to the Torah.[17]

---

1. A title of distinction.
2. Over the three angels who appeared to him in the guise of human beings.
3. When Abraham bade them wash their feet, it was because he suspected them of being Arabs, who worship the sand on their feet.
4. B. Kid 32b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
5. Gen. R. 26:5.
6. Giving Tabi freedom would have violated the injunction "These shall become your property: you are to keep them as a possession for your children after you" (Lev. 25:45–46).
7. He would thereby, in accordance with Exod. 21:26, receive his freedom.
8. Under such circumstances, the slave does not go free, the penalty for the master being no more than a fine. B. BK 74b.
9. B. Ber 16b.
10. Baths were frequently adorned with the statues of deities.
11. Where people are naked.
12. The bath existed before the image of Aphrodite was set up in it, and it was constructed for general use.
13. B. AZ 44b.
14. The Roman officer may have confused the Hebrew title Nasi with the Latin word nasus, ("nose"). Hence he called out, "Baal ha-hotem"—in Latin, "Vir nasi" ("the man with the nose"). So Goldschmidt, ad loc.
15. They regard the death as punishment for the evil decree.
16. B. Ta 29a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
17. B. Meg 21a.

86. After the death of Rabban Gamaliel, R. Joshua entered [the house of study] to abrogate a certain ruling of his.[1] But R. Yohanan ben Nuri stood up and exclaimed, "The body, I declare, must follow the head [the earlier authority]. Throughout Rabban Gamaliel's lifetime, we set the law in agreement with Rabban Gamaliel's ruling, and now you seek to abrogate it? Since the law has already been set in agreement with Rabban Gamaliel, we shall not listen to you, Joshua."

And there was not a single person who raised any objection whatever to this statement.[2]

R. Eliezer [the Elder] ben Hyrcanus (fl. 2d century C.E.)

87. R. Aha taught in the name of R. Hanina: When Moses went up to heaven, he heard the voice of the Holy One, who sat engaged in the study of Torah, quoting a law in the name of its author and saying, "R. Eliezer says . . ." Moses spoke up, "Master of universes, may it please You that this scholar issue from my loins." God replied, "By your life, he will indeed be from your loins." Hence it is written, "And the name of the one Eliezer" (Exod. 18:4)[3] as much as to say, "the name of that uniquely gifted one."[4]

88. What were the beginnings of R. Eliezer ben Hyrcanus? At the age of twenty-two, he had not yet studied Torah. His father was very rich and had many plowmen working for him. One day R. Eliezer's brothers were plowing arable ground [in a valley] while he was plowing a stony plot [on a hill]. Presently he sat down and wept. His father asked, "Why are you weeping? Are you distressed because you have to plow a stony plot? From now on, you will plow arable land." But he sat down on the arable land and wept again. The father asked, "Why are you weeping? Are you distressed because you are plowing arable land [in the heat of the valley]?" R. Eliezer: "No." The father: "Then why are you weeping?" R. Eliezer: "Because I wish to study Torah." The father: "But you are already twenty-two, and you wish to study Torah? Take a wife. She will bear children for you, and you will take them to school."

Nevertheless, R. Eliezer resolved: I will go and study Torah in the presence of Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai. His father retorted, "You will not get a taste of food until you have plowed the entire furrow."

R. Eliezer got up early and plowed a full furrow. But then his heifer fell and broke its leg. Saying, "My heifer's leg broke for my sake," he quickly took off and went to Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai in Jerusalem.

It is said: That day was the eve of the Sabbath, and he had tasted nothing from six hours before Sabbath eve until six hours after the Sabbath's departure. As he was walking along the road, he saw a pebble in a cultivated field, picked it up, and put it in his mouth.

When he came before Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai, he sat down and wept. "Why are you weeping?" R. Eliezer: "Because I wish to study Torah." "Have you never studied it?" "No." So Rabban Yohanan began to teach him the Shema, the Tefillah, the grace after meals, and two rules of law every day. On the Sabbath, R. Eliezer repeated the prayers and the rules till he memorized them. Eight days he kept at it, without eating a thing, until the foul odor from his mouth attracted the attention of Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai, who asked, "Eliezer, my son, did you eat anything at all today?" Silence. Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai repeated the question. Again silence. "By your life, today you will eat with me." R. Eliezer: "But I already ate at the place where I stay." Rabban Yohanan said to his disciples, "As you live, look into the matter."

So his disciples went around all the streets of Jerusalem, inquiring at the inns, "Do you have a guest who is a scholar? Do you have a guest who is a scholar?" The reply was no until they came to a woman who said yes. They asked, "Does he have anything here?" She: "He has a sack into which he puts his head and appears to suck from it as from a leather wine bottle." They: "Show it to us." She brought the sack. When they opened it, they found it full of earth. Then they asked her, "Has Eliezer eaten anything in your place today?" She replied, "No. We thought he was eating at his master's house." Thus they realized that he had not eaten for eight days.

They went and reported to Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai, who then turned to R. Eliezer and said, "Alas for you, Eliezer, so greatly neglected in our midst. But I say to you: Even as foul breath rose out of your mouth before me, so shall the fragrance of Torah issuing out of your mouth [travel] from one end of the world to the other."

Then Rabban Yohanan set up regular meals for R. Eliezer, and he was healed. For three years he occupied himself with study in the presence of Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai.

The other sons of Hyrcanus said to their father, "See what our son Eliezer did to you—he left you in your old age and went off to Jerusalem. Go there and disinherit him." So Hyrcanus went up to Jerusalem to disinherit Eliezer.

It is said: That day was a festal day for Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai. All the notables of the city were dining with him, including Ben Tzitzit ha-Keset, Nakdimon ben Gorion, and Ben Kalba Savua. When Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai heard that Hyrcanus had come, he said, "Make room for him." Thus finding himself [unexpectedly] placed among the notables of the city, he sat trembling in their midst.

Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai set his gaze upon R. Eliezer and said, "Begin your discourse." R. Eliezer pleaded, "I cannot begin, for I am like a well, which cannot bring forth more water than it draws [from the earth]—so, too, I cannot utter more words of Torah than those I have received from you." Rabban Yohanan said, "My son, you

---

1. That a fast which has begun on a Friday may continue even into the onset of the Sabbath, which begins before the sun sets.
2. B. Er 41a.
3. Since Eliezer was the second son of Moses, one would expect the verse to read, "And the name of the second son was Eliezer." But the text reads instead, "And the name of the one Eliezer." Hence R. Hanina assumes that in this context the word hints at R. Eliezer, who lived in the first–second centuries C.E.
4. Num. R. 19:7.

are rather like a spring, which wells up and brings forth water of itself. You are like such a spring." Rabban Yohanan pressed him, and the disciples pressed him. So he arose and delivered a discourse on things that no ear had ever heard before. R. Eliezer's face was as radiant as the light of the sun; rays came forth from him like the rays that came forth from Moses, so that no one could tell whether it was day or night.

Then Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai stood up, kissed him on his head, and said, "Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, happy are you that such a son has issued from your loins." Hyrcanus asked, "To whom is he saying this?" When told, "To your son, Eliezer," he said, "Rabban Yohanan should not have spoken thus. He should have told me to say, 'How happy am I that such a one has issued from my loins.' "

Then Hyrcanus climbed up on a bench and declared in the presence of the people of Jerusalem, "Masters, I came here for no other purpose than to disinherit my son Eliezer. But now all my possessions will be given to my son Eliezer, while his brothers are to have no portion whatever in them."

Eliezer said to Hyrcanus, "Had I sought landed properties, the Holy One would have given them to me, for 'the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof' [Ps. 24:1]. Had I sought silver or gold, He would have given them to me, for 'Mine is the silver, and Mine the gold, saith the Lord of hosts' [Hag. 2:8]. I sought from the Holy One nothing other than Torah."[1]

89. R. Eliezer—he is like a plastered cistern, which does not lose a drop; like a flask coated with pitch which retains its wine.[2]

90. R. Eliezer said: If all seas were ink, and all reeds pens, and heaven and earth scrolls, and all mankind scribes, they would not suffice to write the Torah that I have learned, even though I abstracted from it no more than a man would take by dipping the tip of his painting stick into the sea.[3]

91. [To accommodate his many disciples], R. Eliezer's house of study was almost as large as an arena, and in it there was a stone that was reserved for him to sit on. Once R. Joshua came in and began kissing the stone and saying: This stone is like Mount Sinai, and he who sits on it is like the Ark of the Covenant.[4]

92. Our masters taught: It happened that R. Eliezer passed the Sabbath in Upper Galilee, and they asked him for thirty decisions in the laws of Sukkah. Of twelve of these, he said, "I heard them [from my teachers]"; of eighteen, he said, "I have not heard." According to R. Yose son of R. Judah, R. Eliezer said the reverse: of eighteen, he said, "I have heard them"; of twelve, he said, "I have not heard them." When he was asked, "Master, is all you say nothing other than what you have heard?" he replied, "You finally force me to say something I have not heard from my teachers. [I may tell you that] during all my life no man arrived earlier than myself at the house of study; I never slept or dozed there; I never quit the house of study leaving another person inside it; nor did I ever engage in chitchat; nor have I ever in my life said a thing that I did not hear from my teacher.[5]

93. Our masters taught: It happened that R. Eliezer passed the Sabbath [of Sukkot] in Upper Galilee in the sukkah of R. Yohanan ben R. Ilai at Caesarea, and when the sun reached the sukkah, R. Yohanan asked R. Eliezer, "May I spread a cloth over it [for more shade]?"[6] R. Eliezer answered, "There was not a tribe in Israel that did not produce a judge."[7] When the sun reached the middle of the sukkah, R. Yohanan again asked, "May I spread a cloth over it?" R. Eliezer answered, "There was not a tribe in Israel from which there did not come prophets, and the tribes of Judah and Benjamin appointed their kings at the behest of the prophets."[8] When the sun reached the feet of R. Eliezer,[9] R. Yohanan took a cloth and spread it over the sukkah. At that, R. Eliezer folded up his cloak, threw it over his back, and went out.[10] It was not in order to distract him [to another subject that he answered irrelevantly], but because R. Eliezer never said anything he had not heard from his master.[11]

94. Our masters taught: It happened that R. Eliezer was once sitting and lecturing the whole day [of a festival] on the laws of that festival. When the first group left [the lecture hall], he said: These are people who have casks;[12] when the second group left, he said: These are people who have amphorae; when the third group left, he said: These are people who have pitchers;[13] when the fourth group left, he said: These are people who have flasks; when the fifth group left, he said: These are people who have only goblets.[14] When the sixth group began to go out, he said: These are the people who will receive a curse.[15] Then he fixed his eyes on his disciples and their faces began to change

---

1. PRE 1; ARN 6; Gen. R. 42:1; Tanhuma B, Lekh Lekha, § 10.
2. Avot 2:8; ARN 14.
3. Song R. 1:3, §1.
4. Suggesting that R. Eliezer's rulings were as authoritative as the words on the Tablets placed in the Ark. Song R. 1:3, §1.
5. Nor will I give today any decision I have not heard from my teachers. B. Suk. 28a.
6. The point of his question: Is spreading a cloth regarded as extending a temporary tent, an act that is forbidden on the Sabbath.
7. He changed the subject, since he never gave a decision that had not been handed down. R. Eliezer's outstanding characteristic was his rigid conservatism.
8. Saul and David, for instance, were appointed by Samuel.
9. As the sun climbed the sky, its rays penetrated farther and farther into the sukkah.
10. To avoid responsibility for R. Yohanan's action.
11. B. Suk 27b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
12. "I.e., very rich, counting their wine by casks. They have left thus early because of the large quantities of food and drink waiting for them. These are gluttons" (Betz, Soncino p. 78, n. 7).
13. "I.e., less rich than the second but wealthier than the next group" (Betz, Soncino, p. 78, n. 8).
14. "Less keen on their pleasures" (Betz, Soncino, p. 78, n. 9).
15. "The emptiness of the lecture hall roused his ire" (Betz, Soncino, p. 78, n. 10).

color.[1] At that, he said to them: My children, not of you did I speak thus, but of those who have gone out, putting aside life eternal and occupying themselves with the life temporal. At the end of the lecture, when the disciples [who had remained behind] were about to take their leave, he said to them: "Go your way, eat the fat and drink the sweet, and send portions unto him for whom nothing is prepared; for this day is holy unto the Lord; neither be ye grieved, for the joy of the Lord is your strength" (Neh. 8:10).[2]

95. A story is told of a certain disciple who gave a decision in law in the presence of his master, R. Eliezer. Later, R. Eliezer said to his wife, Imma Shalom, "Alas for the wife of this man! He will not live out the week!" The week was hardly over when that disciple died. As the sages came in [to offer their condolences], his other disciples asked him, "Are you a prophet?" He replied, " 'I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet' [Amos 7:14], but I have the following tradition: a disciple who gives a decision in law in the presence of his master is liable to the death penalty."[3]

96. A Roman noblewoman asked R. Eliezer: How is it that, though only one sin had been committed in the making of the golden calf, yet the Israelites died by three kinds of death?[4] He replied: Women have no wisdom except for wielding the distaff, for, as Scripture says, "All the women that were wise-hearted did spin with their hands" (Exod. 35:5).[5] R. Eliezer's son, Hyrcanus, said to his father: Because you would not give her an answer drawn from the teachings of Torah, you caused us the loss of three hundred kor of tithe that she used to give us every year. R. Eliezer replied: Let the three hundred kor be burned, rather than have the words of Torah entrusted to women.[6]

97. When the bondwoman of R. Eliezer died, his disciples came in to condole with him. At the sight of them, he went to an upper chamber, and they went up after him. Then he went into the bath chamber, and they followed him there. Next he went into the great dining hall,[7] and they followed him there. Finally, he said to them: I thought that lukewarm water would be enough to scald you, but apparently even boiling water cannot do so.[8] Have I not taught you that a row of comforters is not provided at the death of male or female slaves, that the mourner's blessing [after the first meal] is not recited, nor are condolences offered for them? What then is said over them? Even as for the loss of an ax or an ass, a man is told, "May the Almighty replenish your loss," so, at the death of a male or female slave, he is told, "May the Almighty replenish your loss."[9]

98. We have been taught: Say a man made an oven out of separate coils [of clay, placing one upon another], then put sand between each of the coils[10]—such an oven, R. Eliezer declared, is not susceptible to defilement, while the sages declared it susceptible. The oven discussed was the oven of Akhnai—"snake" [so called because it precipitated arguments as numerous as the coils of a snake].

It is taught: On that day R. Eliezer brought forward every imaginable argument, but the sages did not accept any of them. Finally he said to them, "If the Halakhah agrees with me, let this carob tree prove it!" Sure enough, the carob tree was uprooted [and replanted] a hundred cubits away from its place. "No proof can be brought from a carob tree," they retorted.

Again he said to them, "If the Halakhah agrees with mme, let the channel of water prove it!" Sure enough, the channel of water flowed backward. "No proof can be brought from a channel of water," they rejoined.

Again he urged, "If the Halakhah agrees with me, let the walls of the house of study prove it!" Sure enough, the walls tilted as if to fall. But R. Joshua rebuked the walls, saying, "When disciples of the wise are engaged in a halakhic dispute, what right have you to interfere?" Hence, in deference to R. Joshua they did not fall, and in deference to R. Eliezer they did not resume their upright position; they are still standing aslant.

Again R. Eliezer said to the sages, "If the Halakhah agrees with me, let it be proved from heaven!" Sure enough, a divine voice cried out, "Why do you dispute R. Eliezer, with whom the Halakhah always agrees?" But R. Joshua stood up and protested, "It [the Torah] is not in heaven" (Deut. 30:12). We pay no attention to a divine voice, because long ago, at Mount Sinai, You wrote in the Torah, "After the majority must one incline" (Exod. 23:2).

R. Nathan met [the prophet] Elijah[11] and asked him, "What did the Holy One do in that moment?" Elijah: "He laughed [with joy], saying, 'My sons have defeated Me, My sons have defeated Me.' "

It is said: On that day all objects [that had been placed within that oven—objects] R. Eliezer had declared clean—[were pronounced unclean. Presently they] were brought and burned in fire. [After R. Eliezer's departure] the sages took a vote, excommunicated R. Eliezer, and

---

1. "I.e., to turn pale, because they thought he was angry with them for not leaving earlier—apparently they thought that he considered himself bound to go on as long as he had hearers" (Betz, Soncino, p. 79, n. 2).
2. B. Betz, 15b.
3. P. Git 1:2, 43c; Lev. R. 20:6.
4. By the sword, by the plague, and by dropsy.
5. He regarded her question as too trivial to deserve a reasoned reply. R. Eliezer's attitude to women is exceptional. We find, for example, R. Eleazar saying, in the name of R. Yose ben Zimra, "Woman was endowed with more understanding than man" (Gen. R. 18:1).
6. P. Sot 3:4, 19a; B. Yoma 66b; Num. R. 9:48.
7. A mourner usually spent the period of mourning in a room downstairs. R. Eliezer's demonstrative going to the upper chamber, the bathing quarters, and the festive dining area was meant to say that he did not observe mourning for the bondwoman.
8. As much as to say: I thought you would take the first hint, and you do not even take the last!
9. B. Ber 16b.
10. Since each portion in itself is not a utensil, and the sand between the portions prevents the oven's being regarded as a single utensil, therefore, according to R. Eliezer, the oven is not liable to uncleanness. The sages, however, hold that the oven's outer coating of mortar or cement unifies the coils so that the oven is liable to uncleanness.
11. It was believed that Elijah, who had never died, often appeared to the sages.

asked, "Who will go and tell him?" "I will go," R. Akiva volunteered, "lest an unsuitable person go and tell him, and thus destroy the whole world."[1] What did R. Akiva do? He donned black garments and wrapped himself in black,[2] and sat at a distance of four cubits from him. "Akiva," said R. Eliezer to him, "why the different garb today?" "Master," R. Akiva replied, "it seems to me that your companions are parting from you." At that, R. Eliezer rent his garments, removed his shoes, slipped off his seat, and sat on the ground, tears streaming from his eyes. The world was then smitten: a third of the olive crop, a third of the wheat crop, and a third of the barley crop [were ruined]. Some say that even the dough in women's hands fermented [and was spoiled]. The sages taught: Great was the wrath that befell [the world] that day, for anything R. Eliezer cast his eyes on was incinerated.

Indeed, on that day Rabban Gamaliel was traveling on shipboard when a huge wave arose, threatening to drown him. It appears to me, he reflected, that it is on account of R. Eliezer ben Hyrcanus. Then he stood up and called out, "Master of the universe! It is known and revealed to You that I have not acted for my honor, nor for the honor of my father's house, but for Your honor—that dissension might not multiply in Israel!" At that, the sea's rage subsided.

Imma Shalom was R. Eliezer's wife and Rabban Gamaliel's sister. From the time of this incident on she did not permit R. Eliezer to prostrate himself upon his face [in prayer].[3] One time a poor man came and stood at the door, so she took out some bread for him. [On her return] she found R. Eliezer prostrated upon his face. "Get up!" she cried out to him. "You have just slain my brother!" Even as she was speaking, a horn's blast coming from the house of Rabban Gamaliel announced that he had died. R. Eliezer asked her, "How did you know [that my prayer would bring about his death.]?" She replied, "I have a tradition from my grandfather's house: all gates may be locked, except the gates for wounded feelings."

99. Our masters taught: When R. Eliezer, suspected of [Judeo-Christian] heresy, was arrested, he was brought up on a torturer's scaffold to be examined. The Roman governor said to him, "How can a venerable sage like you occupy himself with such drivel?"[4] R. Eliezer replied, "I acknowledge the Judge as right." The governor, thinking that R. Eliezer referred to him—in fact he referred to his Father in heaven—said, "Because you have acknowledged me as the right judge, I dismiss you. You are acquitted." When R. Eliezer came home, his disciples called on him to console him,[5] but he would accept no consolation. Said R. Akiva to him, "Master, will you permit me to say something you taught me?" He replied, "Say it." "Master, is it possible that some heretical teaching was reported to you and pleased you, and for that reason you were arrested?" He exclaimed, "Akiva, you have reminded me. I was once walking in the upper market of Sepphoris, when I came across one of the disciples of Jesus the Nazarene, Jacob of Kefar Sekhania[6] by name, who said to me: It is written in your Torah, 'Thou shalt not bring the hire of a harlot . . . into the house of the Lord thy God' [Deut. 23:19]. May such money be applied to the building of a privy for the high priest? To this I made no reply. He said to me: I was taught [by Jesus the Nazarene]: 'For of the hire of a harlot hath she gathered them and unto the hire of a harlot shall they return' [Mic. 1:7]—since it came from a place of filth, it should go to a place of filth [such as the high priest's privy]. This interpretation pleased me very much, and that is why I was arrested for apostasy, for in reacting thus, I transgressed Scripture: 'Remove thy way far from her,' meaning heresy, 'so that you will not have to come nigh to the door of her house' [Prov. 5:8]—to the house of the ruling power."[7]

100. Rabban bar Bar Hanah taught: R. Eliezer fell sick, and when his disciples came to visit him, he said to them, "There is fierce wrath in the world."[8] They broke into tears, but R. Akiva laughed. "Why do you laugh?" they inquired of him. "Why do you weep?" he replied. They answered, "Shall [R. Eliezer], a [veritable] scroll of Torah, be lying in pain and we not weep?" R. Akiva then said, "For that very reason I laugh. As long as I see that my master's wine is not souring, nor is his flax smitten, nor is his oil gone rancid, nor does his honey ferment,[9] I thought, God forbid, that my master might have received all his reward in this world [leaving nothing for the next]; but now that I see him lying in pain, I rejoice [knowing that punishment for his sins is exacted in this world, while the reward for his righteousness is treasured up for him in the next]."

R. Eliezer said, "Akiva, have I neglected anything in the entire Torah?"[10] R. Akiva replied, "You, our master, taught us, 'No man on earth is so righteous that he does only good and never sins' " (Eccles. 7:20).[11]

101. Our masters taught: When R. Eliezer fell sick, four elders—R. Tarfon, R. Joshua, R. Eleazar ben Azariah,

---

1. I.e., commit a great wrong by informing him tactlessly.
2. As a sign of mourning, which a person under the ban had to observe.
3. After the Eighteen Benedictions, there follows a short interval for private prayer, during which each person offers up his own individual supplications to God as he prostrates himself upon his face. She feared that her husband might pour out his sense of injury and that God would punish Rabban Gamaliel, her brother.
4. B. BM 59a–b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
5. R. Eliezer was greatly troubled: what sin had he committed that God should have made him the victim of such a charge?
6. Possibly James son of Alphaeus (Mark 3:18) or James the Younger (Mark 15:40). So Isidore Epstein in AZ, Soncino, p. 85, n. 3.
7. B. AZ 16b–17a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
8. "He referred to himself—God must be very angry with him so to have afflicted him. So Rashi. [Heinrich] Graetz conjectures that his death took place shortly before Trajan's attack upon the Jews of many countries (ca. 116–17 C.E.), to which he was alluding in this remark, as the storm was already brewing" (Sanh, Soncino, p. 686, n. 2).
9. He was prosperous in everything.
10. R. Eliezer means: "I am being punished; hence I must have neglected some biblical ordinances. Now, I can't recollect any such lapses on my part. Do you recollect any? If you do, please tell me, so that I may atone for them" (Leon Nemoy).
11. B. Sianh 101a.

and R. Akiva—came to visit him. R. Tarfon spoke up and said, "You are more valuable to Israel than drops of rain; for drops of rain sustain us in this world, while you, my master, [sustain us] in this world and in the world-to-come."[1]

R. Joshua spoke up and said, "You are more valuable to Israel than the orb of the sun: the orb of the sun is but for this world, while you, my master, are for this world and for the world-to-come."

R. Eleazar ben Azariah spoke up and said, "You are better for Israel than a father and a mother: a father and a mother are only for this world, whereas you, my master, are for this world and for the world-to-come."

But R. Akiva spoke up and said, "Suffering is precious."[2]

Then R. Eliezer said to his disciples, "Prop me up, so that I may hear better the words of Akiva, my disciple, who said, 'Suffering is precious.' What proof have you, Akiva, for saying it?" R. Akiva replied, "I draw such inference from the verse 'Manasseh was twelve years old when he began to reign, and he reigned fifty and five years in Jerusalem . . . and he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord' [2 Kings 21:1–2]. I consider this verse in the light of another: 'These are also the proverbs of Solomon, which the men of Hezekiah king of Judah copied out [for widespread instruction]' [Prov. 25:1]. Now, would Hezekiah king of Judah have taught Torah to the whole world, to all of it, and not taught Torah to his own son Manasseh? However, all the pains that Hezekiah took with him and all the labors he expended for him did not bring him to the right path. Only Manasseh's suffering did so, as is written, 'And the Lord spoke to Manasseh, and to his people; but they gave no heed. Wherefore the Lord brought upon them the captains and the host of the king of Assyria. . . . And when [Manasseh] was in distress, he besought the Lord his God, and humbled himself greatly before the God of his fathers, and He answered his entreaty' [2 Chron. 33:10–13]. Thus you may learn how precious is suffering."[3]

102. We have been taught: When R. Eliezer fell sick, R. Akiva and his companions came to visit him. He was seated in a canopied four-poster, while they sat in the reception room. That day was Sabbath eve, and R. Eliezer's son Hyrcanus came in to his father's room to remove the tefillin his father had on.[4] But his father rebuked him, and he retreated, crestfallen. "It seems to me," Hyrcanus said to them, "that my father's mind is deranged."[5] But R. Akiva said to them, "[R. Eliezer's mind is clear], but Hyrcanus's mind and that of his mother are deranged. How is it that both have neglected acts [kindling the Sabbath lights and putting away the Sabbath meal to keep it hot] that are punishable on scriptural authority by stoning if performed on the Sabbath, while they concern themselves with tefillin, the wearing of which on the Sabbath is forbidden not on scriptural but only on rabbinic authority?"[6]

The sages, persuaded that his mind was clear, entered R. Eliezer's room and sat down at a distance of four cubits from him.[7] "Why have you come?" he asked. "We have come to study Torah,"[8] they replied. "And why did you not come before now?" he asked. "We had no time," they replied. Then he said to them, "I wonder if such as you will die a natural death." When R. Akiva asked, "And what kind of death will be mine?" he answered, "Yours will be more cruel than theirs."

Then R. Eliezer placed his arms over his heart and bewailed them, saying, "Alas for you, arms of mine, that are like two Torah scrolls about to be rolled up [and put away]. Much Torah have I learned, and much have I taught. Much Torah have I learned, yet I have not taken from my teachers even as much as the water a dog laps up from the sea. Much Torah have I taught, yet my disciples have taken from me no more than the paint a paint stick picks up from its tube. Moreover, I have studied three hundred laws on the subject of a bright discoloration on the skin,[9] yet no man has ever asked me about them. Even more, I have studied three hundred rules about planting cucumbers [by magic], and no man other than Akiva ben Joseph ever asked me about them. Once, while he and I were walking on a road, he said to me, 'My master, teach me the planting of cucumbers [by magic].' I uttered a single word, and the whole field about us was filled with cucumbers. Then he said, 'Master, you just taught me how to plant them. Now teach me how to pluck them.' I uttered another word, and all the cucumbers gathered into one place."

Then his disciples kept asking him about the laws of cleanness and the laws of uncleanness: concerning that which was unclean, he kept saying, "Unclean," and concerning that which was clean, he kept saying, "Clean," until his soul departed as he uttered the word "clean." Then R. Joshua stood up and exclaimed, "The ban is lifted, the ban is lifted!"

At the end of the Sabbath, on the way between Caesarea and Lydda, R. Akiva met R. Eliezer's bier. In his grief, R. Akiva lacerated his flesh until the blood dripped on the ground, and, sobbing and moaning, he lamented, "Woe is me for the loss of you, woe is me for the loss of you, my master, for you have left an entire generation fatherless." In the mourners' row he began his eulogy with

---

1. "R. Tarfon compares R. Eliezer's teaching to rain (a very valuable phenomenon in the Near East): after all, rain is a boon only on earth, whereas R. Eliezer's teaching will continue benefiting successive generations of scholars long after his death—the rain of his teaching will, as it were, continue falling out of heaven even after it has ceased falling out of the clouds of his physical terrestrial mouth" (Leon Nemoy).
2. It makes atonement for the sufferer.
3. B. Sanh 101a–b.
4. The Sabbath, when tefillin may not be worn, was drawing near.
5. Since he would not let me remove his phylacteries.
6. Wearing tefillin indoors on the Sabbath is forbidden by the rabbis for fear that the wearer may forget himself and go out in the street with them—carry them from home to a public domain—an act forbidden by Scripture. See Shab 1:1.
7. Because R. Eliezer had been placed under the ban. See above in this chapter, §98.
8. They preferred not to say that they came because he was gravely ill.
9. A form of leprosy. Lev. 13:2.

[Elisha's words at the departure of Elijah]: " 'My father, my father, the chariots of Israel and the horsemen thereof' [2 Kings 2:12]. I have many coins, but no moneychanger to sort them out."[1]

103. When R. Eliezer died, the Torah scroll was hidden away, the book of wisdom was hidden away.[2]

R. Joshua ben Hananiah (fl. ca. 90–130 C.E.)

104. R. Joshua—happy is she who gave birth to him!

When R. Dosa ben Horkinas saw R. Joshua, he applied to him the verse "To whom is one to give instruction? . . . Even to those newly weaned from the milk" (Isa. 28:9). I remember R. Joshua's mother taking his cradle to the house of study so that his ears would become attuned to words of Torah.[3]

105. R. Joshua said: If all seas were ink, and all reeds pens, heaven and earth scrolls, and all mankind scribes, they would not suffice to write down the Torah I learned, even though I abstracted [from my masters' teaching] no more than a man would take when dipping the point of a painting stick in the paint tube.[4]

106. Once the daughter of a Caesar[5] said to R. Joshua ben Hananiah, "What a pity! Such glorious wisdom in so ugly a vessel!" He replied, "My daughter, in what kind of vessel does your father keep his wine?" She: "In an earthenware vessel." R. Joshua: "But ordinary people keep wine in earthenware vessels; do you, too, keep your wine in such vessels?" She: "What else should we keep it in?" R. Joshua: "You, who are such important persons, should keep it in vessels of silver or even gold." So she went off and spoke to her father, who immediately had the wine put into vessels of silver and gold, where it soon turned sour. Then Caesar asked his daughter, "Who gave you such advice?" She: "R. Joshua ben Hananiah." Caesar had him summoned and asked him, "Why did you give my daughter such advice?" R. Joshua: "The same question she asked me, I [turned around and] asked her."

Caesar: "But are there not learned people who are handsome?"

R. Joshua: "If these handsome people were ugly, they would be even more learned."[6]

107. Once, when R. Joshua ben Hananiah and R. Yose the Priest were walking along a highway, they said: Let us expound the Work of the Chariot. So R. Joshua began his exposition. Now, that day was the day of the summer solstice;[7] nevertheless, the heavens became overcast with clouds, a kind of rainbow[8] appeared in the cloud, and the ministering angels assembled and came to listen, just like people who assemble and come to watch the entertainment for a bridegroom and bride. Later on, R. Yose the Priest went and related what happened to Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai, who said: Happy are you, and happy is she that bore you! Happy are my eyes that behold you who have seen such a sight! Moreover, in a dream I beheld you and me reclining on Mount Sinai when a divine voice was sent to us from heaven [saying], "Ascend hither, ascend hither! Here are great banqueting chambers and beautiful couches spread out for you. You and your disciples and your disciples' disciples are designated for the third company of the upright."[9]

108. R. Joshua ben Hananiah said: I can take cucumbers and melons, and turn them into hinds and gazelles, who will even give birth to hinds and gazelles.[10]

109. In the days of R. Joshua ben Hananiah, the wicked Roman government issued a decree that the Temple was to be rebuilt. Pappus and Lulianus set up tables all the way from Acco to Antioch, to provide gold and silver and sundry needs to those who were to come up from the exile [in Babylonia]. At that, the notorious Cutheans went and warned the king, "Let Caesar know that the Jews are about to rebel against you." "But what can I do," he asked, "seeing that I have already issued the decree?" "Send word to them that they must either change its site, or add five cubits to it, or diminish it by five cubits, and then of their own accord they will withdraw from rebuilding their Temple."[11]

Now, all the people were assembled in the valley of Beth Rimmon. When the new royal writ arrived, they wept in frustration and wanted to revolt against Caesar. [Alarmed], the sages decided: Let a wise man go to pacify the assembly. Who is the one to go? R. Joshua ben Hananiah should be the one, since he is a master of Torah. R. Joshua ben Hananiah stepped before the assembly and sought to pacify them by means of a fable: As a lion was devouring his prey, a bone stuck in his throat. He wailed, "[I have a bone in my throat and] I shall give a [great] reward to anyone who removes it!" An Egyptian heron, which has a long beak, came forward, plunged his beak into the lion's throat, pulled out the bone, and demanded, "Give me my reward." The lion roared, "Move off! Go boast, prattling, 'I entered a lion's mouth in peace and came out in peace.' You can have no greater reward than that." So, too, it should be enough for us that we entered

---

1. His many questions on Torah would now go unanswered. B. Sanh 68a and En Yaakov, ad loc.; ARN 25.
2. Thorough understanding of Torah and wisdom was no longer available to disciples. B. Sot 49b; P. Sot 9:16, 24c.
3. Avot 2:8; P. Yev 1:6, 3a.
4. Song R. 1:3, §1.
5. Perhaps Hadrian. See JE 7:291.
6. B. Ta 7a–b; B. Ned 50b.
7. Literally, "the cycle of Tammuz" (the fourth month). On such a day the sky in the Land of Israel should be cloudless.
8. Cf. Ezek. 1:28.
9. See MTeh 11:6 (YJS 1:164–65). B. Hag 14b.
10. P. Sanh 7:13, 25d.
11. Th Cutheans' wily counsel led to the Roman government's subsequent withdrawal of permission to rebuild the Temple, an act that may have precipitated Bar Kozeva's rebellion during Hadrian's reign. See Ben-Zion Luria, "When Locks Were Let Loose in Israel" [Hebrew], Sinai 93, nos. 3–4 (1983): 100.

into dealings with this Roman people in peace and have emerged in peace.[1]

110. R. Joshua ben Hananiah was standing in the presence of Caesar when a certain heretic spelled out in pantomime: "Here is a people whose Lord has turned His face away from them." R. Joshua responded in pantomime: "But His hand is still stretched protectively over us."

Caesar asked R. Joshua, "What did he show you?" " 'A people whose Lord has turned His face away from them.' And I responded by saying, 'His hand is still stretched protectively over us.' " Then Caesar asked the heretic, "What did you show him?" "A people whose Lord has turned His face away from them." "And what did he show you?" "I do not know." Then Caesar said, "A man who does not understand the figures he is shown dares to draw figures in pantomime before Caesar!" They led him forth and put him to death.[2]

111. Hadrian said to R. Joshua ben Hananiah, "How difficult it is for a flock to be grazing among seventy wolves." R. Joshua replied, "How strong the Keeper who is able to save it from all of them.[3]

112. Our masters taught: Once, when R. Joshua ben Hananiah happened to go to a great city in the Roman Empire, he was told that there in a prison was a child with beautiful eyes and face, and curly locks. He went, stood at the doorway of the prison, and said, "Who gave Jacob for a spoil, and Israel to the robbers?" (Isa. 42:24). The child answered, "Is it not the Lord, against whom they sinned, in whose ways they would not walk, and whose teaching they would not obey?" (ibid.). Upon hearing the child speak so aptly, R. Joshua applied to him the verse "The precious sons of Zion, comparable to fine gold" (Lam. 4:2). R. Joshua's eyes were flowing with tears and he said: I feel sure that this one will be a teacher in Israel. By the Temple service, I swear that I will not budge from here until I ransom him, whatever price may be demanded.

It is reported that R. Joshua did not leave the spot until he had ransomed him for a substantial sum; nor did many days pass before the child became a teacher in Israel. Who was the child? R. Ishmael ben Elisha.[4]

113. It happened once that bones were found in Jerusalem in the chamber where wood for the altar was stored. [Out of fear that bones might be buried throughout the city], the sages were about to impose a decree of ritual uncleanness on all of Jerusalem. R. Joshua ben Hananiah rose up and said: Would it not be a shame and a humiliation for us to impose a decree of uncleanness on the city of our ancestors? Where are [the bones of] those who died during the flood? Where are [the bones of] those who were slain by Nebuchadnezzar? Where are the bones of those who were slain during the war against Rome and until now? [Surely they must all be here.] However [he concluded], the sages said: Only that which is certain may be declared unclean; but that which is uncertain remains clean.[5]

114. R. Joshua ben Hananiah remarked: No one has ever had the better of me except a woman, a little boy, and a little girl.

What was the incident with the woman? I was once staying at an inn where the proprietress prepared [a meal of] beans for me. The first day I ate all of it, leaving nothing. The second day I again ate all of it, leaving nothing. The third day she overseasoned the beans with salt, and, upon tasting them, I drew my hand away from the plate [and stopped eating]. "My master," she asked, "why do you not eat?" I replied, "I have already eaten earlier in the day." She said, "You should then have drawn your hand away from the bread [I served and eaten less of that]." She continued, "My master, may it be that you left beans on the plate today to make up for what you failed to do on the two preceding days, for have not the sages taught, 'No food need be left in the pot [for the servant], but something must be left for him on the plate'?"

What was the incident with the little girl? I was once on a journey, and, observing a path across a field, I made my way through it. A little girl called out to me, "Master! Is not this part of the field?" "No," I replied, "this is a trodden path." "Poachers like you," she retorted, "have trodden it down."

What was the incident with the little boy? I was once on a journey when I noticed a little boy sitting at a crossroads. I asked him, "My son, by what road do we go to the town?" "This one," he replied, "is short but long, and that one is long but short." I proceeded along the "short but long" road. When I approached the town, I discovered that [the road became a dead end] because gardens and orchards blocked access to the town. I turned back and said to him, "My son, did you not tell me that this road was short?" He replied, "Did I not also tell you, 'But long'?" I kissed him on his head and said to him, "Happy are you, O Israel, for all of you, from the oldest to the youngest among you, are wise."[6]

A story of R. Joshua: When a certain person called on him early in the morning, he gave him food and drink, [entertained him, and in the evening] took him up to the roof to sleep, and then removed the ladder leading down from the roof. What did that man do? In the middle of the night he arose, collected the articles [kept on the roof], and wrapped them in his cloak. But when he tried to come down, he [unaware that there was no ladder] fell from the roof and broke his neck. The following morning, R. Joshua rose early and found the man where he had fallen. R. Joshua said to him, "You good-for-nothing, do all persons like you act as you have?" The thief replied, "Master, I did not know that you had removed the ladder from under me." R. Joshua replied, "You good-for-nothing, did you

---

1. Gen. R. 64:10; Yalkut, Toledot, §111.
2. B. Hag 5b.
3. Israel is the flock; the seventy gentile nations are the wolves. Esther R. 10:11; Tanhuma, Toledot, §5.
4. B. Git 58b; Lam. R. 4:2, §4.
5. Tos Ed 3:3; B. Zev 113a.
6. B. Er 53b and En Yaakov, ad loc.

not realize that from the moment you arrived yesterday we were wary of you?"

Hence, R. Joshua said: Always consider all men as brigands, but honor them as you would honor Rabban Gamaliel.[1]

116. Hadrian Caesar asked R. Joshua ben Hananiah, "Does the world have a master?" R. Joshua: "Can you possibly suppose that the world is ownerless?" Hadrian: "And who created heaven and earth?" R. Joshua: "The Holy One, as stated: 'In the beginning God created heaven and earth' " (Gen. 1:1). Hadrian: "Then why does He not reveal Himself twice a year, so that mortals may see Him and the awe of Him be upon them?" R. Joshua: "Because the world cannot endure His radiance, as is said, 'No man shall see Me and live' " (Exod. 33:20). Hadrian: "If you do not show Him to me, I will not believe you." At midday R. Joshua had Hadrian stand facing the sun and said, "Look directly at the sun and you will see Him." Hadrian: "Who can possibly look directly at the sun?" R. Joshua: "Do your ears not hear what your mouth is saying? If no creature can look at the sun, which is but one of the thousand thousands and myriad myriads of servitors who minister before Him, all the less can a creature look at Him, at the Holy One, whose radiance fills the world." Hadrian: "Then when will He reveal His glory?" R. Joshua: "When idols shall have perished from the world."[2]

117. The same Caesar said to R. Joshua ben Hananiah, "I wish to prepare a banquet for your God." R. Joshua: "You cannot do so." "Why not?" "Because His attendants are too numerous." Caesar: "Nevertheless, I wish to do it." "Then go and prepare it on the banks of the river Revita,[3] where there is ample room." Accordingly, Caesar spent the six months of summer in making preparations, but then a tempest arose and swept everything into the sea. So he spent the six months of winter in making new preparations, but then the rains came and again everything was washed into the sea. "What is the meaning of this?" demanded Caesar. R. Joshua replied, "These are but the sweepers and sprinklers that march ahead of Him!" "In that case," Caesar concluded, "I admit I cannot do it."[4]

118. The same Caesar once said to R. Joshua ben Hananiah, "Your God is likened to a lion, for it is written, 'The lion hath roared, who will not fear?' [Amos 3:8]. Wherein, then, lies His greatness? Surely a horseman can easily kill a lion!" R. Joshua: "He has been likened not to an ordinary lion, but to the lion of [the forest] on high!" "I desire," said Caesar, "that you show it to me." R. Joshua: "You will be unable to look at it." Caesar: "Nevertheless, I insist." So R. Joshua ben Hananiah entreated God's mercy, and the lion set out from its place. When it was four hundred parasangs distant, it roared once, and all the pregnant women miscarried and the walls of Rome collapsed. When it was three hundred parasangs distant, it roared again, and the teeth of men fell out—Caesar himself fell from his throne to the ground. "I beg of you," he implored, "entreat God's mercy that this lion may return to its place." R. Joshua entreated God's mercy, and it was returned to its place.[5]

119. Hadrian—may his bones be ground to dust—said to R. Joshua ben Hananiah, "I am better than your teacher Moses." "What makes you say so?" "Because I am alive and he is dead, and it is written, 'A living dog is better than a dead lion' " (Eccles. 9:4). R. Joshua said to him, "Can you order that no one should kindle a fire in Rome for three days?" "Certainly I can," and at once Hadrian issued a decree that no fire be kindled in Rome [for three days]. But on that very day, toward evening, when Hadrian went up to the roof of his palace, together with R. Joshua ben Hananiah, the two lifted their eyes and saw smoke rising from a distant corner. R. Joshua asked, "What is the meaning of that smoke?" Hadrian replied, "A captain is ill. A physician went in to examine him and said that unless the patient is given hot drinks he will not recover." R. Joshua lifted his eyes again and saw smoke rising from another corner and again asked, "What is the meaning of that smoke?" Hadrian replied, "You will find that a prefect is ill. A physician went in to examine him and said that unless he is kept warm by a hot vessel he will not recover." R. Joshua then said, "May the breath of a man like you be blasted out. While you are still alive, your decree has not endured even for one day, whereas since the day our teacher Moses decreed for us, 'Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations upon the Sabbath day' [Exod. 35:3], have you ever seen any Jew kindle a fire on the Sabbath? And yet you say, 'I am better than Moses!' "[6]

120. The same Caesar said to R. Joshua ben Hananiah, "If you are wiser than the sages of Athens, go and defeat them in argument, and bring them to me." R. Joshua asked, "How many Athenian sages are there?" "Sixty men." R. Joshua said, "Make me a ship containing sixty cabins, and in each cabin place sixty chairs." He did this for him.

When R. Joshua reached Athens, he went up to a slaughterhouse, where he found a man skinning a carcass. When he asked him, "Is your head for sale?" the man replied, "Yes." "For how much?" "For a half a zuz." R. Joshua gave him half a zuz and said, "Give me your head." The man gave him the animal's head. R. Joshua exclaimed, "Did I say the head of an animal? I said, 'Your head.' " Finally R. Joshua said to the man, "If you want me to let you be, go and point out to me the entrance to the School of Athens." The man replied, "I am afraid, for whoever points out its door is put to death." R. Joshua then said, "Take a bundle of reeds, and when you reach the spot, [as a signal to me] set it down as if to rest."

Having reached the school, R. Joshua found guards stationed inside and outside the building. For when the elders saw the footprints of someone about to enter [without

---

1. DER 5.
2. Yalkut, Ki Tissa, §394; B. Hul 59b–60a.
3. Or, "the shore of the Great Sea." The river is near Yavneh, in the Land of Israel.
4. B. Hul 60a.
5. B. Hul 59b.
6. Eccles. R. 9:4, §1; Yalkut, Eccles., §989.

permission], they would kill the outside guards; and when they saw the footprints of someone about to leave [without permission], they would kill the inside guards.[1] So R. Joshua reversed his sandals, and they killed the inside guards. He then turned the sandals back to their normal position, and they killed the outside guards.[2]

Thus free to enter, he found the young men sitting high up [in the upper chamber] and the elders below. So he said to himself: If I give greetings to the elders first, the young men will kill me, for they will say, "We are more important than the elders, for we sit high up, while they sit below." And if I give greetings to the young men first, the elders will kill me, for they will say, "We are older than they and they are mere youngsters." So R. Joshua said no more than: "Peace upon [all of] you." When he was asked, "What are you doing here?" he replied, "I am one of the sages of the Jews, and I have come to learn wisdom from you." They said, "If so, we will ask you a question." He replied, "Very well. If you defeat me, you will do with me as you please; if I defeat you, you will break bread with me on my ship."

They said to him, "Tell us some tall tales." He said, "After a she-mule gave birth to a colt, they hung around the colt's neck a document in which was written, 'The colt has filed a claim against his sire's house for one hundred[3] thousand zuz.' " They retorted, "But can a she-mule give birth?" He replied, "This is one of the tall tales you asked for."

"When salt becomes stale, with what is it salted?" He replied, "With the afterbirth of a mule." "But can a mule have an afterbirth?" "And can salt become stale?"

"Build us a house in the sky." R. Joshua: "[First] bring clay and bricks up there for me."

"Where is the center of the world?" He pointed a finger [to a spot in the ground] and said, "Here." They replied, "Who says so?" He said, "[If you do not believe me], bring ropes and measure."

They said, "We have a wellspring in the field. Bring it into the town." He replied, "Twist ropes of bran flour for me, and I will bring it in."

"We have a broken millstone. Sew it up." "Pull the original sewing threads out of the pieces for me, and I shall mend the millstone."

"A bed of knives—with what should one reap it?" "With the horns of an ass." [They asked, "But has an ass horns?" "And is there a bed of knives?" he replied.]

They brought him two eggs. "Which is from a white hen and which is from a black?" He brought them two cheeses and asked them, "Which is from a white goat and which from a black?"

"A chick that died in its shell—where has its spirit gone?" "From where it came, there it went."

"Show us an article whose value is not worth the loss it may cause." He brought a mat of reeds and spread it out. It could not get through the door [being too long and too wide]. So he said to them, "Bring a pickax and demolish the wall. Here you have an article whose value is not worth the loss it may cause."

In the end, he brought each of them to the ship. When each saw the sixty chairs in his chamber, he supposed that all his companions would soon come there. In the meantime, R. Joshua ordered the captain to set sail. But before starting the journey, R. Joshua had taken some earth from the Athenians' native soil. When they reached the straits,[4] he drew a jug of water from its waters.[5]

When Joshua returned to his own place, he presented the sages to Caesar, who, seeing that they appeared subdued, said, "These cannot possibly be the sages of Athens." Then R. Joshua took a clod of the earth [he had brought] from their native land and tossed it at them. Smelling it, they became haughty[6] toward Caesar, who then said to R. Joshua, "Do with them as you wish." So R. Joshua fetched the water he had taken from the straits and poured it into a jug. Then he said to them, "Fill this jug, and you can go your way." They tried to fill it, but every bit of water they poured into the jug kept being absorbed. They kept trying to fill the jug, until their shoulders were wrenched out of place, and thus one by one they perished.[7]

121. Twelve questions did the people of Alexandria put to R. Joshua ben Hananiah: three of these concerned matters of Aggadah; three were mere nonsense; and three concerned matters of proper conduct.

Three matters of Aggadah: One verse says, "For I desire not the death of him that dieth" (Ezek. 18:32), but another verse says, "Because the Lord desireth to slay them?" (1 Sam. 2:25).

R. Joshua replied: The first verse refers to those who are penitent, while the second refers to those who are not penitent.

One verse says, "Who lifteth not His countenance nor taketh bribe" (Deut. 10:17), but another verse says, "The Lord lift up His countenance to thee" (Num. 6:26).

R. Joshua: The first verse refers to the time before sentence is passed, while the second refers to the time after sentence has been passed.

One verse says, "For the Lord hath chosen Zion" (Ps. 132:13), but another verse says, "For this city [Zion] hath been to Me a provocation of Mine anger and of My fury from the day that they built it even unto this day" (Jer. 32:31).

R. Joshua: The first verse applies to the time before Solomon married the daughter of Pharaoh, while the second verse applies to the time after Solomon married the daughter of Pharaoh.

Three were mere nonsense: Does the wife of Lot[8] convey uncleanness? He replied: A corpse conveys uncleanness, but no pillar of salt conveys uncleanness.

---

1. Bran flour or dust was scattered over the threshold so that the footprints of those entering or departing were made visible.
2. The two footprints seen on the threshold, pointing in different directions, suggested to the Athenians that there had been two persons, one leaving and the other entering.
3. Goldschmidt reads: "one thousand."
4. Probably Scylla and Charybdis. So Jastrow.
5. Its waters are said to be capable of absorbing all other waters.
6. After smelling their native earth, they imagined that they were back again in their own country.
7. B. Bekh 8b–9a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
8. Who was turned to a pillar of salt; see Gen. 19:26.

Does the son of the Shunammite[1] convey uncleanness? R. Joshua replied: A corpse conveys uncleanness, but no live person conveys uncleanness.

Will the dead in the time-to-come require to be sprinkled upon[2] on the third and the seventh day,[3] or will they not require it? R. Joshua replied: When they come back to life, we shall go into the matter.

Three were concerned with matters of proper conduct: What must a man do to become wise? R. Joshua replied: Let him engage much in study and very little in business. They objected: Many did just that, and it did not avail them. R. Joshua: In such cases, let them beseech mercy from Him to whom wisdom belongs, for it is said, "The Lord giveth wisdom, out of His mouth cometh knowledge and discernment" (Prov. 2:6).

What must a man do to become rich? R. Joshua replied: Let him engage much in business, and give and take in honesty. They objected: Many did just that, but it did not avail them. R. Joshua: In such cases, let them beseech mercy from Him to whom riches belong, for it is said, "Mine is the silver, and Mine the gold" (Hag. 2:8).

What must a man do to have male children? R. Joshua replied: He should marry a wife who is worthy of him and dispose his mind toward saintliness at the time of marital intercourse. They objected: Many did just that, but it did not avail them. R. Joshua: In such cases, let them beseech mercy from Him to whom children belong, for it is said, "Lo, children are a heritage of the Lord; the fruit of the womb is a reward" (Ps. 127:3).[4]

122. The daughter of a Caesar once said to R. Joshua ben Hananiah, "Since your God is a carpenter—for it is written, 'Who layeth the beams of His upper chambers in the waters' [Ps. 104:3]—ask Him to make me a spool." He replied, "Very well." He prayed for mercy in her behalf, and she was smitten with leprosy, whereupon she was made to sit in the open square of Rome and given a spool. (Such was the custom in Rome: whoever was smitten with leprosy was given a spool, made to sit in the open square, and provided with skeins to undo [and wind on the spool], so that people seeing him would pray for his recovery.) One day, as R. Joshua was passing through the Forum of Rome, he saw Caesar's daughter seated, undoing skeins and winding their wool on a spool. He said, "Is the spool that my God has given you good enough for you?" She replied, "Tell your God to take back what He has given me." R. Joshua: "Our God gives, but never takes back."[5]

123. A Caesar asked R. Joshua ben Hananiah, "Why did you not attend Be Avidan?"[6] He replied, "The mountain is covered with snow; it is surrounded by ice; its dogs no longer bark; and its stones no longer grind."[7]

124. When R. Joshua ben Hananiah was about to die, the sages asked him: Who will now stand up in our behalf against heretics? He replied: "Counsel is perished from children, their wisdom vanishes" (Jer. 49:7)—counsel is perished from the children of Israel, the wisdom of the heathen vanishes.[8]

125. When R. Joshua died, [men of] counsel and thought ceased.[9]

Nahum the Man of Gamzo (fl. ca. 90–130 C.E.)

126. It is related of Nahum of Gamzo[10] that he was blind in both eyes, stumped in both hands, and crippled in both legs; his entire body was covered with boils. The legs of his bed stood in four basins of water to prevent ants from crawling all over him. Once, when his bed was in a house about to collapse, his disciples proposed first removing the bed and then clearing the furniture out of the house, but he said to them, "My children, remove the furniture first and then remove my bed, for you may be sure that so long as I am in the house it will not collapse." So they cleared out the furniture, then they removed his bed, and in the next instant the house collapsed. His disciples asked, "Master, since you are so perfectly righteous, why has all this [affliction] come upon you?" He replied, "My children, I invoked it on myself. Once I was journeying to the house of my father-in-law and had with me three heavily laden asses, one with food, another with drink, and the third with all kinds of delicacies. A poor man appeared and stopped in front of me on the road, saying, 'Master, give me something to sustain me.' I replied, 'Wait until I unload the ass.' I had barely managed to unload the ass when the man died [of hunger]. I then threw myself over him and said, 'Let these eyes of mine which had no pity upon your eyes be blinded, let these hands of mine which had no pity upon your hands be stumped, let these legs of mine which had no pity upon your legs be crippled!' Nor could my soul rest thereafter, until I added, 'Let my whole body be covered with boils.' " At this, his pupils exclaimed, "Woe unto us that we see you in such a state!" Nahum replied, "Woe indeed, but even greater woe unto me if you did not see me in such a state."[11]

127. Why was he called Nahum of Gamzo? Because whenever something untoward befell him, he would declare, "This too is for good. [Gam zo le-tovah]." It happened once that the Jews, wishing to send a gift to Caesar, deliberated who was to go and decided that Nahum of Gamzo should go, because he was one to whom miracles always happened. They sent him with a chest full of precious stones and pearls. On the way, he spent the night at a certain inn. During the night the innkeepers opened

---

1. Whom Elisha restored to life; see 2 Kings 4:35.
2. As is required of one in contact with a corpse.
3. The days that are to be counted after one has contracted uncleanness.
4. B. Nid 69b and 70b–71a.
5. B. Hul 60a.
6. Meanings suggested: (1) house of the Ebionites; (2) Avadan (Persian), "forum"; Be Mevedhan (Persian), "house of the chief magus."
7. My hair and beard are white, my voice is barely audible, and my teeth are worn to the gums. B. Shab 152a.
8. B. Hag 5b.
9. B. Sot 49b.
10. Gamzo is mentioned in 2 Chron. 28:18 as the name of a place. The name here is not of a place but a surname or epithet—the combination of gam ("also") and zo ("this"). See below in this chapter, §127.
11. B. Ta 21a.

When he got to Caesar and the chest was opened, they found it full of earth. "The Jews are making a laughingstock of me," said Caesar, and was about to put Nahum to death. Nevertheless, Nahum again said, "This too is for good." Just then Elijah appeared to Caesar, disguised as one of his courtiers, and remarked, "Perhaps this earth is the same kind of earth their father Abraham used—for when Abraham threw earth [against an enemy], it turned into swords, and when [he threw] stubble, it changed into arrows, as is written, 'He turns what appears to be earth into his sword, and driven stubble into his bow' " (Isa. 41:2).[1]

Now, there was one province that hitherto Caesar had not been able to conquer. They tried some of this earth against it and succeeded in conquering it. Then they brought Nahum to the royal treasury, filled his chest with precious stones and pearls, and sent him back with great honor. On his return journey, he again spent the night at the same inn. The innkeepers asked him, "What did you bring with you, that they showed you such great honor?" He replied, "What I had taken from here, the same I brought there." Hearing that, the innkeepers tore down their inn, took some of its earth to Caesar, and said, "The earth that was given to you [by Nahum] was brought from our land." When the earth [they brought] was tested, and nothing [of the aforementioned qualities] was found to be in it, the innkeepers were put to death.[2]

R. Tarfon (fl. ca. 110–35 C.E.)

128. R. Tarfon—father of all Israel, master of all Israel.[3]

129. R. Tarfon—a pile of walnuts: when a person removes one of them, all come clattering down as they fall over one another. So was R. Tarfon! Whenever a disciple of the wise came to him and said, "Teach me," he would cite for him Scripture and Mishnah, Midrash of Halakhot and of Aggadot. When the disciple left, he went away laden with blessing and [intellectual] wealth.[4]

130. When a man made a sound observation before R. Tarfon, he would say, "A knop and a flower—[well ordered]" (Exod. 25:33). And when a man uttered drivel before him, he would say, "My son shall not go down with you" (Gen. 42:38).[5]

131. It is related of R. Tarfon that once, while he was eating some dried figs in his own garden [leased to a tenant], the tenant came by and found him there but did not recognize him. "So you're the one," the tenant shouted, "who has been stealing my grapes all year!" He then proceeded to thrash him with a stick, dumped him into a sack, and carried him to the river to drown him. When R. Tarfon perceived himself to be in mortal danger, he said, "As you live, go to the house of Tarfon and say, 'Prepare shrouds for him.' " Upon hearing this, the tenant [released R. Tarfon], prostrated himself before him, tore his hair, and wept as he cried, "My master, forgive me!" R. Tarfon replied, "May such-and-such come upon me if at each and every blow of the stick that descended upon me I did not forgive you for every preceding blow."

It is said in the name of R. Hananiah ben Gamaliel: Throughout all the days of that righteous man he continued to be distressed about the incident, saying, "Woe is me! I made [selfish] use of the crown of the Torah."[6]

132. It is related of R. Tarfon that, although he was very wealthy, he did not give many gifts to the poor. Once R. Akiva met him and said to him, "Master, would you like me to purchase one or two villages for you?" He replied, "Yes," and handed R. Akiva four thousand gold denars. R. Akiva took the money and distributed it among poor disciples of the wise. Later on, R. Tarfon met him and asked, "Where are the villages that you purchased for me?" R. Akiva took him by the hand and led him to the house of study; he brought over a child who had the book of Psalms in his hand and made him read until he came to the verse "He hath scattered abroad, he hath given to the needy; his righteousness endureth forever" (Ps. 112:9). Then R. Akiva said, "This is the village I bought for you." At that, R. Tarfon stood up, kissed him, and said, "You are my teacher and my friend—my teacher in wisdom, my friend in proper conduct," and gave him additional money to distribute.[7]

133. It happened that R. Tarfon's mother went off on the Sabbath for a walk in her courtyard. Her slipper split [and since she could not repair it then and there, because it was the Sabbath], R. Tarfon held his hands under the soles of her feet, and she walked on his hands until she reached her couch.

Later, when R. Tarfon took sick and the sages came in to visit him, she said to them, "Pray for my son Tarfon, for he treats me with too much honor." They asked her, "In what way?" So she told them the story. They said, "Even if he did what you say—did so a thousand thousand times—he still has not come halfway to showing the full honor that the Torah says a son owes a parent."[8]

134. One day, as R. Tarfon sat teaching his disciples, an [indigent] bride passed by before him. He ordered that she be invited to his house and said to his mother and his wife, "Bathe her, anoint her, adorn her, and dance before her, until she goes to her husband's house."[9]

135. It once happened that R. Tarfon had not been present at the house of study the previous evening. The next

---

1. JV: "His sword maketh them as dust, his bow as the driven stubble."
2. B. Ta 21a; B. Sanh 108b–109a.
3. P. Yoma 1:1, 38d; P. Hor 3:2, 37d.
4. ARN 18.
5. That is, "I would not permit my son to associate with an ignorant idiot like you." In Genesis, Jacob says, "My son shall not go down with you," in response to Reuben's foolish proposal.
6. By disclosing his identity and rank; by rights, he should not have trespassed on the tenant's garden, particularly when eating what seemed to be stolen produce. P. Shev 4:2, 35b; Ka 2; B. Ned 62a.
7. Ka 2.
8. P. Pe 1:1, 15c.
9. ARN 41.

morning Rabban Gamaliel met him and asked, "Why were you not at the house of study last night?" R. Tarfon [who was a priest] replied, "I performed an act required in a priest's service." Rabban Gamaliel: "Your words are beyond comprehension. How could you at this time [when there is no Temple] perform an act required in a priest's service?" R. Tarfon: "It is said, 'I regard [priestly] gifts you make use of as a service of priesthood' [Num. 18:7][1]—my act of eating a heave offering [terumah] in the provinces is equal to performing an act of priestly service in the Temple."[2]

136. It is told of R. Tarfon that, while he was walking on a road, an old man accosted him and asked him, "Why do people find fault with you? Are not all your ways faithful and upright? It must be because you accept heave offering from all sorts of people throughout the year."[3] R. Tarfon: "May I bury my children if I do not have in hand a Halakhah from Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai, who said to me, 'Throughout the year you are allowed to receive heave offering from all sorts of people.' Still, because [you say that] mortals find fault with me, I decree for myself not to receive heave offering from all sorts of people throughout the year, save only if there be in it a fourth of a log [of wine or oil] sacred for use in the Sanctuary."[4]

137. "The sons of Aaron, the priests, shall blow with the trumpets" (Num. 10:8)—the priests must be whole, without physical blemish. Such is the opinion of R. Akiva. R. Tarfon said to him: May I bury my sons if I did not see my mother's brother, one of whose legs was lame, standing in the Temple Court, a trumpet in his hand, blowing it. R. Akiva replied: My master, perhaps what you witnessed took place at the time of Hak'hel, the time of the great assembly.[5] I, however, have in mind the time when offerings are presented. R. Tarfon: May I bury my children—in proposing your opinion, you veered not a whit to the right or to the left. It is I who saw what happened but forgot the exact circumstances. I should not have interpreted the rule as I did, whereas you expound in precise agreement with the true tradition. So anyone who sets himself apart from you sets himself apart from his own life.[6]

138. At one time the Ineffable Name was uttered [by the high priest] in a loud voice. But after skeptics grew in number, it came to be uttered in a low voice. R. Tarfon said: Once, while standing in a row with my brother priests [on the Day of Atonement], I inclined my ears toward the high priest [to catch his pronunciation], but he muffled it in the priests' chanting. One time, however—continued Rabban—I did hear it and fell upon my face [in awe].[7]

R. Akiva (fl. 95–135 C.E.)

139. Resh Lakish said: What is meant by "This is the book of the generations of Adam" (Gen. 5:1)? It intimates that the Holy One showed him each generation and its expounders of Scripture, each generation and its sages. When He reached the generation of R. Akiva, Adam rejoiced in R. Akiva's Torah but grieved over his death and protested, "How precious to me Thy friends [each sage, each expounder of Scripture], O God" (Ps. 139:17).[8]

140. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: When Moses ascended on high, he found the Holy One affixing crowns to letters.[9] Moses asked, "Lord of the universe, [why use crowns to intimate what You wish]? Who hinders Your hand [from writing out in full all of Torah's precepts]? God replied, "At the end of many generations there will arise a man, Akiva ben Joseph by name, who will infer heaps and heaps of laws from each tittle on these crowns." "Lord of the universe," said Moses, "permit me to see him." God replied, "Turn around." Moses went and sat down behind eight rows [of R. Akiva's disciples and listened to their discourses on law]. Not being able to follow what they were saying, he was so distressed that he grew faint. But when they came to a certain subject and the disciples asked R. Akiva, "Master, where did you learn this?" and R. Akiva replied, "It is a law given to Moses at Sinai," Moses was reassured. He returned to the Holy One and said, "Lord of the Universe, You have such a man, yet You give the Torah [not by his hand] but by mine?" God replied, "Be silent—thus has it come to My mind." Then Moses said, "Lord of the universe, You have shown me his Torah—now show me his reward." "Turn around," said God. Moses turned around and saw R. Akiva's flesh being weighed out in a meat market.[10] "Lord of the universe," Moses cried out in protest, "such Torah, and such its reward?" God replied, "Be silent—thus has it come to My mind."[11]

141. R. Akiva was a shepherd forty years; he studied Torah forty years; and guided Israel forty years.[12]

142. Who are the fathers of the world? R. Ishmael and R. Akiva.[13]

---

1. JV: "I give you the priesthood as a service of gift."
2. B. Pes 72b–73a.
3. Even though their reputation for scrupulous observance of the laws of cleanness is not the best.
4. Even the ignorant person (am ha-aretz), who is not trusted with regard to proper care of the heave offering, is trusted concerning an item that is used in the Sanctuary. The incident may have occurred in the days of Bar Kozeva, when people resumed bringing gifts for the cultus. See Saul Lieberman, ed., Tos Hag (New York, 1962), 7:1333. Tos Hag 3:33.
5. Once every seven years, the entire people assembled during the Feast of Tabernacles to listen to the reading of the Torah. See Deut. 31:12.
6. P. Yoma 1:1, 38d.
7. P. Yoma 3:7, 40d; Eccles. R. 3:11, §3.
8. The psalm is understood to deal with Adam. B. Sanh 38b. JV: "How weighty . . . Thy thoughts to me, O God." However, re'ekha ("Thy thoughts") can also mean "Thy friends"; and yakeru ("weighty") can also mean "precious."
9. See above, part one, chap. 5, §51.
10. R. Akiva died a martyr's death at the hands of the Romans during the Hadrianic persecution. See below in this chapter, §180.
11. B. Men 29b.
12. Sif Deut., §357.
13. P. RH 1:1, 56d.

143. Had Shaphan not arisen in his time, and Ezra in his time, and R. Akiva in his time, would not the Torah have been forgotten in Israel?[1]

144. After the death of Yose ben Joezer of Tzeredah and Joseph ben Yohanan of Jerusalem, men of comprehensive learning (eshkolot)[2] ceased, so that one could say, "There is no bunch of grapes (eshkol) to eat, no choice morsel of a fig" (Mic. 7:1). Not until R. Akiva did a man of comprehensive learning (eshkol) arise.[3]

145. R. Akiva worked as a shepherd for Kalba Savua.[4] When Rachel, Kalba Savua's daughter, saw that even though Akiva was unassuming, there was something extraordinary about him, she said, "If I am willing to be betrothed to you, will you attend a house of study?" R. Akiva answered, "Yes." So she betrothed herself to him in secret. When Kalba Savua learned what she had done, he drove her out of his house and vowed that she was not to benefit from any of his property. At that, she went off and [openly] married Akiva. When winter came, [they were so poor that] they had to sleep in a straw bin. As R. Akiva picked the straw from her hair, he would say, "If I had the means, I would give you a 'Jerusalem of gold.' "[5]

Presently [the prophet] Elijah, disguised as a mortal, came and cried out at the door, "Please give me a bit of straw—my wife is about to give birth, and I have nothing for her to lie on." R. Akiva said to his wife, "Look at this man—he does not even have the straw [that we have]!"

Soon after, she insisted, "Go now, and learn Torah in a house of study." He went away, and for twelve years he sat in a house of study in the presence of R. Eliezer and R. Joshua.

At the end of twelve years, he arose and returned to his home, bringing with him twelve thousand disciples. Everyone went out to meet him. When his wife heard [of his arrival], she too went out to meet him. Her neighbors said to her, "Borrow some clothes, put them on, and make yourself presentable." But she replied, "A righteous man will recognize his loyal creature" (Prov. 12:10). When she came near him, she fell upon her face and was about to kiss his feet. But his disciples sought to push her aside. R. Akiva shouted at them, "Let her be—mine and yours are rightly hers."

Her father, on hearing that a great man had come to town, said, "I shall go to him, perhaps the great man will release me of my vow." When the father came to him, R. Akiva asked, "Would you have made your vow if you had known that her husband was to become a great man?" The father replied, "[Had her husband known] even one chapter, even one Halakhah [I would not have made such a vow]." R. Akiva then said, "I am your daughter's husband." The father fell upon his face and kissed R. Akiva's feet. Presently, he gave him half of his wealth.[6]

146. What were Akiva's beginnings?

It is said: Up to the age of forty, he had not yet studied a thing. One time, while standing by the mouth of a well in Lydda, he inquired, "Who hollowed out this stone?" and was told, "Akiva, haven't you read [in Scripture] that 'water wears away stone' [Job 14:19]?—it was water [from the well] falling upon it constantly, day after day."

At that, R. Akiva asked himself: Is my mind harder than this stone? I will go and study at least one section of Torah. He went directly to a schoolhouse, and he and his son began reading from a child's tablet. R. Akiva took hold of one end of the tablet, and his son of the other end. The teacher wrote down alef and bet for him, and he learned them; alef to tav, and he learned them; the book of Leviticus, and he learned it. He went on studying until he learned the whole Torah.

Then he went and sat before R. Eliezer and R. Joshua. "My masters," he said to them, "reveal the sense of Mishnah to me."

When they told him one Halakhah, he went off to reason with himself. This alef, he wondered, what was it written for? That bet—what was it written for? This teaching—what was it uttered for? He kept coming back, kept inquiring of R. Eliezer and R. Joshua, until he reduced his teachers to silence.

All the twelve years that R. Akiva was with R. Eliezer, R. Eliezer paid little attention to him, so that when R. Akiva offered his first clinching argument to him, R. Joshua quoted the verse "There is the army you paid no attention to; now go out and fight it" (Judg. 9:38).

R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: I shall tell you a parable to illustrate what R. Akiva did. He was like a stonecutter hacking away at mountains. One time he took his pickax in his hand, went and sat on top of the mountain, and began to chip small stones from it. Some men came by and asked him, "What are you doing?"

"I mean to uproot the mountain and cast it into the Jordan."

"Can you possibly do such a thing?"

"Yes." He continued hacking away until he came to a big boulder. He placed an iron claw under it, pried it loose, uprooted it, and cast it into the Jordan. Then he espied another, even bigger boulder, placed an iron claw under it, and cast it into the Jordan, saying, "Your place is not here, but there."[7]

R. Akiva had to perform such uprooting of "big boulders" with [the instruction of] R. Eliezer and R. Joshua, in keeping with the verse "He falls to work upon the flinty rocks, he turns mountains up by the roots, he carves out channels through rock, and his eye beholds every precious thing" (Job 28:9–10).

Each day R. Akiva would gather a bundle of twigs—half of it he would sell to provide food for himself, and

---

1. Sif Deut., §48.
2. The word eshkolot is construed as portmanteau: ish ("a man") she-hakol bo ("in whom there is everything").
3. P. Sot 9:10, 24a.
4. At the time of Vespasian's siege, one of Jerusalem's three richest men. See above, part 1, chap. 10, §2.
5. A gold tiara with "Jerusalem" engraved on it.
6. B. Ket 62b–63a; B. Ned 50a.
7. By perseverance and skill, he achieved what appeared to be impossible.

the other half he would use for his personal needs. His neighbors rose up in protest, saying, "Akiva, you are all but choking us with smoke! Sell us the twigs, buy oil with the money, and study by the light of a lamp." He replied, "I find many uses for the twigs. To begin with, I study by the light they give; then I keep warm by their heat; finally, I sleep on some of them."

It is said: Before R. Akiva departed from the world, he owned tables made of silver and of gold—he even ascended his couch by a stepladder made of gold. His wife used to go out shod with golden sandals and wearing a golden tiara.

"Master," his disciples said to him, "you put us to shame [before our wives] by what you are doing for her."

He replied, "Much suffering did she endure with me for the sake of Torah."[1]

147. A story is told of R. Akiva, who had a "Jerusalem of gold" made for his wife. When the wife of Rabban Gamaliel saw it, she was envious of her, went to her husband, and said so. He replied, "Would you have done for me what she did for her husband? She used to sell the braided locks of her hair and give him the money, so that he could occupy himself with Torah."[2]

148. It is taught that R. Akiva said: When I was untutored (am ha-aretz), I used to say, "Would that I had a scholar before me! I would bite him as does an ass." His disciples said, "Master, you mean, as does a dog." He replied, "No, when an ass bites, he breaks bones; when a dog bites, he breaks no bones."[3]

149. R. Yohanan ben Nuri said: I call heaven and earth to witness that many times R. Akiva was punished on account of me, because I used to bring charges against him before Rabban Gamaliel in Yavneh, but I know that nevertheless R. Akiva's love for me grew, in keeping with the verse "Reprove a man of sense, and he will love thee" (Prov. 9:8).[4]

150. One day R. Akiva was delayed in getting to the house of study, so that when he did come, he sat down outside. A question arose: "Is such-and-such the Halakhah?" They said, "The Halakhah is outside." Again a question arose. They said, "Akiva is outside." So a space was found for him, and he came in and sat down [in an unassuming way] at the feet of R. Eliezer.[5]

151. R. Akiva—"a treasury with compartments." To whom may R. Akiva be likened? To a laborer who took his basket and went forth to the field. When he found wheat, he put some into it; when he found barley, in it went; emmer, likewise; beans, the same; lentils—they too went into the basket. Upon returning home, he sorted out the wheat by itself, the barley by itself, the emmer by itself, the beans by themselves, the lentils by themselves. This is how R. Akiva acted: all the Torah [he amassed], he sorted into its various compartments.[6]

152. To R. Akiva, who provided scriptural grounding for Halakhot and Haggadot, R. Jonah applied the verse "I will give him [fame] among many as his portion, because he divided spoil with those who sought hard [to understand]" (Isa. 53:12).[7] Some say, the Men of the Great Assembly[8] provided such grounding. What, then, did R. Akiva provide? General principles and detailed regulations.[9]

153. Once, as R. Akiva sat teaching his disciples and recalling what he had done in his youth, he exclaimed:

> I give thanks unto You,
> O Lord my God,
> that You have set my portion > among those who sit in the house of study > and have not set my portion > among those who loiter at street corners in the marketplace.[10]

154. R. Tarfon said to him, "Akiva, when a man separates himself from you, he separates himself from life."

R. Tarfon also said to him, "Akiva, of you Scripture says, 'The thing that is hid, bringeth he forth to light' [Job 28:11]—things concealed from men, [you] R. Akiva brought forth to light.[11]

155. Ben Azzai said: Compared to me, all sages in Israel are as thin as the husk of garlic—except for this baldhead [R. Akiva].[12]

156. Some time ago, a legal decision [about the ash of the Red Heifer] was put to thirty-eight elders in a vineyard in Yavneh, who declared its flesh ritually clean. The issue was one of the matters R. Yose the Galilean debated with R. Akiva. R. Akiva disposed of R. Yose, who subsequently found a rejoinder and asked R. Akiva, "May I go back to the subject?" R. Akiva: "No other man but you may, because you are Yose the Galilean." Then R. Yose set forth the rejoinder he had thought of.

Recalling this incident, R. Tarfon quoted, "I saw the ram pushing westward, and northward, and southward; and none of all the beasts could stand before him, neither was there any that could deliver out of his hand; but he did according to his will, and grew great" (Dan. 8:4). The ram is R. Akiva.

---

1. ARN 6; ARNB 12.
2. P. Shab 6:1, 4d.
3. B. Pes 49b.
4. B. Ar 16b and En Yaakov, ad loc; Sif Deut., §1.
5. Song R. 1:3, §1.
6. Literally, "rings [upon] rings"—like a chain whose links are connected. R. Akiva not only systematized the body of tradition he acquired, but formulated it in abstract general rules. ARN 18.
7. JV: "Therefore will I give him a portion among the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the mighty."
8. A legislaive body of one hundred and twenty men, said to have functioned about five centuries before the Common Era.
9. P. Shek 5:1, 48c.
10. ARN 21.
11. B. Kid 66b; ARN 6.
12. B. Bekh 58a.

"And as I was considering, behold, a he-goat came from the west over the face of the whole earth, and touched not the ground; and the he-goat had a conspicuous horn between his eyes. And he came to the ram that had the two horns . . . and ran at him in the fury of his power. . . . And he was moved with choler against him, and smote the ram, and broke his two horns; and there was no power in the ram to stand before him; but he cast him down to the ground, and trampled upon him, and there was none that could deliver the ram out of his hand" (Dan. 8:5–7). The he-goat is R. Yose the Galilean.[1]

157. It is related of R. Akiva that he never said, "It is time to quit [the house of study] except on the eve of Passover and the eve of Yom Kippur. On the eve of Passover, for the sake of children, so that they would not fall asleep [during the seder]. On the eve of Yom Kippur, so that the disciples could feed their children.[2]

158. When R. Simeon, the son of R. Akiva, fell ill, the father did not neglect his house of study, but arranged for his messengers to stand by [the sickbed].

The first messenger came and said, "He is very ill."

"Carry on!" said R. Akiva to his disciples.

The second came and said, "He is getting worse."

He had them resume their study of Torah.

The third came and said, "He is dying."

"Carry on!"

The fourth came and said, "He is gone."

Hearing this, R. Akiva rose, removed his tefillin, rent his clothes, and said to his disciples: "Up to now we were obliged to study Torah. From this moment on, you and I are obligated to honor the dead."

A large gathering assembled for the burial of R. Akiva's son and showed great grief over his demise. As they were about to leave, R. Akiva stood up on a large stool and said: O House of Israel, our brethren, hear me! Even if my son had been a bridegroom, I would still be comforted, because of the honor you accorded him.

It is not because I am wise:
There are those here who are wiser than I.
And it is not because I am rich:
There are those here who are richer than I.
The people of the south know R. Akiva,
But how do the people of Galilee know him?
The men know R. Akiva,
But how do the women and children know him?
If you came for the sake of someone named Akiva, how many men named Akiva are there in the marketplace?

I know that you troubled yourselves to come for the sake of the commandment [of comforting the bereaved], as well as for the honor of Torah, saying, "The law of his God is in his heart" (Ps. 37:31). It is therefore certain that your reward will be twofold. I am comforted. Go to your homes in peace.[3]

159. R. Akiva sat weeping on the Sabbath. His disciples said: Our master, you taught us, "Call the Sabbath a delight" (Isa. 58:13). R. Akiva: This is my delight.[4]

160. It happened that the synagogue sexton publicly asked R. Akiva to step over to the [lectern] to read the Torah lesson, but R. Akiva did not rise. After they left the synagogue, he began to apologize to the disciples, saying: May such-and-such befall me if it was out of arrogance that I did not rise to read in the Torah. So they asked: Then why did not the master rise? He replied: Because I had not prepared myself.

The disciples fell to wondering about what R. Akiva had said.[5]

161. We have been taught that, according to R. Judah, such was the practice of R. Akiva: when he prayed with a congregation, he used to make his prayer brief and conclude the service, in order not to inconvenience the congregation; but when he prayed by himself, a man would leave him praying in one corner and find him later [still praying] in another corner, because of his many genuflexions and prostrations.[6]

162. Our masters taught: Four men entered the "Garden,"[7] namely, Ben Azzai, Ben Zoma, Aher,[8] and R. Akiva. R. Akiva said to them: When you arrive at the slabs of pure transparent marble, do not say: Water, Water! For it is said, "He that speaketh falsehood shall not be established before Mine eyes" (Ps. 101:7) Ben Azzai cast a look and died: of him Scripture says, "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints" (Ps. 116:15). Ben Zoma looked and became demented; of him Scripture says, "Hast thou found honey? Eat so much as is sufficient for thee, lest thou be filled therewith, and vomit it" (Prov. 25:16). Aher mutilated the shoots. R. Akiva departed unhurt.[9]

---

1. Sif Num., §124; Yalkut, Hukkat, §761.
2. B. Pes 109a.
3. Sem 8:13 (YJS 17:63); B. MK 21b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
4. Shibbolei ha-Leket, which cites a Midrash. "As he thought of the Temple in Jerusalem, it was a relief for R. Akiva to shed tears, even on a Sabbath" (private communication to the translator from Dr. Louis Finkelstein, chancellor emeritus of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, New York). Another possibility: R. Akiva belonged to those who believed that the Sabbath should be observed by fasting and weeping (see Yitzhak D. Gilat, "On Fasting on the Sabbath" [Hebrew], Tarbitz 52, no. 1 [1982]: 1–15).
5. The disciples marveled that even R. Akiva, who was so well versed, felt he needed special preparation to read and expound a lesson in Scripture. Tanhuma, Yitro, §15.
6. B. Ber 31a.
7. "A figurative expression for the mystical realm of theosophy." So Jastrow and Goldschmidt.
8. Elisha ben Avuyah, R. Meir's teacher. See below in this chapter, §191.
9. Ben Azzai and Ben Zoma penetrated into the forbidden regions of the divine mystery and were smitten accordingly. Aher, misinterpreting the mystery, fell into heresy. Only Akiva survived the experience. B. Hag 14b.

163. R. Akiva came up unhurt and went down unhurt. Of him, Scripture says, "Draw me, we will run after Thee" (Song 1:4). The ministering angels sought to thrust R. Akiva away; but the Holy One said: Let this venerable elder be. He is worthy of making use of My glory.[1]

164. It is said that R. Akiva had twelve thousand pairs of disciples between Gabbath[2] and Antipatris.[3] All died during his lifetime, at the same time, between Passover and Pentecost [Shavuot], because they did not treat one another with respect. The world was desolate[4] until R. Akiva came to our masters in the south and taught them Torah—he thus taught R. Meir, R. Judah, R. Yose, R. Simeon, R. Eleazar ben Shammua. He said to them, "The previous disciples died only because they begrudged one another the knowledge of Torah. See to it that you do not act like them." They rose and filled all the Land of Israel with Torah.[5]

165. Rabban Gamaliel said: Once, while traveling on shipboard, I saw another ship wrecked and grieved greatly for a disciple of the wise who was on it. (Who was he? R. Akiva.) After I landed, there was R. Akiva, who sat down before me and held forth upon decisions in Halakhah. I asked him: Who brought you here? He replied: A ship's plank came my way, and as each wave came toward me, I dipped my head under it.[6]

166. Once, while on a journey, R. Akiva came to a certain place where he looked for lodging but was not given any. He said, "Whatever the Holy One does is for the best." So he went off and spent the night in the open field. He had with him an ass, a cock, and a lamp. A lion came and ate the ass, a weasel came and ate the cock, and a gust of wind came and blew out the lamp. Again he said, "Whatever the Holy One does is for the best." That same night, troops came and took the people of that city into captivity. Said R. Akiva to his disciples, "Did I not tell you, 'Whatever the Holy One does is for the best'?"[7]

167. Our masters taught that R. Akiva gave seven charges to his son Joshua: My son, do not live and study in the business district of the city;[8] do not dwell in a town whose leaders are scholars;[9] do not enter your own house unexpectedly, much less your neighbor's house; do not withhold shoes from your feet.[10] Rise early and eat—in summer, on account of the sun's heat, and in winter, on account of the cold.[11] Treat your Sabbath like a weekday rather than be dependent on [the charity of] mortals. Strive to be on good terms with a man upon whom the hour smiles.[12]

168. One of R. Akiva's disciples fell ill, and the sages did not come to visit him. So R. Akiva went to visit the disciple, and because he saw to it that the ground was swept and sprinkled for him, he recovered and said, "My master, you have brought me back to life."

R. Akiva went out and expounded, "He who does not visit the sick is as though he had shed blood."[13]

169. R. Akiva said: This is how my attendance upon sages began. Once, while walking on a road, I found a slain man. I carried him a distance of four mil until I brought him to a burial place, where I interred him. When I came to R. Eliezer and R. Joshua, I told them what had happened. They said to me, "Every step you took is accounted for you as though you had shed blood."[14] Then I said to myself: If I incurred sin when I thought to do good, how much more sin would I have incurred had I not thought to do good!

Henceforth, I did not budge from attending upon sages.

R. Akiva used to say: He who does not attend upon sages deserves death.[15]

170. R. Akiva became rich from six sources:

(1) From Kalba Savua.[16]

(2) From a ship's ram—for every ship is provided with the figurehead of a ram. Once one was forgotten on the seashore, and R. Akiva found it.[17]

(3) From a ship's coffer. Once he gave four zuz to mariners, saying, "Bring me such-and-such a thing [that I need]." But they found only a coffer on the seashore, which they brought to him and said, "Our master will have to make do with this." The coffer was found to be filled with denars. For it so happened that a pirate ship had sunk, and all their wealth was in that coffer found just then.

(4) And from a Roman noblewoman. One time the sages needed a lot of money for the house of study. So they sent R. Akiva to a certain Roman noblewoman, from whom he borrowed a large sum, and he fixed with her the time of repayment. When she asked, "Who will guarantee me in this matter that you will repay on time?" he replied, "Whoever you wish." So she said, "Let it be the Holy One and the sea"—for her house was on the seashore. R. Akiva replied, "Very well."

When the time for repayment came, R. Akiva took sick and could not bring the money. So the noblewoman

---

1. B. Hag 15b and En Yaakov ad loc.
2. Gibbethon, in the territory of Dan.
3. Northwest of Jerusalem.
4. Without Torah.
5. B. Yev 62b; Gen. R. 61:3; Eccles. R. 11:6, §1.
6. B. Yev 121a.
7. B. Ber 60b.
8. Where the movement of people disturbs study.
9. They are too busy with their studies to pay attention to its affairs.
10. "One should sell even the beams of his house and buy shoes for his feet" (B. Shab 129a).
11. So that your breakfast will be well digested by the time you have to face the summer's heat or the winter's cold.
12. B. Pes 112a.
13. B. Ned 40a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
14. "His own blood, and the blood of others against whom Rome might take reprisals" (Sem: Dov Zlotnick, ed., The Tractate "Mourning" [New Haven, Conn., 1966; YJS 17] 22). R. Akiva should have buried the corpse on the spot at once.
15. P. Naz 7:1, 56a; Sem 4.
16. See above in this chapter, §145.
17. It was full of gold coins.

went out to the seashore and said, "Master of the universe, to You it is known and revealed that R. Akiva is sick and is unable to pay the debt owed me. Be advised that You and the sea are guarantors in the matter."

At once the Holy One sent a spirit of folly into the heart of Caesar's daughter, who entered the royal treasury, took a basket filled with precious stones and gold denars, and threw it into the sea. The sea discharged it at the doorway of the noblewoman, who picked it up. After a while, R. Akiva recovered and came to the noblewoman with the money in his hand. She said, "Let all you brought remain with you, for I went to the Guarantor and He paid the entire debt, and here is the extra He gave." In addition to this, she bestowed on him substantial gifts and sent him away in peace.

(5) And from the wife of the tyrant Rufus.[1] The tyrant Rufus would voice silly arguments against R. Akiva and, in the presence of Caesar, R. Akiva would overwhelm these arguments with verses—even dared rebuke him. Once, when the tyrant Rufus came home greatly put out, his wife asked, "Why are you so put out?" He: "Because of R. Akiva, who manages every day to rebuke me." The wife: "Give me permission, and I will make him stumble." (It should be said that she was very beautiful.) He gave her permission. She adorned herself and went to R. Akiva's house. When R. Akiva saw her, he spat, wept, and yet seemed elated. She: "What is the meaning of these three reactions?" He: "I will explain two, but not the third. I spat because you originated from a fetid drop [of sperm]; I wept because of such great beauty, which is to decay into dust." But he did not explain why he was elated—he was elated because he foresaw through the holy spirit that she would be converted and be wed to him.

She: "Is repentance possible?" He: "Yes."

At once she went away, became a convert, was wed to him, and brought him much wealth.

(6) And finally from Ketia bar Shalom. He became a convert, was sentenced to death, and said, "All my possessions are to go to R. Akiva and his companions."[2]

171. It happened that the tyrant Rufus asked R. Akiva, "Why does the Holy One so hate us that He wrote, 'But Esau I hate' (Mal. 1:3)?" R. Akiva: "Tomorrow I will give you an answer." In the morning Rufus asked, "R. Akiva, what did you dream last night, and what did you see [in your dream]?" R. Akiva: "In my dream I saw two dogs, one named Rufus and the other named Rufina." Angered, Rufus said, "You call your dogs by names no other than mine and my wife's! You deserve death [for an offense] against the government." R. Akiva: "But how do you differ from dogs? You eat and drink, and they eat and drink. You procreate, and they procreate. You die, and they die. You are angry because I called them by your name. Now consider: It is the Holy One who has stretched out the heavens and established the earth. It is He who consigns to death and restores to life. Yet you take a block of wood [which does nothing] and call it god by His Name. Does it not stand to reason that He should be angry with you? Hence, 'But Esau I hate.' "[3]

172. When R. Akiva went to a foreign land, its ruler sent him two beautiful women who had been bathed, anointed, and adorned like brides. All night they kept thrusting themselves at him, one saying, "Turn to me," and the other saying, "Turn to me." But he sat there spitting in disgust and turned to neither. [In the morning] they went away and complained to the ruler, saying, "We would rather die than be given to this man."

The ruler sent for him and asked, "Why did you not do with these women as men usually do? Are they not beautiful? Are they not human beings like you? Did not He who created you also create them?"

R. Akiva answered, "What could I do? Their breath came at me like the odor of the carrion, torn beasts, and creeping things [they eat].[4]

173. R. Akiva used to scoff at sexual transgressors. Once Satan, disguised as an [alluring] woman, appeared to him on top of a palm tree. Akiva took hold of the tree and started to climb it. But when he reached halfway, his [impulse to evil] let go of him. Satan said to him: Had it not been proclaimed of you in the firmament "Take heed of R. Akiva and his learning," I would have valued your life at no more than two meah.[5]

174. Our masters related the following story: When R. Akiva was confined in prison and R. Joshua the Grits Maker served him, only a limited amount of water was brought in to him every day. One day R. Joshua was stopped by the keeper of the prison, who asked him, "Why is your water today above the set limit? Do you perhaps require that much to breach the prison walls?" At this, the keeper poured out half of the water and left the other half. When R. Joshua, [delayed by the encounter, finally] came in to R. Akiva, R. Akiva said, "Joshua, do you not know that I am an old man and that my life depends on yours? [Why are you so late?]" After R. Joshua told him all that had happened, R. Akiva said, "Give me some water to wash my hands." R. Joshua replied, "The water I brought will not suffice for drinking—how can it also suffice for washing your hands [for the meal]?" R. Akiva: "But what else am I to do? I would rather starve myself to death than disregard the opinion of my colleagues."[6]

It is related that he tasted nothing until R. Joshua managed to bring him more water with which to wash his hands. When the sages heard of the incident, they remarked, "If he is so scrupulous in his old age, how much more so must he have been in his youth; and if he behaves thus in prison, how much more scrupulous must his behavior be in his own home."[7]

---

1. Governor of Judea, 1st century C.E.
2. B. AZ 10b and 20a; R. Nissim and Rashi on B. Ned 50a–b.
3. Tanhuma, Terumah, §3.
4. ARN 16.
5. A small coin. That is, your life would not have been worth two cents. B. Kid 81a.
6. Who ruled that before a meal one's hands must be washed.
7. B. Er 21b and En Yaakov, ad loc.

175. R. Yohanan the Cobbler, pretending to be a peddler, passed by R. Akiva's prison cell, calling out, "Who needs needles? Who needs hooks? What if a widow performed halitzah[1] without witnesses?" R. Akiva looked out from the prison window and said, "Do you have spindles? Do you have . . . The act is valid."[2]

176. When R. Akiva was on trial before the tyrant Rufus, and R. Joshua the Grits Maker was standing in prayer with him, a cloud came down and covered them. At this, R. Joshua said, "It seems to me that the cloud came down and covered us only so that the prayer of my master would not be heard." With regard to this, Scripture says, "Thou hast covered Thyself with a cloud, so that no prayer can pass through" (Lam. 3:44).[3]

177. Our masters taught: Once the wicked Roman government issued a decree forbidding the Jews to study and practice the Torah. Pappus ben Judah came by and, upon finding R. Akiva publicly holding sessions in which he occupied himself with Torah, Pappus asked him: Akiva, are you not afraid of the government? R. Akiva replied: You, Pappus, who are said to be wise, are in fact a fool. I can explain what I am doing by means of a parable: A fox was walking on a river bank and, seeing fishes hastening here and there, asked them, "From whom are you fleeing?" They replied, "From the nets and traps set for us by men." So the fox said to them, "How would you like to come up on dry land, so that you and I may live together the way my ancestors lived with yours?" They replied, "You—the one they call the cleverest of animals—are in fact a fool. If we are fearful in the place where we can stay alive, how much more fearful should we be in a place where we are sure to die!" So it is with us. If we are fearful when we sit and study the Torah, of which it is written, "For that is thy life and the length of thy days" (Deut. 30:20), how much more fearful ought we to be should we cease the study of words of Torah!

It is related that soon afterward R. Akiva was arrested and thrown into prison, and Pappus ben Judah was also arrested and put in prison next to him. R. Akiva asked: Pappus, who brought you here? He replied: Happy are you, R. Akiva, that you have been seized for occupying yourself with the Torah! Alas for Pappus, who has been seized for occupying himself with vain things!

When R. Akiva was taken out to be executed, it was the hour for the recital of the Shema, and the executioners were combing his flesh with iron combs, while he was lovingly making ready to accept upon himself the yoke of the kingship of Heaven. His disciples asked: Our teacher, even to such a degree? He replied: All my days I have been troubled by this verse "With all thy soul" (Deut. 6:5), which I have interpreted as meaning "Even if He takes your soul." But I said: When shall I have an occasion to fulfill the precept? Now that I have the occasion, shall I not fulfill it? He prolonged the Shema's concluding word, ehad ("one"), until he expired as he finished pronouncing it. A divine voice went forth and proclaimed: Happy are you, Akiva, that your soul has departed with the word ehad! The ministering angels spoke out bluntly to the Holy One: Such Torah, and such its reward? He should have been "of those that die by Thy hand, O Lord" (Ps. 17:14). God replied: "Their portion is in life" (ibid.). Just then, another divine voice went forth and proclaimed: Happy are you, R. Akiva, destined as you are for life in the world-to-come.[4]

178. While R. Akiva was confined in prison, the eve of Yom Kippur came, and his disciple and servant R. Joshua the Grits Maker went home.

Then the prophet Elijah, ever remembered for good, appeared and, standing at the doorway of R. Joshua's house, said: Peace upon you, my master. Joshua: Peace upon you, my master and teacher. Elijah: Do you need anything? R. Joshua: Who are you? Elijah: I am a priest and I came to tell you that R. Akiva has died in prison. At once they both went to the prison and found the door of the prison open, the chief officer of the prison asleep, and all the prisoners asleep as well. They laid out R. Akiva's corpse on a bier and were about to leave when Elijah, ever remembered for good, bestirred himself and hoisted the bier on his shoulders. Seeing this, R. Joshua said: My master, did you not just tell me that you are a priest, and is not a priest forbidden to defile himself by contact with the dead? Elijah: Enough, R. Joshua, my son. God forbid that disciples of the wise or even their disciples should convey uncleanness.

So all that night the two carried R. Akiva's bier, until they reached Antipatris of Caesarea. When they arrived there, they went up three steps, then went down three steps, and a cave opened up before them. In it they saw a seat, a footstool, a table, and a lamp. They laid down R. Akiva's bier and left. The moment they left, the cave closed, and the light in the lamp was lit. When Elijah saw this, he burst out in blessing: Blessed are you, O righteous! Blessed are you who labor in Torah! Blessed are you who fear God! In the time-to-come, a place in the Garden of Eden is reserved, saved, and lovingly kept for you. Blessed are you, R. Akiva, that at the time of your death a transient lodging was made available for you.[5]

179. When R. Akiva died, the glory of Torah ceased, the arms of Torah lost their strength, and the fountains of wisdom were stopped up.[6]

The Ten Martyrs

180. When the wicked Roman government decreed that the sages of Israel be put to death, his companions said to R. Ishmael the High Priest, "Go up to heaven and inquire whether the decree has been inspired by the Holy One." R. Ishmael stood up, purified himself, wrapped

---

1. The ceremony of removing the shoe of the brother of a husband who died childless. Deut. 25:5–9.
2. P. Yev 12:5, 12d.
3. Lam. R. 3:44, §9.
4. B. Ber 61b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
5. Midrash Prov. 9 (ed. Buber, pp. 61–62); Yalkut, Prov., §944.
6. B. Sot 49a–b.

himself in tallit and tefillin, and pronounced the Explicit Name. A wind lifted him at once and brought him up to heaven. When the angel Gabriel encountered him, he asked him, "Are you Ishmael whose Maker boasts every day that He has a servant on earth who resembles His own visage?" R. Ishmael: "I am he." Gabriel: "Why did you come up here?" Ishmael: "I came up to ascertain if the decree had been sealed by the Holy One." Gabriel: "Ishmael, my son, as you live, thus have I heard from behind the curtain [in heaven]: ten sages of Israel will be turned over to be slain at the hand of the wicked government. R. Ishmael: "Why?" Gabriel: "Because of the sale of Joseph. Every day the measure of justice has been speaking in accusation before the throne of glory, saying, 'Did You write in vain a single letter in the Torah?' You said, 'He that stealeth a man, and selleth him . . . shall surely be put to death' [Exod. 21:16]. Yet the ten tribe fathers sold Joseph, and until now You did not requite them or their progeny. Therefore a decree was issued against ten sages of Israel." R. Ishmael: "Has the Holy One been unable to find anyone but us to requite until now?" Gabriel: "As you live, Ishmael, my son, since the day the tribe fathers sold Joseph, the Holy One has not found in any generation men as righteous and pious as the tribe fathers, save only you. Hence He will requite through you."

When the wicked angel Samael saw that the Holy One was about to seal the decree, he rejoiced greatly as he boasted, saying, "I have prevailed over Prince Michael!" At that, the wrath of the Holy One was kindled at Samael, and, summoning the angel Metatron, He said to him, "Write and seal—brimstone and fire upon wicked Rome, upon humans and cattle, upon silver, upon gold, upon everything that is theirs."

When R. Ishmael heard this, his indignation immediately abated. As he walked back and forth in heaven, he saw an altar near the throne of glory. So he asked Gabriel, "What is this?" Gabriel: "An altar." R. Ishmael: "What do you offer on it every day?" Gabriel: "We offer on it the souls of the righteous." R. Ishmael: "Who offers them?" Gabriel: "The great prince Michael."

At once R. Ishmael went down to the earth and informed his colleagues that the decree had been sealed. Those seated on the right complained that a harsh decree had been issued against them; and those seated on the left rejoiced that the Holy One held them to be equal to the tribe fathers.

R. Simeon ben Gamaliel and R. Ishmael the High Priest were seized to be executed. R. Simeon burst into tears. R. Ishmael said to him, "Avrekh,[1] you are but two steps away from being put in the bosom of the righteous, yet you weep!" R. Simeon: "My heart fails me, because I do not know why I am to be killed." R. Ishmael: "In your lifetime, did a man ever come to you for judgment or with a question, and you kept him waiting while you drank your cup or tied your sandal or donned your cloak, even though the Torah says, 'If thou delayest at all' [Exod. 22:22][2]—whether the delay be long or short?" At that, R. Ishmael said, "You have comforted me, my master."

Both pleaded with the executioner. R. Ishmael said, "I am a high priest son of a high priest, of the seed of Aaron, the High Priest. Slay me first, so that I shall not have to witness the death of my colleague." And R. Simeon said, "I am a prince son of a prince, of the seed of David, king of Israel. Slay me first, so that I shall not have to witness the death of my colleague."

The executioner said, "Cast lots." The lot fell on R. Simeon ben Gamaliel. At once the executioner seized the sword and cut off his head. Then R. Ishmael took R. Simeon's severed head and clasped it to his bosom as he wept and cried out, "Holy mouth, faithful mouth! Holy mouth, faithful mouth, the mouth that uttered beautiful gems, precious stones, and pearls—who consented to have you put in the dust? Who allowed your tongue to be filled with dust and ashes? Woe unto the Torah! And woe to its 'reward'!"

As he was weeping, Caesar's daughter looked down from a window and saw the beauty of R. Ishmael, for he was one of the seven most handsome men in the world, his face resembling the face of an angel of the Lord of hosts. She was filled with compassion for him and sent word to her father: "Grant me but one petition." He replied, "My daughter, I will do whatever you say, except concerning R. Ishmael and his colleagues." The daughter: "I beg of you, let him live." The father: "I have already sworn." The daughter: "If so, I beg of you, command that his scalp be removed, so that I may look at it instead of a mirror." Caesar then issued an order to remove R. Ishmael's scalp.

When the executioner reached the place on the forehead where the tefillin are worn, R. Ishmael uttered a great and bitter cry, so that heaven and earth were shaken. When he cried out a second time, even the throne of glory quivered.

Then the ministering angels spoke bluntly to the Holy One, "A man so righteous that you showed him all the treasures of the worlds above and the mysteries of the worlds below—should he be put to death in such a horrible way? Such Torah, and such a reward?"[3]

The Holy One: "But what can I do for my son? It is a decree, and no one may nullify it." Then a divine voice came forth and said, "If I hear one more such cry, I will turn the world to void and desolation." When R. Ishmael heard this, he fell silent.

Caesar said to him, "Do you still trust your God?" R. Ishmael: "Yea, though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him" (Job 13:15). At that, the soul of R. Ishmael left him.

When word reached R. Akiva that R. Simeon and R. Ishmael were slain, he rose, rent his garments, girded himself with sackcloth, and said to his disciples, "Prepare yourselves for calamity. Had good been destined to come to us in our generation, then surely none but R. Simeon and R. Ishmael would have received it. But now, since it

---

1. Av, "father in wisdom," and rakh, "tender in years."

2. The punishment, stated in the next verse, is being put to the sword. See Avot 5:11. JV: "If thou afflict in any wise."

3. Cf. B. Men 29b. Professor Jakob J. Petuchowski of Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati suggested the interpretation and provided the parallel to the translator.

is revealed and known to Him who spoke and the world came into being that great calamity is destined to come to the world, therefore the two were removed from our midst in keeping with the verse 'The righteous perisheth. . . . The righteous is taken away because of the evil to come' " (Isa. 57:1).

After R. Simeon and R. Ishmael were slain, they brought out for execution R. Akiva ben Joseph, who was capable of expounding the meaning of the crowns on letters and thereby disclosing facets of Torah like those shown to Moses at Sinai.[1] As he was being taken out to be slain, a missive came to Caesar that the king of Arabia was threatening to expand into Caesar's territory. Feeling pressed to go forth at once, he ordered R. Akiva back to prison until his return from the war. As soon as he came back from the war, he ordered that R. Akiva be brought out and his flesh be combed with combs of iron. Each time a comb tore into his flesh, he would say, "The Rock, His work is perfect; for all His ways are justice; a God of faithfulness and without iniquity, true and upright is He" (Deut. 32:4). A divine voice came forth and said, "Blessed are you, R. Akiva—you yourself were true and upright, and your soul left you with the words 'true and upright.' "

When the news that R. Akiva had been put to death reached R. Hanina ben Teradion and R. Judah ben Bava, they rose up, rent their garments, girded themselves with sackcloth, and said, "Our brothers, hear us. R. Akiva was put to death only as a sign [of evil to come]."

After R. Akiva was slain, they brought out R. Hanina ben Teradion for execution.

It is said of him—of R. Hanina ben Teradion—that he was pleasing to the Holy One as well as to men. Never did a word condemning his fellow cross his lips. When the Caesar of Rome decreed that Torah was not to be taught, he openly arranged public assemblies and occupied himself in expounding Torah [before him].

When R. Yose ben Kisma took sick, and R. Hanina ben Teradion went to visit him, R. Yose said, "Hanina, my brother, do you not know that this [Roman] nation was given reign by Heaven? For though it has laid waste His house, burned His Temple Hall, slain His pious ones, and caused His favorites to perish, it endures nevertheless. Yet I hear of you that you continue to occupy yourself with Torah, openly arrange public assemblies, and carry a Torah scroll in your bosom." R. Hanina: "Heaven will show mercy." R. Yose: "I speak sense to you, and you reply, 'Heaven will show mercy'! I shall not be surprised if both you and your Torah scroll are burned in fire."

R. Hanina: "Master, what is my chance with regard to the world-to-come?" R. Yose: "Is there any particular act of yours that troubles you?" R. Hanina: "Money that I had for the feast of Purim I took to be money intended for charity."[2] R. Yose: "If so, I wish that your portion were my portion, and your lot my lot."

It is said that within a few days R. Yose ben Kisma died and all the notables of Rome joined in arranging an elaborate funeral for him. Upon their return, they saw R. Hanina ben Teradion sitting and occupying himself with Torah, openly arranging public assemblies, and holding a Torah scroll in his bosom. He was brought and asked, "Why do you occupy yourself with Torah?" He replied, "Even as the Lord my God commanded me" (Deut. 4:5). It was immediately decreed that he be burned, his wife slain by the sword, and his daughter placed in a brothel.

They brought him out, wrapped him in the Torah scroll, placed bundles of vine shoots around him, and set them on fire. Then they brought tufts of wool, soaked them in water, and placed them over his heart, so that he should not expire quickly. His daughter exclaimed, "Oh, Papa, that I should see you in such a state!" He replied, "If I alone were being burned, it would have been hard for me to bear; but now that I am burning together with a Torah scroll—He who will have regard for the humiliation of the Torah will also have regard for my humiliation." His disciples called out, "Rabbi, what do you see?" He answered, "Sheets of parchment being burned, but the letters [on them] soaring on high." The disciples: "Open your mouth, so that the fire will enter into you quickly."[3] R. Hanina: "Let Him who gave me my soul take it away—no one has the right to put an end to his own life." The executioner then said to him, "Master, if I raise the flame and take away the tufts of wool from over your heart, will you bring me into the life of the world-to-come?" "Yes." "Swear to me." R. Hanina swore to him. Hearing that, the executioner raised the flame and removed the tufts of wool from over his heart, and R. Hanina's soul departed quickly. The executioner then jumped up and threw himself into the fire. A divine voice exclaimed, "Both R. Hanina ben Teradion and his executioner have been assigned to life in the world-to-come."

When Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] heard it, he wept and said, "One may acquire eternal life in a single hour, another only after so many years!"

Our masters taught: When R. Hanina ben Teradion and R. Eleazar ben Perata were arrested, R. Eleazar ben Perata said to R. Hanina ben Teradion, "Happy are you, R. Hanina, that you have been arrested on only one charge! Woe is me, for I am arrested on five charges." R. Hanina replied, "Happy are you who have been arrested on five charges but will be saved! Woe is me, who, though arrested on only one charge, will not be saved. For you have occupied yourself with the study of Torah as well as with acts of benevolence, while I occupy myself only with the Torah."

When they brought up R. Eleazar ben Perata for his trial, he was asked, "Why have you been studying the Torah and why have you been stealing?" He answered, "If a man is a thief, he is not a scholar; if he is a scholar, he is not a thief.[4] And as I am not the one, neither am I the other." "Why then are you called 'master'?"[5] "I am a

---

1. See above in this chapter, §140.

2. R. Hanina was collector of alms and mistakenly distributed to the poor money meant to provide meals for them on the Festival of Purim, thus violating the rule that such monies must be spent only for the particular purpose for which they were collected, and not diverted to other purposes, even if equally charitable.

3. And put an end to your agony.

4. Literally, "If [one's tool is a] sword, [he will] not [wield] a book; if [one's tool is] a book, [he will] not [wield a] sword.

5. The third charge.

master of weavers." Then they brought him two coils of yarn and asked, "Which is for the warp and which for the weft?" A miracle was wrought for him, and a male bee came and sat on the weft, and a female bee came and sat on the warp. "This coil," said R. Eleazar, "is for the warp and that one for the weft." Then they asked him, "Why did you not attend Be Avidan?"[1] to which he replied, "I am old and fear lest I be trampled under your feet." "How many old people have been trampled till now?" he was asked. A miracle was again wrought and on that very day an old man was trampled. "And why did you let your slave go free?"[2] He replied, "No such thing ever happened." One of the Romans was about to give evidence against R. Eleazar, but just then Elijah, disguised as one of the dignitaries of the government, appeared and said to that man, "Let him be. As miracles were wrought for him in all the other matters, so will a miracle be wrought in this one, and you will be regarded merely as an evildoer." But the man ignored Elijah and was about to stand up to bear witness when a written communication from the dignitaries of Rome had to be sent to Caesar, and they sent it by that man. [On the road] Elijah came and hurled him a distance of four hundred parasangs. So that man went off [in haste][3] and did not return. Thus R. Eleazar ben Perata was saved.

After R. Joshua ben Teradion was slain, R. Judah ben Bava was put to death.

It is said of R. Judah ben Bava that, from the age of eighteen to the age of eighty, he savored no more sleep than a horse.

The wicked Roman government[4] issued a decree that he who ordained an elder should be put to death, he who was ordained should also be put to death, the town in which such ordination took place should be laid waste, and the area surrounding the town[5] in which the ordination took place should be uprooted. What did R. Judah ben Bava do? He went and sat down between two mountains, between two large towns, and between two Sabbath areas[6]—namely, between Usha and Shefaram[7]—and there he ordained five elders: R. Meir, R. Judah [bar Ilai], R. Simeon, R. Yose, and R. Eleazar ben Shammua. Seeing that the foes had become aware of their presence, he said to the newly ordained elders, "Flee, my children!" But they replied, "And you, O master, what about you?" "I," he said, "will lie still before them, as a stone that is not turned."

It is said that the Romans did not move from there until they drove three hundred iron spears into his body, making his corpse look like a sieve!

After R. Judah ben Bava was slain, they brought out R. Judah ben Dama for execution. The day was the eve of Shavuot.

R. Judah said to Caesar, "By your life, wait for me a while, that I may fulfill the command of Shavuot by saying the Kiddush praising the Holy One for giving us the Torah." Caesar: "Do you still put your trust in the Torah and the God who gave it?" R. Judah: "Yes." Caesar: "What reward is there for your Torah?" R. Judah: "David, peace be upon him, said of it, 'Oh, how abundant is Thy goodness, which Thou hast laid up for them that fear Thee' " (Ps. 31:20). Caesar: "No fools in the world are like you, who suppose that there is another world." R. Judah: "No fools in the world are like you, who deny the living God. Woe to you, and woe to the shameful thing you call god; you will see us in the light of life, while you go down to the nethermost Sheol."

At once Caesar's wrath was kindled, and he ordered that R. Judah be tied by the hair of his head to the tail of a horse and dragged through every street in Rome. He commanded that the corpse be dismembered afterward.

The prophet Elijah, ever remembered for good, came up and gathered the members of R. Judah's body, and buried them in a cave near the river that flows down through Rome. For thirty days the Romans heard the sound of lamentation and weeping in that cave. When they came and told Caesar about it, he said, "Even if the whole world turn to void and desolation, I will not rest until I have my will with these elders."

After R. Judah ben Dama was slain, they brought out R. Hutzpit the Interpreter for execution.

It is said of R. Hutzpit the Interpreter that he was one hundred and thirty years old when he was taken out to be slain—he was handsome in countenance, beautiful in appearance, resembling an angel of the Lord of hosts.

They came and told Caesar of his beauty and of his venerable years, saying, "Sire, by your life, have mercy on this old man." Caesar asked R. Hutzpit, "How old are you?" R. Hutzpit: "One hundred thirty less one day, and I beg of you that you wait until this my last day reaches its end." Caesar: "What does it matter whether you die today or tomorrow?" R. Hutzpit: "So that I may fulfill two more precepts." Caesar: "What precepts do you wish to perform?" R. Hutzpit: "Reciting the Shema of the evening and of the morning, whereby I assert over me the kingship of the unique, great, and awesome Name." Caesar: "O impudent ones! O arrogant ones! How long will you persist in trusting your God? He is now old and has no strength to save you from my hand. If He still had such strength, He would have taken vengeance for Himself, vengeance for His people, and vengeance for His house, as he did to Pharaoh, to Sisera, and to all the kings of Canaan."

When R. Hutzpit heard this, he broke down in unrestrained weeping and rent his garments at the blasphemy against the Lord and the reviling of Him. Then he said to Caesar, "Woe unto you, Caesar! What will you do on the last day, when the Lord will visit punishment on Rome and on your gods?"

Caesar: "How long am I to argue with this one?" He commanded that R. Hutzpit be put to death. They stoned him and then hanged him.

---

1. The fourth charge brought against him; see above in this chapter, §123.
2. In accordance with the biblical injunction to free all Jewish slaves after six years, or at the advent of the jubilee year. Manumitting slaves, the fifth offense with which he was charged, had been forbidden by the Roman government.
3. Without giving the intended evidence.
4. During the Hadrianic persecutions in 135 C.E..
5. Literally, tehum ("a Sabbath limit"), an area of 2,000 cubits (about 1,000 yards) around an inhabited place, within which it is permitted to walk on the Sabbath.
6. In an area adjacent (in the meaning of the decree) to neither of the two towns.
7. Towns in Galilee, near Tiberias.

After R. Hutzpit was slain, they brought out R. Hanina ben Hakinai for execution.

Of R. Hanina ben Hakinai it is said that throughout his days, from the age of twelve to ninety-five, he kept observing fasts. The day they took him out to be slain was the eve of Sabbath. His disciples asked, "Master, do you wish to eat something before you are put to death?" He replied, "I fasted until now. I know not what road I am about to take, and you tell me to eat and drink!"

He began the Kiddush for the day with "And were finished" and reached "He made holy," but they did not let him conclude it before they slew him. A divine voice came forth and said, "Blessed are you, R. Hanina ben Hakinai—you were holy, and your soul left you at the word 'holy.' "

After R. Hanina ben Hakinai was slain, they brought out R. Yeshevav the Scribe for execution.

As he was being brought out, his disciples came to him and said, "Our master, what is to become of Torah?" R. Yeshevav: "My children, Torah is destined to be forgotten in Israel. For this wicked [Roman] nation in its insolence is brazenly plotting to have us lose our precious pearls [the sages]. Oh, if only I could be the expiation for the people of this generation! But I foresee that not a street in Rome will be without one slain by the sword, for this wicked nation will persist in shedding innocent blood in Israel." The disciples: "Our master, what will become of us?" R. Yeshevav: "Strengthen one another. Love peace and justice. There may be hope."

Caesar asked R. Yeshevav, "Old man, how old are you?" R. Yeshevav: "Ninety years old this day. But even before I left my mother's womb, a decree came forth from the Holy One to turn me and my colleagues over to your power. But the Holy One will demand our blood from you." Caesar: "Hasten and put to death this one also, and let me see the power and strength of his God." Caesar gave the command, and they burned him.

And after R. Yeshevav was slain, they brought out R. Eleazar ben Shammua for execution.

Of R. Eleazar ben Shammua it is said that he was one hundred and five years old, and that, from his childhood to the end of his days, no man heard a frivolous word issue from his mouth; he did not allow himself to become annoyed with his colleagues, either by what they said or by what they did; he was humble and meek, and for eighty years observed more fasts than the number prescribed. The day he was put to death was Yom Kippur. His disciples came to him and asked, "Our master, what do you see?" R. Eleazar: "I see R. Judah ben Bava's bier being carried side by side with the bier of R. Akiva ben Joseph, and they are arguing with each other over a question in Halakhah." The disciples: "And who endeavors to bring harmony between them?" R. Eleazar: "R. Ishmael the High Priest." They: "Who prevails?" R. Eleazar: "R. Akiva, because he labored with all his might in Torah." R. Eleazar went on, "My children, I see more—the soul of each and every righteous man purifies itself in the waters of Siloam to enter in purity this day into the academy on high and listen to R. Akiva's exposition of the passage for the day. And each and every angel brings a golden chair for each and every righteous man to sit upon in purity."

Caesar commanded that he be put to death. A divine voice came forth and said, "Blessed are you, R. Eleazar ben Shammua. You were pure, and your soul left you with the word 'purity.' "

R. Yohanan said: Woe unto the nations of the world, for there is no mending for them. Scripture says, "For brass [of the nations] I will bring gold, and for iron I will bring silver, and for wood, brass," etc. (Isa. 60:17). But for R. Akiva and his colleagues, what more precious commodity could be brought? Concerning those nations, Scripture asserts, "Though I cleanse them [of other transgressions], from the blood they shed I shall not cleanse them" (Joel 4:21).[1]

R. Meir, Elisha ben Avuyah (Aher), Beruriah (fl. ca. 130–60 C.E.)

181. R. Akiva said: Once, while sailing on shipboard, I saw another ship about to capsize in the sea and was distressed about a certain disciple of the wise who was on it. (Who was he? R. Meir.) But when I went up to the province of Cappadocia, he came to me, sat down, and held forth before me on Halakhah. When I asked him, "My son, who rescued you from the sea?" he replied, "One wave tossed me over to the wave that followed, and that one to the next wave, until I was cast up on dry land."[2]

182. R. Meir was an accomplished—indeed, superb—scribe. By working hard, he earned three sela a week. One sela he spent on food and drink, another on clothing, and with the third he used to provide sustenance to disciples of the wise. His disciples said to him: Our master, what is to become of your children? He replied: If they are righteous, they will fare as David has declared: "I have not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread" (Ps. 37:25). But if not, why should I leave what is mine to enemies of Him who is everywhere?[3]

183. R. Meir said: When I came to study Torah with R. Ishmael, he asked me, "My son, what trade do you ply?" I replied, "I am a scribe." He said, "Be careful in your work, for your work is the work of Heaven. Should you omit a single letter[4] or add an extra letter,[5] you may find yourself destroying the entire world, all of it."[6]

184. It is told of R. Meir that he went to Asya to intercalcate the [thirteenth] month in the year.[7] Since there was no Scroll [of Esther] there, he wrote it out from memory[8] and read it aloud.[9]

---

1. Midrash Eleh Ezkerah, BhM 2:64–72; B. Sanh 14a; B. AZ 8b and 17b–18a; Mek, Mishpatim, Nezikin, 18 (La 3:141–42); ARN 38; Sem 8; B. RH 23a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. B. Yev 121a.
3. Eccles R. 2:18, §1.
4. Should one leave out the alef in "[the Lord God is] emet ['truth']" the result would be "is met" ("dead").
5. Should one mistakenly add a vav to [va-yedabber] Adonai—"the Lord [spoke]"—the result would be "the lords [spoke]."
6. B. Er 13a; B. Sot 20a.
7. By adding a second Adar.
8. He did not copy it from another scroll.
9. B. Meg 18b.

185. In [the margin of] R. Meir's Torah scroll, instead of "And behold, it was very (meod) good" (Gen. 1:31), they found the deliberate change to "And behold, death (mot) was very good." They found there: "The Lord God made for Adam and his wife garments of light (or)"[1] (Gen. 3:21), as well as "And the son[2] of Dan: Hushim" (Gen. 46:23).[3]

186. In the margin of R. Meir's codex they found, instead of "The burden of Dumah" (Isa. 21:11), "The burden of Rome."[4]

187. R. Meir was both sage and scribe.[5]

188. When one observed R. Meir in the house of study, he appeared to be uprooting mountains and grinding them one against the other.[6]

189. R. Aha bar Hanina said: It is known and revealed to Him who spoke and the world came into being that in R. Meir's generation there was none like him. Why, then, was the law not fixed in keeping with his opinion? Because his colleagues were unable to follow his reasoning to its ultimate end. For he would declare that which was unclean clean and provide credible evidence; and he would contrariwise declare that which was clean unclean and provide equally credible evidence.

It is taught: His real name was not R. Meir but R. Nehorai. Then why was he called R. Meir? Because he illumined (meir) the eyes of sages in Halakhah.[7]

190. R. Yose ben R. Halafta used to praise R. Meir to the people of Sepphoris as a great man, a holy man, and an unassuming man.

One time, on a Sabbath, R. Meir noticed some mourners and greeted them.[8] Witnessing that, R. Yose's disciples asked him: Our master, is R. Meir the one whose praise you speak? He replied: What did R. Meir do [that makes you ask about him]? They told him: He noticed some mourners on the Sabbath and greeted them. R. Yose: Would you like to know the extent of his mastery [of Torah]?[9] He meant to teach us that there may be no mourning on the Sabbath. For "The blessing of the Lord, it maketh rich" (Prov. 10:22)[10] refers to the special blessing on the Sabbath, and the following "He is to add no sorrow with it" (ibid.) refers to mourning [which is to be set aside for the duration of it].[11]

191. R. Meir was seated in the house of study in Tiberias on the Sabbath, expounding, while his teacher Elisha was passing through the marketplace astride his horse. People came by and told R. Meir: Look, your teacher Elisha is here riding through the marketplace. R. Meir interrupted his expounding and went out to him. Elisha asked: What verse have you been expounding today? R. Meir: "So the Lord blessed the latter end of Job more than his beginning" (Job 42:12). Elisha: What did you say about it? R. Meir: "The Lord gave Job twice as much as he had before" (Job. 42:10)—He doubled his possessions. Elisha: Alas for those who are gone and are no more—your teacher Akiva would not have spoken thus. He would have construed these words "The Lord blessed the latter end of Job because of the beginning"—because of the observance of precepts and good deeds that had been Job's at the beginning.

Elisha: What other verse did you expound? R. Meir: "Better is the end of a thing than the beginning thereof" (Eccles. 7:8). Elisha: What did you say about it? R. Meir: You have a man who acquired merchandise in his youth and sustained a loss, but in his old age makes a profit from it. Or, you have a man who learned Torah in his youth and forgot it, but it comes back to him in his old age. Elisha: Alas for those who are gone and are no more—your teacher Akiva would not have spoken thus. He would have construed it "Good is the end of a thing from the beginning"—when it is good from its beginning. So it happened with me. Avuyah, my father, was one of the notables of Jerusalem. When he was arranging for my circumcision, he invited all the notables of Jerusalem, among them, R. Eliezer and R. Joshua. After they had eaten and drunk, they began to clap their hands and dance. Some of the notables sang songs, and others composed alphabetical acrostics. R. Eliezer said to R. Joshua, "These are occupied with what interests them; shall we not occupy ourselves with what interests us?" They began with subjects connected with the Five Books of Moses, then with the Prophets, and after that with the Writings. Fire came down from heaven and surrounded them, at which Avuyah said to them, "My masters, have you come to set my house afire over me?" They replied, "God forbid! We were merely sitting and stringing words of Torah, then from the Torah we went on to the Prophets, and from the Prophets to the Writings. The words were as joyful as when they were given at Sinai. For, when originally given at Sinai, they were given in the midst of fire, as is said, 'The mountain burned with fire unto the heart of heaven' " (Deut. 4:11). Elated, my father Avuyah remarked, "My masters, since the power of Torah is so great, if this child stays alive for me, I will dedicate him to the Torah." But because the intent of my father's resolve was not for the sake of Heaven, my study of the Torah did not endure with me.

Elisha: What other verse did you expound? R. Meir: "God hath made the one corresponding to the other" (Eccles. 7:14). Elisha: What did you say about it? R. Meir: Whatever the Holy One created in His world, He created its analogue: He created mountains, then created hills; He created seas, then created rivers. Elisha: Your teacher Akiva would not have spoken thus. He would have said: God created the righteous, then created the wicked. He

---

1. Instead of or ("skin").
2. Instead of "sons."
3. Gen. R. 9:5, 20:12, and 94:9.
4. The dalet in "Dumah" is easily mistaken for the resh in "Rome." P. Ta 1:1, 64a.
5. B Git 67a.
6. So great was his acumen. B. Sanh 24a.
7. B. Er 13b.
8. Exchange of greetings with mourners is prohibited.
9. No one before R. Meir had the acumen to apply Prov. 10:22 to mourners' conduct on the Sabbath.
10. Cf. also Ps. 37:4: "So shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and He shall give thee the petitions of thy heart," which could also be understood to mean: "[On the Sabbath] when you take delight in the Lord, He allows exchange of greetings [even when in mourning]."
11. P. MK 3:5, 82d.

created the Garden of Eden, then created Gehenna. Thus each man has two portions assigned to him—a portion in the Garden of Eden and a portion in Gehenna. When a man is declared righteous, he takes his own portion and the portion of another who [by his action] forfeited his in the Garden of Eden. When a man is declared wicked, he takes his own portion and the unclaimed portion of a righteous man in Gehenna.

Elisha: What other verse did you expound? R. Meir: "Gold and glass cannot equal it; neither shall the exchange thereof be vessels of fine gold" (Job 28:17). Elisha: What did you say about it? R. Meir: These are the words of Torah—they are as difficult to acquire as vessels of gold or of fine gold and are as readily destroyed as vessels of glass. Elisha: By God, even as readily as earthenware vessels. But your teacher Akiva would not have spoken thus. He would have said: As vessels of gold and even vessels of glass can be repaired if broken, so can a disciple of the wise recover his learning if it has disintegrated.

R. Meir: So you, too, must come back. Elisha: I cannot. R. Meir: Why not? Elisha: I was riding a horse behind the house of study on a Day of Atonement that fell on the Sabbath, and I heard a divine voice reverberating: "Return, O backsliding children" (Jer. 3:14), "return unto Me, and I will return unto you" (Mal. 3:7), except for Aher, who knew My strength and yet rebelled against Me.

When R. Meir and Elisha reached the Sabbath limit,[1] Aher (Elisha) said to him: Meir, turn back, for I have just measured by the paces of my horse that the Sabbath limit extends only thus far. He replied: You, too, go back! Aher answered: Have I not just told you that I have already heard from behind the curtain [in heaven], "Return ye backsliding children—except Aher"? Nevertheless, R. Meir prevailed upon him and took him into a schoolhouse, where Aher said to a child: Recite for me your verse. The child answered, "There is no peace, saith the Lord, unto the wicked" (Isa. 48:22). R. Meir then took him to another schoolhouse, where Aher said to a child: Recite for me your verse. The child answered, "For though thou wash thee with niter, and take thee much soap, yet thine iniquity is marked before Me, saith the Lord God" (Jer. 2:22). R. Meir took him to yet another schoolhouse, where again Aher said to a child: Recite for me your verse. The child answered, "And thou that art spoiled, what doest thou, that thou clothest thyself with scarlet, that thou deckest thee with ornaments of gold, that thou enlargest thine eyes with paint? In vain dost thou make thyself fair. . . . They seek thy life," etc. (Jer. 4:30). And thus R. Meir took Aher to thirteen schools, one after the other, where in like vein all the children quoted verses boding evil. When Aher said to the last child: Recite for me your verse, he answered, "But unto the wicked God saith: 'What hast thou to do to declare My statutes?' " etc. (Ps. 50:16). That child had a speech defect, so it sounded as though he answered, "But to Elisha[2] God saith."

At that, Elisha said: Had I a knife in my hand, I would have cut him to pieces.

It is said of him, of Aher, that when he entered a meeting place for scholars and saw youngsters with scrolls in front of them, he would say: Why do these sit here and occupy themselves thus? This one's craft should be that of a builder. This one's, that of a carpenter. That one's, that of a painter. And that other one's, that of a tailor. When the youngsters heard such talk, they left their scrolls and went away.

It is also said of him, of Aher, that Greek song did not cease from his mouth and that whenever he rose to leave the house of study, many heretical books would fall out of his lap.

What did Aher see that made him go wrong? It is said that once, while sitting and studying in the valley of Gennesar, he saw a man climb to the top of a palm tree on the Sabbath, take the mother bird with the young, and descend in safety. At the end of the Sabbath, he saw another man climb to the top of the same palm tree and take the young, but let the mother go free; as he descended, a snake bit him and he died. Elisha exclaimed: It is written, "Let the mother go and take only the young, that you may fare well and have a long life" (Deut. 22:7). Where is the well-being of this man, and where is the prolonging of his life? (He was unaware how R. Akiva had explained it, namely, "that you may fare well," in the world [-to-come], which is wholly good; "and have a long life" in the world whose length is without end.)

Some say that [Elisha became a heretic] when he saw a pig dragging along in its mouth R. Hutzpit the Interpreter's tongue. He said then: The tongue from which pearls of purest ray used to come forth is to lick the dust? Immediately, he resolved to commit sin. He went out and, espying a harlot, beckoned to her. She asked: Are you not Elisha ben Avuyah? It was the Sabbath, and he pulled a radish out of a furrow and gave it to her. So she said: He is clearly aher, "another."

(There are some who say: [Elisha became a heretic because] when his mother was pregnant with him, she passed by temples for idolatry and smelled the aroma [of their offerings, whose meat she craved]. They gave her some, and she ate it. The meat permeated her innards like the venom of a snake [and affected Elisha].)

Some time later Elisha ben Avuyah fell ill, and R. Meir was told, "Your master is ill." He went to visit him and said: Repent! Elisha asked: Having gone so far, will I be accepted? R. Meir replied: Is it not written, "Thou allowest man to turn, up to his being crushed" (Ps. 90:3), up to the time that life is being crushed out of him? In that instant Elisha ben Avuyah began to weep, and then he died. R. Meir rejoiced, saying: My master, it would appear, departed in a state of repentance. However, after he was buried, fire came forth from heaven to burn his grave. They went and told R. Meir: The grave of your master is on fire! R. Meir went out, spread his cloak over the grave, and said to him, "Tarry this night" (Ruth 3:13)—in this world which is wholly night—"and it shall be in the morning" (ibid.)—the world-to-come, all of which is morning—"if He who is good will redeem thee" (ibid.)—that is, the Holy One, who is good, of whom it is said, "The Lord is good to all" (Ps. 145:9). But if He is not willing to redeem thee, then, as the Lord liveth, I [Meir] will redeem thee. "Lie down until morning" (Ruth 3:13). The fire was then extinguished.

---

[1] Two thousand cubits in all directions from the place where a man makes his abode for the Sabbath.

[2] The child pronounced ve-la-rasha ("and unto the wicked") like ve-le-Elisha ("and unto Elisha"). The child could not distinguish between resh and lamed, so that his r sounded like an l.

R. Meir's disciples asked him: In the world-to-come, should you be asked, "Whom do you wish to be placed next to—your father or your teacher?" what will you say? He replied: My dear father, and then my teacher. They asked: And will they listen to you? He answered them: Have we not learned in a Mishnah that [in the event of fire on the Sabbath], the case in which a scroll is kept should be saved, together with the scroll?"[1] So, too, because of the merit of his Torah, Elisha should be saved [from the fire of Gehenna].

According to some, when Aher died, it was said: Let him not be judged, nor let him enter the world-to-come. Let him not be judged, because he engaged in the study of the Torah; nor let him enter the world-to-come, because he sinned. R. Meir said: It is better that he should be judged and afterward enter the world-to-come. When I die I shall cause smoke to rise from his grave.[2] When R. Meir died, smoke rose up from Aher's grave.

R. Yohanan said: What a mighty deed [of R. Meir's] to burn his master with fire! Only one such sinner was in our midst, and we could not save him! If Elisha had been in my care, who would have dared snatch him from me? So he said: When I die, I shall extinguish the smoke from Elisha's grave.[3] When R. Yohanan died, the smoke ceased from Aher's grave. Then the public mourner began [his oration] concerning R. Yohanan thus: Even Gehenna's gatekeeper could not stand up to you, O master![4]

192. Aher's daughter once came before Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] and said to him, "O master, provide for me!" He asked her, "Whose daughter are you?" She replied, "I am Aher's daughter." Said he, "Are any of his [male] children still left in the world? Is it not written, 'He shall have neither son nor son's son among his people, nor any remaining in his dwellings!' (Job 18:19)?" She answered, "My master, remember his Torah; do not remember his deeds." A fire came down and lapped R. Judah's bench. Then R. Judah burst into tears and cried, "If such is done in behalf of those who have dishonored Torah, how much more is certain to be done in behalf of those who have honored her!"[5]

193. Rabbah bar R. Shila once met the prophet Elijah and asked him, "What is the Holy One doing?" Elijah answered, "He is reciting traditions concerning law in the name of all the sages, but He is not reciting them in the name of R. Meir." Rabbah: "Why not?" "Because he learned Torah from the mouth of Aher." Rabbah: "What does that matter? R. Meir found a pomegranate, ate the pulp within it, and threw away the rind!" Elijah: "Henceforth God will begin to say, 'My son Meir says.' "[6]

194. R. Yohanan said: When R. Meir used to deliver one of his public lectures, during one third of it he would expound Halakhah; during another third, Aggadah; and during the final third, parables.

R. Yohanan added: R. Meir had three hundred parables of foxes, of which we have only one left:

"The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge" (Ezek. 18:2). It happened that the fox said to the wolf, "Go into a Jewish courtyard on a Sabbath eve, and help them prepare whatever is needed for the meal, and you will eat with them on the Sabbath." But when the wolf was about to enter, the courtyard's residents banded together against him with clubs.

Then the wolf was set on killing the fox, but the fox said, "They beat you only because of your father, who on one occasion helped them prepare a meal and then devoured every luscious morsel." The wolf: "Should I be beaten up because of my father?" The fox: "Yes—'fathers eat sour grapes, and their children's teeth are blunted.' But come with me, and I will show you a place where you can eat your fill." The fox led the wolf to a well. Across the well's mouth was a beam, with a rope wound over it. At each end of the rope was tied an empty bucket. The fox climbed into the upper bucket, and his weight caused it to plunge downward, while the lower bucket flew upward. The wolf called to him, "Why did you go down there?" The fox: "Because here there is meat and cheese enough to eat one's fill," and he pointed to the reflection of the moon in the water. It looked like a round cheese. The wolf: "How am I to go down?" The fox: "Climb into the upper bucket." The wolf did so, and his weight caused it to plunge down, while the bucket with the fox flew up. The wolf: "How am I to get up again?" The fox: " 'The righteous is delivered out of his trouble, and the wicked cometh in his stead' [Prov. 11:8]. Is it not written, 'Just balances, just weights' (Lev. 19:36)?"[7]

195. Some say the parable was told like this: It once happened that a fox, about to be devoured by a lion, pleaded, "What [meat] is there on me to fill you? Come along, and I will show you a fat man whom you can raven and be filled with." At that spot there was a covered pit, beyond which a man sat praying. When the lion saw him, he said to the fox, "I fear this man's prayer. [I hope] you are not entrapping me." The fox: "You need not fear, nor need your posterity fear. It is the posterity of your posterity upon whom punishment will fall. Now satisfy your hunger. There is lots of time before your posterity's posterity. The lion was persuaded and leaped over the pit, but [miscalculated and] fell into it. The fox came over, stood at the edge of the pit, and stared gleefully at the lion. The lion: "Did you not say, 'No punishment will befall you [nor your posterity], but the posterity of your posterity will be seized for it'?" The fox: "But there is a charge of iniquity against

---

1. Shab 16:1.
2. As a sign that Elisha was judged and punished for his sins.
3. As a sign that he was forgiven.
4. B. Hag 15a; P. Hag 2:1, 77a–b; Eccles. R. 7:8, §1; Ruth R. 6:4; B. Kid 39b.
5. B. Hag 15b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
6. Ibid.
7. B. Sanh 38b–39a and En Yaakov, ad loc; Rashi, ad loc.

the sire of your sire. On account of that charge, you are now seized." The lion: "The fathers eat sour grapes, but it is the children's teeth that are blunted!" The fox: "Why did you not think of this before?"[1]

196. R. Meir had a favorite saying: Resolve with all your heart and all your soul to know My ways, and try hard to master those parts of Torah [that are within your capacity].[2] Keep My Torah in your heart, and the awe of Me will be before your eyes. Keep your mouth from all sin, and purify and sanctify yourself by avoiding all trespass and iniquity. Then will I be with you everywhere.[3]

197. Once the Roman government sent word to our masters: Send us one of your torches. Our masters reasoned: Rome has so many torches, so many precious stones and pearls of purest ray, and yet they want a torch from us. Apparently they want nothing other than one who will illuminate (meir) facets of meaning in Halakhah. So they sent R. Meir. The Romans asked him questions, and he answered them. They asked him more questions, and he answered them as well.[4]

198. R. Zechariah the son-in-law of R. Levi would tell this story: R. Meir used to give regular discourses in the synagogue of Hamath every Sabbath eve. A certain woman of that town made it a habit to listen to his weekly discourses. On one occasion when he extended it to a late hour, she waited [and did not leave] until he finished. But when she came to her home, she found that the lamp was out. Her husband asked her, "Where have you been until now?" She told him, "I have been listening to a lecturer's discourse." Now, the husband was a scoffer. So he said to her, "I swear by such-and-such that you are not to enter my house again until you spit in the lecturer's face." She left the house and stayed away one week, a second, and a third. Finally the neighbors asked her, "Are you still angry with each other? Let us go with you to the lecturer." When R. Meir saw them, he perceived the reason [for their coming] by means of the holy spirit. And so, pretending to be suffering from pain in the eyes, he asked, "Is there among you a woman skilled in whispering a charm for eye pain?" Her neighbors said to her, "Go, whisper in his ear and spit lightly in his eyes, and you will be able to live with your husband again." So she came forward. However, when she sat down before R. Meir, she was so overawed by his presence that she confessed, "My master, I do not know how to whisper a charm for eye pain." But he said to her, "Nevertheless, spit in my face seven times, and I will be healed." She did so, whereupon he said, "Go and tell your husband, 'You bade me do it only once. I spat seven times!' "[5]

His disciples said to him, "Master! Is the Torah to be treated with such contempt? If you had only mentioned it to us, would we not have brought that man and flogged him at the post until he consented to be reconciled with his wife?" R. Meir replied, "The dignity of Meir ought not to be greater than that of his Maker. If Scripture enjoins that God's holy Name, which is inscribed in sanctity, may be obliterated in water in order to bring about peace between a man and his wife, all the more so may Meir's dignity be disregarded.[6]

199. There were two men who were incited by Satan, so that every Sabbath eve, as the sun was about to set, they fell to quarreling. R. Meir happened to visit them and for three Sabbaths stopped them from their quarreling, until peace was made between them. Then R. Meir heard Satan cry out, "Woe! R. Meir has put me out of my home."[7]

200. There was a certain guardian in the quarter where R. Meir lived, who was selling the land of the orphans in his charge and buying slaves with the proceeds. R. Meir forbade the guardian to do so.[8] A voice [Satan's] said to him in a dream, "I mean to destroy, and will you presume to build?" Nevertheless, R. Meir gave no heed, saying, "Dreams are of no significance one way or the other.[9]

201. There was once a certain innkeeper in the south who used to arise in the night, put on his clothes, and say to his guests, "Wake up and go forth [to your destination]—I will provide you with an escort." When they went out, robbers lying in wait for them would rob them, then come to the inn and share the spoils with the innkeeper. On one occasion, R. Meir happened to lodge there overnight. The innkeeper arose, put on his clothes, and said to R. Meir, "Wake up and go forth—I will provide you with an escort." R. Meir replied, "I have a brother; I must remain here and wait for him." The innkeeper: "Where is he?" "In the synagogue." "Tell me his name, and I will go and call him." R. Meir: "Ki tov."

The innkeeper went off and all that night kept calling at the gate of the synagogue, "Ki tov, Ki tov," but no one answered to the name. In the morning, R. Meir arose and untied his ass. As he was about to take off, the innkeeper said, "Where is the brother of whom you spoke?" R. Meir: "Behold, he has just come—'And God saw the [morning] light (ki tov)—that it was good' " (Gen. 1:4).[10]

202. [On the eve of a Sabbath] R. Meir, R. Judah, and R. Yose were journeying on a road. (R. Meir used to pay attention to people's names, whereas R. Judah and R. Yose did not.) When they got to a certain inn, they asked the innkeeper, "What is your name?" He replied, "Ki dor." R. Meir said to his companions, "Very likely a wicked man, for it is written, 'They are a treacherous breed (ki dor)' " (Deut. 32:20). Nevertheless, R. Judah and R. Yose

---

1. Teshuvot ha-Geonim, ed. Abraham Elijah Harkavy (Berlin, 1887; Repr. 1965), §362.
2. So Etz Yosef on En Yaakov, ad loc. Literally, "doors of my Torah."
3. B. Ber 17a.
4. Eccles. R. 19, §1.
5. God's name in the passage written on a scroll is washed out by the "water of bitterness," which a woman suspected of infidelity is made to drink. Num. 5:23–24.
6. P. Sot 1:4, 16d; Num. R. 9:20; Deut. R. 5:15; Lev. R. 9:9.
7. B. Git 52a.
8. Because slaves are perishable property, whereas land is not.
9. B. Git 52a.
10. Gen. R. 92:6.

deposited their purses with the innkeeper [over the Sabbath], while R. Meir did not. Instead, R. Meir went off and placed his purse in a jug, which he buried at the head of the grave of the innkeeper's father. That night the innkeeper's father came to his son in a dream, saying, "Come and take the purse lying at my head." In the morning the innkeeper told the sages, "Such-and-such was shown me in a dream." They said to him, "There is no substance in dreams on Sabbath eves."[1] Nevertheless, R. Meir went [to the grave], guarded the purse all day, and brought it back in the evening. The next morning, when R. Judah and R. Yose said to the innkeeper, "Give us our purses," he replied, "[What purses?] There never were any!" R. Meir then said to them, "Why didn't you pay attention to people's names?" They replied, "Why did you not tell us right out [that this innkeeper was a thief]?" R. Meir: "[Because of his name] I merely suggested that one should be suspicious, but could I have said anything definite? [In order to find a way to recover their purses], R. Judah and R. Yose took the innkeeper into a shop. As they plied him with wine, they noticed lentils on his mustache.[2] They quickly went to his wife and, as a countersign, told her that she and her husband had eaten lentils the evening before. Thus they obtained their purses from her. From then on, they too paid close attention to names.[3]

203. R. Meir used to ridicule [sexual] transgressors.[4] One day Satan appeared to him in the guise of a woman standing on the opposite bank of a river [beckoning him toward her]. As there was no bridge across the river, R. Meir grabbed a rope [which stretched from bank to bank] and proceeded to cross. When he reached halfway along the rope, Satan [resuming his usual form] let him go,[5] saying: Had they not proclaimed in heaven, "Beware of R. Meir and his Torah," I would have valued your life at no more than two meah.[6]

204. One may not beat together wine and oil for an invalid on the Sabbath. However, R. Simeon ben Eleazar said in R. Meir's name: Without hesitation, one may beat together wine and oil.

R. Simeon ben Eleazar later related: Once [on a Sabbath] R. Meir was suffering pain in his stomach, and we wished to beat some wine and oil for him, but he would not permit us. We pleaded with him, "Are your words to be disregarded during your own lifetime?" He replied, "Though, to be sure, I rule that it is permitted, yet my colleagues rule that it is not. In all my days I never presumed to go counter to the opinion of my colleagues."[7]

205. It happened that while R. Meir was expounding in the house of study on a Sabbath afternoon, his two sons died. What did their mother do? She put them both on a couch and spread a sheet over them.

At the end of the Sabbath, R. Meir returned home from the house of study and asked, "Where are my two sons?" She replied, "They went to the house of study." R. Meir: "I looked for them there but did not see them."

Then she gave him the cup for Havdalah,[8] and he pronounced the blessing. Again he asked, "Where are my two sons?" She replied, "They went to such-and-such a place and will be back soon." Then she brought food for him. After he had eaten, she said, "My teacher, I have a question." R. Meir: "Ask your question." She: "My teacher, a while ago a man came and deposited something in my keeping. Now he has come back to claim what he left. Shall I return it to him or not?" R. Meir: "My daughter, is not one who holds a deposit required to return it to its owner?" She: "Still, without your opinion, I would not have returned it."

Then what did she do? She took R. Meir by his hand, led him up to the chamber, and brought him near the couch. Then she pulled off the sheet that covered them, and he saw that both children lying on the couch were dead. He began to weep and say, "My sons, my sons, my teachers, my teachers. My sons in the way of the world, but my teachers because they illumined my eyes with their understanding of Torah."

Then she came out with: "My teacher, did you not say to me that we are required to restore to the owner what is left with us in trust? 'The Lord gave, the Lord took. May the Name of the Lord be blessed' " (Job 1:21).[9]

206. In R. Meir's neighborhood there lived some ruffians, who annoyed him so much that he prayed for them to die. His wife Beruriah said to him: What are you thinking of? Are you relying on the verse "Let sinners be consumed" (Ps. 104:35)? But, in fact, is the word "sinners"? It is rather "sins."[10] Moreover, look at the end of the verse [and you will see]: "And let the wicked be no more," which implies that when sins come to an end, the wicked will be no more. You should seek mercy for them, that they turn in penitence, so that they will be wicked no more. Accordingly, he besought mercy for them, and they did turn in penitence.[11]

207. A Judeo-Christian said to Beruriah, "It is written, 'Sing, O barren, thou that didst not bear' [Isa. 54:1]. Because she did not bear, is she to sing?" Beruriah: "Fool, look at the end of the verse: 'For more are the children of

1. The Sabbath rest gives rise to idle thoughts, which are then reflected in dreams.
2. Leon Nimoy informed the translator that the story is set forth more clearly in a parallel: Before the innkeeper went off to work in the morning, he said to his wife, "Don't surrender the two purses to anyone, unless he tells you as a countersign that we had lentils for supper the evening before." When the two rabbis saw the lentils on the innkeeper's mustache, they deduced that this was the remainder of his last meal, etc. See Elegant Composition, pp. 1108–10.
3. B. Yoma 83b; Yalkut, Haazinu, §945.
4. He believed that they could easily subdue their sexual desires.
5. And thus freed R. Meir from temptation.
6. B. Kid 81b.
7. B. Shab 134a.
8. The blessing by which the Sabbath or any other holy day is ushered out.
9. Midrash Prov. 31:10 (ed. Buber, pp. 108–9); Yalkut, Prov., §964.
10. The word hataim may mean "sins" or "sinners."
11. B. Ber 10a.

the desolate than the children of the married.' " "But what is the meaning of 'O barren, that thou didst not bear'?" "It means: Sing, O congregation of Israel—which is likened to a barren woman—which, unlike you people, did not bear children who are destined for Gehenna."[1]

208. R. Yose the Galilean was once walking on a road when he met Beruriah, whom he asked, "Which road should I take to go to the city of Lydda?" She replied, "Foolish Galilean, did not the sages say, 'Do not multiply talk with women'?[2] You should have said, "Which way to Lydda?" "[3]

209. Beruriah once came upon a student who was studying his lesson by whispering it. She spoke sharply to him: "Does not Scripture say, 'Set up everywhere, and secured (2 Sam. 23:5)?[4] If the Torah is set up [everywhere—that is], in the two hundred and forty-eight parts of your body—it is secure; but if not,[5] it is not secured."[6]

210. Beruriah, the wife of R. Meir, was a daughter of R. Hanina ben Teradion. She said [to her husband], "It is humiliating to me that my sister is [forced] to serve in a brothel." So he took a container holding three kav of denars and set out for that place. He thought: If she has not yet been subjected to anything sinful, a miracle will be wrought for her; but if she has already committed a sin, no miracle will be wrought. He disguised himself as a stable attendant, came to her, and said, "Give in to my desire." She replied, "The monthly uncleanness of women is upon me." "I am prepared to wait," he said. She: "But there are many here prettier than I." So he said to himself: It is clear that she has not committed any sin. No doubt she says this to everyone who comes to her. He then went to her keeper and said, "Hand her over to me." He replied, "I am afraid of the government." "Take the three kav of denars—use half as a bribe [to be paid out when inquiry is made], and the other half shall be yours." "But what will I do when the denars are spent [and further inquiry is made]?" "Then," R. Meir replied, "say, 'O God of Meir, answer me!' and you will be saved." "Still, who says that it will be so?" R. Meir: "You will have a chance to see right now." There were some man-eating dogs nearby. R. Meir took a pebble and threw it at them, and, as they sprang at him to devour him, he exclaimed, "O God of Meir, answer me!" and they let him be. The keeper then handed over Beruriah's sister to R. Meir.

Presently the matter became known to the Roman emperor, and when the keeper was brought and taken to the scaffold to be hanged, he exclaimed, "O God of Meir, answer me!" They took him down at once and asked him, "What does this mean?" He answered, "This is what happened," [and told them of his encounter with R. Meir]. They then engraved R. Meir's likeness on the gate of Rome and proclaimed that anyone seeing a person resembling it should seize him.

One day [some Romans] saw him and pursued him, so he ran away from them and entered a brothel.[7] (Some say: He saw a dish cooked by Gentiles. So he dipped one finger into it but licked another.) "God forbid," they said. "If it were R. Meir, he would not have done such a thing," [and they stopped their pursuit of him]. At that, he rose up and fled until he reached Babylonia.[8]

211. When Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] married off his son R. Simeon, the people were clapping the backs of their hands on the Sabbath.[9] R. Meir passed by and, upon hearing the sound, he asked, "My masters, has the Sabbath been suspended?" R. Judah heard him and answered, "Who has come to chastise us in our own home?" When R. Meir heard R. Judah's voice, he fled. Runner after runner went after him. Then a wind caused the part of the scarf that covered the back of R. Meir's head to fly up. Looking through a window, R. Judah saw the exposed back of R. Meir's head.

Subsequently, R. Judah used to say: I am keener [in Torah] than my colleagues only because I saw R. Meir from the back. Had I seen his face, I would have been even keener, since it is said, "Thine eyes are to see thy teacher" (Isa. 30:20).[10]

212. R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: During the two times that he was a refugee, I was R. Meir's servant, and R. Meir's staff was in my hand. From it, I acquired understanding.[11]

213. R. Meir's time to die came when he was in Asya. He said, "Tell the people of the Land of Israel: [Burying in the Land] your anointed teacher is ultimately your obligation." But in the meantime, to those with him, he said, "Place my bier by the seashore, for 'He hath founded [the Land] upon the sea, set it upon the nether streams' " (Ps. 24:2).[12]

214. When R. Meir died, makers of parables ceased.[13]

215. Our masters taught: After the death of R. Meir, R. Judah said to his disciples, "Do not allow the disciples of R. Meir to enter here, for, being contentious, they come not to learn Torah but only to put me down with citations of Halakhah." Yet Symmachus pushed his way through, entered [and proceeded to put R. Judah down with such citations]. Greatly provoked, R. Judah said to his disciples, "Did I not tell you that R. Meir's disciples were not to enter here because they are contentious?"

---

1. Ibid.
2. Avot 1:5.
3. B. Er 53b.
4. JV: "Ordered in all things, and sure."
5. If the organs of speech are not used.
6. B. Er 53b–54a.
7. So as not to be identified with R. Meir, who naturally would not enter such a place.
8. B. AZ 18b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
9. By changing the manner of clapping, they thought that they were not violating the Sabbath.
10. P. Betz 5:2, 63a; B. Er 13b.
11. P. MK 3:1, 82a.
12. Thus it would be possible for his bier to float to the Land of Israel. P. Kil 9:4, 32c.
13. B. Sot 49a.

Then R. Yose remarked, "People will say: R. Meir is dead, R. Judah is provoked, R. Yose is silent, and Torah—what is now to become of her?"[1]

216. Again and again R. Judah recited to his son R. Simeon the words "Others say," etc., until finally the son asked: Who are they whose waters we drink but whose names we do not mention? R. Judah replied: They are the men who sought to root out your glory and the glory of your father's house. R. Simeon: "Their loves, their hates, their jealousies have long since vanished" (Eccles. 9:6). R. Judah: "The enemy has, to be sure, perished, but the swords[2] are forever" (Ps. 9:7). R. Simeon: What you say applies to instances where the "swords" of contention prevailed, but these sages [whose names you omit] did not prevail. After that, R. Judah changed and began to recite, "It is said in the name of R. Meir."

Rava observed: Even R. Judah, who was [so] self-effacing, resorted to "It is said in the name of R. Meir"; he still would not say, "R. Meir said."[3]

R. Simeon ben Yohai (fl. ca. 130–60 C.E.) and His Son R. Eleazar (fl. end of 2d century C.E.)

217. R. Abba said: Formerly, each master used to ordain his own pupils: thus Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai ordained R. Eliezer and R. Joshua; R. Joshua ordained R. Akiva; R. Akiva ordained R. Meir and R. Simeon. But when R. Akiva added, "Let R. Meir sit in the first place," R. Simeon's face turned pale. At this, R. Akiva said to R. Simeon, "Let it suffice you that I and your Creator recognize your [intellectual] strength."[4]

218. It is reported that R. Simeon ben Yohai used to say: I see those who will behold the Presence in the hereafter, and they are few. If there be a thousand, I and my son are among them. If a hundred, I and my son are among them. If only two, I and my son are the ones.

It is further reported that R. Simeon ben Yohai used to say: [The suffering and privation that have been mine] would make it possible for me to exempt from judgment the entire world from the day I was born until now. Were my son Eleazar with me, [we would exempt it] from the day the world was created until now. Were Jotham son of Uzziah[5] with me, [we could] exempt it from the day the world was created until its end.[6]

219. R. Simeon ben Yohai said: Had I stood at Mount Sinai at the time when the Torah was given to Israel, I would have asked the Holy One that He create two mouths in a man, one to be occupied with Torah, the other to serve all his other needs. Then, retracting his words, R. Simeon said: If, when man has only one mouth, the world can barely endure all the informing it does, how much less if he had two.[7]

220. Isi ben Judah used to say: R. Simeon grinds much [grain] and wastes very little, which means, so it is taught, he forgets little, and even what he forgets is only bran.

Once R. Simeon came upon Isi ben Judah and asked him: Why do you spout idle chatter before the sages? Isi replied: Why should it bother you? I never said anything derogatory about you other than that you study much, forget little, and what you forget is no more than the bran of your learning.

R. Simeon used to say to his disciples: Learn my rules, for my rules surpass the very best of R. Akiva's rules.[8]

221. On one occasion, while R. Judah, R. Yose, and R. Simeon were sitting together, Judah the son of proselytes happened to sit with them. R. Judah began the discussion by observing, "How noble are the works of this [Roman] nation! They laid out streets, they built bridges, they erected baths." R. Yose remained silent, but R. Simeon ben Yohai spoke up and said, "All that they made, they made to serve themselves: they laid out streets to settle harlots in them; baths, to pamper themselves; bridges, to levy tolls. Now, Judah the son of proselytes went off and kept retelling the sages' words, until they were heard by the [Roman] government, which decreed: Judah, who acclaimed, shall be acclaimed [as spokesman for the Jews]; Yose, who remained silent, shall be exiled to Sepphoris; Simeon, who vilified, shall be put to death.

As a result, R. Simeon and his son hid out in the house of study, where every day R. Simeon's wife would bring them bread and a jug of water, with which they sustained themselves. But when insistence on carrying out the decree became intense, R. Simeon said to his son, "Women's resolution is frail—your mother, put to the torture, may reveal the place where we are hiding."

So they went and hid in a cave. A miracle occurred—a carob tree and a well were created for them. They would remove their garments and sit up to their necks in sand, and study the entire day. When it was time for prayer, they put on their garments, wrapped themselves in their prayer shawls, and prayed. Afterward, they again removed their garments, so that they would not wear out.

They dwelled twelve years in the cave. Then the prophet Elijah came and, standing at the entrance to the cave, announced, "Who will inform the son of Yohai that Caesar is dead and his decree annulled?" So they went out, and, seeing people plowing and sowing, R. Simeon exclaimed, "These men forsake life eternal and engage in life temporal!" Whatever they cast their eyes upon was immediately incinerated. At that, a divine voice went forth and said, "Have you come out to destroy My world? Return to your cave!"

So they returned and remained there twelve months

---

1. B. Naz 49b–50a; B. Kid 52b.
2. JV: "waste places"; but horavot also means "swords."
3. B. Hor 13b–14a.
4. P. Sanh 1:2, 19a.
5. During the many years his father was leprous, Jotham forbore to take over the kingship. He is regarded as a most pious king.
6. B. Suk 45b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
7. B. Ber 1:5, 3b.
8. B. Git 67a; ARN 18 (YJS 10:92–93).

longer. Finally they said, "Even the punishment of the wicked in Gehenna is no more than twelve months." A divine voice then came forth and said, "Leave your cave!" They went out and sat down at the entrance to the cave, where they saw a trapper attempting to catch birds by spreading his net. When R. Simeon heard a divine voice say, "Mercy, mercy," the bird escaped; and when he heard the voice say, "Death," the bird was trapped and stayed caught. At this, R. Simeon declared, "Without the will of Heaven, even a bird may not be trapped, all the less so a human being," and they left the cave for good. Wherever R. Eleazar bruised anyone's feelings, R. Simeon would heal them, saying, "My son, it is enough for the world if only you and I [occupy ourselves with Torah]."

On the Sabbath eve, as it was getting dark, they saw an old man running in the twilight with two bunches of myrtles in his hands. When they asked him, "What are these for?" he replied, "They are in honor of the Sabbath."

"But one bundle should be enough!"

"One is for 'Remember' [Exod. 20:8] and the other for 'Observe' " (Deut. 5:12).

Said R. Simeon to his son, "See how precious commandments are to Israel!" Then their minds were put at ease.

When R. Phinehas ben Yair, R. Simeon's son-in-law, heard that R. Simeon had left the cave, he went out to meet him and immediately took him to the baths in Tiberias, where he began to massage him. Seeing the abrasions in his skin caused by the sand, R. Phinehas burst into weeping, his tears falling on R. Simeon's body so that R. Simeon cried out in pain. R. Phinehas lamented, "Woe is me that I see you in such a state!" R. Simeon replied, "Happy are you that you see me thus. Had you not seen me thus, you would not have found as much learning in me."

R. Simeon said to himself: Since a miracle has been wrought for me, I will go and rectify that which requires rectification. So he asked R. Phinehas, "Is there anything that requires rectifying?" R. Phinehas: "There is a place here suspected of being unclean,[1] so that priests, who have to make a detour around it, are distressed." R. Simeon: "Does anyone here know whether at any time in the past this place was believed to be clean?" A certain old man replied, "Here Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai [who was a priest] cut down lupines for the heave offering [terumah]." So R. Simeon, too, declared it clean. Where the ground was hard [and showed no trace of having been dug into to make a grave], he declared it clean; and where it was loose, he marked it [as a grave site]. Later the old man remarked derisively, "The son of Yohai has declared a whole cemetery clean!" R. Simeon responded, "If you had not been with us at the time, or even if you had been with us but did not vote with us, you might properly have made such a remark. But since you were with us and actually voted with us, [you should not subsequently criticize my decision], for people ought to be able to say, 'If whores are willing to paint one another, certainly disciples of the wise should do the same, and more." Then R. Simeon thrust such a look at the old man that the man died.

An ignorant Cuthean saw what R. Simeon was doing, and he said: Shall I not go and make sport of this elder of the Jews? So he got hold of a corpse and buried it in a thoroughfare that R. Simeon ben Yohai had purified that morning. The Cuthean then went to him and said, "Did you not cleanse such-and-such a throughfare?" He replied, "Yes." The Cuthean said, "Suppose I produce a corpse for you from that very place?" R. Simeon: "Produce it." The Cuthean did so, and R. Simeon, having perceived by the power of the holy spirit that the Cuthean had placed it there, declared, "I decree that he who is aboveground [shall die and] be put underground, and that he who was underground shall be [revived and] raised aboveground." And so it came to pass.[2]

When R. Simeon went out into the street and saw Judah the son of proselytes, he exclaimed, "That man is still in the world!" He cast his eyes upon him, and he was turned into a heap of bones.[3]

222. The [Roman] government once issued a decree that Jews should not keep the Sabbath nor circumcise their children. R. Reuben ben Istroboli trimmed the front of his hair [in Roman fashion], went up and sat among the Romans, and asked them, "If a man has an enemy, what should he wish him to be, poor or rich?" They replied, "Poor." He said to them, "If so, let the Jews do no work on the Sabbath, so that they may grow poor." They: "Right you are!" Then he went back and asked them again, "If one has an enemy, what should he wish him to be, weak or healthy?" They: "Weak." He said to them, "Then let their children be circumcised when they are only eight days old, and they will be weak." They again declared, "Right you are!" and immediately annulled the decree. Later, however, when they realized that he was a Jew, the decree was reinstituted.

The Jews then said among themselves, "Who shall go [to Rome] to work for the annulment of the decree? Let R. Simeon ben Yohai, for whom miracles are frequently wrought, go. And who should accompany him? R. Eleazar son of R. Yose." At this, R. Eleazar's father, R. Yose, said to them, "If my father Halafta were still alive, would you have said to him, 'Surrender your son [Yose] to be slain'?"[4] R. Simeon retorted sharply, "If Yohai my father were still alive, would you have said to him, 'Surrender your son [Simeon] to be slain'?" So R. Yose said to them, "Then I myself will go, for I fear that during the journey R. Simeon may inflict punishment on my son." So R. Simeon undertook to inflict no punishment on him. Nevertheless, in the event, he did inflict it, for during their journey the following question was put to them: How do we know that a reptile's blood [like its flesh] is also unclean? [Without waiting for R. Simeon to reply] R. Eleazar

---

1. A grave or human bones were believed to have been lost there.

2. The Cuthean died and was buried, while the corpse was restored to life.

3. B. Shab 33b–34a; P. Shev 9:1, 38d; Gen. R. 79:6.

4. R. Yose was afraid to expose his son to R. Simeon's vile temper. But R. Simeon understood him to fear the Romans. So he answered that he too was risking his life.

son of R. Yose said [in an undertone] out of the side of his mouth, "[The blood's uncleanness is derived from] 'And these are the items in reptiles that are unclean unto you' " (Lev. 11:29). R. Simeon said to him [with biting irony], "From your way of speaking out of the side of your mouth, one can see that you are indeed some scholar! May such a son never return to his father!"[1]

Then [the demon] Ben Temalion came to meet him, inquiring, "Do you wish me to accompany you?" At these words, R. Simeon burst into tears and said, "[Hagar], handmaid of my ancestor's house, was found worthy of meeting an angel three times,[2] while I had no such privilege, not even once. However, let a miracle be wrought [whether through an angel or through a demon]." So Ben Temalion went ahead [to the palace] and entered the body of Caesar's daughter [who kept calling for R. Simeon]. When R. Simeon arrived at the palace [and was asked to help her], he ordered, "Ben Temalion, leave her! Ben Temalion, leave her!" And as his name was called, Ben Temalion left her and went away. At that, Caesar said to R. Simeon, "Ask for whatever you wish, then go into the treasure house and take whatever you desire." They went in, found the document of the decree, took it, and tore it to pieces.[3]

223. The story is told of a disciple of R. Simeon ben Yohai who left to go outside of the land and came back wealthy. When the other disciples saw him, they envied him and wished that they too might go abroad. Having learned of this, R. Simeon brought all his disciples to a certain valley near the village of Meron, where he began to pray, "Valley, O valley, fill up with gold denars!" Immediately, before his very eyes, the valley began to give forth a stream of gold denars. He then said to the disciples, "If it is gold you want, here is your gold, take it. But you should know that he who takes it now is taking his share of the world-to-come, since the reward for studying Torah is not in this world, but in the world-to-come."[4]

224. The story is told of a woman in Sidon who lived ten years with her husband without bearing him a child. Deciding to part from each other, the two came to R. Simeon ben Yohai, who said to them, "By your lives, even as you were wed with food and drink, so should you be separated with food and drink." They followed his advice and, declaring the day a festal day for themselves, prepared a great feast, during which the wife gave her husband too much to drink. Being thus put in a good humor, he said to her, "My dear, pick any fine article you want in my home and take it with you when you return to your father's house." What did she do? After he fell asleep, she beckoned to her manservants and maidservants, and said to them, "Pick him up with the couch, take him along, and carry him to my father's house." At midnight, he woke up from his sleep. The effects of the wine had left him, and he asked, "My dear, where am I?" She replied, "You are in my father's house." He: "But what am I doing in your father's house?" She: "Did you not say to me last night, 'Pick any fine article you like from my house and take it with you when you return to your father's house'? There is no fine article in the world I care for more than for you." They again went to R. Simeon ben Yohai, and he arose and prayed for them, and they were remembered [by God and granted children].[5]

225. R. Jonathan ben Akhmai and R. Judah the son of proselytes studied the passage on vows at the school of R. Simeon ben Yohai. They had taken leave of him in the evening, but in the morning they came back and took leave of him again. When he asked, "But did you not take leave of me last night?" they replied, "Our master, you taught us that a disciple who took leave of his master and then remained to lodge overnight in the city is required to take leave of him once again." At this, R. Simeon said to his son, "These men are men of consequence. Go along with them, that they may bless you." So the son went to them. When they asked him, "What do you wish?" he replied, "My father told me, 'Go along with them, that they may bless you.' " They said to him, "May it be Heaven's will that you sow but reap not; that you bring in but not bring out; that you bring out but not bring in; that your home remain desolate but your lodging place lived in; that your table be in turmoil and you not behold a new year." When he came home to his father, he said to him, "Not only did they not bless me—they greatly upset me." His father asked, "What did they say to you?" "They said thus and so." The father: "Those are all blessings. 'That you sow but reap not' means that you beget children and they do not die. 'That you bring in but not bring out' means that you bring home daughters-in-law and your sons do not die, so that the wives would be obliged to go back to their father's homes. 'That you bring out but not bring in' means that you give your daughters in marriage and their husbands do not die, so that your daughters are not obliged to come back to you. 'That your home be desolate but your lodging place lived in'—this world is the lodging place and the grave your home. 'That your table be in turmoil' because of many sons and daughters; and 'that you not behold a new year' [with a new wife]—that your wife does not die and you are not obliged to wed a new wife."[6]

226. A man once said to his wife, "I vow that you are not to derive any benefit from me until you make R. Judah and R. Simeon taste your cooking. R. Judah consented to taste it, as he reasoned a fortiori: if, in order to make peace between husband and wife, Torah quotes God as saying, "My Name which is written in sanctity is to be dissolved in 'the waters that curse' " (Num. 5:23)—even when it is doubtful whether or not the wife is guilty of adultery—how much less should I stand on my honor [and refuse to taste the woman's cooking]?

But R. Simeon refused to taste the food, exclaiming,

---

1. May he die for his rashness in replying without his teacher's permission.
2. See Gen. 16.
3. B. Me 17a–b.
4. Exod. R. 52:3; Yalkut, Prov., §964.
5. Song R. 1:4, §2.
6. B. MK 9a–b.

"Even though the woman be widowed and her children die, Simeon will not be budged from his position, in order that people should not fall into the habit of vowing."[1]

227. Whenever R. Simeon ben Yohai saw his mother engage in long chitchat on the Sabbath, he would say, "Mother, it is the Sabbath!"[2]

228. R. Simeon used to carry a basket on his shoulder, saying, "Great is labor, for it gives honor to the worker."[3]

229. A story about R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon: Some donkey drivers, wishing to buy grain, came to his father's house, where they saw R. Eleazar seated near the oven, from which his mother kept taking out loaves of [freshly baked] bread. As she took them out, he kept eating them, until he had consumed all the troughs of bread. They said, "What a shame! A pernicious snake must be lodged in this young man's belly. He may well bring a famine on the world!" R. Eleazar heard what they said, so, when they went out to fetch their load, he took hold of their donkeys and hoisted them up onto the roof. When they returned, they looked for the donkeys but could not find them, until they raised their eyes and saw them on the roof. [Chagrined], they went to his father and told him what had happened. He asked, "Perhaps you said something to offend him?" They replied, "No, sir, but this and this is what happened." R. Simeon: "Why did you say something that might make him a victim of the evil eye? Was it perhaps your food he ate? Do you have to pay for his food? Did not He who created him also create food for him? Nevertheless, go and tell him in my name to fetch the donkeys down, and he will do so."

[They went and said to R. Eleazar what his father had told them to say.] The second feat was more striking than the first. In taking up the donkeys, Eleazar had hoisted them up one by one; in bringing them down, he carried them down two by two.

However, once he began to study Torah, he could not carry even his own cloak.[4]

230. R. Yose ben Halafta saw Eleazar the son of R. Simeon ben Yohai and said: You come from the stock of righteous men, yet you are not a student of Torah. Eleazar: What am I to do? R. Yose: Do you wish to study? Eleazar: Yes. So R. Yose began by teaching him one chapter of Scripture, then a second, and then a third; finally, he brought him down to the place where scholars assemble. When Rabbi [Judah I] saw him, he asked R. Yose: Did you have to bring such a one with you? R. Yose: He comes from the stock of R. Simeon ben Yohai. Later, R. Yose brought Eleazar up to Sepphoris, where he taught him Mishnah. The following year, he brought him down again to the place where scholars assemble, and Eleazar proceeded to respond to questions with proper answers. At that, our holy rabbi [Judah I] applied to Eleazar the verse "The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life" (Prov. 11:30).

Who caused Eleazar to become a student of Torah? Was it not R. Yose ben Halafta?[5]

231. R. Eleazar ben Simeon became a porter. One time Elijah the Prophet came to him, disguised as an old man, and said to him, "Get a beast of burden ready for me." Eleazar asked, "And what do you have to load on the animal?" Elijah replied, "This baggage, my cloak, and myself as rider." Eleazar said [to the bystanders], "Look at this old man—I could load him [on my back] and carry him to the end of the world, yet he says to me, 'Get a beast of burden ready for me!' " So he asked Elijah, "Do you insist on riding?" Elijah: "Yes." Then he put Elijah astride his own back and took him up mountainsides, down into valleys, and across fields of thorns. But Elijah began to bear down with his weight upon Eleazar. Finally Eleazar said, "Old man, old man, ride more lightly. If not, I shall throw you off." Then he asked Elijah, "Would you like to rest a bit?" Elijah replied, "Yes." What did Eleazar do next? He took Elijah to a field, set him down under a tree, and gave him something to eat and drink. After Elijah ate and drank, he asked Eleazar, "What will all this heavy labor get you? Would it not be better for you to take up the vocation of your forebears?" Eleazar asked, "Will you teach me their vocation?" Elijah replied, "Yes." Then, according to some, Elijah taught Eleazar Torah for thirteen years, until he was able to recite the Sifra.[6] [So much of his strength went into learning, that] once he was able to recite the Sifra, he could not even carry his own cloak.[7]

232. While R. Simeon ben Gamaliel and R. Joshua ben Korhah sat on benches, R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon and Rabbi [Judah I] sat in front of them on the ground,[8] raising questions and answering them. Finally, the other sages, also seated on benches, said, "We drink the water [the learning] of these two, yet they sit on the ground." Then seats were provided, and they were seated on them. But R. Simeon ben Gamaliel protested, "I have an only son among you, and you wish to make me lose him!"[9] S. R. Judah was asked to get down from the bench. At that, R. Joshua ben Korhah said, "Shall he who has a father live, while he who has no father[10] die?"[11] So R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon was also asked to get down from his bench. [Not knowing why this was done], R. Eleazar felt hurt, saying, "Do you regard R. Judah as my equal?" Now, until that day, whenever R. Judah made a statement, R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon would support him. But from then on, as soon as R. Judah said, "I have an objection," R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon would retort, "You should object thus

1. B. Ned 66b.
2. P. Shab 15:3, 15b.
3. B. Ned 49b.
4. Song R. 5:14, §3; PRKM 11:18.
5. Tanhuma B, Va-yera, §38.
6. The tannaitic Midrash on Leviticus, a particularly difficult treatise.
7. PRKM 11:22.
8. The usual way of study: the master on a seat, the disciples on the ground.
9. He, R. Judah's father, feared that his son's promotion would excite the evil eye and cause him to die.
10. R. Simeon ben Yohai, R. Eleazar's father, was dead.
11. R. Eleazar might likewise become victim of an evil eye.

and so—this should be your objection. Instead, you encompass us with bundles of objections that have no substance." R. Judah felt humiliated and went off to complain to his father, who told him, "My son, do not take it to heart, for Eleazar is a lion the son of a lion, whereas you are a lion the son of a mere fox."[1]

233. R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon once met a detective who was assigned to catch thieves. R. Eleazar asked, "How can you recognize them? Are they not like wild beasts that prowl at night and hide during the day? Perhaps you sometimes arrest the innocent and leave the guilty free?" The detective answered, "What shall I do? It is the king's command." R. Eleazar: "Come, I will teach you what to do. At nine o'clock in the morning,[2] go into a tavern. Should you see a man dozing with a cup of wine in his hand, inquire about him. If he is a disciple of the wise, [you may assume that] he has risen very early in the morning to pursue his studies [and that is why he is now dozing]; if he is a laborer, he too must have been up early to do his work. But if he is neither, he is a thief—arrest him." The report [of this conversation] was brought to the king's attention, and the decision was [as the proverb puts it]: "Let the reader of the message become the messenger."[3] R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon was accordingly sent for and was appointed to arrest thieves. R. Joshua ben Korhah sent word to him, "O Vinegar son of wine! How long will you deliver up the people of our God for slaughter!" R. Eleazar sent back: "I weed out thorns from the vineyard." R. Joshua replied, "Let the Owner of the vineyard come and Himself weed out its thorns."

One day a mere fuller met him and called him "Vinegar son of wine." R. Eleazar said to himself: Since he is so insolent, he must surely be a felon. So he gave the order to his attendant, "Arrest him!" and they arrested him. When R. Eleazar's anger cooled, he went back in order to secure the fuller's release, but could not do so. Then he applied to himself the verse "Whoso keepeth his mouth and his tongue, keepeth his soul from troubles" (Prov. 21:23). When they subsequently hanged the fuller, R. Eleazar stood under the gallows and wept. His disciples said to him, "Master, do not grieve, for this fuller and his son together raped a betrothed maiden on Yom Kippur."[4] At this, R. Eleazar laid his hand on his belly and exclaimed, "Rejoice, my innards, rejoice! If matters you were in doubt about fall out thus, how much more so matters about which you are certain! I am well assured that neither worms nor decay will have power over you."

Nevertheless, his conscience [troubled by the thought that he might have caused an innocent man's death] had no rest. So he was given a sleeping draught and taken into a marble chamber, where his abdomen was opened. Out of it baskets and baskets of fat were removed and placed in the sun during [the summer months of] Tammuz[5] and Av, yet the fat did not putrefy. Consequently, he applied to himself the verse "My flesh, too, shall dwell in safety" (Ps. 16:9).

Yet even so,[6] R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon's conscience continued to trouble him. He therefore invoked painful afflictions upon himself, so that although sixty sheets were spread under him in the evening, sixty basins of blood and pus were removed from under him in the morning. Every morning his wife prepared a mixture of sixty kinds of fig pap for him, and when he ate it, he recovered. But his wife did not permit him to go to the house of study, lest the sages [who disapproved of his work as a thief catcher] should cause him distress. In the evening R. Eleazar would invite his afflictions back, saying, "Come back, my brethren and friends!" and in the morning he would say to them, "Depart, lest you disturb my studies!"

One day his wife, overhearing him, cried out, "So it is of your own volition that you bring these afflictions upon yourself, and to pay for their treatment, you squander the money of my father's house!" With that taunt, she went off to her father's house, in defiance of her husband. Just then, sixty mariners were sailing on the sea. When a huge wave crested over them and was about to sink their vessel, they rose up in prayer, saying, "O God of Eleazar, answer us!" and the sea's wrath abated. When the mariners reached dry land, they brought R. Eleazar a gift of sixty slaves bearing sixty purses. The slaves prepared a mixture of sixty kinds of fig pap for him, and he ate it.

One day, R. Eleazar's wife said to her daughter, "Go and find out how your father is faring, how he is now." She went to him and [on her arrival] her father said to her, "Go tell your mother that our [wealth] is still greater than that of her father's house." He then applied to himself the verse "[Torah] is like the merchant ships, fetching foodstuffs from afar" (Prov. 31:14).

He ate, drank, and recovered, then went to the house of study. Sixty specimens of blood were brought before him [with the question whether they were or were not menstrual blood], and he declared all the specimens clean [not blood of menstruation]. But the sages criticized him, saying, "Is it possible that there was not even one specimen about which there might have been some doubt?" He responded, "If it is as I have said, let all the future children borne by these women be males; if not, let there be one female among them." All the children born were males and were named Eleazar after him.

[In his last illness], R. Eleazar's arm once happened to be exposed, and his wife both laughed and wept. She laughed because she said to herself: How happy I am—how happy my lot, that I have been able to cleave to the body of so righteous a man! She wept because she said: Alas that the body of so righteous a man is destined for the dust.

As he was dying, he said to his wife, "I know that the sages are angry with me and will not properly attend

---

1. That is to say, Eleazar's father, R. Simeon ben Yohai, was more learned than I. B. BM 84b.
2. Literally, the fourth hour of the day.
3. You made the motion—now you can become chairman of the committee.
4. A triple sin.
5. A sign that he had acted rightly and would be proof against decay.
6. Even though his fat did not putrefy.

to my burial. Let my body repose in the upper chamber, and do not be afraid of my presence there.

R. Samuel bar Nahmani said: R. Jonathan's mother told me that the wife of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon had told her, "He lay in his upper chamber not less than eighteen nor more than twenty-two years. Whenever I ascended there, I would examine his hair, and if even a single hair happened to fall out, blood would spurt forth. One day, when I saw a worm issue from his ear, I [fearful that his body had begun to decompose] was much grieved. But then he appeared to me in a dream and told me to think nothing of it. 'This has happened,' he said, 'because I once heard a disciple of the wise being belittled and did not protest as I should have done.' "

Whenever two people in a lawsuit came before him, they stood at the door, and each stated his case. Then a voice would issue from the upper chamber, saying, "So-and-so, you are liable; So-and-so, you are in the clear."

One day R. Eleazar's wife was quarreling with a neighbor woman who cursed her, "May you be like your husband, who had no proper burial!" Consequently the sages said, "Now that R. Eleazar's being unburied has come to be known, it is not right to have it continue thus." Others say: R. Simeon ben Yohai appeared to the sages in a dream and said to them, "I have a dear child among you, whom you refuse to bring to me." Then the sages decided to attend to his burial. But the townspeople of Akhbera[1] would not let them, because during all the years that R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon lay asleep in his upper chamber, no wild beast had come to their town. However, one day—it was the eve of Yom Kippur—while the people of Akhbera were preoccupied, the sages sent [word] to the townspeople of Biri,[2] and they took his bier down and carried it to the cave where his father was buried. When they found a snake coiled at its entrance, they said to it, "Snake, O snake, open your mouth [and let go of your tail], so that a son may join his father." At that, the snake opened its mouth and they were able to enter.[3]

When R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon died, his generation applied to him the verse, "Who is this that cometh up out of the wilderness like pillars of smoke perfumed with myrrh and frankincense, with all the powders of the merchant?" (Song 3:6). What did they mean by "with all the powders of the merchant"? That he had rare powers—that he was master of Scripture and Mishnah, that he was a composer of hymns, and that he was a gifted preacher.[4]

R. Yose ben Halafta (fl. 2d half of 2d century C.E.) and His Son R. Ishmael (fl. 1st half of 3d century C.E.)

234. R. Levi said: In Jerusalem there was found a genealogical scroll in which was written, "R. Yose son of Halafta is of the descendants of Jonadab son of Rechab."[5]

235. When R. Yose ben Halafta was a boy, he used to play with other boys. A man saw him and called out, "Your father should be told that [instead of studying, you waste your time] playing with the boys." R. Yose answered, "What is that to you? If you tell my father, he will only spank me, whereas you will accustom your tongue to speaking slander."[6]

236. R. Yose said: Once, while traveling on the road, I entered one of the ruins of Jerusalem in order to pray. Elijah the prophet, ever remembered for good, appeared and waited for me at the door until I finished my prayer. After I had prayed, he said to me, "Peace be unto you, my master!" I replied, "Peace be unto you, my master and my teacher!" He asked, "My son, why did you enter this ruin?" I replied, "To pray." He said to me, "You could have prayed on the road." I replied, "I feared lest passersby might interrupt me." Elijah: "My son, what sound did you hear in this ruin?" I replied, "I heard a divine voice cooing like a dove and saying:

> Woe is me that I have destroyed My house, > burned My Temple Hall, > and exiled My children among the nations!"

Elijah went on, "By my life and by your head, my son! Not in this moment alone does the voice so lament—it laments three times every day! And more than that! Each time Jews go into houses of prayer and houses of study and respond, 'Amen! May His great Name be blessed,' the Holy One, if one dare speak thus, shakes His head and says:

> Happy is the King who is thus acclaimed in His own house!
> What has caused the Father to banish His children?
> And woe to the children who had to be banished from the table of their Father!"[7]

237. During a lecture in Sepphoris, R. Yose said: Father Elijah [the prophet] was a hot-tempered man.[8] So Elijah, who used to visit him regularly, stayed away for three days and did not come. When he did come again, R. Yose asked him, "Why have you stayed away, sir?" Elijah replied, "Because you called me hot-tempered." R. Yose responded, "But, sir, even in this you have shown your temper."[9]

238. R. Yose's wife used to quarrel with her maidservant. Once, in front of the maidservant, he said that his wife was wrong. When she asked, "Why do you declare me wrong in front of my maidservant?" he replied, "Did not Job say, 'Have I ever despised the case of my servants, man or maid, even they made a complaint against me?' " (Job 31:13).[10]

---

1. A town north of Tiberias.
2. A neighboring town, a bit farther north.
3. B. BM 83b–84a and En Yaakov, ad loc.; Eccles R. 11:2, §1.
4. Lev. R. 30:1; Song R. 3:6, §7.
5. See Jer. 35. Since the Rechabites were descendants of Jethro, R. Yose was thus of proselyte stock. P. Ta 4:2, 68a.
6. MTeh 50:3 (YJS 1:470).
7. B. Ber 3a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
8. In that he dealt with Ahab severely. See 1 Kings 17:1.
9. B. Sanh 113a–b.
10. Gen. R. 48:3.

239. R. Yose said: Never have I called my wife "my wife" or my ox "my ox"; rather, I called my wife "my house" and my ox "my field."

R. Yose also said: Never have the beams of my house seen the seams of my shirt.[1]

And R. Yose said: Never have I contradicted the words of my colleagues. Though I know full well that I am not a priest, yet, should my colleagues say to me, "Go up to the dais,"[2] I would go up.

R. Yose also said: Never have I said a thing and then had to take back what I said.

And R. Yose said: May my portion be with those who eat three meals on the Sabbath.[3]

R. Yose also said: May my portion be with those who recite the entire Hallel every day.[4]

And R. Yose said: May my portion be with those who pray at the red glow of the sun.[5]

R. Yose also said: May my portion be with those who die of illness of the bowels, for a master once said: Most of the righteous die of a disease of the bowels.[6]

And R. Yose said: May my portion be with those who die as they are about to perform a precept.

R. Yose also said: May my portion be with those who welcome the Sabbath as if they were in Tiberias and usher it out as if they were in Sepphoris.[7]

And R. Yose said: May my portion be with those who inspire pupils to enter and sit in the house of study, and not with those who inspire them to rise up and leave the house of study.

R. Yose also said: May my lot be with those who collect charity, and not with those who distribute charity.[8]

R. Yose also said: May my portion be with those who are suspected for no cause.[9]

240. R. Yose said: All my life I have been perplexed by the verse "And thou shalt grope at noonday as the blind gropeth in darkness" (Deut. 28:29). What difference [I asked], does it make to a blind man whether it be dark or light? [Nor did I find the answer] until the following incident occurred. I was once walking at the darkest time of the night when I saw a blind man walking on the road with a torch in his hand. I said to him, "My son, what need have you for this torch?" He replied, "As long as I have this torch in my hand, people see me and save me from holes, thorns, and briers."[10]

241. R. Yose always had a profound reason for his views.[11]

242. When R. Yose bar Halafta died, the roof gutters of Sepphoris ran with blood.[12]

243. When R. Yose died, understanding ceased.[13]

244. Whenever Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] was about to offer a refutation of one of R. Yose's teachings, he would say: We who are lowly dare attempt to refute a teaching of R. Yose's! For as things utterly common are to things utterly holy, so is our generation to the generation of R. Yose.

R. Ishmael son of R. Yose said: As dust is to gold, so is our generation to the generation of my father.[14]

245. R. Ishmael son of R. Yose asked Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch]: Who are those who are said to "dwell before the Lord" in the verse "Her grain shall be for them that dwell before the Lord" (Isa. 23:18)? R. Judah replied: Such as you and your colleagues and those two [sages][15] wearing plain cloaks as you choose to do, who hold yourselves in no special esteem.[16]

246. R. Ishmael son of R. Yose, while walking on a road, met a man carrying a bundle of sticks. The man put it down, rested, and then said, "Help me pick it up." "What is it worth?" R. Ishmael inquired. "Half a zuz." So R. Simeon gave the man the half-zuz and declared the fagot ownerless. But then the man resumed possession of the bundle. R. Ishmael gave him another half-zuz and again declared the fagot ownerless. Seeing that the man was again about to resume possession of the bundle, R. Ishmael said to him, "I have declared it ownerless for everyone else, but not for you."[17]

247. The tenant of R. Ishmael son of R. Yose used to bring him a basket of fruit [as rent] every Friday afternoon. On one occasion, he brought it on Thursday. When R. Ishmael asked, "Why the change in day?" the tenant replied, "I have a lawsuit [to be adjudicated by you], and I thought that on my way to attend it I would bring the rent to the master." R. Ishmael did not accept it from him and said, "I am disqualified from adjudicating your suit." He then appointed two disciples of the wise to try the tenant's case. While arranging matters, R. Ishmael found himself thinking: If the tenant wished, he might plead this way; then again, he might plead otherwise. Then R. Ishmael

---

1. When he undressed he did not turn the shirt inside out, but pulled it over his head while in bed; out of modesty, he remained covered as much as possible.
2. To recite the priests' benediction. Num. 6:22–27.
3. He held himself in such low esteem that he hoped he would be deemed the equal of men who regularly observed a precept that was not too difficult to carry out.
4. See APB, pp. 84–96. The practice was apparently new, and he approved of it.
5. Both at dawn and at sunset.
6. The pain they suffer purges them of sin.
7. That is, prolong the Sabbath's observance. In Tiberias, situated in a valley, the Sabbath began earlier; in Sepphoris, which was on a mountain, it ended later.
8. It is difficult to be fair and impartial in performing the latter task.
9. B. Shab 118b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
10. B. Meg 24b.
11. Or, "carried his learning with him." B. Git 67a; ARN 18.
12. By way of mourning. B. MK 25b; P. AZ 3:1, 42c.
13. P. Sot 9:15, 24c.
14. P. Git 6:7, 48b.
15. Two highly regarded sages who were exceedingly humble.
16. Eccles. R. 1:7, §9.
17. R. Ishmael was ready to help the man but preferred not to strain himself physically. So he bought the bundle and declared it ownerless, i.e., public property. The man accepted the money twice and, since the bundle became ownerless, each time declared himself the owner, until R. Ishmael felt forced to restrict that man's right to take possession of the bundle. B. BM 30b.

said: "May the breath of those who take bribes be blasted! If I—who have not taken the fruit; and even if I had taken it, I would have taken what is mine—[find myself providing pleas for my tenant], how much more and more do they who do accept bribes."[1]

248. It once happened that a man said to his wife: I vow that you are to derive no benefit from me until you manage to show to R. Ishmael son of R. Yose that at least one of your features is beautiful. So R. Ishmael said to those who reported the incident to him, "Perhaps her head is beautiful?" "It is round," they replied. "Perhaps her hair is beautiful?" "It is like limp stalks of flax." "Perhaps her eyes are beautiful?" "They are bleary." "Perhaps her ears are beautiful?" "They are deformed." "Perhaps her nose is beautiful?" "It is bloated." "Perhaps her lips are beautiful?" "They are thick." "Perhaps her neck is beautiful?" "It is squat." "Perhaps her belly is beautiful?" "It protrudes." "Perhaps her feet are beautiful?" "They are as broad as those of a duck." "Perhaps her name is beautiful?" "It is Likhlukhit ['marred']." He said to them, "She is beautifully called likhlukhit, marred as she is by her many defects." And he absolved her husband of his vow.[2]

249. R. Ishmael son of R. Yose was going up to Jerusalem to pray. As he passed Neapolis, a Cuthean saw him and asked him, "Where are you going?" R. Ishmael: "I am going up to pray in Jerusalem." The Cuthean: "Would it not be better to pray on this mountain,[3] singled out for blessing, rather than on that dungheap?" R. Ishmael: "May I tell you to what you may be compared? To a dog whose tongue is out for carrion. Because you know that there are idols hidden beneath Gerizim, as is said, 'And Jacob hid them' [Gen. 35:4], your tongue is out for them."[4] The Cutheans said, "This man wants to take the idols away," and took counsel on how to put him to death. Hearing that, R. Ishmael arose and fled during the night.[5]

250. Once a certain disciple, following R. Ishmael son of R. Yose in a marketplace in Zion, noticed that R. Ishmael seemed afraid of something. So he said: You must be a sinner, because it is written, "The sinners in Zion are afraid" (Isa. 33:14). R. Ishmael replied: But it is also written, "Happy is the man that feareth alway" (Prov. 28:14). The disciple: That verse refers to words of Torah.[6]

251. R. Ishmael son of R. Yose used to say: I could write down all of Scripture from memory.[7]

252. The same thing that happened to R. Eleazar ben Simeon happened to R. Ishmael son of R. Yose.[8] The prophet Elijah met him and reproved him, "How long will you deliver the people of our God to be executed?" "But what can I do?" R. Ishmael replied. "It is the king's decree." Elijah: "Your father fled to Asya.[9] You—flee to Laodicea."[10]

253. R. Ishmael son of R. Yose happened to visit R. Simeon son of R. Yose ben Lakonia and was given a goblet, which he emptied in one swallow. R. Simeon then asked R. Ishmael: Did not the master declare that a man who drinks his goblet in one swallow is a tippler? R. Ishmael replied: The master did not speak of your goblet, which is small, of your wine, which is sweet, and of my stomach, which is big.[11]

254. When R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon and R. Ishmael son of R. Yose met, a yoke of oxen could pass under their bellies without touching them.[12]

R. Judah bar Ilai (2d half of 2d century C.E.)

255. On all occasions, R. Judah was first to speak.[13]

256. "Beauty is deceitful. . . . It is the fear of the Lord whereby one is adorned" (Prov. 31:30). The verse applies to the generation of R. Judah son of R. Ilai, of which it is said: [Though their poverty was so great that] six of R. Judah's disciples had to make do with one cloak for all of them, yet they occupied themselves with Torah.[14]

257. R. Judah's wife got busy, bought some wool ends, and made a wrap of mixed colors. When she went out to market, she would cover herself with it, and when R. Judah went out to pray, he, too, would cover himself with it and pray. As he was about to cover himself, he would utter the blessing, "Blessed be He who has provided me with a robe."[15]

258. Once Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel declared a fast, but R. Judah did not appear at the special service for the fast. When Rabban Simeon was told that R. Judah had nothing to wear, he sent him a robe, but R. Judah refused to accept it; lifting up the mat [upon which he sat, he] said to Rabban Simeon's emissary, "See what [treasures][16] I have here [under the mat], but I do not find it right to benefit from this world."[17]

259. A Roman noblewoman saw R. Judah son of R. Ilai, his face aglow. So she said: Old man, old man, one of

---

1. B. Ket 105b.
2. B. Ned 66b.
3. Mount Gerizim. See Deut. 27:12.
4. You only pretend to worship the true God. In fact, it is the idols hidden beneath the mount that you worship.
5. Gen. R. 81:3; P. AZ 5:4, 44d.
6. A man should always fear the possibility of forgetting them. B. Ber 60a.
7. P. Meg 4:1, 74d.
8. He also was asked to be a Roman officer in charge of arresting thieves. See above in this chapter, §233.
9. R. Yose ben Halafta fled after he was ordained by R. Judah ben Bava. See B. Sanh 14a.
10. B. BM 83b–84a.
11. B. Pes 86b.
12. Their bellies were so large. B. BM 84a.
13. See above in this chapter, §221. B. Shab 33b.
14. B. Sanh 20a.
15. B. Ned 49b.
16. Their appearance came about through a miracle.
17. B. Ned 49b–50a.

three things must be true of you: either you have drunk too much wine, or you lend money upon interest, or you raise swine.[1] R. Judah replied: By the faith that is mine, none of these things is true of me. I do not lend money upon interest, since it is said, "Thou shalt not lend upon interest to thy brother" (Deut. 23:20). I do not raise swine, since it is forbidden for a Jew to raise swine. Nor am I drunk with wine. I drink wine only for the Kiddish and Havdalah rites; and the four cups [required at the Passover seder] make me feel as though I had a tight cord around my temples from Passover to Shavuot. The noblewoman: Then why does your face shine? R. Judah: It is teaching Torah that makes my face shine, as is said, "A man's wisdom makes his face to shine" (Eccles. 8:1).[2]

260. When R. Judah went to the house of study, he used to carry on his shoulder a large pitcher to sit on, saying: Great is work, for it gives honor to the worker.[3]

261. When R. Judah was seated in the presence of R. Tarfon, R. Tarfon said to him: Your face shines today. R. Judah: Last night your servants went out to the field and brought beets for us, which we ate without salt. Had we eaten them with salt, our faces would have shone with even greater joy.[4]

262. R. Yose and R. Judah ate porridge out of the same bowl. One ate with his fingers, and the other used a palm leaf [for a spoon]. He who was eating with the palm leaf asked the one who ate with his fingers, "How long will you make me eat the filth on your fingers?" The one who ate with his fingers replied to the one who ate with a palm leaf, "How long will you make me eat your spittle?"[5]

263. Lesbian figs[6] were set before R. Judah and R. Simeon. R. Judah ate them, but R. Simeon did not. R. Judah asked: Why is the master not eating? R. Simeon replied: These do not pass out of the stomach. R. Judah: All the more reason [to eat them], since one may depend on them for sustenance tomorrow.[7]

264. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: Such was the practice of R. Judah bar Ilai: on the eve of the Sabbath, a tub filled with warm water would be brought to him. In it, he washed his face, his hands, and his feet. Then, as he sat wrapped in his fringed linen robes, he seemed like an angel of the Lord of hosts.[8]

265. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: Such was the practice of R. Judah son of R. Ilai: on the eve of the ninth of Av, dry bread seasoned with salt would be brought to him. He would sit between the oven and the stove, and eat it, washing it down with a pitcher of water and behaving as though his deceased loved one were lying before him.[9]

266. R. Judah said: Once I was walking behind R. Akiva and R. Eleazar ben Azariah. When the time for reading the Shema came, I supposed that they refrained from reading it [before sunrise].[10] But then I realized that they were busy with communal matters. So I kept repeating the Shema [until its conclusion coincided with the instant of sunrise]. Then they began reciting it, when the sun was already seen over the summits of the mountains.[11]

267. It is said of R. Judah bar Ilai that he used to interrupt his study of Torah only to participate in a funeral procession or to lead a bride [to the bridal bower].

It is also said of R. Judah bar Ilai that he used to seize the twig of a myrtle and dance before the bride, chanting, "O bride, beautiful and charming."[12]

R. Eleazar ben Shammua (fl. 2d half of 2d century C.E.) and His Son R. Simeon (1st third of 3d century C.E.)

268. R. Yohanan said: The intellectual powers of former generations were as wide as the entrance[13] into the Outer Hall [leading to the Temple's interior], and those of recent generations narrower, like the entrance[14] into the Temple Hall; but ours is like the eye of a small needle. R. Akiva is reckoned as one of the former generations; R. Eleazar ben Shammua as one of the recent generations.

Some say R. Eleazar ben Shammua is reckoned as one of the former generations, and R. Oshaia Berabbi as one of the recent generations.[15]

269. Rav used to speak of R. Eleazar ben Shammua as the strongest among the sages.[16]

270. Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] said: When I went to R. Eleazar ben Shammua to have my learning examined (others say, to sound the learning of R. Eleazar ben Shammua), I found Joseph the Babylonian, who was very dear

---

1. Both immensely profitable occupations.
2. P. Shab 8:1, 11a; B. Ned 49b; Eccles. R. 8:1, §4.
3. B. Ned. 49b.
4. Ibid.
5. Because the leaf was not wiped after being put in the mouth; ibid.
6. Figs from Lesbos were said to be difficult to digest.
7. B. Ned 49b.
8. B. Shab 25b.
9. B. Ta 30a–b.
10. To indicate disagreement with R. Eliezer, who maintained that the Shema must be read before sunrise.
11. After sunrise. Tos Ber 1:4 (ed. Saul Liberman [New York, 1955], 1:2). See his comments in Lieberman, TKF 2:2–3. Leon Nemoy responds: "What troubles me is 'refrained from' for nityaashu. Refraining is a deliberate action, whereas hityaesh is a lack of any action. Moreover, as I read the story, it is a simple account of events. The two sages were busy with public affairs and could not interrupt their deliberations to recite the Shema. R. Judah was doing nothing, so he recited the Shema at the appointed time. When the two sages completed their business, a little after sunrise, they too recited the Shema. Ergo, important public business is a valid reason to delay the Shema, at least according to these two sages."
12. B. Ket 17a.
13. Twenty cubits.
14. Ten cubits.
15. B. Er 53a.
16. B. Ket 40a.

to him, seated before him. Joseph asked, "Master, what is the law if one has slaughtered an offering, intending to leave some of the blood for the morrow?" "The offering is valid," R. Eleazar replied. In the evening [when asked the question again], he again replied, "It is valid." The next morning he again replied, "It is valid." At midday he again replied, "It is valid." In the afternoon he again replied, "It is valid, but R. Eliezer declares it to be invalid." At that, the face of Joseph the Babylonian brightened. R. Eleazar: "Joseph, it seems to me that we did not get our traditions straight until now." "Quite so, master," he replied, "quite so. For R. Judah taught me that such blood was invalid; but when I went around among all his disciples to find the same opinion, I could not find any.[1] Now that you teach me that according to R. Eliezer, too, such blood is invalid, [you provide me with another opinion in agreement with R. Judah's] and thus restore to me words of Torah I thought I had lost." R. Eleazar ben Shammua's eyes filled with tears of joy and he exclaimed, "Happy are you, O disciples of the wise, to whom the words of Torah are so dear!" He then said that Joseph could justly declare, "O how I love Thy Torah! It is my meditation all the day" (Ps. 119:97). "But you should know that it is only because R. Judah was the son of R. Ilai, and R. Ilai was the disciple of R. Eliezer, that R. Judah taught you R. Eliezer's opinion."[2]

271. Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] used to say: When we studied Torah at the home of R. Eleazar ben Shammua, six of us used to sit in the space of one cubit.[3]

272. Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] also said: When I went to study Torah in the school of R. Eleazar ben Shammua, his disciples banded together against me like the cocks of Beth Bukya[4] and did not let me learn more than one ruling in this Mishnah we are now studying.[5]

273. A story of R. Eleazar ben Shammua and R. Yohanan the Cobbler, who were traveling to Nisibis [in Babylonia] to study Torah in the school of R. Judah ben Beterah. When they reached Zidon and remembered the Land of Israel, they lifted their tear-filled eyes, rent their garments, and recited the verse "Ye shall possess it. By dwelling therein, ye will be able to do all the statutes" (Deut. 11:31–32). At that, they turned back and went home, saying: Dwelling in the Land of Israel is the equivalent to performing all precepts in the Torah.[6]

274. R. Eleazar ben Shammua, while walking on the shore of the Great Sea, saw a ship being tossed about in the water and, in the twinkling of an eye, sink with all its passengers. Then he espied a man holding on to a ship's plank and being carried from wave to wave until he got to dry land. Being naked, he hid himself [among the rocks] on the shore. The incident happened while Jews were going up to Jerusalem for a festival. So the man called out to them, "I am of the descendants of Esau, your brother. Give me any kind of garment to cover my nether parts, because the sea has tossed me about, leaving me with nothing." They replied, "So may all your people be likewise tossed about!" As he looked around, he noticed R. Eleazar walking among these Jews. So he said to him, "I see that you are a venerable man and respected by your people; you recognize the dignity of all creatures. Help me, and give me a garment to cover my nether parts, because the sea has tossed me about." R. Eleazar ben Shammua, who was wearing seven robes, took off one of them and gave it to the man. Then R. Eleazar brought him to his house, provided him with food and drink, and gave him two hundred denars. After that, R. Eleazar had him ride [his own donkey] for fourteen Persian mil, conveying him with great honor until he brought him to his home.

Some time later, the wicked Caesar died and the man [who had been shipwrecked] was elected to rule in his stead. He decreed concerning that province: "All its men are to be put to death, and all its women to be taken as spoil." The Jews of the province said to R. Eleazar ben Shammua, "Go and intercede for us." He replied, "Are you not aware that this government does nothing without being paid?" They said to him, "Here are four thousand denars. Take them—go and intercede for us." He took them, went, and, when he reached the gate of the royal palace, said to [the guards], "Go tell the emperor that a Jew is standing at the gate and wishes to greet the emperor." The emperor said, "Bring him in." When the emperor saw R. Eleazar, he leaped up from his throne and prostrated himself before him. Then he asked him, "My lord, what is your quest here, and why have you taken the trouble to come here?" R. Eleazar replied, "In behalf of that province, I came to ask that you annul the decree you just issued." The emperor asked, "Is anything false written in the Torah?" R. Eleazar: "No." The emperor: "Is it not written in your Torah, 'An Ammonite or a Moabite shall not enter into the assembly of the Lord' [Deut. 23:4]? For what reason? 'Because they met you not with bread and with water in the way' [Deut. 23:5]. But it is also written, 'Thou shalt not abhor an Edomite, for he is thy brother' [Deut. 23:8]; and am I not a descendant of Esau, your brother? Nevertheless, the Jews of this province did not treat me with the kindness enjoined! And whoever transgresses the Torah incurs the penalty of death." R. Eleazar ben Shammua replied, "Although they are guilty toward you, forgive them and have mercy on them." The emperor: "Do you know that this government does nothing without being paid?" R. Eleazar: "I have with me four thousand denars. Take them and have mercy upon the people." The emperor: "The four thousand denars are presented to you in exchange for the two hundred you gave me; and on your account, in return for the food and drink in which you provided me, the whole province will be spared. Now enter

---

1. And I therefore thought that I must have been mistaken in what I believed R. Judah had said, since his other disciples had not heard it.
2. B. Men 18a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
3. Because we were so anxious to learn, we crowded into a small space. B. Er 53a.
4. According to Rashi, a place in Upper Galilee where the cocks allow no strange cock to enter.
5. B. Yev 84a.
6. Sif Deut., §80.

my treasury and take seventy robes, in return for the robe you gave me. Go in peace to your people."

They applied to R. Eleazar the text "Cast thy bread upon the waters" (Eccles. 11:1).[1]

275. Once R. Simeon son of R. Eleazar, coming from Migdal Eder, from the house of his teacher, was riding leisurely on his donkey along the lakeshore, feeling greatly elated and thoroughly satisfied with himself because he had studied much Torah. [While in this mood] he chanced upon an exceedingly ugly man, who greeted him, "Peace be upon you, my master." R. Simeon did not return the greeting but instead said to him, "You worthless creature! How ugly you are! Are all the people of your city as ugly as you?"

The man replied, "I do not know, but go and say to the Craftsman who made me, 'How ugly is the vessel You have made!' "

No sooner did R. Simeon realize that he had done wrong than he got down from the donkey and, prostrating himself before the man, said to him, "I apologize to you; forgive me!"

The man replied, "I will not forgive you until you go to the Craftsman who made me and say to Him, 'How ugly is the vessel You have made!' "

R. Simeon followed him until he reached the man's city. When the people of the city came out to meet R. Simeon, greeting him with the words "Peace be upon you, master, O our master, teacher, O our teacher," the man asked them, "Whom are you addressing as 'master, O our master'?"

They replied, "The man who is walking behind you." Then the man said, "If he is a master, may there be no more like him in Israel!" When the people asked him, "Why?" he replied, "He behaved to me thus and so."

They said to him, "Nevertheless, forgive him, for he is a man greatly learned in the Torah."

The man replied, "For your sakes, I forgive him, but only on condition that he does not make a habit of such misbehavior."

Right after this, R. Simeon son of R. Eleazar entered the house of study and preached, "At all times a man should be pliant as a reed and not hard as a cedar."[2]

Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel II (2d half of 2d century C.E.)

276. According to R. Judah, Samuel said in the name of Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel:[3] "I should bring my eyes to tears because of what was done to the families of the city, as shown in my own experience" (Lam. 3:51).[4] In my dear father's house, there were a thousand young men—five hundred of them studied Torah, and the other five hundred studied Greek wisdom—and out of all of them only I here and the son of my father's brother in Asia[5] remain alive.

277. Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel was patriarch, R. Meir counselor sage, and R. Nathan president of the court. Whenever Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel entered, all stood up for him; when R. Meir and R. Nathan entered, all stood up for them as well. So Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel said: Should there be no distinction between my [office] and theirs?[6] So he instituted the following procedure: when the patriarch enters, all the people rise and do not sit down until he says, "Be seated." When the president of the court enters, a row on one side of him and another row on the other side of him rise [to provide a passageway, and remain standing] until he sits down in his place. When the counselor sage enters, each person he passes rises to make room for him and sits down after he passes, while the last person he passes sits down only after he sits down in his place.

R. Meir and R. Nathan were not present in the house of study on the day Rabban Simeon instituted the new procedure. When they came the next day and saw that the people did not rise for them as had been their wont, they inquired, "What's going on here?" When they were told that Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel had instituted the new procedure, R. Meir said to R. Nathan, "I am counselor sage and you are president of the court. Let us institute something against him." "What do you suggest we do?" "Suppose we say to him, 'Lecture to us upon the tractate Uktzin, a tractate with which he is unfamiliar,' and since he will be unable to lecture upon it, we shall say to him, 'Who may tell the mighty acts of the Lord? He who can proclaim all His praises' [Ps. 106:2]: for whom is it fitting to 'tell the mighty acts of the Lord'? Only for one who can proclaim all His praises. We shall then depose him; you will become patriarch and I president of the court."

R. Jacob ben Korshai happened to overhear the conversation and said to himself: This plot may, God forbid, lead to [Rabban Simeon's] humiliation. So he went and sat down behind Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel's upper chamber, where he kept studying and reciting, studying and reciting the tractate Uktzin, until finally R. Simeon ben Gamaliel asked himself: What can this mean? Could there be, God forbid, a plot against me in the house of study? So he paid close attention [to R. Jacob's recitation] and familiarized himself with the tractate.

The following day, when R. Meir and R. Nathan said to him, "Will our master lecture on Uktzin?" he started lecturing upon it. After he finished, he said to R. Meir and R. Nathan, "Had I not familiarized myself with it, you would have disgraced me publicly!" Then he issued an order, and the two men were removed from the house of study.

After that, R. Meir and R. Nathan would write down

---

1. Eccles. R. 11:1, §1.
2. B. Ta 20a; ARN 41.
3. A survivor of the massacre at Bethar.
4. JV: "Mine eye affected my soul because of all the daughters of my city."
5. The Roman province of Asia, originally the territory of Pergamum in western Asia Minor, B. BK 83a; Sot 49b.
6. "R. Simeon had made this agreement, not from personal motives, but in order to increase the authority of the college over which the nasi [patriarch] presided, and to promote the due respect for learning" (J. Z. Lauterbach in JE 7:347).

scholastic problems on tablets, which they threw into the house of study. When the problems were dealt with satisfactorily, that was the end of it; but when they were not solved, R. Meir and R. Nathan would write down the solutions, which they again threw into the house of study. R. Yose said to the sages, "Torah is outside but we are inside!" At this, Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel conceded, "[Very well], we will readmit them, but let us impose on them the penalty that no ruling in Halakhah is to be reported in their names." Thereafter, a ruling by R. Meir was quoted anonymously as "Others say," and a ruling by R. Nathan as "Some say."

[Presently], in their dreams, R. Meir and R. Nathan were told, "Go and make peace with Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel." R. Nathan went, but R. Meir did not, saying, "Dreams are of no consequence."

When R. Nathan came, Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel remarked to him, "If the exilarch's girdle worn by your father has helped you to become president of the court, who will avail you to become patriarch?"[1]

278. Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] said: Three were humble—my father,[2] the Bene Betera,[3] and Jonathan son of Saul.[4]

279. Isi ben Judah used to call Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel "a shop stocked with superb purple."[5]

280. When Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel died, locusts came up,[6] and troubles abounded.[7]

R. Phinehas ben Yair (1st third of 3d century C.E.)

281. It is said of R. Phinehas ben Yair that never in his life did he say grace over a piece of bread that was not his own;[8] and that, from the day he reached the years of discretion, he did not avail himself even of his own father's table.[9]

282. It is related of R. Phinehas ben Yair that when he was living in a city in the south, two poor men came there to seek a livelihood. They had with them two seah of barley, which they deposited with him, but then forgot about them and went away. Year after year R. Phinehas ben Yair sowed the barley, reaped it, gathered it, and stored it in a granary. After a lapse of seven years, the two men returned and asked for their barley. R. Phinehas ben Yair recognized them and said, "Fetch camels and asses, and come to take your stores [of grain].[10]

283. While R. Phinehas ben Yair was on his way to ransom captives, he came to the river Ginnai. "O Ginnai," said he, "split your waters for me, that I may pass through you." The river: "You are traveling to do the will of your Maker; I, too, am flowing to do the will of my Maker. You may or may not accomplish your task. I am certain to accomplish mine." R. Phinehas: "If you will not split, I shall decree against you that no water ever pass through you again." The river split. A certain man who was carrying wheat for Passover happened to be there. So R. Phinehas told the river, "Split for this man also, since he is occupied with performing a precept." The river split again. Now, an Arab who had joined them earlier during the journey was there too, and R. Phinehas once again told the river, "Split for this one as well, so that he should not say, 'Is this how a fellow traveler is treated?' " The river split a third time.

His disciples asked, "Can we cross it too?" R. Phinehas replied, "He who feels certain that never in his life has he put a Jew to shame can cross and suffer no harm."

R. Joseph exclaimed: How great is this man [R. Phinehas]—as great as Moses and the sixty myriads [of Israelites together].[11]

Continuing on his journey, R. Phinehas came to a certain inn, where some barley was placed before his donkey, but she would not eat. The barley was sifted, but the donkey would not eat. It was carefully picked; still the donkey would not eat. "Perhaps," suggested R. Phinehas, "the barley has not been tithed?" The barley was tithed, and then the donkey ate it. R. Phinehas said, "This poor creature is on a journey to do the will of her Creator, and you try to feed her untithed grain!"

His disciples asked him, "Our master, did you not teach us that he who purchases [grain from an unlearned person] for an animal is exempt from the obligations about grain that may not have been tithed?" R. Phinehas replied, "But what can I do with this poor creature if she chooses to be strict with herself?"

When Rabbi [Judah] heard of the arrival of R. Phinehas, he went out to meet him and asked him, "Will you please dine with me?" "Certainly," R. Phinehas answered. Rabbi [Judah]'s face at once brightened with joy. So R. Phinehas said, "Did you suppose that I had vowed not to derive any benefit from an Israelite? Oh, no. The people of Israel are holy. But there are some who desire [to benefit others] and have not the means; while others have the means but not the desire, and it is written, 'Never dine with a niggardly man, never fancy his dainties,' etc. [Prov. 23:6]. But you have the desire and also the means. However, right now I am in a hurry, for I am engaged in performing a mitzvah. But on my return, I will come and visit you."

When R. Phinehas returned, he happened to enter

---

1. B. Hor 13b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel.
3. They were heads of the Sanhedrin in the days of Herod. When they found themselves unable to answer a question concerning Passover, they resigned their post in favor of Hillel, who provided the answer.
4. He told David, "You are going to be king over Israel, and I shall be second to you" (1 Sam. 23:17). B. BM 84b–85a.
5. ARN 18.
6. Possibly tax gatherers who robbed the people.
7. B. Sot 49b.
8. He accepted no invitations.
9. B. Hul 7b.
10. Deut. R. 3:3; P. Dem 1:3, 22a.
11. The river split for him as the sea did for Moses.

[Rabbi (Judah)'s courtyard] by a gate near which some white mules were standing. He exclaimed, "The angel of death is in this house,[1] and I am to dine here!" As soon as Rabbi [Judah] heard what R. Phinehas had said, he went out to him and announced, "I shall sell the mules." R. Phinehas replied, " 'Thou shalt not put a stumbling block before the blind' " (Lev. 19:14). "I shall abandon them." "You would be causing damage [as they run wild]." "I shall hamstring them." "There is a prohibition against inflicting pain on living creatures." "I shall kill them." "That would be counter to the ruling prohibiting wanton waste." As Rabbi [Judah] kept pressing R. Phinehas, a mountain rose up between them.[2]

Then Rabbi burst into tears and said, "If such is [the power of the righteous] while they are alive, how much greater must it be after their death!"[3]

284. A story is told of a pious man who used to dig cisterns, pits, and holes [to contain water] for those who come and go. Once, his daughter, on her way to be wed, was crossing a river and was swept away [by the current]. All the people came to the pious man seeking to comfort him, but he refused the comforting. Even when R. Phinehas ben Yair came to comfort him, he refused his comforting as well. So R. Phinehas asked, "Is this the man you regard as pious?" The people replied, "Our master, the man has been doing such good deeds, and yet such a [cruel] thing befell him." R. Phinehas: "Is it possible that God would chastise with water a man who honored his Creator with water?" Just then a rumor reverberated in the city: The daughter of So-and-so is back. Some say that [as she fell into the water] she was held up by a branch of a thorny tree. Others say that an angel in the likeness of R. Phinehas ben Yair came down and saved her.[4]

285. A story is told of the king of Saracenia, who happened to drop a pearl. A mouse [scampered by and] swallowed it. So the king came to R. Phinehas ben Yair, who asked him, "Am I a worker of magic?" The king: "I came because of your good name." Then R. Phinehas commanded all mice to gather around him. When he saw one of them come in waddling, he said, "Here, the pearl is in this one." Then he commanded the mouse to disgorge, and it spewed out the pearl.[5]

R. Judah I, the Patriarch (Rabbi, Our Holy Rabbi); R. Hiyya the Elder and His Sons (fl. last quarter of 2d century to beginning of 3d century C.E.)

286. As soon as R. Akiva died, Rabbi was born.[6]

287. At one time the [Roman] government issued a decree prohibiting Israel from circumcising their children. During that period, our holy Rabbi was born. His father, Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel, asked: How dare we set aside the decree of the Holy One and comply with the decree of these wicked ones? Immediately he rose up and circumcised his son.

When the magistrate in charge of the city heard of this, he had Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel summoned and asked him: Why did you violate the emperor's decree? Rabban Simeon: We are only doing what the Holy One commanded us. The magistrate: I have great respect for you, since you are the head of your people. But it is the emperor's decree, and I cannot allow you to violate it. Rabban Simeon: What do you intend to do? The magistrate: We will send your family to the emperor, and he will do what he wishes. So he dispatched our holy Rabbi and his mother to the emperor. After journeying all day, toward evening, they arrived at the inn kept by the grandfather of Antoninus.[7] And as it happened, Antoninus was born at the very time our holy Rabbi was born. Our holy Rabbi's mother, held in affection by Antoninus's mother, went to her at once. [Upon seeing her distress], Antoninus's mother asked: What troubles you? The mother of our Rabbi: Such-and-such—that we do not circumcise—was decreed against us, and since I did circumcise my son, he and I are being taken to the emperor. When the mother of Antoninus heard this, she said: If you wish, take my child, who is not circumcised, and give me your child. She did what was suggested, and the mother of our holy Rabbi continued her journey.

Upon her arrival, the magistrate in charge of her city brought her into the presence of the emperor. The emperor commanded that the child be examined, and they found him to be uncircumcised.

At that, the emperor, furious at the magistrate, roared: My decree concerned circumcised children, and you brought me an uncircumcised child! The emperor commanded that the magistrate be put to death, while our holy Rabbi and his mother were sent away in peace.

When the two returned to the house of Antoninus, his mother said: Since the Holy One has wrought a miracle for you through me and for your son through my son, let them always be friends.[8]

288. From the days of Moses to Rabbi, we find no other person in whom Torah and wealth were combined.[9]

289. R. Simeon ben Menasya said in the name of R. Simeon ben Yohai: Beauty and strength, wealth and honor, wisdom and hoary age, and children are an ornament to the righteous and an ornament to the world.

The aforementioned seven qualities, which the sages specified as becoming to the righteous, were all realized in Rabbi and his sons.[10]

---

1. White mules are prone to kick and kill.
2. So that dining at Rabbi's home became impossible.
3. B. Hul 7a–b; P. Dem 1:3, 22a.
4. P. Dem 1:3, 22a; Deut. R. 3:3.
5. P. Dem 1:3, 22a.
6. B. Kid 72a.
7. Marcus Aurelius, surnamed Antoninus, was to become emperor of Rome (161–80 C.E.).
8. BhM 6:130–31; Tosafot on B. AZ 10b.
9. B. Git 59a.
10. B. Avot 6:8; P. Sanh 11:4, 38a.

290. After R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon died, Rabbi sent messengers to propose marriage to his widow. She responded with the question "Shall a untensil used for holy food be used for profane food?" Rabbi sent messengers again: "Granted that he may have outstripped me in learning, but was he at all my superior in good deeds?" She replied, "As for learning, I do not know whether or not he was greater than you. But [that he was greater than you] in good deeds, I know full well, since he invoked suffering upon himself."[1]

So, declaring, "Suffering is precious," Rabbi invoked suffering upon himself for thirteen years, six through stones in the kidneys, and seven through scurvy.

Rabbi's steward was wealthier than King Shapur. [So numerous were his cattle that] when he set out fodder for them, their lowing could be heard for three mil; and he deliberately set out their fodder just when Rabbi was entering the privy [in order that Rabbi's cries of pain would not be heard]. Yet even so, Rabbi's voice [lifted in pain] was louder than that of the cattle and could be heard even by distant seafarers.

Nevertheless, the sufferings of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon were superior [in virtue] to those of Rabbi. For whereas those of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon came to him directly in consequence of his love [of God] and departed in such love, those of Rabbi came to him as the result of an incident [in which he acted improperly] and departed as a result of another incident in which he acted properly.

They came to him because of an incident [in which he acted improperly]: A calf was being taken to be slaughtered. Just then Rabbi was seated in front of the Babylonians' house of study in Sepphoria. The calf broke away, hid its head under Rabbi's skirts, and lowed pitifully, as though pleading, "Save me." "Go," said Rabbi. "For this you were created."

Then it was said [in heaven], "Since he has no pity, let the suffering [he invoked sometime ago] come upon him now."

And they departed because of another incident [in which he acted properly]: One day Rabbi's maidservant was sweeping the house. [Seeing] some young weasels lying there, she was about to sweep them away. "Let them be," he said to her, "for it is written, 'And His tender mercies are over all His works' " (Ps. 145:9).

Then it was said [in heaven], "Since he is compassionate, let Us be compassionate to him."[2]

291. R. Yose bar Avin said: During the entire thirteen years that Rabbi suffered from pain in his teeth [brought on by scurvy], there were no miscarriages in the Land of Israel and no women suffered pain in childbirth.

Our Rabbi was very modest and used to say, "I am prepared to do whatever any person tells me, except what the Bene Betera did for my ancestor [Hillel]—they actually relinquished their high office and promoted him to it. Still, if R. Huna the Exilarch were to come up to the Land, I would [relinquish my office and] seat him above me, for he is descended from Judah, while I am descended from Benjamin; he is descended from Judah on the male side, while I am descended [from Judah] only on the female side." But when R. Hiyya the Elder said to him, "Look, R. Huna is outside!" Rabbi's face went pale. When R. Hiyya saw that Rabbi's face had gone pale, he said, "It is R. Huna's coffin that has come." Rabbi said to R. Hiyya, "Go and see who wants you outside." When he went out and found no one, he knew that he was placed under a ban—and a ban is no fewer than thirty days.

R. Yose bar Avin remarked: During those thirty days that R. Hiyya the Elder was under Rabbi's ban, he taught Rav, his sister's son, all the [exegetical] principles of the Torah—the source for the halakhic rulings of the Babylonians.

At the end of the thirty days, the prophet Elijah, ever remembered for good, came before Rabbi disguised as R. Hiyya the Elder and laid his hand upon his teeth, which were promptly cured. The next day, when R. Hiyya visited Rabbi and asked him, "How are your teeth?" Rabbi replied, "Since you laid your hand upon them, they have been cured." "I know nothing about it," R. Hiyya said, and then went on to say, "Alas for you, O women in the Land of Israel who are about to give birth. Alas for you, O unborn infants."[3]

When R. Hiyya told Rabbi, "I know nothing about it," Rabbi realized that it was Elijah, ever remembered on good occasions, who had healed him. Thereafter Rabbi began to defer to R. Hiyya—so much so that he told his disciples to seat R. Hiyya on an inner bench [near his own person]. R. Ishmael son of R. Yose protested, "Even in front of me?" Rabbi: "Heaven forbid! Such a thing shall not be done in Israel. R. Hiyya is to be seated on an inner bench, but R. Ishmael son of R. Yose is to be seated on an innermost bench."[4]

292. Our masters taught: Once Rabbi, suffering from a pain in his stomach, asked, "Does anyone know whether a heathen's apple cider is prohibited or permitted?" R. Ishmael son of R. Yose replied, "My father once had the same complaint, and they brought him a heathen's apple cider which was seventy years old; he drank it and recovered." Rabbi: "All this time you knew the law as well as the cider's effectiveness, and you let me suffer!" Upon inquiry, they found a heathen who possessed three hundred kegs of apple cider seventy years old. Rabbi drank some of it and recovered. At that, he exclaimed, "Blessed be He who is everywhere, who has delivered His universe into the keeping of those who guard its well-being."[5]

293. Once, when R. Hiyya and R. Simeon bar Rabbi sat together, one of them began the following discussion: A man at prayer should direct his eyes downward [toward the place here on earth where the Temple once stood], in keeping with the verse "And Mine eyes and Mine heart

---

1. See above in this chapter, §233.
2. B. BM 84b–85a; Gen. R. 33:3.
3. Now that Rabbi, freed of his pain, no longer shields you.
4. Gen. R. 33:3 and 96:5; P. Kil 9:3, 32b.
5. He thanked God that the beverage that could cure him had been preserved for the seventy years needed to make it effective. B. AZ 40b.

shall be there perpetually" (1 Kings 9:3). But the other said: He should direct his eyes upward [toward the heavens], for it is said, "Let us lift up our heart with our hands, unto God in the heavens" (Lam. 3:41). Meanwhile R. Yose bar Avin son of R. Yose had joined them, and he asked, "What subject are you discussing?" "One's posture at prayer." R. Ishmael: "My father ruled thus: 'A man at prayer should direct his eyes downward and direct his heart upward so that both verses may be complied with."

While this discussion was going on, Rabbi entered the house of study.[1] R. Hiyya and R. Simeon, being nimble, got to their places quickly and sat down. But R. Ishmael son of R. Yose, who moved slowly because of his corpulence, sought to take a shortcut to his place by laboriously striding [over the heads of the disciples seated on the ground].[2] Avdan[3] cried out to him, "Who is this person who dares stride over the heads of a holy people?" R. Ishmael: "It is I, Ishmael son of R. Yose, who have come to learn Torah from Rabbi." Avdan: "Are you qualified to learn Torah from Rabbi?" R. Ishmael: "Was Moses qualified to learn Torah from the lips of the Almighty?" "Are you Moses?" "Is your Rabbi God?"

While this was going on, the widow of a man who had died without issue came before Rabbi [to ask for release through the rite of halitzah]. Rabbi said to Avdan, "Go out, and arrange to ascertain [whether she has reached puberty].[4] After Avdan had gone out, R. Ishmael said to Rabbi, "Thus said my father: 'In the relevant portion in Scripture [Deut. 25:7], the future husband of the widow is designated as "[adult] man,"[5] whereas the age of the widow, whether adult or minor, is not specified. [Hence her release through halitzah is effective in any case.]' " "Come back," Rabbi cried after Avdan. "You need not [arrange for any examination]; the venerable sage has already taught us the decision [on the subject]." Avdan, in a hurry to get back, proceeded to stride [over the heads of disciples seated on the ground]. So R. Ishmael son of R. Yose said to him, "A man [like me], whom the holy people need, may stride over the heads of a holy people. But how dare a man [like you], whom the holy people do not need, dare stride over the heads of a holy people?" At that, Rabbi said to Avdan,"Stay where you are."[6]

294. Rabbi sat [in the teacher's chair] and said, "[On the Sabbath] it is forbidden to store cold [water in sand to keep the water cold]." R. Ishmael son of R. Yose timidly spoke up: "My father permitted it." Rabbi: "[So be it.] The venerable sage has already taught us the proper ruling."

Regarding Rabbi's response, R. Papa said: Pause and consider how much the two sages cherished each other. Were R. Yose alive, he would have sat deferentially before Rabbi, since we know that R. Ishmael son of R. Yose, fully as learned as his forebears, sat deferentially before Rabbi. Yet Rabbi said of R. Yose, "The venerable sage has already taught us the proper ruling."[7]

295. Rabbi kept extolling R. Hiyya the Elder in the presence of R. Ishmael son of R. Yose, saying, "A great man, a holy man!" One day, R. Ishmael saw him in the bathhouse, and R. Hiyya did not stand up for him. So R. Ishmael said to Rabbi, "I saw this disciple of yours, whom you praised so highly, in the bathhouse, and he did not stand up for me." Later, Rabbi asked R. Hiyya, "Why did you not stand up for R. Ishmael?" R. Hiyya replied, "I was absorbed in the Aggadah on Psalms." When Rabbi heard this, he assigned two disciples to accompany R. Hiyya, so that he should not expose himself to danger [by falling into a pit or stumbling over a stone].[8]

296. While Rabbi was expounding Scripture, he became aware of the odor of garlic. So he said, "Let him who has eaten garlic leave." R. Hiyya got up and left. Then all the other disciples got up and left [to share the blame]. The next morning R. Simeon, Rabbi's son, met R. Hiyya and said to him, "So it is you who upset my father yesterday!" R. Hiyya: "God forbid that I should be guilty of such a thing in Israel."[9]

297. The prophet Elijah used to frequent Rabbi's house of study. One day—it was the new moon—Elijah was late. [When he did come] Rabbi asked him, "Why was the master delayed today?" Elijah replied, "[I had to wait] until I woke Abraham, washed his hands, let him say his prayers, and put him back to bed. And the same for Isaac and for Jacob."

"But why did not the master wake the three of them at the same time?"

"I feared that the three, praying forcefully together, might bring the Messiah before his time."

Rabbi: "And are their likes to be found in this world?" Elijah: "There are—R. Hiyya and his sons." So Rabbi proclaimed a fast, and R. Hiyya and his sons were requested to descend [to the reading desk].[10] When the three read, "He causeth the wind to blow," a wind blew; when they read, "He causeth the rain to descend," rain descended. When they were about to read, "He quickeneth the dead," the universe trembled. At that, it was asked in heaven, "Who has revealed this secret to the world?"[11] The reply: "Elijah." So Elijah was summoned and flogged with sixty lashes of fire. Then Elijah, disguised as a fiery bear, came into the midst of the three at prayer and dispersed them.[12]

---

1. When everyone present was expected to take his usual place.
2. During a master's discourses, the disciples were seated in Eastern fashion on the ground.
3. One of Rabbi's disciples. Avdan is a contraction of Abba Yudan, the name by which he is known in the Palestinian Talmud.
4. And is consequently eligible to perform halitzah.
5. Which excludes a minor.
6. B. Yev 105b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
7. B. Sanh 24a.
8. Gen. R. 33:3; P. Kil 9:3, 32b.
9. He assumed the blame for the offensive odor, in order to avoid a lengthy interruption devoted to finding out who the real offender was. B. Sanh 11a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
10. In talmudic times the reading desk in a synagogue was on a level lower than the rest of the building. On fast days, three men instead of one led the congregation in prayer.
11. That R. Hiyya's prayers are so efficacious.
12. B. BM 85b.

298. On one occasion, Rabbi decreed that disciples should not be taught in the marketplace. Nevertheless, R. Hiyya went out into the marketplace and taught Rav and Rabbah bar Bar Hana, sons of his two brothers. When Rabbi heard of this, he took offense. So the next time R. Hiyya appeared before him, Rabbi said to him, "Iyya,[1] go see who is calling you outside."[2] Realizing that Rabbi had taken his disobedience to heart, he submitted on his own for thirty days to the ban following a reproof. On the thirtieth day, Rabbi sent word to him: "Come." When he came, Rabbi asked him, "Why did you disregard my decree?" "Because," R. Hiyya replied, "it is written, 'Wisdom crieth aloud in the streets' " (Prov. 1:20). Rabbi said to him, "You may have read Scripture once but not twice, or if twice not thrice, or if thrice, then it was not explained to you properly. What the text means is that when one studies Torah indoors, the Torah proclaims his merit outside [in the streets]."[3]

299. Rabbi and R. Hiyya were on a journey, and when they came to a certain town, they said, "If there is a disciple of the wise here, we shall go and pay our respects to him." They were told, "There is one disciple of the wise here, but he is blind." R. Hiyya said to Rabbi, "Stay [here]. You must not lower your patriarchal dignity. I shall go and pay my respects for both of us." But Rabbi took hold of R. Hiyya and went with him. As they were about to leave that disciple of the wise, he said to them, "You have paid your respects to one who can be seen but cannot see; may you be granted the privilege of paying your respects to Him who sees but cannot be seen." Hearing that, Rabbi said to R. Hiyya, "And you would have deprived me of such a blessing!"[4]

300. After Rabbi had learned thirteen variant interpretations in Halakhah, he taught R. Hiyya only seven of them. Eventually Rabbi fell sick [and forgot his learning]. Then R. Hiyya restored to him the seven interpretations that Rabbi had taught him, but the other six were lost. Now, there was a certain fuller who had overheard Rabbi when he was studying them by himself, and he had come to know all of them. So R. Hiyya went to the fuller's house and learned them from his mouth, and then he was able to restore them to Rabbi. When Rabbi met the fuller, he said to him, "You taught[5] both R. Hiyya and me." Others say that Rabbi said to the fuller, "You taught R. Hiyya, and he taught me."[6]

301. On the eve of the fast of the ninth of Av, which fell on a Sabbath, from the time of the afternoon prayer onward, Rabbi, R. Hiyya the Elder, and R. Ishmael son of R. Yose were engaged in setting forth the literal meaning of the Scroll of Lamentations. [Because it was already growing dark], they left out one of the acrostic chapters, saying, "We shall complete the scroll tomorrow." When Rabbi was about to leave for home, he caught his small toe [and fell down, hurting himself]. So he applied to his own person the words "Many are the sufferings of the wicked" (Ps. 32:10). R. Hiyya said to him, "This befell you because of our wrongdoing, as it is written, 'The breath of our nostrils, the anointed of the Lord, was caught through our fault' " (Lam. 4:20). R. Ishmael son of R. Yose said to him, "Even if this were not from the passage we failed to deal with, we might have quoted it to Rabbi; all the more so when it is precisely the passage we failed to deal with."[7]

302. Judah and Hezekiah, the [twin][8] sons of R. Hiyya, once sat at table with Rabbi without uttering a word. Finally Rabbi said: Give the lads plenty of wine, to induce them to say something. When they were feeling the wine's effect, they began by saying: [Messiah] the son of David will not appear before the two ruling houses in Israel—the exilarchate in Babylonia and the patriarchate in the Land of Israel—come to an end, for it is written, "And [the son of David] shall be for a Sanctuary, for a stone of stumbling, and for a rock of offense to both houses of Israel" (Isa. 8:14). Rabbi exclaimed: sons, you are thrusting thorns into my eyes![9] At this, R. Hiyya remarked: Master, do not be angry, for the numerical value of the letters in yayin[10] is seventy, and likewise the letters in sod.[11] When yayin ("wine") goes in, sod ("secret") comes out.[12]

303. The people of Simonia[13] came to Rabbi and said: Please give us a man who can act as expounder of Scripture, judge, children's preceptor, scribe, and teacher of the Oral Law, thus providing all the services we need. He gave them Levi ben Sisi. They erected a large dais, had him sit in a seat high above it, and proceeded to ask him a question in Halakhah, which he could not answer. So they said: He may not be a master of Halakhah. Then they asked him a question in Aggadah, and again he could not answer. So they went to Rabbi and said: Is this the kind of person we asked you go give us? He replied: As you live, I have given you a man as good as I. Rabbi and Levi sent for and asked him about the same Halakhah, and he gave the relevant answer; about the same Aggadah, and again he gave the relevant answer. Then Rabbi asked Levi: Why were you unable to answer the people of Simonia? Levi replied: They erected a huge dais for me and had me sit in a seat high above it, and my opinion of myself grew so exalted that words of Torah escaped me. Rabbi applied to him the verse "If thou hast been humiliated, it is because of exaltation so great that thou didst have to clap thy hand

---

1. He imitated R. Hiyya's inability to distinguish between the several gutturals.
2. A polite way of commanding him to leave the academy.
3. M. MK 16b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
4. B. Hag 5b.
5. Literally, "made."
6. B. Ned 41a.
7. P. Shab 16:1, 15c; Lev. R. 15:4.
8. See B. Yev 65b.
9. Foretelling as they did the abolition of the patriarch's office, which he occupied.
10. Yod (10) + yod (10) + nun (50) = 70.
11. Samekh (60) + vav (6) + dalet (4) = 70.
12. B. Sanh 38a.
13. A town in Lower Galilee.

over thy mouth" (Prov. 30:32).[1] What caused you to be humiliated in matters of Torah [you knew so well]? Your having allowed yourself to be exalted on account of them.[2]

304. There were two mutes in Rabbi's neighborhood, and whenever Rabbi entered the house of study, they, too, entered. Sitting down before him, they nodded their heads and moved their lips. Rabbi besought mercy in their behalf, and they were healed. Then it was discovered that they were versed in Halakhah—in the Sifra [on Leviticus], in the Sifre [on Numbers and Deuteronomy], in the Tosefta; indeed, in the entire Talmud.[3]

305. R. Hone said: The sages did not know what the words serugin, haloglogot, and matate meant; nor who is to be more deferred to—one greater in wisdom or one greater in years. They decided: Let us go and inquire at the house of Rabbi. When they got there, one said to the other, "Let So-and-so go in first." "No, let So-and-so go in first." A maidservant of Rabbi's came out and said, "Enter according to your seniority in years." They began entering at intervals. So she asked them, "Why are you entering serugin, serugin ('in a broken line')?" Among them was a young man carrying purslane, which fell from his hand. So the maidservant said, "Young man, your haloglogot ('purslane') has fallen all over the place. I will bring a matate," and she brought a broom [and swept it up].[4]

306. Once when Rabbi happened to visit the place where R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon lived, he inquired of the inhabitants, "Did that righteous man leave a son?" "Yes," he was told, "and [he is so handsome that] every harlot whose hire is two zuz hires him for four." So Rabbi had him brought into his presence [and was so impressed by him that] he ordained him and entrusted him to R. Simeon ben Issi ben Lakonia, his mother's brother [to be taught]. Every day R. Eleazar's son would say, "I want to go back to my village," to which R. Simeon would reply, "They have made you a sage [at the ceremony of ordination] and spread over you a cloak trimmed with gold; they address you as 'Rabbi.' And yet you say, I want to go back to my village!" Finally R. Eleazar's son said, "I swear not to speak of it again [and henceforth will devote myself to study]." When he became a great scholar, he went and sat in Rabbi's academy. On hearing his voice, Rabbi observed, "This voice is like the voice of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon." He was told, "He is his son." So Rabbi applied to him the verse "The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life; and he that winneth souls is the true sage" (Prov. 11:30). [Thus] "the fruit of the righteous is a tree of life" applies to R. Yose son of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon; "and he that winneth souls is the true sage" applies to R. Simeon ben Issi ben Lakonia.

When R. Yose died, he was carried to the cave in which his father was buried. The cave's entry was girdled by a snake. "Snake, O snake," they adjured it, "open your mouth [to release your tail] and let the son come to be with his father"; but it would not open its mouth for them. Now, the people thought that it was because the father was greater in learning than the son. But a divine voice came forth and proclaimed, "It is not because the father is greater in learning than the son, but because the father underwent suffering in the cave, and the son did not.[5]

307. Rabbi once happened to visit R. Tarfon's town, where he asked the inhabitants, "Has that righteous man, who used to swear by the life of his children, left a son?" They replied, "He left no son, but a daughter's son remains, and [he is so handsome that] every harlot who is hired for two zuz hires him for four." So Rabbi had him brought into his presence [and was so impressed by him that he] said to him, "Should you repent, I will give you my daughter in marriage." He did repent. Some say, he married Rabbi's daughter but later divorced her; others that in fact he did not marry her, lest it be said that his repentance was on her account.[6]

308. During years of scarcity, Rabbi opened his storehouse of victuals, proclaiming: Let those who are masters of Scripture, masters of Mishnah, masters of Gemara, masters of Halakhah, or masters of Aggada enter, but those who are unlearned may not. R. Jonathan ben Amram pushed his way in and said to Rabbi, "Master, give me food." Rabbi asked him, "My son, have you studied Scripture?" He replied, "No." "Have you studied Mishnah?" "No." "If so, how can I give you food?" R. Jonathan: "Give me food, for even a dog and a raven are given food."[7] So he gave him some food. After he went away, Rabbi's conscience troubled him, and he said: Woe is me that I have given my bread to a man without learning! R. Simeon bar Rabbi ventured to say to him, "Perhaps it is your disciple Jonathan ben Amram, who all his life has refused to derive any perquisite from honor paid to the Torah." Upon inquiry, it was found to be so. As a result, Rabbi said, "All may enter."[8]

309. All a disciple of Rabbi's had was two hundred zuz less one.[9] Every three years,[10] Rabbi was in the habit of bestowing on him the tithe for the poor. Once it happened that some of Rabbi's disciples cast a jaundiced eye upon this disciple and [gave him one zuz], bringing the amount he owned to two hundred zuz. When Rabbi came, as had been his custom, to give him the tithe, the disciple said, "Master, now I own the minimum that makes it impossible for me to accept the poor man's tithe." Rabbi replied,

---

1. JV: "If thou hast done foolishly in lifting up thyself, or if thou hast planned devices, lay thy hand upon thy mouth." But zammota ("thou hast planned devices") may also mean "thou art muzzled," hence, "clap thy hand over thy mouth."
2. P. Yev 12:6, 13a; Gen. R. 81:2.
3. B. Hag 3a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
4. P. Meg 2:2, 73a.
5. See above §221 in this chapter, and §233. B. BM 85a.
6. B. BM 85a.
7. The verse "He giveth to the beast his food, to the young ravens which cry" (Ps. 147:9), R. Jonathan takes to mean, "As God feeds these, so you, feed me."
8. B. BB 8a.
9. Which gave him the status of poverty.
10. The third and sixth years in the seven-year cycle.

"The kind of stratagem hypocrites use has struck this poor man." So he hinted to the other disciples that they take this one into a food shop where, through a small purchase, he would be made poorer by one coin the size of a carob seed. Then, as had been his custom, Rabbi was again able to bestow the tithe on the poor disciple.[1]

310. Our Rabbi used to declare pounded beans ownerless [public property] so that R. Simeon ben Halafta might acquire them.[2]

311. Rabbi made a feast for his disciples, serving them tongues that were tender as well as tongues that were tough. They proceeded to select the tender tongues and passed up the tough ones. So he said to them: Take heed of what you are doing. Even as you select the tender and pass up the tough, so let your tongues be tender, gentle toward one another.[3]

312. Rabbi said: Trouble comes to the world only because of the unlearned.

The incident of the royal crown for whose payment the inhabitants of Tiberias were taxed confirms what Rabbi said. For at that time, when the inhabitants of Tiberias came to Rabbi and said, "Let the sages give their share with us," he refused. "Then we will run away," they said. "Run," he replied. So half the unlearned ran away. At that, the [Roman] emperor remitted half the sum demanded. The other half of the inhabitants then came to Rabbi and said, "Let the sages give their share with us." He again refused. "We will run away," they said. "Run," he replied. So they, too, ran away, leaving only a certain fuller. The money was then demanded of him, and he also ran away. Consequently, the demand for money for the crown was dropped.

At this, Rabbi said, "You see, trouble comes to the world only because of the unlearned."[4]

313. R. Judah said in the name of Samuel: For each festal day of the Romans, the household of Rabbi had to present them with a fatted ox. A sum of forty thousand coins had to be paid for the concession to present the ox not on the festal day itself but on the following day. Another forty thousand coins had to be paid for permission to present the ox not alive but slaughtered. Finally, forty thousand coins more had to be paid for exemption from the obligation of presenting the ox at all.[5]

314. The story is told of thirteen brothers—twelve of them died childless—whose widows came before Rabbi, asking to marry the surviving brother. Rabbi said to him: Go and take them in levirate marriage. The brother: I do not have the means to maintain all of them. The widows: Each of us will maintain the household for one month during the year. The brother: But who will maintain it during the thirteenth month that is intercalated?[6] Rabbi: I will maintain the household during that month. He prayed in their behalf, and they went away. After three years, they came carrying thirty-six babies—came and stood in front of Rabbi's house. Rabbi was told: A village of babies are here to greet you. Rabbi looked out of a window and saw them. He asked: What brings you here? The women: We are here to ask that you maintain us during this thirteenth month. So that month, maintain them he did![7]

315. Rabbi came out of the bathhouse, wrapped himself in his garments, and sat down to attend to the people's needs. Though Rabbi's servant mixed a cup of water and wine for him, Rabbi was so busy attending to people's needs that he could not spare a moment to take it from his servant, who [kept holding it until he] dozed off. Then Rabbi turned and gazed at him, and said, Solomon put it well: "Sweet is the sleep of the laboring man, whether he eat little or much; but the satiety of the rich will not suffer him to sleep" (Eccles. 5:11)—those [rich in Torah] like ourselves are so busy attending to the people's needs that we are not even allowed to sleep.[8]

316. Rabbi showed respect to rich men.

Thus, when Bonyos ben Bonyos once visited Rabbi, Rabbi called out, "Make room for the owner of one hundred maneh." When another person entered, he called out, "Make [more] room for the owner of two hundred maneh." "Master," R. Ishmael son of R. Yose said, "Bonyos's father has a thousand ships at sea and an equal number of hamlets on land [yet to the one who came later you gave more room]." So Rabbi said, "When you meet Bonyos's father, tell him, 'Do not send your son to me wearing garments so drab.' "[9]

317. Rabbi once asked R. Joshua ben Korhal, "How have you managed to reach such long life?" R. Joshua: "Do you begrudge me the length of my life?" Rabbi: "My inquiry is concerned with Torah, [whose precepts for long life] it is necessary for me to learn." R. Joshua: "In my life I never gazed at the countenance of a wicked man."[10]

As R. Joshua was about to die, Rabbi said to him, "Bless me." R. Joshua: "May it be [Heaven's] will that you reach half my days." Rabbi: "Not their entire number?" R. Joshua: "[While you go on living], will you have the generation after you do nothing but graze cattle?"[11]

318. It was said of Antoninus and Rabbi that during summer or winter, neither radishes nor lettuce nor cucumbers ever ceased being served at their tables.[12]

---

1. P. Sot 3:4, 19a.
2. Ruth R. 5:17, §7.
3. Lev. R. 33:1; Yalkut, Ps., §767.
4. It was only because of them that money for the crown was demanded in the first place. B. BB 8a.
5. B. AZ 16a.
6. In a leap year.
7. P. Yev 4:12, 6b.
8. Eccles. R. 5:11, §1.
9. B. Er 85b–86a.
10. Thus Elisha said to wicked King Jehoram, "Were it not that I respect King Jehoshaphat of Judah, I would not look at you or notice you" (2 Kings 3:14).
11. Since they are going to be scholars, they will have no positions of dignity if you continue to live. B. Meg 28a.
12. Vegetables conducive to good health and good appetite. B. AZ 11a.

319. Our Rabbi instructed R. Aphes: Write a letter in my behalf to our lord, the emperor Antoninus. So he wrote, "From Judah the Patriarch to our lord emperor Antoninus." Rabbi took it, read it, and tore it up. Then he said, "Write, 'From your servant Judah to our lord emperor Antoninus.' " R. Aphes asked, "Master, why do you make so little of your dignity?" Rabbi replied, "Am I better than my ancstor Jacob? Did not Jacob say, 'Thus saith thy servant Jacob' (Gen. 32:5)?"[1]

320. Whenever our Rabbi had to travel to the government [in Rome], he would look at this text[2] and then not take any Roman with him. One time he neglected to look at this text and took some Romans with him. Before he reached Acco, he had to sell even his traveling cloak.[3]

321. It happened once that when Antoninus came to Caesarea, he sent for our holy Rabbi, who arrived accompanied by his son R. Simeon and by R. Hiyya the Elder. When R. Simeon saw there a legion whose soldiers were comely, strong, and so tall that their heads seemed to reach the capitals of columns, he said to R. Hiyya, "See how fattened Esau's calves are." R. Hiyya then took R. Simeon and led him to the marketplace, where he saw a basket of grapes and figs with flies [buzzing] over them. R. Hiyya said, "These flies and that legion are alike." Later, when R. Simeon came up to his father's home, he said, "This is what I said to R. Hiyya, and that is how he replied to me." Rabbi commented, "R. Hiyya the Babylonian ascribed too much substance to them by likening them to flies. These legions are regarded [by God] as nothing at all. But flies—through them, God executes His commissions."[4]

322. Antoninus asked Rabbi, "Why does the sun rise in the east and set in the west?" Rabbi: "Were it the other way around, you would have asked the same question." Antoninus: "My question still stands—why should the sun set in the west? [Why does it not return to the east, where it has risen, or to any other point in the sky?]" Rabbi: "The sun sets in the west to make obeisance to its Maker,[5] as is said, 'The host of the heavens makes obeisance to Thee' " (Neh. 9:6). Antoninus: "Then let the sun go midway in heaven, make obeisance,[6] and set at once." Rabbi: "For the sake of workers and wayfarers [the sun sinks gradually]."[7]

323. Antoninus asked our holy Rabbi, "Is one allowed to pray every hour?" "It is forbidden." Antoninus: "Why?" Rabbi: "So that one should not become irreverent toward the Almighty." Antoninus refused to accept this explanation. What did our holy Rabbi do? Early in the morning he went to the palace of Antoninus and called out, "Hail, O lord."[8] An hour later, he came again: "[Hail], Emperor." After another hour: "Peace upon you, O King." At this, Antoninus asked, "Why do you treat royalty with such contempt?" Rabbi replied, "Let your ears hear what your mouth utters. If you, who are no more than flesh and blood, characterize him who salutes you every hour as one who holds you in contempt, surely a man should not burden every hour [with his prayers] the King who is King of kings."[9]

324. Antoninus came to Rabbi and said, "Pray for me." Rabbi: "May it be [Heaven's] will that you be delivered from cold." Antoninus: "This prayer makes no sense. Add a garment, and the cold goes away." So Rabbi said, "May it be [Heaven's will] that you be delivered from dry heat." Antoninus: "Now this prayer makes sense. O that your prayer could be accepted, for Scripture says, 'Nothing can escape the sun's heat' " (Ps. 19:7).[10]

325. When our Rabbi entertained Antoninus on the Sabbath, he served him cold dishes, which Antoninus ate and liked. On another occasion, our Rabbi entertained him on a weekday, when he served him hot dishes. Antoninus said, "I found the cold dishes more tasty than the hot." Our Rabbi: "The hot dishes lack one seasoning." Antoninus: "Can there be anything at all lacking in the emperor's pantry?" Our Rabbi: "The hot dishes lack Sabbath. Does your pantry have Sabbath?"[11]

326. Antoninus once said to Rabbi, "It is my desire that my son Severus should reign in my stead and that Tiberias should be declared a [Roman] colony [free of taxes]. Were I to make just one request of the senators, they would comply. But if there were two requests, they would not." At that, Rabbi brought a man, had him climb atop his companion, handed the one on top a dove, and then had the one below tell the one on top to let the dove in his hand go free. So Antoninus said to himself: It seems that Rabbi intimates: Ask the Senate to confirm my son Severus to reign in my stead, and tell Severus that Tiberias is to be made a colony.

[On another occasion] Antoninus said to Rabbi, "Certain prominent Romans distress me." At that, Rabbi proceeded to bring him into a garden, where on each of several days, in Antoninus's presence, he pulled out a single radish from the radish patch. Antoninus said to himself: It seems that Rabbi intimates: Do away with them singly, one at a time, but do not attack all of them at once.

Antoninus had a daughter named Gira, who had gone astray. So he sent Rabbi a gargira [a garden rocket (an herb also known as arugula), intimating that Gira had gar, "gone astray"]. Rabbi in return sent him kusbarta [cor-

---

1. The point: Jacob, R. Judah's ancestor, was submissive to Esau, Rome's ancestor. Gen. R. 75:5.
2. In which Jacob rejected Esau's offer "Let me now leave with thee some of the folk" (Gen. 33:15).
3. Because they robbed him. Gen. R. 78:15; Yalkut, Va-yishlah, §133.
4. Tanhuma, Va-yeshev, §3.
5. The Presence dwells in the west.
6. At some distance from its Maker, as is done in royal courts.
7. If the sun sank suddenly, they would have no way of planning when to stop work or halt in their journey. B. Sanh 91b.
8. Kiri keri; Greek: Kyrie chaire.
9. Tanhuma, Mi-ketz, §9.
10. P. Sanh 10:5, 29c.
11. B. Shab 119a; Gen. R. 11:4.

iander, intimating, kus, "slay," barta, "the daughter"]. Antoninus then sent karata [leeks, intimating, "If so, my line will be karata—cut off"]. So in response, Rabbi sent him hassa [lettuce, intimating hus, "spare her"].

Each and every day, Antoninus would send Rabbi a leather bag filled with granules of gold, topped with a layer of wheat, saying to his messenger, "Carry this wheat to Rabbi." After a while, Rabbi said, "I do not need your gold; I have enough gold of my own." But Antoninus answered, "Then leave it to those who will come after you, for they will be forced to give it [as bribes] to those who will come after me."

Antoninus had an underground passage whereby he went from his palace to Rabbi's house. Every time [he visited Rabbi], he had two slaves with him—one he put to death at the door of Rabbi's house, and the other [who had been left behind] he put to death [on his return] at the door of his own home. Antoninus also said to Rabbi, "When I call, make sure that no one else is with you." One day, when he found R. Hanina ben Hama sitting there, he said to Rabbi, "Did I not tell you that no man should be with you when I call?" Rabbi replied, "He is not an [ordinary] man." "Then," said Antoninus, "let him go and summon the servant who is asleep outside the door." R. Hanina ben Hama went out and found that he was dead. He reasoned: What shall I do? Shall I go and tell Antoninus that his servant is dead? It may cost me my life to bring bad news to the emperor. Shall I leave him and run away? I would then be guilty of acting disrespectfully toward royalty. So he besought mercy for the servant, brought him back to life, and sent him in. Said Antoninus, "I now see that even the least among you can bring the dead back to life. Nevertheless, when I visit, let no one else be with you."

Every time [Antoninus visited], he used to attend Rabbi, waiting on him with food and drink. When Rabbi wanted to get up to his bed, Antoninus would crouch in front of it, saying, "Get up to your bed by stepping on me." Rabbi, however, would demur, "It is not proper to treat royalty so disrespectfully." Antoninus would say, "O that I might be placed as a mattress under you in the world-to-come!" Once he asked him, "Will I enter the world-to-come?" "Yes!" said Rabbi. "But," said Antoninus, "is it not written, 'There will be no remnant to the house of Esau' (Obad. 1:18)?" "That," Rabbi replied, "applies only to those [descendants of Esau] whose evil deeds are like those of Esau."

When Antoninus died, Rabbi said, "The bond [of our love] is snapped."[1]

327. A certain Judeo-Christian once said to Rabbi, "He who formed the mountains did not create the wind, and He who created the wind did not form the mountains, for it is written, 'For, lo, He that formeth the mountains and createth the wind' " (Amos 4:13). Rabbi replied, "You fool, go on to the end of the verse: 'The Lord, [the disciple] of hosts, is His Name" (ibid.). The Judeo-Christian said, "Give me three days' time, and I will come back with a reply." Rabbi spent those three days fasting. Then, just as he was about to partake of food, he was told, "A Judeo-Christian is waiting at the door." Rabbi exclaimed, "Yea, they put poison into my food" (Ps. 69:22).[2] But the waiting Judeo-Christian said, "My master, I bring tidings that prove you right. Your adversary could find no answer, and so he threw himself off the roof and died." Rabbi: "Will you dine with me?" The Judeo-Christian. "Yes." After they ate and drank, Rabbi [suspicious of his guest's Jewish loyalty] said to him, "Do you wish to drink the cup of wine over which the blessing following grace [after meals] is said, or in lieu of it accept forty gold coins?"[3] The Judeo-Christian replied, "I would rather drink the cup for the blessing." Subsequently Rabbi's willingness to pay forty gold coins for the cup of wine for the blessing that follows grace was widely quoted.[4]

R. Isaac[5] said: [In the event, Rabbi's suspicion proved right. For the Judeo-Christian left Israel and went to Rome, and] this family, still to be found among [the Christian] notables of Rome, is known as the family of Bar Livianus.[6]

328. Our masters taught: As Rabbi lay dying, he said, "I need to see my sons." When his sons entered, he instructed them: "Be sure to accord honor to your mother. My lamp is to burn in its usual place, my table is to be set in its usual place, and my bed is to be spread in its usual place. Joseph of Haifa and Simeon of Efrath, who attended me in my lifetime, are to attend me at my death."

He went on, "I need to see the sages of Israel." When the sages of Israel entered, he said to them, "Do not have me eulogized in the small towns [when my funeral procession passes through],[7] and reassemble the academy after thirty days. My son Simeon is to be counselor sage, my son Gamaliel patriarch, and Hanina ben Hama head of the academy.

"I need to see my younger son." When R. Simeon entered, he passed on to him the principles of [esoteric] wisdom.

"I need to see my elder son." When R. Gamaliel entered, he passed on to him the regulations of the patriarchate. "My son," he said, "surround your patriarchate

---

1. B. AZ 10a–b.

2. Rabbi thought that it was the same heretic who had argued with him three days earlier.

3. A guest's leading the grace after meals was a way of thanking the host for hospitality. What began as politeness became in time the guest's prerogative, all but his property. For yielding the right to lead in the grace, Rabbi offered his guest forty gold coins—ten coins for each amen voiced by the guest following each of the four blessings in the grace spoken by the host.

4. Here bat kol, generally translated "a divine voice," is taken in its literal meaning of "echo, reverberation," hence, "widely quoted." See Tosafot, s.v. "bat kol" on B. Sanh 11a. Rabbi Mordecai Savitsky of Boston, Mass., provided the reference to the translator.

5. He lived in the fourth century C.E. in Palestine, when Christianity became the state religion.

6. For the interpretation of R. Isaac's remark, the translator is indebted to his friend Rabbi Gershon B. Chertoff of Elizabeth, New Jersey. B. Hul 87a and En Yaakov, ad loc.

7. On the way from Sepphoris, where he died, to Beth Shearim, where he was to be buried. So Rashi on B. Sanh 47a.

with people of distinction, and discipline students with severity."

On the day Rabbi appeared to be on the verge of death, the sages decreed a public fast to beseech God's mercy [for the continuance of Rabbi's life]. They also threatened, "He who says that Rabbi is dead will be stabbed with a sword."

Rabbi's handmaiden went up to the roof and prayed, "They on high desire Rabbi [to join me], and those below desire Rabbi [to remain with them]. May it be [God's] will that those below prevail over those above." But when she saw that he was in great pain, she prayed, "May it be [God's] will that those above prevail over those below." However, since the sages did not cease praying for [God's] mercy [to extend Rabbi's life], she picked up a jar and threw it from the roof to the ground. Startled at the noise made by the smashed jar, the sages ceased their prayers [for an instant], and the soul of Rabbi departed.

[But not knowing that Rabbi had died], the sages said to Bar Kappara, "Go and find out." He went, and, upon finding that Rabbi was dead, he, with head covered and garments rent, walked over to the window [of the room where Rabbi lay], looked out, and began the announcement, saying:

Our brethren of the family of Jedaiah,[1] hear me, hear me!
Angels and the just who are earth's foundations gripped the holy ark.
The angels prevailed over the just who are earth's foundations—
The holy Ark is taken captive.

The sages asked, "Is Rabbi dead?" Bar Kappara: "You have said it. I did not say it." They rent their garments, and the sound of their rending reached as far as Gofefata, a distance of three mil [from Sepphoris].

As he lay dying, Rabbi stretched his ten fingers toward heaven and said, "Lord of the universe, to You it is revealed and known that with all my ten fingers I labored hard to perform Torah's precepts and that I did not derive any worldly benefit, not even as little as may be enjoyed by the smallest finger. May it be Your will that there be peace in my [last] resting place."

A divine voice came forth and said, "He shall enter into peace; he shall have rest on his couch" (Isa. 57:2).

The day Rabbi died, a divine voice came forth and said, "Whoever was present at Rabbi's death is destined for life in the world-to-come."

There was a fuller who used to visit Rabbi every day but did not visit him on that day. When he heard the voice, he went up to a roof, threw himself to the ground, and died. Again a divine voice came forth and said, "The fuller also is destined to life in the world-to-come."[2]

329. When Rabbi fell ill, R. Hiyya visited him and found him weeping. "Master," he asked, "why are you weeping? Have we not learned: 'When a man dies smiling, it is a good omen for him; when he dies weeping, it is a bad omen for him'?" Rabbi replied, "I weep because [I am about to part from] Torah and her precepts."[3]

330. When Rabbi Judah [I] the Patriarch died, R. Yannai proclaimed: The restrictions on priests do not hold today.[4]

331. After Rabbi died, humility and fear of sin ceased.[5]

332. R. Hiyya said: The day Rabbi died, holiness ceased.[6]

333. R. Hiyya also said: Whenever I see Rabbi's grave, I shed tears over it.[7]

334. Whenever R. Hanina and R. Hiyya were in a dispute, R. Hanina would say to R. Hiyya, "Do you presume to dispute with me? If—God forbid!—the Torah were forgotten in Israel, I could restore it by my dialectical power." R. Hiyya would reply, "But I see to it that the Torah is not forgotten in Israel. What do I do? I go and sow flax, make nets [from the flax cords], and trap deer, whose flesh I give to orphans and out of whose skins I prepare scrolls, upon which I write the Five Books [of Moses]. Then I go to a town that has no teachers for the young and teach the Five Books to five children and the six divisions [of Mishnah] to six young people. And I say to them, 'Until I return, read Scripture to one another and recite Mishnah to one another.' Thus I see to it that the Torah is not forgotten in Israel."

It is to such preoccupations of R. Hiyya that Rabbi referred when he said, "How great are the words of Hiyya!" When R. Simeon son of Rabbi asked his father, "Greater than yours?" he replied, "Yes." When R. Ishmael son of R. Yose asked Rabbi, "Even greater than my father's?" he replied, "God forbid. Such a thing should not be said in Israel!"[8]

335. As for R. Hiyya, the angel of death could not come near him. So one day he took on the guise of a poor man and came knocking on the door, saying, "Bring out some bread to me." It was brought out to him. Then the angel of death called to R. Hiyya [who remained indoors], "Won't you be kind to a poor man? Why don't you show sympathy to a poor man [by coming out of the house and saying a few kind words to him]?" R. Hiyya opened the door. The angel of death showed him a rod of fire, and he yielded his soul.[9]

---

1. Jedediah was the priestly family whose home was Sepphoris, where Rabbi died.
2. B. Ket 103a–104a; P. Kil 9:4, 32a–b; Eccles. R. 7:12, §1 and 9:10, §9.
3. B. Ket 103b.
4. They are allowed by way of exception to participate in Rabbi's funeral rites. P. Ber 3:1, 6a.
5. B. Sot 49b.
6. B. Ket 103b.
7. Ibid.
8. B. Ket 103b; B. BM 85b.
9. B. MK 28a.

336. R. Haviva said: R. Haviva ben Surmaki told me: I saw a certain disciple of the wise whom the prophet Elijah used to visit. That morning the disciple's eyes were clear, but in the evening they looked as though they had been burned by fire. When I inquired, "What happened?" he replied, "I asked Elijah, 'Show me the [departed] sages as they ascend to the academy in heaven.' He replied, 'You may look upon all of them, except the throne of R. Hiyya—upon it you may not look.' 'How am I to distinguish the various thrones?' 'All, when they ascend and descend, are accompanied by angels, except R. Hiyya's throne, which ascends and descends of its own accord.' But I could not control my curiosity. So I gazed upon it, whereat two sparks of fire came forth, smote me, and blinded my eyes. The following day, I went and prostrated myself upon R. Hiyya's grave, crying out, 'Master, it is your Baraita that I study!'[1] and I was healed."[2]

337. R. Yose observed a fast for eighty days in order to see R. Hiyya the Elder. Finally, when R. Yose did see him, his hands began to tremble and his eyesight was dimmed. You might suppose [from this incident] that R. Yose was a man of little consequence. Far from it. For a weaver once came to R. Yohanan and said to him, "In my dream I saw the firmament about to fall, and one of your disciples propped it up." R. Yohanan asked, "Do you think you could identify him?" The weaver: "If I see him, I will recognize him." Then R. Yohanan had all his disciples come before the weaver, and he identified R. Yose.

R. Simeon ben Lakish—some say R. Joshua ben Levi—observed three hundred fasts to be able to see R. Hiyya the Elder, but did not succeed. In the end, he felt aggrieved, saying, "Did he perchance labor more in Torah than I?" and was told, "R. Hiyya spread Torah in Israel more than you. What's more, he was willing to wander from place to place [in doing so]." R. Simeon: "Was I not willing to wander from place to place?" He was told, "You wandered to study. He wandered to teach."[3]

338. Resh Lakish was marking the caves where sages were buried.[4] But when he approached the cave of R. Hiyya, it eluded him. Dejected, he said, "Master of the universe, did I not discuss the subtleties of Torah as much as he did?" A divine voice came forth and told him, "You discussed Torah's subtleties as much as he did. But you did not spread Torah as much as he.[5]

339. Resh Lakish said: May my life be an expiatory sacrifice for R. Hiyya and his sons. For in ancient times, when Torah was forgotten in Israel, Ezra came up from Babylon and reestablished it. When it was again forgotten in Israel, Hillel the Babylonian came up and reestablished it. When it was once again forgotten in Israel, R. Hiyya and his sons came up and reestablished it.[6]

Bar Kappara (1st half of 3d century C.E.)

340. When Rabbi made a wedding banquet for his son, he invited all the sages but forgot to invite Bar Kappara. So Bar Kappara went and wrote on the door [of the banqueting hall], "The end of all rejoicing is death; so what is gained by your rejoicing?"

Rabbi went out, looked at the writing on the door, and asked, "Who did this to us?" He was told, "It was Bar Kappara, whom you forgot to invite." Next morning Rabbi arranged another banquet to which he invited all the sages, including Bar Kappara. They sat down to dine, and at each and every course during the meal, Bar Kappara related three hundred fox fables. The guests enjoyed them so much that the food became cold, and they touched none of it. Rabbi asked his servants, "Why do our courses go in and come back without being touched by the guests?" The servants answered, "Because of an old man who sits there and, as each course is brought in, relates three hundred fables." Rabbi went over to him and said, "Why do you do this? Allow the guests to eat!" He replied, "So that you should not say that I came here for your dinner; I came here to be with my colleagues." Presently, each apologized to the other, and they made peace.[7]

341. Rabbi made a wedding feast for his son R. Simeon but did not invite Bar Kappara. So Bar Kappara wrote on the pavilion in which the nuptial canopy was set up, "Twenty-four thousand myriads of denars were spent for this pavilion, yet the father of the groom did not invite Bar Kappara." He went on to say of Rabbi, "If they who do not do His will are so well off, how much better off will be those who do His will." At that, Rabbi invited Bar Kappara, who then modified his dictum: "If they who do His will are so well off in this world, how much better off by far will they be in the world-to-come.[8]

342. Rabbi used to honor Ben Elasah.[9] So Bar Kappara said to him, "Everyone inquires of Rabbi [in matters of Halakhah], but you do not make such inquiry." Ben Elasah: "Tell me what I should inquire about." Bar Kappara: Inquire about the meaning of

> He who is lowest of the low[10] manages to look down from heaven,
> In whose innermost parts he has been making quite a stir,
> Terrifying scholars whose minds take wing.
> Young men see him and hide,
> Old men stand up [in deference].

---

1. There were several sets of Baraitas—laws not included by Rabbi in his compilation of the Mishnah—the most important of which was the one put together by R. Hiyya and R. Oshaia.
2. Yet the redness of the burning was still perceptible. B. BM 85b.
3. P. Kil 9:3, 32b.
4. To alert priests not to go there and be defiled.
5. B. BM 85b.
6. B. Suk 20a.
7. Lev. R. 28:2; Eccles. R. 1:3, §1.
8. B. Ned 50b.
9. Rabbi's son-in-law, who was very rich but no scholar.
10. Bar Kappara dubs Ben Elasah "Sheol"—the netherworld—hence, "lowest of the low."

He who gets away says [behind his back], "Ho, ho."
But he who is trapped [into honoring such a one] is trapped by his own inquiry.

[After Ben Elasah made his inquiry of Rabbi], Rabbi turned his face around and saw Bar Kappara smiling. Rabbi said to Bar Kappara, "Elder, I don't think I know who you are." Bar Kappara then was certain that he was not going to be ordained.[1]

343. R. Simeon son of Rabbi and Bar Kappara were once sitting and studying together. When they came to a tradition they could not understand, R. Simeon said to Bar Kappara, "This matter needs Rabbi." Bar Kappara said to R. Simeon, "What, pray, can Rabbi possibly say about this?" When R. Simeon went and told his father what Bar Kappara had said, Rabbi took great exception to the remark. The next time Bar Kappara visited Rabbi, Rabbi said, "Bar Kappara, I don't believe I know you at all." Bar Kappara realized that Rabbi had taken the matter to heart, and so for thirty days imposed upon himself the disability of a reprimand.[2]

344. On the day Rabbi laughed, punishment came to the world.[3] So he said to Bar Kappara [who was given to practical jokes], "Do not make me laugh, and I will give you forty measures of wheat." Bar Kappara replied, "But let the master see to it that I take the measures of wheat in whatever way I choose." Presently he took a large basket, covered it with pitch,[4] placed it on his head, and came and said to Rabbi, "Let the master measure out for me the forty measures I claim." [At the sight of Bar Kappara's getup] Rabbi burst out laughing and said, "Did I not warn you not to make me laugh?" Bar Kappara said, "I have come merely to take the wheat to which I have a claim."[5]

345. Bar Kappara said to Rabbi: I dreamed that my nose (af) fell off. Rabbi replied: God's wrath (af) will fall away from you.

Bar Kappara: I dreamed that my hands were cut off. Rabbi: You will not require the labor of your hands.

Bar Kappara: I dreamed that my legs were lopped off. Rabbi: You will ride horseback.[6]

346. Bar Kappara was walking up and down the seashore of Caesarea when he saw a ship sinking in the Great [Mediterranean] Sea and the proconsul [of Caesarea] emerging from it all but naked. On seeing him, Bar Kappara went over to him, greeted him, and gave him food and drink, and handed him three more sela, saying, "For a distinguished man like you, it is right to expend three more sela." Some time later, Jews were arrested during a roundup following a riot. When it was asked, "Who will go and intercede for us?" one said to another, "Bar Kappara [is the man to go], because he is highly esteemed by the government." When he told them, "You know that this government does nothing without being paid," they said to him, "Here are five hundred denars. Take them and go to intercede for us." He took the five hundred denars and went to the government. When the proconsul saw him, he stood up, greeted him, and asked, "Why has the master troubled to come here?" Bar Kappara answered, "I beg of you to have mercy upon these [arrested] Jews." The proconsul: "You know that this government does nothing without being paid." Bar Kappara: "I have with me five hundred denars. Take them and intercede for us." He replied, "These denars are to be kept by you in return for the five sela you gave me; your people are spared in return for the food and drink you provided for me in your house; and as for you, go in peace and great honor."

To Bar Kappara they applied the text "Cast thy bread upon the waters" (Eccles. 11:1).[7]

347. Once, while two disciples were seated before Bar Kappara, cabbage, prunes, and young chickens were set before him. Bar Kappara gave permission to one of the disciples to pronounce the appropriate blessing. When that disciple in his haste said the blessing over chickens,[8] his colleague sniggered at him. Bar Kappara became angry and said, "I am not angry with the one who pronounced the blessing but with the one who sniggered. If it appears that your colleague acted like one who has never tasted meat before, what right have you to snigger at him?"[9] But then Bar Kappara changed his mind and said, "I am not angry at the one who sniggered, but I am angry at the one who pronounced the blessing," adding, "Even if there be no wisdom in me, there is my seniority."[10]

R. Simeon ben Halafta (1st half of 3d century C.E.)

348. Once, on the eve of Passover (some say on the eve of Yom Kippur), while R. Hiyya the Elder and R. Simeon ben Halafta were seated studying Torah in the great house of study in Tiberias, they heard the sound of people running about in excitement. When R. Simeon asked R. Hiyya, "What are these people doing?" R. Hiyya answered, "He who has money is purchasing [what he needs for the festival], and he who has no money is running to his employer, who gives it to him." R. Simeon said, "If so, I too will run to my Master and He will give it to me." He went out and prayed in a cave in Tiberias, and beheld

---

1. P. MK 3:1, 81c.
2. B. MK 16b.
3. During the thirteen years R. Judah the Patriarch suffered pain, no drought came to the world. See B. BM 85a.
4. So that it would retain the wheat.
5. B. Ned 50b–51a.
6. Rabbi interpreted Bar Kappara's dreams in keeping with the practice of giving bad dreams a good meaning. B. Ber 56b.
7. Eccles R. 11:1, §1.
8. The proper order would have been a blessing over the prunes, "fruit of the tree"; then over the cabbage, "fruit of the ground"; and last, over the chickens, "by whose will everything was created."
9. In such a case the sequence of blessings would be reordered, since the preferred food is given priority.
10. Hence he should have asked me before hastily pronouncing the blessing. B. Ber 39a.

a hand holding out a pearl to him. So R. Simeon took it to our Rabbi, who asked him, "Where did you get this? It is priceless. Take these three denars—go and prepare food in honor of the day, and after the festival we shall advertise it, and you will take whatever money it brings in." R. Simeon took the three denars, went to make his purchases, and then came home. His wife said to him, "Simeon, have you turned thief? All your possessions amount to no more than a hundred meah. How were you able to make all these purchases?" He replied, "They were made out of what the Holy One provided." At that, she said, "If you won't tell me where you got the money, I will taste nothing at all." He told her, "This is what I prayed to Heaven for and what was given me from Heaven." She said, "Do you wish that your canopy in heaven should have one pearl less than that of your colleagues?" When he asked, "What shall I do?" she replied, "Go and return your purchases to their owners, the denars to their owner, and the pearl to its Owner."[1]

When our Rabbi heard that R. Simeon was grieved, he sent for his wife and said to her, "You have caused much anguish to this righteous man!" She replied sharply, "What do you want—that his canopy should have one pearl less than yours in the world-to-come?" He said to her, "And even if it should, will not one among us make it up to you?" She answered him, "Rabbi, how do we know that we will be privileged to see your face in the world-to-come? Will not each and every righteous man have his own chamber?" Rabbi admitted that she was right.

As soon as R. Simeon heard what Rabbi had said, he went and returned the pearl. The instant he stretched out his hand to return it, an angel came down and took it.

When R. Simeon received the pearl, the palm of his hand was below [the hand from heaven]. But when he reached out to return it, the palm of his hand was above [the hand from heaven], as when a man lends to his fellow.

Our masters taught: The second miracle was greater than the first, for it is the way of those on high to give, but not to take back.

349. R. Simeon ben Halafta received from R. Hiyya a field in tenancy. R. Simeon asked: How much does it bring in? R. Hiyya: A hundred kor [of produce]. R. Simeon sowed and harvested it, but it brought in less than a hundred kor. So he asked: Did not you, my teacher, say that the field brings in a hundred kor? R. Hiyya: Yes. R. Simeon: But I sowed it, gathered in the crop, and found that it produced less than a hundred kor. R. Hiyya: Where did you set up the threshing floor? R. Simeon: At the highest point of the city. R. Hiyya: But is it not written, "Get thee down to the threshing floor" (Ruth 3:3)? Nevertheless, go and sift the chaff again, and you will find that what was left over will make up the hundred kor.[2]

350. R. Simeon ben Halafta said: It happened that a cabbage stalk in our field grew so tall that I could go up and down it as one goes up and down a ladder.[3]

351. R. Simeon ben Halafta said: I had a stalk of mustard in my field, and I used to climb it as one climbs to the top of a fig tree.[4]

352. R. Simeon ben Halafta was a fat man. One day the heat all but overpowered him. So he climbed to the top of a boulder, where he sat down, and said to his daughter, "Daughter, fan me with your fan, and I will give you talents' worth of spikenard." Just then a breeze began to blow. So he exclaimed, "How many talents' worth of spikenard do we owe the Proprietor of this breeze?"[5]

353. It is said of R. Simeon ben Halafta that he was given to experimenting. What kind of experimenting? R. Mesharsheya said: It is written, "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways and be wise; which having no chief, overseer, or ruler, provideth her bread in the summer" (Prov. 6:6–8). R. Simeon ben Halafta said, "I shall go and find out whether it is true that ants have no king." At the summer solstice, he went and spread his cloak over an ant hill. When one of the ants came out, he marked it. It immediately went back into the hill and informed the other ants that the shady time of the day had already come.[6] At that, all the ants went outside. Just then he raised his cloak so that the sun beat down upon the ants. So, they set upon this ant and killed it.[7] He then said, "It is clear that they have no king. Otherwise, they would have had to obtain royal sanction!"[8]

354. R. Simeon had a tree trunk in his garden, and [one day] he saw a hoopoe building a nest for itself in that trunk. So, saying to himself: What does that unclean bird want in my orchard? R. Simeon went and demolished the nest. But the hoopoe put it together again. What did R. Simeon ben Halafta do then? He brought a board and placed it over the face of the nest and drove a nail into it. What did the hoopoe do? It went and brought a certain herb, wound the herb around the nail, and pulled it out. Seeing that, R. Simeon ben Halafta said: It is advisable that I hide this herb, so that thieves may not learn to use it [in burglaries] and ruin mankind.[9]

355. R. Simeon ben Halafta had a hen that lost its plumage. So he wrapped the hen in the [leather] apron used by coppersmiths and put it into an oven, and then its feathers grew back thicker than before.[10]

---

1. Ruth R. 3:4; Exod. R. 52:3.
2. Ruth R. 5:12
3. Sif Deut., §317.
4. P. Pe 7:4, 20b.
5. B. BM 86a.
6. Ants avoid the fierce heat of the sun and only venture forth in the shade.
7. For having deceived them.
8. To execute the ant whose information proved wrong. B. Hul 57b.
9. Lev. R. 22:4.
10. B. Hul 57b.

356. R. Simeon ben Halafta had a hen whose femur was dislocated. So he had a tube of reed made for it [as support], and it recovered.[1]

357. Once, when R. Simeon ben Halafta was walking on a road, some roaring lions closed in on him. As soon as he quoted, "The young lions roar after their prey" (Ps. 104:21), two joints of meat came down [from heaven]. The lions ate one joint and left the other. R. Simeon ben Halafta brought the remaining joint to the house of study and asked, "Is this a clean or an unclean thing?" He was told, "No unclean thing can come down from heaven."[2]

358. One of the notables of Sepphoris had occasion to celebrate the circumcision of his son, and the inhabitants of En Te'enah came up to honor him [with their presence], R. Simeon ben Halafta among them. Upon arriving at the city gate, they noticed youngsters standing around and playing in front of a courtyard. When they saw R. Simeon ben Halafta, who was both distinguished and handsome, they heckled him: "You will not get away from here until you do a little dance for us." He said to them, "You cannot expect this of me—I am an old man." Though he rebuked them, they were neither frightened nor cowed. He lifted up his face and saw [the wall of] the courtyard about to collapse [on the youngsters because of their impertinence]; so he said to them, "Will you say loudly what I am about to tell you? Say to the owner of this courtyard that if he is asleep, he had better wake up, because while the beginning of sin is sweet, its end is bitter."

At the sound of their conversation, the owner of the courtyard woke up. He came out and fell at R. Simeon ben Halafta's feet, saying, "My master, I beg you to pay no attention to the words of these youngsters, who are both young and foolish." R. Simeon: "But what can I do for you, seeing that the decree [for the wall's collapse] has already been issued? I will, however, postpone it for you until you remove everything you own from this courtyard." As soon as the owner removed all that he had in the courtyard, [the wall of] the courtyard trembled and collapsed.

R. Simeon and his companions then went on to share in the observance of the circumcision [to which they had been invited]. There the child's father gave them seven-year-old wine to drink, saying, "Drink some of this wine; I trust that at the child's wedding feast the God of heaven will again allow me to offer you more of this wine, which I am aging." They responded, "As you brought this child into the covenant [of Abraham], so may you bring him to Torah and to the nuptial canopy." They feasted until midnight.

Then, at midnight, R. Simeon ben Halafta, who relied on his [spiritual] strength, set out to walk to his town. The angel of death met him on the road and asked, "Is it because you rely on your good deeds that you venture out at an hour that is not the [safe] time [to be abroad]?" R. Simeon: "And you, who are you?" The angel of death [smiling]: "I am God's emissary." R. Simeon: "What are you smiling at?" The angel: "At the talk of mortals who say, 'Thus-and-thus shall we do,' though not one of them knows when he may be summoned to die. The same man in whose home you have just feasted, who said to you, 'I am aging more of this wine to serve at my son's wedding feast'—look, his son's nametag is with me. After thirty days, I am to take him."

R. Simeon ben Halafta then asked the angel of death, "As you live, show me my tag." The angel: "As you live, I have no power over you or the likes of you." R. Simeon: "Why not?" The angel: "Because day after day, as you labor in Torah and mitzvot, and perform deeds of mercy, the Holy One keeps adding years to your years." R. Simeon: "May it be the Holy One's will that even as you have no power over our nametags, so may you have no power over the prayers we utter." He besought mercy, and the infant remained alive.[3]

359. Rabbi asked R. Simeon ben Halafta, "Why did we not have the pleasure of receiving you during the recent festival, as my forebears had the pleasure of receiving your forebears?" R. Simeon replied, "Rocks have become higher, near ones have become distant, distant ones have become near, and that which makes peace in the home has ceased to be."[4]

R. Hanina bar Hama (fl. 1st half of 3d century C.E.)

360. As he was about to die, Rabbi enjoined his son to appoint R. Hanina bar Hama as head of the academy. Why did he himself not appoint him? R. Derosai said: Because the people of Sepphoris [where R. Hanina was born] protested his appointment. But just because the people of Sepphoris protested, should their wishes have been deferred to? [Besides], even now these people protest and protest. So if we deferred to them with regard to R. Hanina [in Rabbi's time], we should have deferred to them with regard to R. Hanina in Rabbi's son's time as well.

R. Eleazar son of R. Yose said: The reason R. Hanina bar Hama was not appointed is because on one occasion he publicly refuted Rabbi. Rabbi was sitting and reciting [from memory] the verse "But they that shall at all escape of them, shall be on the mountains like doves of the valleys, all of them moaning" (Ezek. 7:16). Rabbi read the word for "moaning" as homiyyot, and R. Hanina corrected him: "The word is homot." Rabbi asked him, "With whom did you study Scripture?" R. Hanina: "With R. Hamnuna, the scribe in Babylonia." Rabbi: "When you go down there, tell him to appoint you elder." R. Hanina then understood that Rabbi would never appoint him.

When Rabbi died, his son wished to appoint R. Hanina [head of the academy]. But he would not accept the

---

1. Ibid.
2. B. Sanh 59b.
3. Eccles. R. 3:2, §3; Deut. R. 9:1; Yalkut, Prov. 10, §947.
4. "I have become old. My eyes, which could see far in the distance, barely see at close range. My ears do not hear, even when something is repeated many times. My sexual capacity is no more." B. Shah 152a; Lev. R. 18:1.

appointment, saying, "I will not accept the appointment until you first appoint R. Aphes of Daroma."

A certain elder was there who said, "Whether R. Hanina or R. Aphes is appointed first, I should be second." R. Hanina agreed to be appointed third and merited living a great many years. R. Hanina used to say, "I do not know how I earned the merit of living a great many years—whether because of my willingness to have my appointment deferred, or whether because, when going up from Tiberias to Sepphoris, I took a detour to pay my respects to R. Simeon ben Halafta in En Te'enah."[1]

361. R. Hanina lived in Sepphoris, where many times questions in Halakhah were put to him, which he decided by himself. Even though R. Yohanan and Resh Lakish lived there, he did not associate them with him in his deliberations. The two said, "This elder is fully aware that his knife is sharp [his mind is keen]."

On one occasion, he did associate them with him. They asked, "Master, why did you take note of us this time?" He replied, "[Yes, I have resolved many questions by myself.] But may such-and-such befall me if—with each and every question that I resolved on my own—I had not heard Rabbi dealing in theoretical discourse as many times as there are hairs on my head, and in actual cases at least three times. However, this particular question was considered by Rabbi only twice. That is why I associated you with me this time."[2]

362. There was an epidemic in Sepphoris, which did not affect the street where R. Hanina lived. So the people of Sepphoris said: How is it that this old man—he and his quarter—live among us in peace, while the rest of the city is in distress? R. Hanina came to them and said: Though there was only one Zimri[3] in his generation, twenty-four thousand perished in Israel; and how many Zimris have we in our generation! Yet [believing yourselves wronged], you are indignant!

Once a fast was decreed [in Sepphoris], yet no rain came down; while R. Joshua [ben] Levi decreed a fast in the south, and it did rain. So the people of Sepphoris said: R. Joshua ben Levi brings down rain for the people in the south, while R. Hanina withholds rain from the people of Sepphoris. They concluded that it was necessary to decree a second fast.

R. Hanina sent for R. Joshua ben Levi and said to him: Look here, master, join us for the service of the fast. So both of them went out to the special service, but rain still did not come down.

Then R. Hanina appeared before the people of Sepphoris and said: R. Joshua ben Levi does not bring down rain for the people in the south, nor does R. Hanina withhold rain from the people of Sepphoris. But the people of the south have receptive hearts—when they hear words of Torah, they submit themselves to those words; while the people of Sepphoris have unreceptive hearts—when they hear words of Torah, they refuse to submit.

When R. Hanina returned to his home, he looked up and saw that the air was still clear. So he said: That's enough of that [henceforth rain must come]! At once, rain came down. He then vowed never again to utter such an impertinent command, saying: What right have I to tell the Creditor not to collect the debt owed Him?[4]

363. R. Hanina, who dealt in bees' honey, happened to have some date honey[5] which he [inadvertently] sold as bees' honey. After a while, when those who purchased it came by, he said to them, "I must not mislead you—I want you to know that the honey I sold you was date honey." They replied, "That was the kind we wanted; it was just right for the use we put it to." Nevertheless, R. Hanina set aside the money he received for that honey and [used it when he] built a house of study in Sepphoris.[6]

364. A story is told of a certain butcher in Sepphoris who sold to Jews [forbidden] flesh of animals that died of themselves or were torn by beasts. One Sabbath eve he drank [too much] wine, went up to the roof, fell down, and died. When dogs were licking up his blood, people came and asked R. Hanina: May his body be moved [on the Sabbath] away from the dogs? R. Hanina replied: It is said, "Ye shall not eat any flesh that is torn by beasts in the field; ye shall cast it to the dogs" (Exod. 22:30). This one robbed dogs [of their natural food], which he then fed to Jews. Let the dogs be—they are eating what is theirs.[7]

365. On Sabbath eve at twilight, R. Hanina used to wrap himself in a [special] robe, stand up, and say, "Come, let us go forth to welcome Queen Sabbath.[8]

366. Simeon bar Abba came to R. Hanina and said: Write me a letter of recommendation, so that I may go abroad for my livelihood. R. Hanina replied: Before long, when I join your forebears, they will say to me: We had a precious sapling in the Land of Israel, and you allowed it to go abroad!

A certain priest came to R. Hanina and asked: May I go to Tyre to perform a commandment—to undergo halitzah[9] by, or to marry, the childless widow of my deceased brother? R. Hanina replied: Your brother left the bosom of his motherland and embraced the bosom of an alien land—may He who is everywhere be blessed for having smitten him—and you would do what your brother did![10]

367. A woman once attempted to take some earth from under R. Hanina's feet, [in order to work magic against

---

1. P. Ta 4:2, 68a; Eccles. R. 7:7, §2.
2. P. Nid 2:7, 50b.
3. A prince from the tribe of Simeon who, by flagrantly cohabiting with a Midianitish woman, caused a plague that struck down twenty-four thousand Israelites. See Num. 25.
4. P. Ta 3:4, 66c.
5. Date honey was regarded as inferior.
6. P. Pe 7:3, 20b.
7. P. Ter 8:4, 45c.
8. B. Shab 119a.
9. The ceremony whereby one is freed from the obligation of marrying the childless widow of one's deceased brother.
10. You should stay in the land and let the widow come here. P. MK 3:1, 81a.

him]. R. Hanina said to her: If you think you can succeed, go ahead. [I am not afraid], because Scripture says, "There is none else beside Him" (Deut. 4:35).[1]

368. When R. Hanina's daughter died and he did not weep for her, his wife asked: Was it a mere hen that you carried out of your house? He replied: Do you want me to suffer two evils—not only bereavement but also blindness [from incessant weeping]?[2]

369. R. Hanina said: My son Shivhat died [before his time] only because he cut down a fig tree before its time.[3]

370. While R. Hanina and R. Jonathan were walking on a road, they came to two paths, one leading to the door of a place for idolatry and the other to the door of a brothel. One sage said to the other: Let us [take the path leading] to the place of idolatry, since the inclination for it has been killed [it is easily resisted]. The other said: Let us [take the path] to the brothel, overcome our inclination, and receive our reward.

As they approached the brothel, they realized that the harlots made themselves scarce.[4] So one sage asked the other: What made you so certain that you could overcome your inclination? In reply, the other quoted: "[Torah] shall watch over thee against lewdness, discernment shall guard thee" (Prov. 2:11).[5]

371. It is told of R. Hanina that when he was eighty he could remove his shoe or put it on while standing on one foot.

Concerning his continuing suppleness, R. Hanina said: Warm baths and oil with which my mother anointed me in my youth stood me in good stead in my old age.[6]

372. At the time R. Hanina was ordained by R. Hiyya bar Abba in Sepphoris, he saw a great many people running by. When he asked, "Where are all these people running?" he was told, "To R. Benaiah's house of study. There, R. Yohanan is sitting in the teacher's chair and explaining Scripture, and all the people are hastening to hear him." So R. Hanina said, "Blessed be He who is everywhere for having shown me the fruit [of my labor] while I am still alive: except for Proverbs and Ecclesiastes, I explained the Aggadot [on all other books of Scripture] to R. Yohanan."[7]

373. R. Hanina fell ill in Sepphoris. When R. Yohanan heard of it, he set out to go up from Tiberias to Sepphoris, intending to visit him. On the way, he saw a man coming down from there, and he asked, "What news of the city?" The man: "A certain master has just died, and all the people are hastening to tend to his burial." R. Yohanan understood that it was R. Hanina. So he got off the donkey, took out his Sabbath garments—thirteen robes of fine wool—and rent them, saying, "The man in whose presence I stood in awe is gone.[8]

R. Oshaia the Elder ben R. Hama (fl. 1st half of 3d century C.E.)

374. R. Hama bar Bisa went away [from home and] spent twelve years at a house of study. When he returned, he said, "I will not act as did Ben Hakhinai."[9] So he entered the local house of study and stayed there, sending word to his home [that he was back]. Just then, his son R. Oshaia happened to walk into the house of study, sit down before him, and inquire concerning rulings in Halakhah. Seeing how sharp he was in the relevant traditions, R. Hama became quite depressed as he said to himself: Had I remained home, I, too, might have had such a son.[10] Later, after R. Hama entered his home, his son came in. R. Hama, believing that the young man wished to inquire about other rulings in Halakhah, stood up before him. At that, R. Hama's wife asked, "What father stands up before his own son?" Rami bar Hama then applied to R. Hama the verse "A threefold cord is not quickly broken" (Eccles. 4:12), the threefold cord being the line of R. Oshaia the son of R. Hama bar Bisa.[11]

375. R. Yohanan said: In his generation, R. Oshaia Berabbi was as great as R. Meir in his generation. Even as in R. Meir's generation, his colleagues could not fathom the depth of his knowledge, so R. Oshaia's colleagues could not fathom the depth of his knowledge.

R. Yohanan said: The understanding of former generations was as wide as the door of the Outer Hall leading into the Temple's interior; the understanding of the latter generations no wider than the door into the Temple Hall.[12] But ours is as narrow as the eye of a needle. By "former generations" was meant such as R. Akiva. By "latter generations," such as R. Eleazar ben Shammua. But there are some who say that "former generations" means such as R. Eleazar ben Shammua, and "latter generations" means such as R. Oshaia Berabbi.[13]

376. R. Oshaia was the first interpreter of the Mishnah.[14]

---

1. He will protect me from you. B. Sanh 67b.
2. B. Shab 151b.
3. B. BK 91b.
4. Literally, "hid themselves from them," in apparent certainty that the two would not solicit them.
5. JV: "Discretion shall watch over thee, discernment shall guard thee." But mezimmah ("discretion") also means "lewdness." B. AZ 17a–b.
6. B. Hul 24b.
7. P. Hor 3:4, 48b.
8. P. MK 3:8, 83d; P. BM 2:12, 8d; B. MK 24a.
9. Who entered his house unexpectedly and nearly caused the death of his wife as a result. See B. Ket 62b.
10. He did not recognize him after twelve years and thought he was another man's son.
11. B. Ket 62b.
12. The door into the Outer Hall leading into the Temple's interior was twenty cubits wide; the one into the Temple Hall, ten cubits.
13. B. Er 53a.
14. P. BK 4:6, 4c.

377. "I made me gardens and parks" (Eccles. 2:5). These words refer to such voluminous collections of Mishnah as the collection of R. Hiyya the Elder, the collection of R. Oshaia the Elder, and the collection of Bar Kappara.[1]

378. [On Purim] R. Yudan the Patriarch[2] sent a joint of meat and a jug of wine to R. Oshaia the Elder, who replied: You fulfilled for us the injunction of "gifts to the poor" (Esther 9:22). At that, R. Yudan sent a whole calf and a huge jar of wine to R. Oshaia, who replied: Now you have fulfilled for us the injunction "of sending portions, each man to his colleague" (ibid).[3]

379. R. Oshaia the Elder was the teacher of his own blind son, who used to dine with him daily. One day, when guests came to R. Oshaia, he did not invite his son to dine with them. In the evening R. Oshaia came to his son's room and said: Young master, do not be angry at me. Because I had guests, I did not wish to embarrass the young master. For that reason I preferred not to dine with you today. The son replied: You have reassured one who is seen but cannot see. May He who sees and cannot be seen ever accept your reassurances.[4]

380. R. Oshaia the Elder went to a certain place where, on the Sabbath, he saw mourners and greeted them, saying: I do not know the custom of your place, but I greet you in keeping with the custom of our place.[5]

381. While R. Hama bar Hanina and R. Oshaia were walking among the synagogues of Lydda, R. Hama bar Hanina said to R. Oshaia: How much money my forebears sank here! R. Oshaia replied: How many souls your forebears sank here! Would it not have been better if your forebears had made it possible for people to labor in Torah?[6]

382. A certain Christian said to R. Hanina: We are more compassionate than you. Of you it is written, "Joab and all Israel remained there six months, until he had cut off every male in Edom" (1 Kings 11:16). But we—just consider how many years you have been living in our midst, yet we do you no harm whatsoever. R. Hanina replied: Will you allow a disciple of mine to join you [in debating the matter? Accordingly,] R. Oshaia joined them and said to the Christian: It is because you do not know how to go about it. You would like to exterminate all of us. But all of us are not living among you. Should you exterminate only those of us who are in your midst, you will be called a suicidal kingdom. The Christian said: By the Roman eagle! It's a tough nut to crack—whatever we do involves as much loss as profit.[7]

383. A pagan philosopher asked R. Hoshaia [Oshaia]: If circumcision is so beloved [of God], why was the mark of circumcision not given to Adam at his creation? R. Hoshaia replied: According to your reasoning, why should a man like you shave the hair of his head [with which he was born], but at the same time leave the adult hair of his beard intact?[8] The pagan sage replied: Because the hair of his head grew with him in the days of his foolish childhood. Rabbi Hoshaia then argued: If so, he should blind his eyes, lop off his hands, and break his legs, which also grew along with him since the days of his foolish childhood. The philospher exclaimed: Have we come down to such drivel? R. Hoshaia replied: I cannot let you go without a proper answer. So observe that everything that was created during the six days of creation needs finishing: mustard needs sweetening, vetches need sweetening, wheat needs grinding, and even man needs finishing.[9]

384. People came and told R. Oshaia, "The judges whom you appointed drink wine in the marketplace,"[10] but he did not believe them. One time, he came out and in fact did find his judges drinking wine in the marketplace; then he applied to himself the verse "So I came to hate life" (Eccles. 2:17) and died peacefully.[11]

R. Joshua ben Levi (fl. 1st half 3d century C.E.)

385. R. Hanina and R. Joshua ben Levi appeared before the proconsul of Caesarea, who stood up at the sight of them. When asked, "Are you standing up for these Jews?" he replied, "I beheld the visages of angels."[12]

386. R. Joshua ben Levi went up to Rome, and when [on his way back] he arrived in Acco, R. Hanina went out to meet him. Noticing that R. Joshua was limping on his hip, R. Hanina quipped: You are like your grandfather—he, too, "limped on his hip" (Gen. 32:32).[13]

387. R. Hiyya the Elder [bar Abba] went to Darom, where he stayed as the guest of R. Joshua ben Levi. [At dinner] when twenty-four courses were set before him, R.

---

1. Only some of the Mishnayyot in these collections were included in R. Judah's less bulky collection, which came to be known as "the Mishnah." Eccles. R. 2:8, §1.
2. Grandson of R. Judah I, the Patriarch.
3. P. Meg 1:4, 70d.
4. P. Pe 8:8, 21b; P. Shek 5:4, 49b. See above in this chapter, §190.
5. Where we do greet mourners on the Sabbath. P. MK 3:5, 82d.
6. The money spent to erect buildings would have been better spent to support promising scholars. P. Pe 8:7, 21b.
7. The literal translation may be: "With this concern we lie down, and with it we get up." But yoredim may also mean "weigh" or "consider loss," and olim may mean "weigh" or "consider profit. So Leon Nemoy. B. Pes 87b.
8. "Pagan philosophers in Roman times often cut the hair of their head very short but let their beard grow long" (Brother Caedmon Holmes).
9. Gen. R. 11:6.
10. Thus violating the injunction "It is not for rulers to drink wine" (Prov. 31:4).
11. Eccles. R. 2:17, §1.
12. P. Ber 5:1, 9a.
13. Even as Jacob limped after encountering Esau's guardian angel, so you limp after encountering Rome, identified with Esau. Gen. R. 78:5.

Hiyya asked: What on earth do you do on the Sabbath?[1] R. Joshua replied: We double the number of courses. Later R. Joshua ben Levi went to Tiberias, where he was the guest of R. Hiyya the Elder. R. Hiyya gave the disciples of Joshua ben Levi some drachmas and said: Go and provide your master with everything he is accustomed to eating.[2]

388. On Friday afternoons, R. Joshua ben Levi used to listen regularly to a portion of Scripture recited by his grandson. Once he forgot to do so, and, as he was going to the baths of Tiberias, leaning upon the shoulder of R. Hiyya bar Abba, he remembered that he had not listened to his grandson's portion. So he turned around and left the baths. (How was he dressed then? Still in his usual clothes, according to R. Derosai; already undressed, according to R. Eliezer son of R. Yose.) R. Hiyya bar Abba asked R. Joshua: But, my master, did you not teach me that once started at the bath, one may not interrupt it? R. Joshua: Hiyya, my son, what I am about to do may appear trivial to you. You should understand that listening to one's grandson recite a portion in Scripture is like listening to it at Mount Sinai, for it is said, "When you make the words [of Torah] known to your children and children's children, [it is like] the day that thou stoodest before the Lord thy God in Horeb" (Deut. 4:9–10).[3]

389. R. Joseph, the son of R. Joshua ben Levi, became ill and his spirit left him.[4] After his spirit returned to him, his father asked him, "What did you see?" He replied, "I saw a world turned upside down. The people high up here were low there, and people low here were high there." R. Joshua: "You saw a world in which right is made clear. But what of you and me—where were we placed?" "Just as we are here, so were we there. I also heard them say, 'Happy is he who comes here with his learning in hand.' I also heard them say, 'They who were martyred by Rome—no man is allowed to stand within their compartments.' " Who are they? The martyrs of Laodicea.[5]

390. The grandson of R. Joshua ben Levi had an obstruction in his throat. To remove it, R. Joshua went and brought one of the followers of [Jesus] bar Pandera,[6] who whispered an incantation over him and the grandson breathed freely. As he was about to leave, R. Joshua ben Levi asked him, What did you whisper over my grandson? He replied: Such-and-such a verse from Scripture[7] [as interpreted by Jesus bar Pandera]. R. Joshua exclaimed: It were better if he were dead and not have to hear a verse [so misused]. And thus it befell the grandson, [who died] as a result of "the inadvertent remark that came from the mouth of a ruler [in matters of Torah]" (Eccles. 10:5).[8]

391. In the neighborhood of R. Joshua ben Levi there lived a Judeo-Christian who annoyed him with his interpretation of verses in Scripture. One day R. Joshua took a cock, placed it between the legs of his bed, and looked at it steadily, saying, "When the right moment [of the day or night, when a cure takes effect], arrives, I will curse him." But when that moment did arrive, R. Joshua had dozed off. On waking, he said, "This shows that it is not proper to attempt such a thing, for 'His tender mercies are over all His works' " (Ps. 145:9). Hence "it is not good for the righteous to attempt to punish" (Prov. 17:26).[9]

392. Ulla the Conspirator[10] was summoned [on a charge] by the Roman government. He fled and reached the house of R. Joshua ben Levi in Lydda. The Romans came, surrounded the city, and said to the inhabitants, "If you do not turn him over to us, we will destroy the city." R. Joshua ben Levi undertook to persuade Ulla [to give himself up], saying, "It is better that only you be put to death and that the community not be put to death on account of you." Ulla let himself be persuaded, and R. Joshua turned him over to the Romans.

Now, the prophet Elijah, ever remembered on good occasions, used to appear to R. Joshua. After R. Joshua had done this, Elijah no longer appeared to him. So R. Joshua fasted for thirty days, and Elijah again appeared to him. R. Joshua asked, "Sir, why did you cease to come?" Elijah answered, "Am I to be a companion of informers?" R. Joshua: "Did I not act in keeping with the Baraita [which reads: If a company of people are told by Gentiles, 'Give us one of you, and we will slay him.' all are to submit to death and not turn over a Jewish person. But if the Gentiles name the person wanted, the company are to give him up rather than that all die]?"[11] "But is that a teaching for the pious?" Elijah asked. "Such an act should be committed by others and not by you."[12]

393. When R. Joshua ben Levi was standing with the prophet Elijah, ever remembered on good occasions, he asked him, "Will you not show me where the stones of chalcedony[13] are?" Elijah said, "Yes," and showed them to him by means of the following miracle.

It so happened that at that time a ship was sailing in the Great Sea. The ship was filled with heathens, but there was also a Jewish lad on it. When a mighty wave seized the ship, so that it was tossed about in the sea, Elijah appeared to the lad and said, "If you will go on an errand for me, I will save this ship for your sake." The lad: "I

---

1. When the fare should be more elaborate.
2. Lam. R. 3:17, §6.
3. P. Shab 1:2, 3a.
4. He lost consciousness.
5. Lulianus and Pappus, the two brothers who took upon themselves the guilt for the death of a princess so as to save the Jewish people. So Rashi on B. Pes 50a.
6. A pejorative implying that a soldier named Pandera seduced Jesus' mother.
7. It is forbidden to use scriptural verses for incantations and similar illicit practices.
8. P. Shab 14:4, 14d; P. AZ 2:2, 14d; Eccles. R. 10:5, §1.
9. B. Ber 7a.
10. "The Conspirator" (kosher)—Gen. R. TA, p. 1184; BR: "son of Koshav."
11. Tos Ter 7:20.
12. P. Ter 8:4, 46b; Gen. R. 94:9.
13. The stones that were to be used for the construction of the Temple.

will." Elijah: "Go [to the bottom of the sea, gather some stones of chalcedony, and] show them to R. Joshua ben Levi." The lad: "R. Joshua ben Levi, who is the most distinguished man of this generation, may give no credence to my tale." Elijah replied, "He will give you credence, for he is a humble man. However, when you show the stones to him, do not show them to him in the presence of any other person. Take him to a cave three mil distant from Lydda and show them to him there." The lad agreed to do what Elijah asked him to do, and a miracle was wrought [the ship was saved] and the lad got away safely. When he went to R. Joshua ben Levi, he found him in the teacher's chair in the great academy of Lydda and said, "Sir, I have a secret matter to confide to you. Follow me." At once R. Joshua ben Levi rose and followed him.

(Pause and consider the humility of R. Joshua ben Levi, who, though he had to follow the lad for three mil, did not first inquire of him, "What is it that you wish to tell me?")

When they reached the cave, the lad said, "Sir, these are stones of chalcedony [which I brought from the bottom of the sea for the construction of the Temple]." As he showed them to R. Joshua, their brightness shone forth so strongly that all of Lydda was lit up. Startled, he let them fall to the ground, and they disappeared.[1]

394. When R. Joshua ben Levi found the prophet Elijah standing by the entrance of the cave where R. Simeon ben Yohai was buried, he asked him, "Will I attain the world-to-come?" Elijah: "If the Lord here desires it."[2] R. Joshua ben Levi said, "I saw two, but heard the voice of a third."[3] He then asked him, "When will the Messiah come?" "Go and ask him yourself," was his reply. "Where is he sitting?" "At the entrance to the city of Rome." "And by what sign may I recognize him?" "He is sitting among the poor [lepers] burdened with sicknesses. All of them first untie all the bandages over their sores and then retie them, whereas he unties and reties each bandage separately, saying to himself: Should I be wanted, I must not be delayed."

So R. Joshua went to the Messiah and greeted him, saying, "Peace be upon you, my master and my teacher." "Peace upon you, O son of Levi," the Messiah replied. "When will you come, O master?" R. Joshua asked. "Today," was the Messiah's answer.

When R. Joshua came back to Elijah, Elijah asked, "What did he say to you?" R. Joshua: "Peace be unto you, O son of Levi." Elijah observed, "Thereby he assured you and your father of [a portion in] the world-to-come." R. Joshua: "[How can I believe him, since] he spoke falsely to me, for he told me that he would come today, yet he did not come." Elijah: "What he said to you was the beginning of the verse, "Today—if you would but hearken to His voice" (Ps. 95:7)."[4]

395. R. Joshua ben Levi attached himself to sufferers of raatan[5] and thus studied Torah; for, quoting, "A lovely hind and a graceful doe" (Prov. 5:19), he said, "If the Torah bestows grace upon those who study it, would it not also protect them [from infection]?"

When R. Joshua was about to die, the angel of death was instructed, "Go and do whatever he wishes." The angel came and showed himself to him, and R. Joshua said, "Show me my place [in Eden]." The angel: "Very well." R. Joshua: "But give me your knife, since otherwise you may terrify me with it on the way." The angel gave it to him. When they arrived, the angel lifted up R. Joshua and showed him [his place in Eden]. At that, R. Joshua jumped over and dropped on the other side [of the wall]. When the angel seized hold of him by the hem of his cloak, R. Joshua exclaimed, "I swear that I will not leave." The Holy One said, "If R. Joshua ever had an oath of his annulled, he must return; but if not, he need not return." [Thus, without experiencing death, R. Joshua remained in Eden.] The angel said, "Give me back my knife," but R. Joshua would not return it to him. A divine voice went forth and said to R. Joshua, "Give it to him, since it is needed for mortals."

Elijah heralded R. Joshua's arrival, "Make room for the son of Levi, make room for the son of Levi." As he proceeded on his way, he found R. Simeon ben Yohai sitting on thirteen golden mats. R. Simeon: "Are you the son of Levi?" R. Joshua: "Yes."

R. Simeon: "Has a rainbow ever appeared in your lifetime?"[6] R. Joshua: "Yes."

"If that is so [the other said], you are not the son of Levi."

(In fact, the rainbow did not appear [in his lifetime], but he thought: I must take no credit to myself.)[7]

396. R. Hanina ben Papa was R. Joshua ben Levi's friend, and when R. Hanina was about to die, the angel of death was commanded, "Go and do whatever he wishes." When he went to R. Hanina's house and revealed himself to him, R. Hanina said, "Allow me thirty days in which to go over my studies, for it is said, 'Happy is he who comes here in full possession of his learning." The angel of death left him and after thirty days appeared to him again. R. Hanina said, "Show me my place [in Eden]." "Very well," the angel replied. R. Hanina: "But give me your knife, since otherwise you may terrify me with it on the way." The angel: "Are you about to treat me as your friend has done?" R. Hanina: "Bring a Torah scroll and see if there is anything written in it that I have not fulfilled." The angel: "Have you attached

---

1. PRKM 18:5; Yalkut, Isa., §477; PR 32:3/4 (YJS 2:624).
2. He referred to the Presence, which was with them (Rashi). Samuel Edels renders: "When you are worthy thereof."
3. I.e., he saw only himself and Elijah there, but heard a third voice—that of the Presence.
4. B. Sanh 98a.
5. A skin disease causing nervous trembling and extreme weakness (Jastrow).
6. The rainbow in the sky, the token of God's pledge never again to bring a flood, does not, according to R. Simeon ben Yohai, appear in the sky during the lifetime of one like himself, who in his own person is a kind of rainbow and whose presence therefore shields his generation from extinction by floodwaters.
7. B. Ket 77b.

yourself to sufferers of raatan and engaged thus in study of Torah?"[1]

Nevertheless, when his soul passed to its eternal rest, a pillar of fire came between him and the world;[2] and we have a tradition that such a pillar of fire comes to set apart only one person in a generation, or at most two persons in a generation.

Approaching as close as he could to R. Hanina's bier, R. Alexandri said, "Remove the pillar out of deference to the sages," but R. Hanina disregarded him. "Remove it out of deference to your father." But again R. Hanina disregarded him. "Remove it," [R. Alexandri finally pleaded], "out of deference to your own person,"[3] and the pillar of fire departed.

Abbaye remarked, [The purpose of the pillar of fire was] to keep away anyone who failed to observe [even a single letter of] the Torah.

At that, R. Adda bar Matena retorted: This would also exclude you, sir, since you have no parapet on your roof. (However, R. Adda's reproach was not fair, for Abbaye did have such a parapet, which, as it happened, the wind had just then blown down.)[4]

397. At the time of their departure from this world, Zavdi ben Levi, R. Yose ben Petros, and R. Joshua ben Levi each quoted one of the following three verses. One quoted, "For this let every one that is godly pray unto Thee" (Ps. 32:6); another quoted, "So shall all those that take refuge in Thee rejoice" (Ps. 5:12); and the third quoted, "Oh how abundant is Thy goodness, which Thou hast laid up for them that fear Thee" (Ps. 31:20).[5]

Zavdi ben Levi yearned to behold the face of R. Joshua ben Levi, who appeared to him in a dream and showed him men whose faces looked straight ahead and others whose faces were lowered. Zavdi asked: What is the meaning of this? R. Joshua answered; Those whose faces look straight ahead are men who have their learning well in hand, while those whose faces are lowered do not.[6]

R. Yohanan ben ha-Nappah (died ca. 279 C.E.) and R. Simeon ben Lakish [Resh Lakish] (2d half of 2d century C.E.)

398. There was a woman [with child] who inhaled the smell of food on the Day of Atonement [and was seized with a craving to eat]. People came before Rabbi to question him whether food might be served to her. He replied: Go and whisper in her ear that it is the Day of Atonement. They whispered it to her, and she instantly overcame her craving. Rabbi applied to [the unborn child] the verse "Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee" (Jer. 1:5).[7] From that woman issued R. Yohanan.[8]

399. R. Yohanan—when his mother conceived him, his father died; when his mother gave birth to him, she died.[9]

400. R. Yohanan said: Once, as I rode on my grandfather's shoulder, I heard R. Simeon ben Eleazar reciting the lore of Torah as he sat in his teacher's chair.[10]

401. R. Yohanan said: R. Oshaia Berabbi had twelve disciples. During the eighteen days I spent among them, I came to know the intellectual capacity and wisdom of every one of them.

R. Yohanan also said: When we were studying Torah in R. Oshaia's home, four of us used to sit in the space of one cubit.[11]

402. R. Yohanan said: I am the only one remaining of Jerusalem's men of outstanding beauty.

Let him who wishes to perceive R. Yohanan's beauty take a silver goblet as it emerges from the silversmith's, fill it with the seeds of red pomegranates, encircle its brim with a garland of red roses, and set it between the sun and the shade. Its lustrous glow will be an approximation of R. Yohanan's beauty.[12]

403. When R. Yohanan [a corpulent man] was ascending a staircase, with R. Ammi and R. Assi supporting him, the step [he stood on] began to sag under the weight. So he climbed the remainder of the staircase rapidly by himself, pulling up his two aides with him. The sages asked him, "Since your strength is so great, why do you require support?" R. Yohanan replied, "Otherwise, what strength will I have left [for Torah] in my old age?"[13]

404. R. Yohanan fell ill. When R. Hanina came to visit him, he asked, "Are your sufferings cherished by you?" R. Yohanan replied, "Neither they nor the reward for them." R. Hanina: "Give me your hand." R. Yohanan gave him his hand, and R. Hanina raised him up from the sickbed.

R. Eleazar ben Pedat fell ill, and R. Yohanan came to visit him. When R. Yohanan saw that R. Eleazar was lying in a dark room,[14] he bared his arm and light radiated from it. Then he noticed that R. Eleazar was weeping. So he asked, "Why are you weeping? Is it because you did not study enough Torah? Surely we have learned: 'The one

---

1. You were not as pious and staunch in your faith as R. Joshua ben Levi, who trusted in Torah's power to protect him from all evil. If R. Joshua, despite his extreme piety, did not hesitate to outwit me, the angel of death, how much more likely are you to do so!
2. To show that the rest of mankind are not worthy of being near him.
3. So that you may be eulogized.
4. B. Ket 77b.
5. P. AZ 3:1, 42c; Gen. R. 62:2; MTeh 5:11.
6. Eccles. R. 9:9, §1.
7. It is suggested here that when the woman with child inhaled the smell of food and craved it, it was in fact not she but the embryo that had the craving. The mother's ready acceptance of the whispered suggestion was thus due to the piety of the unborn child. (This note is derived from Yoma, Soncino, p. 405.)
8. B. Yoma 82b.
9. B. Kid 31b.
10. P. Maas 1:2, 48d.
11. B. Er 53a.
12. B. BM 84a.
13. B. Ket 62a.
14. R. Eleazar was a poor man and lived in a room without windows.

who does much and the one who does little have the same merit, provided that their hearts are directed to Heaven.' Is it perhaps because of your meager livelihood? Not everybody has the privilege of enjoying two tables—Torah and wealth. Is it perhaps because of [your lack of] children? Here is the bone of my tenth son!"[1]

R. Eleazar replied, "I am weeping on account of this beauty of yours, which will in the end waste away in the earth." R. Yohanan: "On that account, you surely have good reason to weep." And they both wept.

Presently, R. Yohanan asked him, "Are your sufferings cherished by you?" R. Eleazar replied, "Neither they nor the reward for them." R. Yohanan: "Give me your hand." R. Eleazar gave him his hand, and R. Yohanan raised him up [out of bed].[2]

405. Ilfa and R. Yohanan studied Torah together, but when they found themselves greatly distressed by poverty, one said to the other, "Let us go into business and make true the words 'Howbeit there shall be no needy among you' [Deut. 15:4] in our own lives." Then they went and sat down to eat at the foot of a deteriorating wall. While they were eating, two ministering angels came, and R. Yohanan overheard one angel saying to the other, "Let us bring down the wall upon them and kill them, for they are about to neglect life eternal and occupy themselves with life temporal." The other angel, however, replied, "Let them be: the time is not up yet for one of them." R. Yohanan asked Ilfa, "Did you hear anything?" Ilfa replied, "No." R. Yohanan then said to himself: Since I did hear and Ilfa did not, I must be the one whose time is not yet up. He said to Ilfa, "I will go back [to my studies] and make true in my own life the words 'The poor shall never cease out of the land' " (Deut. 15:11). So R. Yohanan returned to his studies, while Ilfa did not. By the time Ilfa came back to the city, R. Yohanan was made head of the academy, and the people of the town said to Ilfa, "Had you remained and devoted yourself to study, might you not have become the academy's head?"[3] Hearing that, Ilfa suspended himself from the top of a mast and said, "If anyone will put to me a question regarding a Baraita handed down by R. Hiyya and R. Oshaia, and find me unable to answer it by quoting a corroborating parallel from our Mishnah, I will throw myself from the mast into the water and drown."[4]

406. A story is told of when R. Yohanan was taking a walk up from Tiberias to Sepphoris, leaning on the shoulder of his disciple R. Hiyya bar Abba. When they came to a certain farm, R. Yohanan said: You see this farm—it had been mine and I sold it, because I wanted to devote myself entirely to the study of Torah. When they came to an olive orchard, R. Yohanan said: You see this olive orchard—it had been mine and I sold it, because I wanted to devote myself entirely to the study of Torah. When they came to a vineyard, R. Yohanan said: You see this vineyard—it had been mine and I sold it, because I wanted to devote myself entirely to the study of Torah. Then R. Hiyya began to weep. R. Yohanan asked: Why are you weeping? His companion replied: I weep because you did not put anything aside for your old age. R. Yohanan said: Hiyya, my son, is what I did really as foolish as you seem to think? I gave up something that took no more than six days to be created and acquired something that took forty days and forty nights to be revealed. For it took God no more than six days to create the entire world, as is written, "In six days the Lord made heaven and earth" (Exod. 31:17). But to reveal the Torah took him forty days and forty nights, as is written, "And Moses was there with the Lord forty days and forty nights" (Exod. 34:28).[5]

407. Whatever R. Yohanan had to eat, he would give the same to his [heathen] slave, about whom he would quote the verse "Did not He that made me in the womb make him? And did not the One fashion us both in the womb?" (Job 31:15).[6]

408. When R. Yohanan came to the verse "Behold, He putteth no trust in His holy ones" (Job 15:15), he wept [as he asked]: If He does not put His trust in His holy ones, in whom will He put His trust? One day, as he was walking on a road, he saw a man who was gathering figs leave those that were ripe and take those that were unripe. So he asked the man: Are not those that are ripe better? The man answered: I need these for the road. The unripe ones will keep, but the ripe ones will spoil.

Then R. Yohanan said to himself: I now understand the verse "Behold, He putteth no trust in His holy ones."[7]

409. R. Hana the Moneychanger said: Once Bar Nappaha stood over me and asked me for a Gordian denar with which to measure the size of a defect.[8] When I was about to stand up for him, he restrained me, saying, "Sit, my son, sit. Craftsmen when engaged in their work are not allowed to stand up for disciples of the wise."[9]

410. R. Yohanan was seated in the teacher's chair reading Scripture to the people of the Babylonian synagogue in Sepphoris. When the archon of the city passed by, R. Yohanan did not stand up. At that, the archon's servants were ready to whip him, but the archon said: Let him be; he is engaged in doing what his Creator commands."[10]

411. Whenever R. Eleazar was about to part from R. Yohanan [he would do the following]: If R. Yohanan had to leave first, R. Eleazar would remain standing, bowed over, until R. Yohanan disappeared from sight. But if R.

---

1. R. Yohanan, who lost ten sons, kept a bone of the tenth as a kind of grisly reminder.
2. B. Ber 5b.
3. Because Ilfa was older, he might well have been elected in place of R. Yohanan.
4. B. Ta 21a.
5. Exod. R. 47:5; Lev. R. 30:1; PRKM 27:1.
6. P. Ket 5:5, 30a.
7. God fears that the righteous, like the ripe figs, may later lose their savor of righteousness. Hence they are taken away when young. B. Hag 5a.
8. In, say, an animal's lung, to determine whether the animal is kosher.
9. B. Hul 54b.
10. P. Ber 5:1, 9a.

Eleazar had to leave first, he would keep walking backward until R. Yohanan could no longer be seen.[1]

412. R. Yohanan went for a walk, leaning on R. Jacob bar Idi. When R. Eleazar saw him, he sought to hide out of sight. R. Yohanan took offense, saying: This Babylonian has done two things to me—to begin with, he did not greet me; and secondly, he does not say, when citing a tradition, that it came from me. R. Jacob bar Idi replied: [R. Eleazar did not greet you] because it is the custom in Babylonia that the inferior person does not greet his superior.[2] For in Babylonia they comply literally with Job's remark "Young men saw me and hid themselves" (Job 29:8).

[Continuing his explanation of R. Eleazar's conduct] R. Jacob bar Idi asked: Should one give way to a procession of idols? R. Yohanan: Why should one accord them any kind of honor? The thing to do is to pass in front of them as if you do not see them. Then R. Jacob bar Idi said: If so, R. Eleazar did well in not passing in front of you.[3]

But why, R. Yohanan asked, did he not cite the tradition [he taught] as having come from me? As he was asking the question, R. Ammi and R. Assi came by, and, finding him very angry, cautioned him: A like outburst of anger occurred in the synagogue in Tiberias when R. Eliezer and R. Yose differed concerning a certain matter, until in the end, because of their anger, a scroll of Torah was ripped apart. A certain elder, R. Yose ben Kisma by name, who happened to be there, said, "I shall be surprised if this synagogue is not converted into a shrine for idolatry." Indeed, this is what happened.[4] R. Yohanan was even more deeply offended and asked R. Ammi and R. Asssi: But is R. Eleazar my colleague?[5]

As they were walking and saw a house of study, R. Jacob bar Idi said to R. Yohanan: Here R. Meir used to sit in the teacher's chair and cite rulings on law in the name of R. Ishmael, but he did not cite rulings on law in the name of R. Akiva. R. Yohanan replied: But everyone knows that R. Meir was R. Akiva's disciple.[6] R. Jacob bar Idi responded: So, too, does everyone know that R. Eleazar is R. Yohanan's disciple.

R. Jacob bar Idi went on: It is said, "As the Lord commanded Moses His servant, so did Moses command Joshua; and so did Joshua" (Josh. 11:15). But are we to suppose that at each and every command Joshua uttered, he would say, "This is what Moses told me"? The fact is that Joshua used to expound in the teacher's chair without indicating the source. But of course everyone knew that his teaching was that of Moses. So, too, when your disciple R. Eleazar sits in the teacher's chair and expounds without indicating the source, everyone naturally knows that his teaching is yours.

R. Yohanan then chided R. Ammi and R. Assi: Why do you not know how to conciliate as skillfully as our friend R. Jacob bar Idi?[7]

413. In the winter, when R. Yohanan's head did not ache, he wore the head tefillin as well as the arm tefillin; but in the summer, when his head ached, he would wear only the arm tefillin.[8]

414. R. Yohanan said: In my case, God's Name is profaned when I walk four cubits without uttering Torah or wearing teffilin.[9]

415. R. Yohanan said: [Once] on the Day of Atonement I was seized with ravenous hunger, and I went to the eastern side of a fig tree[10] and made true by my example the verse "Wisdom preserveth the life of him who hath it" (Eccles. 7:12).[11]

416. Zeira kept evading R. Yohanan, who was pressing him: "Marry my daughter." One day, as they were walking on a road, they came to a pool of water. Zeira hoisted R. Yohanan on his shoulder and carried him across. R. Yohanan said to Zeira: My teaching seems to be right [for you], but my daughters are not![12]

417. Hezekiah son of R. Hiyya used to say of R. Yohanan, "This one is not a son of man."[13] According to others, he used to say, "This one is indeed a son of man."[14]

418. Throughout Rav's days, R. Yohanan used to address him in writing, "Greetings to our master in Babylonia." After Rav's departure from this world, he wrote to Samuel, "Greetings to our colleague in Babylonia." Samuel said to himself: Is there nothing in which I am R. Yohanan's master? So he sat down and sent him calculations for intercalating months sixty years in advance. But R. Yohanan said: Now, he knows only calculations. Samuel then sent R. Yohanan thirteen parchment scrolls[15] of questions concerning doubtful cases of meat of animals torn by beasts in the field. Then R. Yohanan said: It is clear that I have a master in Babylonia. I must go to see him.

He asked a child, "Recite for me the last verse you

---

1. B. Yoma 53a.
2. In order to spare the superior the trouble of responding. Cf. above, part 1, chap. 5, §51.
3. Since he felt he had no right to greet you, he would have had to seem to ignore you and thus appear to be disrespectful.
4. The point: One is not to take offense at the acts or words of fellow scholars.
5. Since he is only my disciple, my anger is warranted.
6. So there was no need for R. Meir to cite R. Akiva by name.
7. P. Ber 2:1, 4b; P. Shek 2:7, 47a; B. Yev 96b; Midrash Sam. 19.
8. P. Ber 2:3, 4c.
9. Unaware that I stopped studying Torah only because of weariness, people might, seeing my example, take even greater liberties. B. Yoma 86a.
10. Figs on a tree do not ripen at the same time. Those that are on the tree's eastern side, exposed to the sun, ripen first. Their aroma relieved R. Yohanan's hunger.
11. B. Yoma 83b.
12. "What R. Yohanan is saying to Zeira is: My teaching seems to fit you—you know enough of it to act helpfully toward me, as a disciple should act toward his teacher—but my teaching failed to teach you the desirability of marrying a wife bred in a scholar's family. In other words, 'When will you come to your senses and marry my daughter?' " (Leon Nemoy). B. Kid 71b.
13. He is superhuman.
14. Fully a man. B. Shab 112b.
15. Gevillim ("parchment scrolls")—R. Hananel. BR: Gemallim ("camel loads").

learned." The child replied, "Now Samuel is dead" (1 Sam. 28:3). R. Yohanan said to himself: This means that [my master] Samuel is gone.

But it was not so. In fact Samuel was not dead then, but the verse came to be cited so that R. Yohanan would not be put to the trouble [of going to Babylonia to visit Samuel].[1]

419. When Resh Lakish sold himself [for a good sum] to the Lydians,[2] he took along a waterskin with a stone in it, "Because," he said, "I have heard that on the last day [before combat in the arena] they grant any request the gladiator may make, in order that his blood may be sweet [i.e., that he may face combat with his mind at ease]." On the last day, when they asked him, "What would you like?" he replied, "I want you to let me tie your arms, set you down, and give each of you a blow and a half with this waterskin." He then bound them and seated them. As each of them received a blow and was stunned, each [grimaced and] gnashed his teeth. Resh Lakish said, "Are you laughing at me? Remember, you still have half a blow coming." Then he killed them all.

Thus he procured his freedom. Later, as he sat [on the ground] eating and drinking, his daughter asked, "Don't you want something to recline on?" He replied, "Daughter, my belly is my cushion."

[Having been fond of spiced food], he left, at the time of his death, a kav of saffron, thus applying to himself the verse "And they shall leave to others their substance" (Ps. 49:11).[3]

420. One day R. Yohanan was bathing in the Jordan when Resh Lakish saw him and jumped into the Jordan after him. R. Yohanan said to him, "Your strength should be devoted to Torah." Resh Lakish replied, "Your beauty should be devoted to women." R. Yohanan: "If you repent, I will let you wed my sister, who is more beautiful than I." He undertook to repent, but when he tried to jump back and collect his gear, he could not do so.[4]

Subsequently R. Yohanan had him read Scripture and study Mishnah, and he became a great man.[5]

421. R. Yohanan and Resh Lakish both said: We won the privilege of studying Torah only because we saw Rabbi's toes showing out of the Roman shoes he wore, which leave the wearer's toes uncovered.[6]

422. When R. Kahana went up to the Land of Israel, Rav said, "Be sure not to point out any difficulty to R. Yohanan for the next seven years." When he arrived, he found Resh Lakish sitting and [for the benefit of younger scholars] going over the lecture R. Yohanan had given that day. Since he had never met Resh Lakish, he quietly asked them, "Where is Resh Lakish?" They asked him, "Why do you wish to know?" R. Kahana replied, "This point [in the lecture] is difficult and that point is difficult, but this could be given as an answer to the one and that could be given as an answer to the other." When they mentioned this to Resh Lakish, he went over to R. Yohanan and said, "A lion has come up from Babylonia; the master should therefore prepare tomorrow's lecture carefully." The next day R. Kahana was seated in the first row of disciples, right in front of R. Yohanan. But, as R. Yohanan gave one ruling in law and R. Kahana raised no difficulty, and he gave another ruling and R. Kahana still raised no difficulty, R. Kahana was moved back seven rows and seated in the very last row. Then R. Yohanan said to Resh Lakish, "The lion you mentioned turns out to be no more than a fox." At this, R. Kahana whispered the prayer "May it be the will [of Heaven] that these seven rows be regarded as the equivalent of the seven years Rav spoke of." At that, R. Kahana rose to his feet and said to R. Yohanan, "Will the master start the lecture from its beginning?" As R. Yohanan proceeded to give the first ruling in law, R. Kahana pointed out a difficulty; when R. Yohanan gave the second ruling, R. Kahana again pointed out a difficulty, until finally R. Kahana was put back in the first row. R. Yohanan had been sitting on seven cushions, and each time R. Kahana pointed out a difficulty, R. Yohanan pulled out one of the cushions from under himself, until finally all the cushions were pulled out from under him and he remained seated on the bare ground.[7]

R. Yohanan was then a very old man, and his eyebrows overshadowed his eyes. So he said to his disciples, "Raise up my eyebrows. I want to see him." They raised up his eyebrows with a silver Kohl stick, and when R. Yohanan saw that R. Kahana's lips were cleft,[8] he thought that R. Kahana was laughing at him. He was greatly humiliated. Seeing R. Yohanan in such a state, R. Kahana's soul left him. The next day, when R. Yohanan said to the sages, "Have you noticed how this Babylonian carried on?" they told him, "But such is his natural appearance." Hearing that, R. Yohanan went to the cave [where R. Kahana's body was placed] and, seeing a snake coiled at its entrance, said, "Snake, O snake, open your mouth [and let your tail go][9] to allow the master to visit his disciple." But the snake did not open its mouth. He then said, "To allow a colleague to visit his associate!" But it still did not open [its mouth, until he said], "To allow a disciple to visit his master." At that, the snake opened its mouth. Then R. Yohanan besought God's mercy and brought R. Kahana back to life, and said to him, "Had I known that such was the master's appearance, I would not have felt humiliated. Now will the master please go with us [to the academy]." R. Kahana replied, "If you are able to beseech God's mercy that I would not die [should you again be humiliated], I will go, but if not, I will not go. For, having experienced the ordeal of death once [because of your

---

1. B. Hul 95b.
2. In his early years, Simeon ben Lakish was a gladiator.
3. B. Git 47a.
4. The mere decision to study Torah so depleted his strength that he was unable to haul his heavy equipment. Cf. above in this chapter, §229.
5. B. BM 84a.
6. P. Betz 5:2, 63a.
7. A way of showing that he no longer considered himself worthy of occupying the elevated place of master.
8. Because of a physical defect following an accident.
9. The snake held its tail in its mouth. The Munich ms. reads: "open the door."

sensitivity], I do not wish to experience it again." Then R. Yohanan shook him, stood him up, and proceeded to consult him on all doubtful points, which R. Kahana cleared up for him.

[In subsequent years] R. Yohanan used to say [to his Palestinian disciples], "Do you think it is your [Palestinian] learning that I utter? It is theirs [the Babylonians']." [1]

423. Anyone with whom Resh Lakish talked in the marketplace could get a loan without witnesses. [2]

424. One who saw Resh Lakish in the house of study would think that he was uprooting mountains and grinding them one against the other. [3]

425. Because Resh Lakish meditated much in Torah, he would [sometimes] walk beyond the Sabbath limit[4] and, in keeping with the verse "Because of thy love for it, thou errest always" (Prov. 5:19), was not aware of having done so. [5]

426. Resh Lakish made it his practice to set in order what he had learned forty times—to correspond to the forty days needed for the Torah to be given—before he presumed to come into the presence of R. Yohanan.

Resh Lakish used to say: When you see a disciple to whom studying is as hard as iron, it is because what he attempts to learn is not set in order in his mind. [6]

427. Resh Lakish[7] said: There are those who know how to string [scriptural passages one to another by showing linkages in meaning] but do not know how to penetrate [into the sense of each passage]; there are others who know how to penetrate but do not know how to string. But I am one who knows both how to string and how to penetrate. [8]

428. R. Simeon ben Lakish used to study Torah with great intensity in a cave outside Tiberias, where every day a water carrier would have a pitcher of water ready for him, so that when he entered feeling very tired, he would take the pitcher and drink its water. Once, when the water carrier came by and sat down next to him to rest a bit, he said, "Master, do you remember that you and I used to go to school together? But you were deemed worthy [of higher study of Torah], while I was not deemed worthy of it. Pray for me that in the world-to-come my portion may be next to yours." Resh Lakish replied, "What can I pray for in your behalf [other than] that your portion may be with your fellow craftsmen, since each and every man will be made to dwell only with the fellows in his craft?" [9]

429. R. Simeon ben Lakish was sitting and studying Torah in a cave outside Tiberias. When two women came out of that cave, one said to the other, "Blessed be He who made it possible for me to leave Tiberias's bad climate." R. Simeon called out to them, "Where do you come from?" The women: "From Mazga." R. Simeon: "I know Mazga—[its climate is so bad that] it has only two columns [left standing, all other structures having deteriorated]. Blessed be He who endows each place with charm for its inhabitants." [10]

430. During a sabbatical year, R. Hiyya bar Zarniki and R. Simeon ben Jehozadak went to Asya[11] to intercalate a month in the year. Resh Lakish happened to meet them and attached himself to them, saying, "I will come and watch how they go about it." When he saw a man plowing, he said, "That man a priest, and plowing [during the sabbatical year]!" They replied, "The man might say, 'I am a servant on an imperial estate [and must obey my Roman master].' " Farther on, he saw a man pruning his vineyard. So Resh Lakish said, "That man a priest, and pruning his vineyard!" They replied, "The man might say, 'I need the twigs to weave a bale (akal)[12] for my olive press [to supply olive oil].' " Resh Lakish commented, "Only the man's heart knows whether he is akel, 'weaving,' or akalkallot,[13] 'twisting [the law].' "

They decided that Resh Lakish was a troublemaker. So, upon reaching their destination, they went to the upper chamber and pulled up the ladder from under it, so that Resh Lakish could not follow them.

Presently Resh Lakish went to R. Yohanan and asked, "Are people who appear to be easygoing about the observances of the sabbatical year[14] fit to intercalate the year?" But then Resh Lakish reconsidered, saying, "R. Hiyya and R. Simeon present no difficulty, for they are like the sages who once accepted the testimony of three herdsmen concerning intercalation; then they did the calculating on their own." Subsequently, however, considering the matter further, he said, "The two instances are not alike. In the case of the herdsmen, the sages went back, voted, and intercalated the year on their own. Here [in the matter of tolerating flagrant violation of the sabbatical year] we have what amounts to a confederacy of wicked men, and men who are in such a confederacy with the wicked may not be part [of an intercalary board]." R. Yohanan observed, "It is indeed a painful problem."

When R. Hiyya bar Zarniki and R. Simeon ben Je-

---

1. B. BK 117a–b.
2. Since one could trust the honesty of such a man. B. Yoma 9b.
3. B. Sanh 24a.
4. Two thousand cubits.
5. P. Ber 5:1, 9a.
6. B. Ta 8a.
7. The editions attribute the utterance to R. Levi, not to Resh Lakish.
8. Song R. 1:10, §2.
9. Eccles. R. 3:9, §1.
10. Gen. R. 34:15.
11. "[Isaac] Halevy . . . suggests that Assia [Essa, east of the Sea of Tiberias] was especially chosen for the intercalation as it was considered a safe place owing to its hot springs, which attracted many visitors from far and wide, and the arrival of the rabbis would not rouse the suspicion of the Romans" (Isidore Epstein in Sanh, Soncino, p. 151, n. 2).
12. "A bale of loose texture containing the olive pulp to be pressed" (Jastrow).
13. A play on the sound of the two Hebrew words can be approximated by opposing "honest weaving" to "deceiving"; or "being on the level" to "in league with the devil."
14. They were so ready to excuse people who were violating it.

hozadak came before R. Yohanan, they complained, "Resh Lakish described us as herdsmen, and you did not object." R. Yohanan replied, "Even if he had called you shepherds,[1] what could I have said in your defense?"[2]

431. At one time Resh Lakish was a watchman in an orchard. When a man came and helped himself to some figs, he threw a stone at him. But the man paid him no heed. So Resh Lakish said, "Let the man be put under a ban." "On the contrary," the man replied, "let the one who invoked the ban be put under it. I agree I am liable to pay money for trespassing, but does my liability extend to being put under a ban?"

When Resh Lakish went to the house of study [and reported the incident], he was told, "The man's ban against you is valid; your ban against him is not valid." "What remedy is there for me?" Resh Lakish asked. "Go to the man and ask him to absolve you." "But I do not know who or where he is." "Then go to the patriarch, and he will absolve you."[3]

432. Once, when Resh Lakish was walking on a road and reached a pond, a man came along, hoisted him on his shoulders, and started taking him across. Resh Lakish asked the man, "Have you read Scripture?" The man: "Yes, I have read it." "Have you recited Mishnah?" "Yes, I have recited four divisions of Mishnah." "Then you have hewn for yourself four mountains of Torah, yet you carry Resh Lakish on your shoulder! Throw Resh Lakish into the water."[4]

433. When R. Abbahu and Resh Lakish were about to enter that notorious city of Caesarea, R. Abbahu said to Resh Lakish, "Why should we enter a city of blasphemers and revilers?" Resh Lakish got off his donkey, gathered some sand, and stuffed it into R. Abbahu's mouth. When R. Abbahu asked, "Why do you do this to me?" Resh Lakish replied, "The Holy One is not pleased with one who speaks ill of Israel."[5]

434. When R. Imi was kidnapped in Sifsufa, R. Jonathan said, "The corpse may as well be wrapped in its shroud." Resh Lakish replied, "Before I say that R. Imi is already slain, I myself am willing to run the risk of being slain. I will go and do what I can to rescue him." So he went and persuaded the kidnappers to return R. Imi alive. Then Resh Lakish said to them, "Come with me to a certain elder who will pray in your behalf." They went with him to R. Yohanan, who said to them, "May what you intended to do to R. Imi be done to you; indeed, may it befall all people like you."

Sure enough, even before the kidnappers got to Apiphserus, all of them were slain.[6]

435. R. Yohanan was robbed in Ale-kaniah. When he came up to the sages' meeting place, Resh Lakish kept asking him questions, which he did not answer. Finally Resh Lakish asked, "What is wrong with you?" R. Yohanan: "All parts of the body depend on the heart, and the heart depends on the purse." Resh Lakish: "Why such an adage?" R. Yohanan: "I was robbed in Ale-kaniah." Resh Lakish: "Show me the spot." R. Yohanan went out and showed it to him. When Resh Lakish espied the men of Ale-kaniah in the distance, he began ringing a bell. [Alarmed] they said, "If the one robbed is R. Yohanan, he may take back one-half [of what was robbed]." But R. Yohanan said, "By your lives, I will take back everything!" And he took it all back.[7]

436. One day the sages in the house of study were divided on the following question: At what stage [in their manufacture] are a sword, a knife, a dagger, a spear, a handsaw, and a scythe deemed to be [finished] utensils and susceptible to uncleanness? The answer first suggested was: when their manufacture is finished. But when is their manufacture finished? R. Yohanan stated, "After they have been tempered in a furnace." Resh Lakish maintained, "Only after they have been quenched in water." R. Yohanan: "A robber is an expert in his trade."[8] Resh Lakish [resentful]: "What special benefit have you bestowed upon me? There [as a robber] I was called master, and here I am called master." R. Yohanan: "I bestowed upon you the benefit of bringing you under the wings of the Presence." Nevertheless, R. Yohanan was mortified [by the sharpness of the exchange], while Resh Lakish [was so overcome by remorse that he] fell ill. Thereupon his wife came and wept before R. Yohanan, pleading: "Forgive him for the sake of my sons." He replied: "Scripture says, 'Leave thy fatherless children with Me. I will rear them' " (Jer. 49:11). "For the sake of my widowhood then!" He replied: "Scripture says, 'And let thy widows rely on Me' " (ibid.). [Soon afer that], Resh Lakish died.

R. Yohanan grieved so much for Resh Lakish that he no longer came down to the scholars' assembly. And so the sages deliberated: "Who is to go and ease his mind? Let R. Eleazar ben Pedat go, since his knowledge of Halakhot is acute." R. Eleazar went and sat down before him; and whatever R. Yohanan said, R. Eleazar observed, "There is a Baraita that supports you." R. Yohanan finally exclaimed, "Do you think you are at all like Ben Lakish? When I would state a matter, Ben Lakish used to raise twenty-four objections, which I responded to with twenty-four rebuttals, forming a debate that led to a fuller comprehension of the tradition. But all you say is, 'There is

---

1. Shepherds, who are disqualified as witnesses, are more lowly in status than herdsmen.
2. B. Sanh 26a.
3. B. MK 17a.
4. You should not act as my servant. B. Meg 28b.
5. Song R. 1:6, §1.
6. P. Ter 8:10, 46b.
7. Ibid.
8. "This was quoted only proverbially, though in later times it was taken literally, and Resh Lakish was held to have been a robber. Actually, he had been a circus attendant, to which his necessitous circumstances had reduced him, and these weapons were used in the course of that calling. (Heinrich Graetz [Isaac Hirsch] Weiss . . . understands the phrase literally, but translates listaah as 'thief catcher.' If that be correct, Resh Lakish at one time helped the Roman government, just as R. Eleazar ben R. Simeon and R. Ishmael ben Jose [Yose] had done" (BM, Soncino, p. 481, n. 4).

a Baraita that supports you,' as though I do not know on my own that what I said was right." Then R. Yohanan stood up, rent his garments, and, bursting into tears, cried out, "Where are you, Ben Lakish? Where are you, Ben Lakish?" He kept crying in anguish until he went out of his mind. Then the sages besought mercy in his behalf, and he died.[1]

437. Once [after Resh Lakish died], when R. Yohanan met the young son of Resh Lakish and said to him, "Recite for me the verse [you learned today]," the son replied, "Tithe that you may be able to tithe again" (Deut. 14:22), and went on to ask, "What do these words imply?" R. Yohanan answered, "Tithe that you may become rich[2] [and be able to tithe again]." The son then asked, "What proof have you for what you say?" R. Yohanan replied, "Go test it [for yourself]." The son asked, "Is it permissible to test the Holy One? Is it not written, 'Ye shall not test the Lord' (Deut. 6:16)?" R. Yohanan replied, "Thus taught R. Oshaia: 'Testing God is forbidden except in this instance, for it is said, "Bring ye the whole tithe and test Me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall be more than sufficiency" [Mal. 3:10]. (What is the meaning [of the words] 'that there shall be more than sufficiency'? R. Rami bar Hama said in the name of Rav: Until your lips shall grow weary from saying, 'It is sufficient')". The son then exclaimed, "Had I already come to this verse in my studies, I would have had no need of you or R. Oshaia, your teacher."

On another occasion, R. Yohanan met the young son of Resh Lakish sitting and reciting the verse "The foolishness of man perverteth his way; and his heart fretteth against the Lord" (Prov. 19:3). R. Yohanan sat down, and, after pondering the verse's implication for a while, he said, "Is it possible that in the Writings there is something not alluded to in the Torah?" The son replied, "Is not this verse in fact alluded to in the Torah? Is it not written, 'And their heart failed them, and they turned trembling one to another, saying [indignantly]: "What is this that God hath done unto us?" (Gen. 42:28)?"[3] R. Yohanan lifted his eyes and gazed at him [in astonishment]. At that, his mother rushed in and took him away, saying to her son, "Get away from him, lest he do to you what he did to your father."[4]

438. When R. Yohanan died, all images were bowed down—a way of saying that no image was as beautiful as he.[5]

439. When R. Yohanan died, his generation applied to him the verse "When a man giveth all the substance of his house for love" (Song 8:7); for such love as R. Yohanan had for the Torah, "he will be given rich spoil [in the world-to-come]" (ibid.).[6]

440. When R. Yohanan died, R. Isaac ben Eleazar began his eulogy: Grievous is this day for Israel as a day when the sun sets at noon.

When R. Yohanan died, R. Ammi [no immediate kin] observed the seven [days of mourning] as well as the thirty.[7]

R. Judah [II] the Patriarch (R. Yudau the Patriarch) (fl. 225–53 C.E.)

441. R. Yohanan once visited R. Yudan the Patriarch, who came out to greet him wearing a plain flaxen garment. R. Yohanan said, "Go back and put on your woolen garment, because we are told, 'Thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty' " (Isa. 33:17). As R. Yohanan was about to leave, R. Yudan said, "Bring him a choice snack." R. Yohanan said, "Be sure to send for Menahem, the [renowned] pastry cook, in keeping with the verse 'The law of kindness is on her tongue' " (Prov. 31:26).[8]

When R. Yohanan left, he saw R. Hanina bar Sisi, [R. Yudan's coadjutor] splitting wood. He said, "Master, this does not suit your dignity." R. Hanina: "But what am I to do? I have no one to help me." R. Yohanan: "If you could not afford help, you should not have accepted the office to which you were appointed."[9]

442. In a synagogue in Tiberias, Yose of Maon[10] interpreted in Aramaic the verse "Hear this, O ye priests" (Hos. 5:1)—why do you not labor in study of Torah? Did I not allow you twenty-four gifts as a prerogative?"[11] The priests' reply: But Israel give us nothing now.[12]

He went on: "Attend, ye House of Israel" (Hos. 5:1)—why do you not give to the priests the twenty-four gifts that I commanded you at Sinai? They replied: The [Roman] king takes everything.

He continued, "Give ear, O house of the king,[13] for unto you will come judgment" (Hos. 5:1). It is to you that I said, "This then shall be the priests' [prerogative]" (Deut. 18:3). Therefore shall I sit in judgment over the king's house to bring their rule to an end and have them perish from the world.

When R. Yudan heard what Yose had said, he was enraged and Yose, frightened, fled. Both R. Yohanan and

---

1. B. BM 84a, P. Meg 1:11, 72b.
2. A play on words: isser ("to tithe") and hit'asher ("to become rich").
3. First they sold their brother Joseph, and then they complained at the punishment meted out to them by God.
4. B. Ta 9a.
5. P. AZ 3:1, 42c.
6. So Targum, ad loc. JV: "he would be utterly contemned." But the stem bz can mean both "contemn" and "spoil, booty." Lev. R. 30:1.
7. An immediate kin's first seven days of obligatory mourning, which is intense, are followed by twenty-three days during which the mourning is of lesser intensity.
8. So that the snack will be pleasing to the palate.
9. P. Sanh 2:6, 20c–d.
10. A town near Tiberias.
11. Most of them are listed in Num. 18. Receipt of them, it was anticipated, would have given priests time to study Torah.
12. Now that the Temple is no longer in existence and the priests no longer serve.
13. The phrase "house of the king" is code for the patriarchate.

Resh Lakish went in to pacify R. Yudan. They said, "Master, we should be grateful to the nations of the world who bring mimes into their theaters and circuses to entertain them. They are thus induced to converse amicably among themselves without lapsing into foolish quarrels. It was [in order to wean people from vain pursuits] that Yose of Maon expounded words of Torah, yet you are enraged at him! He is an eminent scholar." R. Yudan: "But does he know anything at all of Torah?" They: "Yes." R. Yudan: "Was he an apprentice to sages?" They: "Yes." R. Yudan: "If so, let him come to see me." When R. Yose came, R. Yudan asked him, "What is meant by 'Their mother hath played the harlot' [Hos. 2:7]? Was our mother Sarah a harlot?!" Yose: "As the daughter, so the mother—'Like mother, like daughter' [Ezek. 16:44]—as the generation, so its patriarch; as the patriarch, so the generation; as the altar, so its priests." Some quote him as having said, "As the garden, so the gardener."

R. Yudan then reproached Yose: "It is not enough that you insulted me once behind my back, now you insult me to my face three times over."[1]

443. Once, while R. Yannai was out for a walk, leaning on the shoulder[2] of Simlai, his attendant, R. Yudan the Patriarch came toward them. The attendant said to R. Yannai, "The man coming toward us looks elegant, even as his cloak looks elegant." When R. Yudan came close, R. Yannai felt the cloak and said, "This has the same legal minimum to incur ritual uncleanness as does a sack. [In short, the material of this cloak is like sackcloth."][3]

Then R. Yannai set forth before R. Yudan a matter of Halakah, and R. Yudan responded in a superficial way. At that, R. Yannai said to his attendant, "Move along! This man does not wish to learn."[4]

444. Resh Lakish expounded: When the patriarch commits a sin, he may be sentenced to flogging by a court of three. When R. Yudan the Patriarch heard of this, he was so enraged that he sent a detachment of Goths to seize him. They kept after him until Resh Lakish fled [for safety] to a tower near Tiberias. (Some say he fled to Kefar Hittim.) The next day R. Yohanan went up to the scholars' assembly, as did R. Yudan the Patriarch, who asked R. Yohanan, "Why does our master not discuss with us a matter of Torah?" R. Yohanan began to make believe that he was clapping by using only one hand. R. Yudan: "Can one clap with one hand?" R. Yohanan: "No, but when Resh Lakish is not here, I have only one hand." R. Yudan: "Where is he? I will let him go free." R. Yohanan: "In the tower." R. Yudan: "Tomorrow you and I will go to see him." R. Yohanan sent word to Resh Lakish: "Prepare a theme in Torah, because the patriarch is coming to see you." Resh Lakish went out to greet the patriarch and said, "The example you set is like that of your Creator. When the Holy One came to redeem Israel, He sent no emissary, no angel—He [came] Himself as it is said, 'I will go through the land of Egypt' [Exod. 12:12], He and His staff of angels."[5] R. Yudan then asked him, "Why did you make that statement about flogging the patriarch?" Resh Lakish: "What do you suppose—that out of fear of you I should withhold words of God's Torah? As R. Samuel bar Isaac put it, 'Nay, my sons; for it is no good report which I hear—the Lord's people should remove' [1 Sam. 2:24]—should remove such a person from his high office."[6]

445. When the patriarch's family appointed a judge who was unlearned in Torah, the sages said to Judah bar Nahmani, Resh Lakish's interpreter,[7] "Go and stand at his side as interpreter." Judah stationed himself by the judge and bent down [to hear what he wished to say], but he said nothing. So Judah began to expound, "Ah, you who say, 'Wake up' to wood, 'Awaken' to inert stone! Can this person teach? Why, he is encased in gold and silver, but there is no spirit in him" (Hab. 2:19). The Holy One will requite those who appoint such a person, for the verse goes on to say, "The Lord is in His holy Temple; let all the earth keep silence before Him" (ibid.).[8]

446. Resh Lakish went to pay his respects to our Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch]. "Pray for me," R. Judah begged him, "for this Roman government is very evil."[9] Take nothing from anyone," Resh Lakish told him, "and then you will not have to give anything." While Resh Lakish was sitting with R. Judah, a woman came in, bringing R. Judah a dish with a knife in it. He took the knife and returned the dish to the woman. At that moment an imperial courier came in and saw the knife, took a fancy to it, and carried it off. Toward evening Resh Lakish again went to pay his respects to our Rabbi and saw him laughing. "Why are you laughing?" Resh Lakish asked. R. Judah: "That knife you saw—an imperial courier came in, saw it, coveted it, and took it away." Resh Lakish: "Did I tell you that if you take nothing from anyone, you will not have to give anything to anyone?"[10]

447. At one time, Diocletian[11] was a swineherd near Tiberias. Whenever he approached the house of study of R. Yudan the Patriarch, the children used to go out and rough him up. Presently, when he became emperor, he took up residence in Panias[12] and sent a letter to Tiberias: I command the notables of the Jews to come and appear

---

1. P. Sanh 2:6, 20d; Gen. R. 80:1.
2. When R. Yannai became old, his sight was defective.
3. Unlike a garment whose minimum to incur uncleanness is three by three handbreadths, a sack, being of lesser importance, has a minimum of four by four handbreadths (Kel 27:2; Ned 7:3). In other words. R. Yudan's elegance is not real, since the cloak is of cheap material.
4. B. BB 111a.
5. R. Yohanan.
6. P. Sanh 2:1, 19d–20a; R. Hor 3:1, 47a.
7. He expounds aloud and in detail to the gathering what the judge has uttered concisely and in a low voice.
8. B. Sanh 7b.
9. Its demands are exorbitant.
10. Gen. R. 78:12.
11. Diocletian was emperor of Rome from 285 to 305 C.E.; his father was a slave.
12. Caesarea Philippi, a city in the north of Palestine.

before me immediately after the conclusion of the Sabbath. He also commanded his emissary: "Be sure to give the letter to the Jews on Sabbath eve as it begins getting dark."[1]

When R. Samuel bar Nahman went down to bathe, he saw R. Yudan the Patriarch standing in front of the great house of study, his face quite pale. R. Samuel asked, "Why is your face so pale?" R. Yudan replied, "Such-and-such an order has been sent to me by the Roman government." R. Samuel: "Come down and bathe, for your Creator will perform miracles for you." When the two entered the bathhouse, a bath sprite came jesting and dancing toward them. R. Yudan the Patriarch wished to scold him, but R. Samuel bar Nahman said, "Master, leave him alone, for sometimes he shows himself before miracles." Then to the sprite: "Your master is in distress, yet you stand here jesting and dancing." The sprite: "Eat and drink and keep the Sabbath with good cheer, for your God will perform miracles for you and I will set you before the emperor immediately after the conclusion of the Sabbath."

At the outgoing of the Sabbath, immediately after the service, the sprite took them and set them in front of the gate [for Panias]. When the emperor was informed, "Lo, they are standing before the gate," he ordered, "Shut the gate." At that, the sprite took them and set them in the center of the town. When the emperor was informed, he exclaimed, "I command that the bathhouse be heated for seven days and seven nights. Then have them enter and bathe, and after that appear before me." Accordingly, the bathhouse was heated for seven days and seven nights, but the sprite entered it and tempered the heat for them, so that when they entered it they could bathe, and afterward appear before the emperor, who said to them, "Because you know that your God performs miracles for you, you insult the emperor!" They replied, "We did insult Diocletian the swineherd, but to Diocletian the emperor we willingly submit." "Even so," the emperor replied, "you should not insult the humblest Roman citizen or the lowest-ranking Roman soldier."[2]

448. Hiyya bar Abba came to Eleazar and said to him: Please ask R. Yudan the Patriarch to write a letter of commendation on my behalf so that I may go abroad for my livelihood. Eleazar asked for the letter, and R. Yudan wrote: We are sending you a distinguished man. Since he is sent by us, he is to be treated as our own emissary, indeed as we would be treated, provided he intends to return to us in the Land. (According to some, R. Yudan wrote: We are sending you a distinguished man. Wherein his distinction? He is not ashamed to say, "[Regarding this matter] I have not heard any tradition.").[3]

449. Resh Lakish said in the name of R. Judah the Patriarch: The world endures only for the sake of the breath of schoolchildren. Not even for the building of the Temple are children to be deprived of their study of Torah.

Resh Lakish said to R. Judah the Patriarch: I have a tradition from my forebears (others say: from your forebears) that if there are no schoolchildren in a town, it is bound to be destroyed.

R. Judah the Patriarch sent R. Hiyya, R. Ammi, and R. Assi to go through the small cities of the Land of Israel to set up teachers of Scripture and teachers of Mishnah in them. When they came to a place where they found neither teachers of Scripture nor teachers of Mishnah, they said, "Bring us the guardians of the city." When the city's bailiffs were brought, the sages said, "Are these the guardians of a city? They may well turn out to be its destroyers." They were asked, "Who, then, are the true guardians of a city?" They replied, "The teachers of Scripture and teachers of Mishnah. As Scripture says, 'Except the Lord guard the city, the watchman waketh but in vain' " (Ps. 127:1).[4]

450. When R. Yudan the Patriarch, grandson of R. Judah [I] the Patriarch, died. R. Hiyya bar Abba pushed R. Zera [a priest] into the synagogue of Gufta near Sepphoris[5] and caused him to be ritually unclean.[6]

R. Eleazar ben Pedat (fl. 1st half of 4th century C.E.)

451. R. Yohanan said to Resh Lakish: I have observed that when Ben Pedat is seated in the teacher's chair and expounding Torah, he is like Moses expounding from the mouth of the Almighty.[7]

452. "Because of thy love for her, thou forgettest always" (Prov. 5:19), as did R. Eleazar ben Pedat. It is said of R. Eleazar ben Pedat that he used to sit occupied with Torah in the lower marketplace in Sepphoris, while his [forgotten] cloak lay in the upper marketplace.

R. Isaac ben Eliezer said: A man once came to pick it up and found a venomous serpent in it.[8]

453. R. Yohanan said to R. Eleazar, "Come, and I will teach you the Work of the Chariot."[9] He replied, "I am not old enough." When he did become old enough,[10] R. Yohanan died. Then R. Assi said to him, "Come, and I will teach you the Work of the Chariot." R. Eleazar replied, "Had I had the merit, I would have learned it from your teacher R. Yohanan."[11]

454. R. Eleazar said: I saw R. Yohanan in a dream. So I am sure I will now say something worthwhile.[12]

---

1. Making it impossible to carry out his command.
2. P. Ter 8:8, 46b–c; Gen. R. 63:8.
3. P. Hag 1:8, 76d.
4. B. Shab 119b; P. Hag 1:7, 76c.
5. Where the funeral was held.
6. Since all, even priests, are obligated to participate in the funeral of a patriarch (Maimonides, Code, XIV, iv, iii, 10 [YJS 3:172]). P. Ber 3:1, 6a.
7. B. Yev 72b.
8. Guarding it. B. Er 54a.
9. The mysteries of God's providence as discerned in the exposition of Ezek. 1.
10. Reached the age of fifty.
11. B. Hag 13a.
12. B. Men 84b.

455. R. Judah and R. Eleazar used to study together. R. Judah wed a wife, so that R. Eleazar got ahead of him because of the wedding's seven days of feasting; and though R. Judah endeavored for many years to catch up with him, he did not succeed.[1]

456. When R. Eleazar went up to the land of Israel, he said: I have now escaped the first [of the maledictions]. When he was ordained, he said: I have now escaped the second [of the maledictions]. When he was seated in the council of those charged to intercalate the year, he said: I have now escaped the third [of the maledictions]. The three are referred to in the verse "My hand shall be against the prophets that see vanity. . . . They shall not be in the council of My people" (Ezek. 13:9)—not be in the council of those in charge of intercalating the year; "neither shall they be written in the register of the House of Israel" (ibid.)—not in the register of those who are ordained; "neither shall they enter into the Land of Israel" (ibid.), in its literal meaning.[2]

457. R. Helbo, R. Avira,[3] and R. Yose bar Hanina once visited a certain place in the Land of Israel where a peach as large as a stew pot of Kefar Hino[4] was brought to them. (And how big is a stew pot made in Kefar Hino? Five seah.) A third they ate; a third they declared free for all; and a third they fed to their mounts.

R. Eleazar visited the place again a year later and was served peaches so small that he could hold them all in one hand. So he recited the verse "A fruitful land into a salt waste, because of the wickedness of them that dwell therein." (Ps. 107:34).[5]

458. When presents were sent to R. Eleazar from the house of the patriarch, he would not accept them; and when he was invited there for a meal, he would not go, but would say, "You evidently are not pleased to see me alive, for he that hateth gifts shall live" (Prov. 15:27).[6]

459. R. Eleazar dropped a denar. Simeon bar Abba [picked it up and] handed it to him. R. Eleazar: "I have already resigned possession of it."

The sages said: R. Eleazar had no other purpose than to convey possession of the denar to R. Simeon bar Abba, who was a poor man.[7]

460. R. Eleazar was a custodian of charity. Once he came home and asked the members of his household, "What deed of charity have you done [today]?" They answered, "A company of people came here. We gave them food and drink, and they offered prayers in your behalf." R. Eleazar: "That is not a proper response."[8] Again he came to his house and asked, "What deed of charity have you done [today]?" They replied, "Another company came here. We gave them food and drink, and they reviled you." "That," he said, "is a proper response."[9]

461. "And God blessed the Sabbath day" (Gen. 2:3). R. Eleazar said: He blessed it by [increasing the capacity of] the Sabbath lamp, as I myself have experienced. I once lit a lamp for Sabbath eve, and at the conclusion of the Sabbath I found it still burning and the oil not at all diminished.[10]

462. R. Eleazar entered a privy, and a Roman came in after him and demanded that he get out. R. Eleazar got up and left. Then a serpent came and ripped out the Roman's gut. At that, R. Eleazar applied to him the verse, "I give a man (adam) in exchange for you" (Isa. 43:4). Read not adam, "a man," but Edom [a Roman].[11]

463. R. Eleazar ben Pedat was so greatly distressed by poverty that once, after being bled, he had nothing to eat except some green garlic he found and put into his mouth. But then he grew so faint that he dozed off. Those who came to see him noticed that he was both crying and laughing, and that a ray of light issued from his forehead. [When he spoke], they asked him: Why did you cry and laugh, and why did a ray of light issue from your forehead? He replied: Because I saw the Holy One sitting by my side, and I asked Him, "Master of the universe, how long will I suffer such distress in this world?" And He replied, "Eleazar, my son, would you rather had Me turn the world back to its very beginnings? Perhaps you might then be born at a time when you would have adequate sustenance." I replied, "All this, for only a 'perhaps'?"[12] I then asked, "Is the time I have already lived greater, or is the time I have yet to live greater?" He replied, "The time that you have already lived [is greater]." Then I said, "If so, I do not ask to be reborn." He replied, "As a reward for not asking to be reborn, I will grant you in the world-to-come thirteen rivers of balsam oil as clear as the Euphrates and the Tigris, in which you will find pleasure." When I asked, "Is that all? Nothing more?" He replied, "If you take everything, what shall I give your colleagues?" Then I said, "Am I making my request of flesh and blood, which has not the wherewithal?" At this, He snapped at my forehead and said, "Eleazar, my son, I have no choice but to dispatch My arrows at you."[13]

464. R. Eleazar was eating terumah [the heave offering given to a priest] when the angel of death appeared to him. So R. Eleazar said: Am I not performing the mitzvah of eating terumah, and is not such food designated "holy

---

1. Eccles. R. 1:15, §2.
2. B. Ket 112a.
3. Munich ms.: "R. Azariah."
4. Kefar Hananiah in Galilee.
5. B. Ket 112a.
6. B. Meg 28a.
7. P. BM 2:3, 8c.
8. Custodians of charity should not expect or receive a reward for their service.
9. P. Pe 8:6, 21a.
10. This was said to encourage people not to stint in outlay for the Sabbath. Gen. R. 11:2.
11. B. Ber 62b.
12. He would not give God such trouble for a mere possibility.
13. These accounted for the ray of light issuing from R. Eleazar's forehead. B. Ta 25a.

food"?[1] As a result, the moment for the angel of death to act passed by.[2]

R. Abbahu (fl. 1st half of 4th century C.E.)

465. R. Abbahu's beauty had something of the quality of our father Jacob's beauty.[3]

466. "A man to whom favor is shown" (Isa. 3:3) is one for whose sake his generation is shown favor in the world above—one such as R. Hanina ben Dosa;[4] or one for whose sake his contemporaries are shown favor here below—one such as R. Abbahu in Caesar's court.[5]

467. When R. Abbahu used to go from the academy to Caesar's palace, the Roman noblewomen in Caesar's palace would go out to greet him and begin by saying:

Great one of your people,
Spokesman for your nation,
Lantern of light,
May your coming be in peace.[6]

468. R. Abbahu said: I used to think that I was a humble man. But when I saw R. Abba of Acco offer one reason for a particular decision, and his interpreter[7] offer an entirely different reason, and R. Abba was not annoyed, I said, "I am not such a humble man after all."

In what way did R. Abbahu's humility show itself? The wife of R. Abbahu's interpreter once said to R. Abbahu's wife, "My husband really does not require [what] your husband [whispers to him, My husband knows the material], and when he bends down, seemingly to listen to R. Abbahu, and then straightens up, it is only out of deference to R. Abbahu's prestige." When R. Abbahu's wife went and reported this to him, he said, "Why be concerned? Whether it is out of my mouth or his mouth, what matters is that the Name of Heaven is magnified."

Another instance of R. Abbahu's humility: The sages voted to designate R. Abbahu as head [of the academy]. But when he became aware that R. Abba of Acco had numerous creditors [pressing for payment], he said to the sages, "You have a scholar greater than I."

According to some, R. Abbahu replied, "I will not take office until I extricate R. Abba [from his creditors]." And until he extricated him, he did not take office.[8]

469. When R. Abbahu went south, he ruled [about disputed practices] as did R. Hanina, and when he went to Tiberias, he ruled as did R. Yohanan, not wishing to differ with the local authority in his place of residence.[9]

470. As R. Abbahu sat and expounded Scripture, fire flashed around him. So he said, "Perhaps I do not know how to string [one scriptural passage to another properly, by showing linkages in meaning]."[10] For Resh Lakish said: "There are those who know how to string, but do not know how to penetrate [into the sense of each passage]; there are others who know how to penetrate, but do not know how to string [the meaning of one passage to another]. But I am one who knows both how to string and how to penetrate [into the sense of each passage]."[11]

471. R. Abbahu and R. Hiyya bar Abba happened to be in a place at the same time, where R. Abbahu lectured on Aggadah while R. Hiyya bar Abba lectured on Halakhah. All the people left R. Hiyya bar Abba and went to hear R. Abbahu, so that R. Hiyya bar Abba was greatly upset. To comfort him, R. Abbahu said: May I tell you a parable to illustrate what each of us represents? Two men came to a certain city, one to sell precious stones and pearls, and the other to sell different kinds of cheap notions. To whom will people run? Will they not run to him who sells the different kinds of cheap notions?

Every day, in deference to the imperial court's esteem of R. Abbahu, R. Hiyya bar Abba used to accompany him to his lodging place. But that day R. Abbahu accompanied R. Hiyya bar Abba to his lodging place; nevertheless, R. Hiyya's mind was still not set at rest.[12]

472. R. Abbahu went to Caesarea and returned from there to Tiberias, his face shining. When R. Yohanan's disciples saw him, they came and told R. Yohanan, "R. Abbahu must have found a treasure." R. Yohanan asked, "How do you know?" They replied, "Because his face is shining." He asked, "Could it be that he heard a new interpretation of Torah?" When R. Abbahu came in to see him, R. Yohanan asked him, "What new interpretation of Torah have you heard?" R. Abbahu replied, "Something in an ancient Tosefta."

R. Yohanan applied to him the verse "A man's wisdom maketh his face to shine." (Eccles. 8:1).[13]

473. On Sabbath eves, while fanning the fire, R. Abbahu used to sit on a stool made of ivory.[14]

A three-year-old calf used to be prepared for R. Abbahu's meal at the end of the Sabbath. Of it, he would eat only a kidney. When his son Avimi grew up, he asked, "Why waste so much meat? Let us save one kidney from

---

1. Were he to die at that moment, the terumah would be defiled, something the angel of death would surely not wish to have happen. Besides, "a good deed is a shield against tribulation" (Avot 4:1)—in this instance, R. Eleazar's death.
2. B. MK 28a.
3. B. BM 84a.
4. See above in this chapter, §56.
5. B. Hag 14a.
6. B. Ket 17a; B. Sanh 14a.
7. The one who repeated and read aloud to the assembly and occasionally expounded the master's brief utterances, which were spoken in a low voice.
8. B. Sot 40a.
9. P. Ber 8:1, 12a.
10. He feared that the flashes of fire threatened punishment.
11. Cf. above in this chapter, §427. Song R. 1:10, §2.
12. B. Sot 40a.
13. P. Shab 8:1, 11a; Eccles. R. 8:1, §4.
14. He was so wealthy.

last night's Sabbath meal." So they saved it, but a lion came and devoured the calf that was left unslaughtered.[1]

474. When R. Abbahu went down to bathe in the baths of Tiberias, he would lean on two slaves. [Because he was so heavy], they used to give way under his weight and then raise themselves, give way and then raise themselves. When he was asked, "Why do you put them to such trouble," he would reply, "Because I want to husband my strength for [Torah in] my old age."[2]

475. R. Judah said: He who eats three shekels' weight of asafetida[3] on an empty stomach will lose his skin. R. Abbahu said: I had such an experience when I ate only a shekel's weight of asafetida. Had I not quickly sat down in water [to cool the fever], I would have lost my skin. I then applied to myself the verse "Wisdom preserveth the life of him that hath it" (Eccles. 7:12).[4]

476. R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Yohanan: A man is allowed to teach his daughter Greek, because knowledge of the language is deemed an accomplishment. When Simeon bar Abba heard this, he said: Just because R. Abbahu wishes to teach his daughters Greek he attributes the saying to R. Yohanan. When R. Abbahu learned what Simeon had said, he protested; May such-and-such befall me if I have not heard this rule from R. Yohanan.[5]

477. When R. Abbahu, who lived in Caesarea, sent his son R. Hanina to study Torah in Tiberias, people came and told him, "Your son busies himself in tending to burial of the dead." So R. Abbahu sent a letter to his son: "Is it because there are no graves in Caesarea that I sent you to Tiberias? Long ago it was decided in the upper chamber of the house of Bet Arim in Lydda that the obligation to study takes precedence over the obligation to do good deeds."[6]

478. A misfortune happened to R. Abbahu—a child of his died. R. Jonah and R. Yose visited his home to comfort him. Because of their awe of him, they did not utter Torah [on the theme of consolation]. He said, "Let my masters honor me with a theme of Torah." They replied, "Let our master honor us." So he said, "Under the jurisdiction here below, where there is lying, falsehood, deception, favoritism, and bribery, where a judge is here today and gone tomorrow—still, here below the kinsmen of one condemned to death come and salute the judges and the witnesses, as if to say, "We have naught against you in our hearts, for you gave a true judgment."[7] Then surely under the jurisdiction above, where there is no lying, no falsehood, no deception, no favoritism, no bribery, where the Judge lives and endures forever and ever and ever—all the more are we required to submit ourselves willingly to the measure of justice, so 'that the Lord may show thee mercy, and have compassion upon thee, and multiply thee, as He hath sworn unto thy fathers' " (Deut. 13:18).[8]

479. In a dream, R. Abbahu saw Pentakaka[9] pray for rain, and rain came down. So R. Abbahu sent for him and asked him, "What is your occupation?" He replied, "Every day I commit five sins: I send out harlots for hire; I decorate a theater; I carry harlots' bags to the bath; there I clap hands and dance before them; I even beat a drum before them." R. Abbahu: "But what good deed have you done?" Pentakaka: "Once, while I was decorating a theater, a woman came, stood behind a pillar [seeming to offer herself to me], and wept. I asked her, 'What is the matter with you?' She replied, 'The husband of a certain woman is in prison [and I need money to free him]. I wanted to see what I could do to [help her] release him. So I sold my bed and my mattress, gave her the money they brought, and said to her, 'Here, take it, release your husband, and don't resort to the sin [of adultery].' "

Then I [R. Abbahu] said to him, "You are worthy of praying and having your prayer answered."[10]

480. R. Abbahu, R. Yose ben Hanina, and R. Simeon ben Lakish passed an orchard in Doron. The tenant farmer brought them a peach so large that they and their donkeys ate of it and left some. They estimated its size as that of a stewing pot made in Kefar Hananiah, which can hold a seah of lentils. After a while, they again passed that place, and the tenant farmer brought them two or three peaches so small that he could hold them in one hand. They said, "We would rather have fruit of that other tree." He replied, "They are of that other tree." So they recited the verse "A fruitful land into a salt waste, for the wickedness of them that dwell therein" (Ps. 107:34).[11]

481. R. Hiyya, R. Yose, and R. Ammi convicted a certain woman named Tamar [according to Jewish law].[12] So she went and denounced them to the proconsul in Caesarea. The three sent a letter to R. Abbahu, who wrote back to them: We have already won over three advocates, Good Boy (Eutokos), Good Pupil (Eumousos), and Sea Boy (Thalassios). But Tamar-tamrurim (Bitterness) persists in her bitterness. Though we sought to sweeten her, "in vain doth the founder refine" (Jer. 6:29).[13]

482. When R. Abbahu made use of enigmatic speech, he would say, "Make the coal appear to be citrous,[14] then

---

1. B. Shab 119a–b.
2. P. Betz 1:6, 60c. Cf. above in this chapter, §403.
3. A fetid gum resin of Persian plants formerly used in medicine as an antispasmodic.
4. B. Hul 59a.
5. P. Shab 6:1, 7d.
6. P. Pes 3:7, 30a; P. Hag 1:7, 76c.
7. Sanh 6:6.
8. P. Sanh 6:10, 23d–24a.
9. Greek for a man guilty of five kinds of wrongdoing.
10. P. Ta 1:4, 64b.
11. P. Pe 7:3, 20a.
12. Not in keeping with Roman law.
13. P. Meg 3:2, 74a.
14. Yellow, like the color of the fruit.

turn the golden coal sky-blue,[1] and prepare for me two of those who in the dark announce dawn's coming.[2]

The sages said to R. Abbahu: Unconceal to us where R. Ilai is concealed. He replied: He rejoices with his most recent wife (aḥaronit), an Aaronite maiden (aharonit), a wakeful one (eronit) who keeps him awake (hinirattu). Some say that it was in fact a woman.[3] Others, that it was a tractate in the Talmud.[4]

The sages said to R. Ilai: Unconceal to us where R. Abbahu is concealed. He replied: He has been consulting with the Patriarch who bestows the crown [of ordination] upon sages; and now is off to the south to call on noted scholars dubbed Mephibosheths.[5]

483. A certain heretic said to R. Abbahu: Your God is a practical joker, for He said to Ezekiel, "Lie down on thy left side," etc. (Ezek. 4:4), and then, "Lie on thy right side," etc. (Ezek. 4:6). Just then a disciple happened to come and ask, "What is the reason for the sabbatical year?" R. Abbahu replied, "Now I will tell you something that will be applicable to both your questions. The Holy One said to Israel: Sow seed six years, but omit the seventh, so that you may know that the earth is Mine.[6] They did not do so, but sinned and were banished. As you know, it is the way of the world that a king of flesh and blood, against whom the people of a province rebel, will slay all of them if he is cruel, will slay half of them if he is merciful, and, if he is exceedingly merciful, will impose chastisement only on the province's notables. Likewise, the Holy One afflicted Ezekiel, [one of their notables, three hundred ninety days[7] to correspond to the number of years during which Israel failed to keep the sabbatical year] and through him purged Israel of their iniquities [so that, instead of being slain, they were banished]."

484. A certain heretic said to R. Abbahu: Clearly your God is a priest, for He said, "That they take for Me a heave offering" (Exod. 25:2).[8] Now, when He had buried Moses,[9] in what did He immerse Himself [after contact with the corpse]? Should you reply, "In water," is it not written, "Who hath measured the waters in the hollow of His hand" (Isa. 40:12)? R. Abbahu replied: He immersed Himself in fire, for it is written, "Behold, the Lord will come in fire" (Isa. 66:15). The heretic: But does immersion in fire count? R. Abbahu: Fire is indeed the most effective means of purification, for it is said, "Everything that may abide the fire, ye shall make go through the fire, and it shall be clean . . . and all that abideth not the fire ye shall make to go through the water" (Num. 31:23).[10]

485. An infidel whose name was Sason said to R. Abbahu: In the world-to-come, you will be drawing water for me, since it is said, "Ye shall draw water for joy (sason)" (Isa. 12:3).[11] R. Abbahu replied: Had the text read "for joy" (le-sason), you would have been right. But in fact it reads "in joy" (be-sason), which implies that your skin will be made into a bottle with which we shall draw water.[12]

486. Heretics challenged R. Abbahu, saying: We find no mention [in Scripture] of death experienced by Enoch. R. Abbahu: What makes you say so? The heretics: With regard to Enoch it is said, "God took him" (Gen. 5:24); and with regard to Elijah [who did not die] it is said, "Knowest thou that the Lord will take away thy master from thy head today?" (2 Kings 2:3). R. Abbahu: If you insist on interpreting "taking" literally, I will grant you that it may be so in regard to Enoch. But "taking" is used by Scripture also with regard to Ezekiel's wife: "I take away from thee the desire of thine eyes" (Ezek. 24:16)—[do you insist that she too did not die?].[13]

487. A heretic asked R. Abbahu, "When will the Messiah come?" R. Abbahu: "When darkness covers people like you." "You curse me [but do not answer my question]," the heretic exclaimed. R. Abbahu: "I do no more than quote Scripture, 'for, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the peoples; but upon thee the Lord shall shine, and His glory shall be seen upon thee' " (Isa. 60:2).[14]

488. R. Abbahu lauded R. Safra to the Minim [Judeo-Christian authorities] as an exceedingly learned man, and he was thus exempted by them from paying taxes for thirteen years. One day, on coming across R. Safra, they said to him, "It is written: 'You only have I affectionately known from all the families of the earth; therefore I will visit upon you all your iniquities' [Amos 3:2]—is it right for one in a bad humor to let it out on a friend?" R. Safra remained silent and gave them no answer. So they wound a scarf around his neck and tormented him by tightening it. When R. Abbahu came and found them at it, he asked, "Why do you torment him?" They replied, "Did you not tell us that he was an exceedingly learned man? Yet he cannot explain to us the meaning of a verse!" R. Abbahu: "I told you [that he was learned] in Mishnah. Did I tell you [that he was equally learned] in Scripture?" They: "How come you know both?" R. Abbahu: "We who are frequently in

---

1. Fan the coal so as to have a blue flame.
2. Cocks.
3. So that now during the day he is asleep, and therefore not in the academy.
4. Dealing with the laws of priests. Its subtlety kept him awake during the night.
5. Saul's grandson, Mephibosheth, was reputed to be a great sage. B. Er 53b.
6. See Lev. 25:3 and 25:23.
7. See Ezek. 4:5. Abarbanel, quoted by Malbim, reckons the period of Samaria's guilt symbolized by Ezekiel's lying on his left side from the time when the schism took place under Rehoboam (ca. 952 B.C.E.) until the fall of Jerusalem (S. Fisch in Ezek., Soncino, pp. 20–21). B. Sanh 39a.
8. Such offerings are for priests.
9. Deut. 34:6.
10. B. Sanh 39a.
11. JV: "Therefore with joy shall ye draw water."
12. The story of Sason may have been directed at heresiarchs who by various means "found" allusions to themselves in Scripture. R. Abbahu was known for his skill in debating such heretics. B. Suk 48b.
13. Gen. R. 25:1.
14. B. Sanh 99a.

contact with you set ourselves the task of studying Scripture thoroughly, but others[1] do not do so." They: "Then you tell us the verse's meaning." R. Abbahu: "I will explain it by a parable. To whom may God in this verse be compared? To a man who is the creditor of two persons, one his friend and the other his enemy. From his friend he is willing to accept payment little by little, but from his enemy he will exact payment in one lump sum!"[2]

489. The heretic Jacob applied [what he claimed to be] a medicine to R. Abbahu's leg, and but for R. Ammi and R. Assi who [hastened] to suck the poison out of the leg, R. Abbahu would have had to have it amputated.

[So distraught were the heretics by R. Abbahu's influence with the government that they] were willing to face what Samson did when he said, "Let me die with the Philistines" (Judg. 16:30).[3]

490. Simeon bar Abba was expert even in precious stones, and yet he had not a loaf of bread to eat. So, applying to him the verse "Nor is bread won by the wise" (Eccles. 9:11), R. Yohanan said, "Not even by such as Simeon bar Abba [whose father was given to deeds of mercy to such an extent that] one who did not know the good deeds of our father Abraham could come to know them through the deeds of Simeon bar Abba's father."[4]

[Ultimately, because he could not make a living, Simeon bar Abba had to leave the Land. Years later], when Simeon bar Abba was in Damascus, R. Abbahu sent him a letter in which, enclosing some of his gray hair, he wrote, "In deference to these gray hairs of mine, rise up and come back to the Land of Israel."

Abbahu speculated to himself: Who, O R. Yohanan, will remove the dust from your eyes, [so that you might explain why] Abbahu, who resembles a scrawny ear of corn, was appointed to an important post, while Simeon bar Abba, who resembles a full ear of corn, received no appointment whatever.[5]

491. When R. Abbahu died, even the pillars of Caesarea wept. Still the Cuthean [heretics] said: On the contrary, the pillars rejoice. Jews asked: How can they who are so far removed [living as they do on Mount Gerizim] know whether the pillars that are near us are rejoicing [or weeping]?

At the time of R. Abbahu's death, thirteen rivers of balsam passed in front of him. When he asked, "For whom are these?" and was told, "For you," he said, "All these for Abbahu? 'Yet to me, all my labor seemed useless, my strength worn out in vain. But my case rested with the Lord' " (Isa. 49:4). For in this world the Holy One shows the righteous their reward, so that their soul is satisfied, and they go to sleep peacefully. It is like a king who made a feast and imaged on the tablecloth the many varieties of food prepared for it. When the guests entered, they saw the images, their souls were satisfied, and they dozed peacefully [waiting to be served the meal].[6]

R. Zera (Ze'era) (fl. 1st half 4th century C.E.)

492. R. Zera used to hide himself to avoid ordination, because R. Eleazar had said, "Stay obscure and remain alive." But later he heard yet another saying of R. Eleazar's: "No man attains high office until his sins are forgiven him [so that his life is prolonged]." [Thus reassured], he allowed himself to be found.

When they ordained R. Zera, they began the ordination with a wedding song: "No kohl, no rouge, no hair dye—yet full of grace."[7]

493. "Most men cite [traditions] from those whom they personally favor" (Prov. 20:6)[8]—true enough of most men." But who can find a trustworthy man[9] [capable of citing traditions from reliable sources without partiality]?" (ibid.)—such a man was R. Ze'era. Hence R. Ze'era used to say, "We are not required to give heed to the traditions of R. Sheshet, since he is blind."[10]

When R. Ze'era asked R. Yose, "Does my master personally know Ben Pedaiah, in whose name you quote traditions?" R. Yose replied, "R. Yohanan used to quote him."

When R. Ze'era asked R. Abba bar Zavdi, "Does my master know personally Rav, in whose name you quote traditions?" R. Yose replied, "R. Adda bar Ahavah used to quote him."[11]

494. When R. Ze'era was told, "The traditions you cite are set forth sharply," he would reply, "They are the result of daytime study."[12]

495. R. Zera said: Formerly, when I saw sages running to attend a lecture on the Sabbath, I thought they were desecrating the Sabbath.[13] But I too took to running after I heard the saying of R. Tanhum in the name of R. Joshua ben Levi: "One should run to listen to a matter of Halakhah, even on the Sabbath, as is said, 'For He shall roar, and His children shall come hurrying after Him' " (Hos. 11:10).[14]

---

1. I.e., those of Babylonia.
2. So does God punish Israel only by intermittent visitations. B. AZ 4a.
3. B. AZ 28a.
4. Among other things, Simeon bar Abba's father was unbelievably scrupulous in guarding orphans' money entrusted to his care. See below in the chapter, §552.
5. On this passage, see Ze'ev Wolf Rabinovitz, Shaare Torat Eretz Yisrael (Jerusalem, 1940), p. 144. P. Bik 3:3, 65d.
6. P. AZ 3:1, 42c.
7. B. Sanh 14a.
8. JV: "Most men will proclaim every one his own goodness (hasdo)." But the commentator takes hasdo to mean "that which is favored," hence, "[traditions from men] favored."
9. JV: "But a faithful man who can find?"
10. Since R. Shashet was unable to look at the man who conveyed a particular tradition to him and observe his face, eyes, etc., he was not altogether reliable.
11. P. Shab 1:2, 3a.
12. Not during the night, when one's mind is not clear. Others thought that nighttime study is more productive than daytime study. B. Er 65a.
13. It is forbidden on the Sabbath to take long steps. See B. Shab 113b.
14. B. Er 6b.

496. While R. Ze'era, R. Abba bar Kahana, and R. Levi were sitting together, R. Ze'era belittled those who expound Aggadah, calling such works no better than books of augury. R. Abba bar Kahana asked, "Why do you find fault with them? Put a question to them, and they will answer you to the point." So R. Ze'era asked, "What is meant by 'Surely the wrath of man shall praise Thee; the residue of wrath shalt Thou gird upon Thee' (Ps. 76:11)?" They responded, " 'Surely the wrath of man shall praise Thee' in this world; 'the residue of wrath shalt Thou gird upon Thee' in the world-to-come." R. Ze'era replied, "But we can just as well construe the verse the other way around: 'Surely the wrath of man shall praise Thee' in the world-to-come; 'the residue of wrath shalt Thou gird upon Thee' in this world." R. Levi retorted, "The verse means: 'When You rouse Your wrath against the wicked, the righteous, seeing what You do to them, praise Your Name.' " Then R. Ze'era cut it short with the remark: "Whichever way you turn it, Aggadah teaches us nothing. So, Jeremiah my son, hold fast to Halakhah, for it is better than all else."[1]

497. Once R. Jeremiah said to R. Zera, "Let the master come teach Mishnah." R. Zera: "My strength is depleted, and I cannot." R. Jeremiah: "Then let the master teach something in Aggadah."[2]

498. When R. Zera was tired from studying, he used to go to the door [of the academy] of R. Judah bar Ammi, saying: As the sages go out and come in, I will rise for them and receive the reward for honoring them.[3]

499. When R. Zera was tired from studying, he used to go and sit at the door of the academy headed by R. Nathan bar Tobi, saying: As the sages pass by, I will rise for them and receive a reward. Out came R. Nathan bar Tobi, and R. Zera asked him, "Who set forth Halakhah in the academy?" R. Nathan: "R. Yohanan stated that such-and-such was the decision in a particular Halakhah." R. Zera: "You are quite sure that R. Yohanan himself stated it?" R. Nathan: "Yes." Then R. Zera repeated it after him forty times. R. Nathan: "Are you repeating it so many times because it is the only decision in Halakhah you learned from R. Yohanan, or because the decision is new to you?" R. Zera: "I repeated it because it is new to me. Until now I had an uncertain feeling that the decision might have been R. Joshua ben Levi's."[4]

500. R. Zera was avoiding R. Judah, because he wanted to go up to the Land of Israel, despite R. Judah's having said: "When a man goes up from Babylonia to the Land of Israel, he violates the positive commandment: 'They shall be brought to Babylon, and there they shall remain, until the day I remember them' " (Jer. 27:22). Finally R. Zera decided: I will go hear something from R. Judah's own mouth, leave, and then go up to the Land. He went and found R. Judah standing in the bathhouse and saying to his attendants, "Bring me natron, bring me a comb, open your mouths to absorb the vapor [of steam and let out the vapor of perspiration], then drink the waters heated in the bathhouse." Thereupon R. Zera said: Had I come to hear only this, it would have been sufficient.[5]

501. When a man sees barley in a dream, it is a sign that his iniquities are removed, for it is said, "Thine iniquity is removed, and thy sin is expiated" (Isa. 6:7).[6] R. Zera said: I did not decide to go up from Babylonia to the Land of Israel until I saw barley in a dream.[7]

502. On his way to the Land of Israel, when R. Zera found no ferry to take him across [the Jordan], he held on to a rope bridge and crossed over. Watching him, a certain heretic said, "O you impulsive people, who opened your mouths before you opened your ears![8] You still persist in your impulsiveness [exposing yourselves to the danger of drowning]." R. Zera: "A Land that neither Moses nor Aaron was deemed worthy of entering—who could possibly assure me that I would be deemed worthy of entering?"[9]

503. R. Zera crossed the Jordan wearing all his clothes [and they did not get wet].[10]

504. When R. Zera came up to the Land of Israel, he kept a hundred fasts to forget the Babylonians' [subtle] method of study,[11] so that it should not disturb him; and another hundred fasts that R. Eleazar should not die during his lifetime, so that he would have to shoulder the burden of taking care of public needs; and yet another hundred fasts that the fire of Gehenna should have no power over him. Every thirty days he used to test himself [to see whether his body could resist fire]. He would heat an oven and sit on it, and the fire had no power over him. One day, however, the sages cast [envious] eyes upon him, and his thighs were scorched. Thereafter he was called, "Scorch-thighed Shorty."[12]

505. When R. Ze'era came to the Land of Israel, he had himself bled, and immediately went to buy a litra of meat from a butcher,[13] whom he asked, "How much is a litra?"

---

1. P. Mass 3:10, 51a.
2. B. Ta 7a.
3. B. Er 28b.
4. B. Ber 28a.
5. Since these instructions were given in Hebrew, R. Zera realized that secular matters may be set forth in the sacred tongue even in a bathhouse. B. Shab 41a.
6. A play on seorim ("barley") and sar avon ("iniquity is removed").
7. Going up to the Land of Israel was a way of having one's sins expiated. B. Ber 57a.
8. At Sinai you said, "We will do," before saying, "We will hear" (Exod. 24:7).
9. The ferry might have foundered, and I might have perished just the same. B. Ket 112a.
10. He was so agile and quick on the rope bridge that his clothes did not touch the water. P. Shev 4:9, 35c.
11. The method of study in the Land of Israel was less complicated.
12. B. BM 85a.
13. As an antidote.

The butcher: "Fifty small coins and a stroke of the lash." R. Ze'era: "[Instead of the lash], take sixty." The butcher refused. "Take seventy." He still refused. "Take eighty, take ninety," until he reached one hundred. But the butcher continued to refuse. "Very well, then," said R. Ze'era, "follow your custom."

In the evening R. Ze'era went to the assembly of scholars and complained, "What a wicked custom you have here! A man cannot eat a litra of meat without being given one stroke of the lash." When asked, "Who told you that?" he said, "So-and-so, the butcher." The scholars sent for him to bring him in, and [the messenger] found his coffin being taken out. So the scholars asked R. Ze'era, "Master, did you have to impose such [dreadful] punishment?" He replied, "May such-and-such befall me if I became at all angry! [On the contrary], I supposed that was the custom here."[1]

506. R. Ze'era used to grieve much, saying, "If my dear father and my dear mother were living, I would then have earned a portion in the Garden of Eden by honoring them."[2] But after hearing the sages' tales concerning the way R. Tarfon honored his mother and the way R. Ishmael honored his mother, he said, "Blessed be He who is everywhere that I have neither father nor mother, for I could not have acted like R. Tarfon and could not have shouldered the unpleasant burden that R. Ishmael shouldered."[3]

507. In R. Zera's neighborhood there lived brigands whom R. Zera befriended in the hope that they might repent. But the sages were annoyed [by his conduct]. When R. Zera died, the brigands said, "Until now we had Scorch-thighed Shorty to beseech mercy for us. Who will do so now?" They were thus led to thinking [about the kind of life they led] until they resolved to repent.[4]

508. After R. Zera had an altercation with a man, he would pass to and fro before him, making himself accessible, in the hope that the man would accost him, pour the grievance out of his heart, [and thus bring about a reconciliation].[5]

509. R. Haggai was supporting R. Ze'era, when a man bearing a bundle of woodchips passed by. R. Ze'era said to R. Haggai, "Fetch me a chip to pick my teeth," but then retracted, saying, "Do not bring it. Should everyone come and help himself to a chip, the man's bundle would be entirely used up. Not that I, R. Ze'era, am so pious. But one should be precise in observing our Creator's commandments."[6]

510. R. Judah ben Eliakim testified in the name of the holy community of Jerusalem:[7] He who brings together the Geullah and the Tefillah [at the very instant the sun rises] will suffer no harm throughout that day.[8] R. Ze'era said, "That is not so. I did join the two, and yet suffered harm, for I was seized for forced labor and made to carry a myrtle branch to the king's palace." They replied, "That was a preferment. There are people who pay to have the palace pointed out to them, so that they may behold the king's visage."[9]

511. When R. Ze'era fell down in a burial ground, and people came over to pick him up, they found that he had fainted. They asked him, "What caused the faint?" He replied, "[The thought that] all of us are heading for this place—'for that is the end of all men' " (Eccles. 7:2).[10]

512. When gifts were sent to R. Zera from the patriarch's house, he would refuse to accept them. But when he was invited to a meal, he would go, saying, "They derive honor from my presence."[11]

513. R. Zera's disciples asked him: How did you manage to live such a long life? He replied: In all my years I never lost my temper in the midst of my family. I have never walked even one step ahead of one greater than I. When I found myself in an alley soiled with excrement, I endeavored not to meditate on Torah. I have never walked four cubits without studying Torah and without wearing tefillin. I have never slept in the house of study—neither a long slumber nor a short nap. I have never rejoiced at my fellow scholar's discomfiture, nor have I ever called him by his nickname.[12]

514. When R. Zera fell ill, R. Abbahu went to visit him and made a vow: "If Scorch-thighed Shorty recovers, I will make a feast for the sages." R. Zera recovered, and R. Abbahu made a feast for all the sages.[13]

515. When R. Zera died, a certain eulogizer began his lament:

> The land of Shinar conceived and bore him,
> The Land of Beauty[14] made eminent him who was her delight.

---

1. I did not cause his death. P. Ber 2:8, 5c.
2. Evidently they died before R. Ze'era was old enough to be able to honor them.
3. See below, part 5, chap. 2, §277. P. Pe 1:1, 15c.
4. B. Sanh 37a.
5. B. Yoma 87a.
6. Even taking a woodchip without the owner's consent is theft. P. Dem 3:2, 23b.
7. Even though Rome prohibited Jews from residing in Jerusalem after Bar Kozeva's rebellion (135 C.E.), the Jewish community—"the holy community"—in Jerusalem continued its existence.
8. The practice here referred to is the recital of the morning Shema in such a way that the Geullah benediction ("Blessed art Thou, O Lord, who hast redeemed Israel"), which concludes the Shema, is said the instant the sun starts to rise over the horizon, and at that very moment the Tefillah (the Shemoneh Esreh, or Eighteen Benedictions) is begun.
9. P. Ber 1:1, 2d; B. Ber 9b.
10. P. Ber 3:1, 6b.
11. B. Meg 28a.
12. Ibid.
13. B. Ber 46a.
14. R. Zera migrated from Shinar (Babylonia), to the Land of Israel (the Land of Beauty).

Now Rakkath[1] laments. Woe to her,
She has lost her most precious ornament.[2]

Rav (R. Abba bar Aibu) (fl. 219–47 C.E.)

516. Rav was the tallest man in his generation, and R. Judah reached up to his shoulder.[3]

517. Rav's beauty had something of the beauty of R. Abbahu, and R. Abbahu's beauty had something of the beauty of our father Jacob.[4]

518. When Issi bar Hini came up to the Land of Israel, R. Yohanan met him and asked, "Who is the head of the academy in Babylonia?" Issi: "Tall Abba [Abba Arika]." R. Yohanan: "You refer to him as mere Tall Abba! I remember when I was sitting before Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] seventeen rows behind Rav, and sparks of fire issued from the mouth of Rav into the mouth of Rabbi and from the mouth of Rabbi into the mouth of Rav, and I could not understand what they were saying. And you refer to him as mere Tall Abba![5]

519. When R. Hiyya bar Joseph came up [to the Land of Israel], he found both R. Yohanan and Resh Lakish stating that an animal known to have been attacked by a beast of prey need only have its intestines examined to determine whether it died as a result of the attack. He said, "By God! Rav has ruled: '[All its internal organs], from the brainpan to the hips, must be examined.' " Resh Lakish retorted, "Who is this Rav? Who is he anyway? I don't know him!" R. Yohanan said to him, "Don't you remember the disciple who attended the lectures of Rabbi and of R. Hiyya the Elder? By God! During all those years that disciple was allowed to sit in the presence of his teachers,[6] while I had to remain standing! And who [do you think] excelled? He excelled in everything [in Torah and in piety]!" At this, Resh Lakish exclaimed, "Truly, the man who repeated the ruling of Rav's is to be remembered for good!"[7]

520. Once, while Rav was expounding a portion of Scripture before Rabbi, and R. Hiyya entered, Rav started from the beginning. When Bar Kappara entered, Rav started from the beginning again. When R. Simeon Berabbi entered, Rav started from the beginning a third time. But when R. Hanina bar Hama came, Rav said, "Do I have to keep going back again and again?" And when he did not go back, R. Hanina took offense. Rav went to [pacify] him on thirteen eves of Yom Kippur, but R. Hanina refused to be pacified.[8]

521. Rav was the son of R. Hiyya's brother and the son of R. Hiyya's sister.[9] When Rav came up to the Land of Israel, R. Hiyya asked him, "Is your father still alive?" Rav replied, "You might ask, 'Is Mother still alive." "Well, is your mother alive?" R. Hiyya asked. Rav replied, "Is Father still alive?" At that, R. Hiyya said to his attendant, "Take off my shoes [but carry my bathing gear after me to the bathhouse].[10]

522. When Rabbah bar Hana was about to go down to Babylonia, R. Hiyya said to Rabbi, "My brother's son is going down to Babylonia. May he decide on matters of ritual law?" "He may." "May he decide in disputes about money?" "He may." "May he declare firstborn animals permissible for slaughter?"[11] "He may." When Rav was about to go down to Babylonia, R. Hiyya asked Rabbi, "My sister's son is going down to Babylonia. May he decide on matters of ritual law?" "He may." "May he decide in disputes about money?" "He may." "May he declare firstborn animals permissible for slaughter?" "He may not."

"He may not? Why not?" "Because he is not expert in examining blemishes."

"But did not Rav say, 'I spent eighteen months with shepherds to learn which blemish was permanent and which was temporary'?"

Nevertheless, Rabbi withheld the authorization from Rav out of deference to Rabbah bar Hana.[12]

523. Rabbi authorized Rav to absolve vows and examine bloodstains.[13] After Rabbi died, Rav asked Rabbi's son for authorization to examine the blemishes of firstborn animals. Rabbi's son said: I will not add to what my father gave you.[14]

524. While Samuel and Karna were sitting by the bank of the Royal Canal,[15] they saw its water rising and becoming turbid, a phenomenon that prompted Samuel to say to Karna, "A great man is arriving from the west, who suffers from a disorder of the bowels, and the water is rising to welcome him.[16] [Since you appear to be skeptical about the extent of his learning], go and test for yourself the 'wine in his vessel.' " So Karna went and met Rav, whom he asked, "How do we know that tefillin are to be engrossed

---

1. An ancient name for Sepphoris or Tiberias, where R. Zera lived.
2. B. MK 25b.
3. B. Nid 24b.
4. B. BM 84a.
5. B. Hul 137b.
6. As an advanced student.
7. B. Hul 54a.
8. B. Yoma 87b.
9. Aibu, Rav's father, was R. Hiyya's paternal half-brother, while Rav's mother was R. Hiyya's half-sister on his mother's side.
10. He meant to show that one may mourn only for an hour if one hears of a death that occurred more than thirty days before. After such a brief period of mourning, R. Hiyya told his attendant to follow him to the bathhouse—he is no longer a mourner, and bathing is now permitted. B. Pes 4a.
11. After the destruction of the Temple, firstborn animals could be slaughtered for food only if they had permanent blemishes.
12. Who had to be propped up, so to speak. Rav required no propping up. B. Sanh 5a.
13. In inquiries concerning menstruation.
14. P. Hag 1:8, 76c.
15. The canal connecting the Euphrates and the Tigris at Nehardea and Mahoza (Obermeyer, pp. 144ff.).
16. Water welcomes the great and those of patriarchal lineage. It is said that the water in the well rose up to enter Rebekah's jar. Thus Eliezer knew that the woman was Rebekah (Gen. R. 60:5).

only on the skin of a clean animal [which may be eaten]?" Rav replied, "Because it is written, 'That the law of the Lord may be in thy mouth' [Num. 13:9], meaning that which is permitted to your mouth." Karna: "How do we know that blood must be red [to be considered menstrual]?" Rav: "Because it is said, 'The Moabites saw the water over against them as red as blood' " (2 Kings 3:22).

Rav asked, "What is your name?" "Karna." "May it be [Heaven's] will that a horn (keren) sprout from between your eyes."[1]

After that, Samuel took Rav into his house, fed him barley bread and a stew of small fish, and had him drink strong beer, so that his bowels might be loosened, but he did not show him the privy.[2]

Rav [who did not know what Samuel had in mind] uttered a curse, saying, "May he who caused me such distress have no sons rise from him," and so it was.[3]

525. After Rav returned to Babylonia, he, Samuel, and R. Assi met at the circumcision of a boy (or, as some say, at the redemption of a firstborn). Rav would not enter ahead of Samuel, nor Samuel ahead of R. Assi,[4] and R. Assi would not go in ahead of Rav. They kept arguing who should go in last, and it was decided that Samuel would go in last.[5] But why should not Rav and [his disciple] R. Assi have gone in last? Because Rav regularly deferred to Samuel to make up for the time a curse unwittingly escaped his lips.[6]

526. When Rav came down [to Babylonia], he used to say: I am the Ben Azzai[7] of these parts.[8]

527. R. Eleazar said: The words "I shall be to them as a little sanctuary" (Ezek. 11:16) apply to the school in Babylonia of our master, Rav.[9]

528. When the main body of students departed for home from the school of Rav, one thousand two hundred still remained.[10]

529. Rav came to R. Shela's school when there happened to be no interpreter[11] to stand next to R. Shela. So Rav stood next to him and interpreted keriat ha-gever[12] as "a man's calling the priests." R. Shela: "Sir, would you mind transalting this phrase as 'cockcrow'? Rav: "A flute's sound is music to nobles' ears, but ignorant weavers will have none of it.[13] When I used to stand next to R. Hiyya and interpreted keriat ha-gever as 'a man's calling the priests,' he did not object. Yet you insist, 'Say, cockcrow.' " R. Shela: "Sir, are you the teacher here? [I thought I was the teacher, and you were the meturgeman (the interpreter). Now please be good enough to translate literally what I am telling you; or, if this does not suit you, go back to your seat and] take a load off your feet." Rav: "People say, 'If you hire yourself out to someone, be ready for any task, however menial—even to carding wool for him.' "[14] According to some, Rav said, "In matters pertaining to things holy, go up, not down."[15]

530. It happened that when a man drowned in the marsh of Simki, R. Shela permitted the man's wife to marry again. Hearing that, Rav sent word to Samuel: "Come, let us put him under a ban."[16] Samuel: "Let us first inquire of R. Shela [what led him to do it]." So they sent the inquiry: "If a man has fallen into water that has no [visible] limit, is his wife forbidden or permitted to marry again?" R. Shela replied, "His wife is forbidden." Rav and Samuel again inquired, "Is the marsh of Simki regarded as water that has [a visible] limit or as water that has [no visible] limit?" R. Shela: "It is water that has no visible limit." Rav and Samuel: "Why then did the master act as he did?" R. Shela: "I made a mistake. At first I thought that since the water in the marsh was enclosed on all sides and stands still, it is to be regarded as water that has [a visible] limit."

At that, Samuel applied to Rav the words "There shall no mischief befall the righteous" (Prov. 12:21),[17] and Rav applied to Samuel the words "But in the multitude of counselors there is safety" (Prov. 24:6).[18]

531. A young deer whose hind legs were broken was brought before the exilarch. Rav examined it at the bunch of sinews converging in the thigh. [Upon finding them uninjured], he declared that the young deer could be eaten. In fact, he was getting ready to eat a portion of it rare. But just then Samuel said to him, "Abba, have you no fear that it might have been bitten by a snake [and is full of poison]?" "Then what is the remedy?" Rav asked. Samuel: "Let it be put into an oven, and it will test itself [as to whether poison is in it or not]." It was put into an oven and it fell to pieces.

At that, Samuel applied to Rav the words "There shall be no mischief befall the righteous" (Prov. 12:21), and Rav applied to Samuel the words "No secret troubleth thee" (Dan. 4:6).[19]

---

1. Rav probably deemed Karna's questioning as effrontery.
2. So that he had to restrain himself from moving his bowels. It was part of the cure that Samuel, who was a physician, prescribed.
3. Samuel had no sons who lived. B. Shab 108a.
4. R. Assi was older.
5. Samuel being the youngest. The words "that Rav and R. Assi should go in," which follow, are deleted as in various manuscripts and Arukh. See BK, ed. E. Z. Melamed (Jerusalem, 1968), p. 128.
6. B. BK 80b.
7. Distinguished by keenness of mind and authoritative teaching.
8. P. Pe 6:3, 19c.
9. B. Meg 29a.
10. The students went home for a festival, which was preceded by a kallah, a period of intense study under Rav's guidance. B. Ket 106a.
11. The rabbi was seated and spoke Hebrew in a low voice to the interpreter, who translated the rabbi's words into Aramaic, more and more the language of the people.
12. "The call of the gever" ("man" or "cock"). Hence it may mean that the work in the Temple began either at cockcrow or when the man in charge called the priests to their respective duties.
13. An insult to R. Shela.
14. I will not stand on my dignity.
15. Another interpreter is not likely to have my learning. B. Yoma 20b.
16. For permitting the remarriage of a married woman.
17. For challenging R. Shela's action and preventing it from becoming a precedent.
18. Samuel's counsel saved Rav from acting precipitately. B. Yev 121a.
19. B. Hul 59a.

532. Isaac bar Samuel bar Martha came down to Nisibis, where he found R. Simlai of Darom seated in a teacher's chair and expounding: Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] and his court allowed the use of oil [owned by Gentiles]. Samuel ate the oil, but Rav was unwilling to eat it. When Samuel said to Rav, "Eat, or I will have you set down as a contumacious elder,"[1] Rav replied, "While I was still over there [in the Land of Israel], I knew the one who demurred with regard to using oil of Gentiles—it was Simlai of Darom." Samuel: "Did he do so on his own authority? Did he not in fact do so in the name of R. Yudan the Patriarch?"

So Samuel insisted, and Rav began to eat such oil.[2]

533. Samuel and the people of the school of Shela used to pay their respects to the exilarch every day. Those of the school of Shela used to enter first and be seated first. Then, in deference to Samuel, they had him seated first. When Rav returned to Babylonia, Samuel, in deference to him, had him seated first. Annoyed, those of the school of Shela said, "We insist on being second." So Samuel was willing to be seated third.[3]

534. In Nehardea there was a dilapidated wall which Rav and Samuel did not walk by, even though it had been standing in such condition for thirteen years and had not collapsed. Once, when R. Adda bar Ahavah happened to visit, Samuel said to Rav, "Master, let us make a detour around it." Rav replied, "No need for that now. Since we have with us R. Adda bar Ahavah, whose merit is so great, I am not afraid."[4]

535. The exilarch appointed Rav market commissioner, and he dispensed floggings for dishonest measures but not for inflated prices. [Because he thus limited his duties], the exilarch had him put in prison, where Rav-karna visited him. Rav said, "According to the sages, a market commissioner is expected to deal with measures but not with prices, yet you changed the commissioner's duties to deal with both measures and prices. So go out and tell them at the exilarchate that a market commissioner is expected to deal only with measures and not with prices." Rav-karna went out and said, "A man who [in disobedience to the exiliarch] presumes to say even such a thing as that a cake of pressed unripe dates is something other than what it is deserves to be put in prison [let alone one who on his own changes the duties of the market commissioner]."[5]

536. A man whose adversary in a lawsuit was rich wanted to have his suit tried before Rav. Rav sent for the rich man, who said, "If all the camels of Arabia were to come, they could not carry even the keys of my storehouses. So how do you expect me to appear in a lawsuit with such a one?" When Rav heard this, he said, "Where does he get off boasting about what is not really his?" At that, a Roman decree was issued that the rich man [be pressed into forced labor] and his possessions confiscated by the imperial treasury. [Humbled], he went at once to Rav and pleaded, "Pray in my behalf that my freedom and my possessions be restored." Rav prayed, and restored they were.[6]

537. Once a man [the offspring of a Jewish woman and an idolater], appeared before Rav and asked him, "What [is the legal status of the child] begotten of an idolater or a slave who had intercourse with the daughter of an Israelite?" Rav replied, "The child is legitimate." The man: "If so, then give me your daughter." Rav: "I will not give her to you." Subsequently Shimi bar Hiyya said to Rav, People say that, in Media,[7] a camel can dance on a kav.[8] Here we have a kav, we have a camel, we have Media, but there is no dancing!"[9] Rav: "Even if he were the equal of Joshua son of Nun, I would not have given him my daughter." Shimi: "If he were the equal of Joshua son of Nun, others would have given him their daughters, if the master had not given him his; but with this man, if the master will not give him, others also will not give him."[10] As Shimi refused to go away, Rav fixed his eye upon him, and he died.[11]

538. Rav once had an altercation with a certain butcher, and when the butcher did not come to him on the eve of Yom Kippur [to seek reconciliation], he said: I will go to him to seek to be reconciled. When R. Huna met Rav and asked him, "Sir, where are you going?" Rav replied, "To seek to be reconciled with So-and-so." To himself, R. Huna said: Abba[12] is about to cause someone's death.[13] Rav went on until he stood before the butcher, who was sitting and splitting up an animal's head When the butcher raised his eyes and saw Rav, he said, "You are Abba—go away, I will have nothing to do with you." Just then, as he was splitting up the animal's head, a bone glanced off, struck his windpipe, and killed him.[14]

539. Rav was constantly tormented by his wife. When he said to her, "Prepare lentils for me," she would prepare beans; "beans," she would prepare lentils. After Rav's son, Hiyya, grew up, he took to reversing his father's requests, until finally Rav said to his son, "Your mother has grown kind [to me]." R. Hiyya said, "It was I who reversed your requests." So Rav said, "What you have done bears out the saying, 'Your offspring in season may teach you reason.' Nevertheless, do not continue to do so, lest you become like those of whom Scripture says, 'They have trained their tongues to speak falsely' " (Jer. 9:4).[15]

---

1. Who refuses to heed the decision of the Sanhedrin. B. Sanh 86b.
2. P. AZ 2:8, 41d.
3. P. Ta 4:2, 68a.
4. B. Ta 20b.
5. P. BB 5:5, 15b.
6. P. Ned 9:4, 41c.
7. A way of referring to foreign lands where wonders occur (Goldschmidt).
8. A small measure of capacity equal to a pint.
9. In his ruling, Rav displayed courage, but he stopped short of carrying it into practice.
10. They would regard the master's refusal as an indication that the man was really illegitimate.
11. B. Yev 45a.
12. Rav's real name was Abba.
13. As he knew that the butcher was a hard man and would not take up Rav's offer of reconciliation.
14. B. Yoma 87a.
15. B. Yev 63a and En Yaakov, ad loc.

540. Rav said to his son Aibu: I have labored to teach you Halakhah, but without success, so come and I will teach you worldly wisdom. Sell your wares while the sand is still on your feet.[1] Everything you sell, you may regret,[2] except wine, which you may sell without regret.[3] Untie your purse and then open your sack.[4] Better a kav from the ground than a kor from the roof.[5] Once the dates are in your bag, run to the brewery.[6]

Rav said to his son Hiyya: Do not take drugs;[7] do not try to jump over a brook;[8] do not have a tooth extracted; do not provoke serpents; and do not provoke a heathen.

Rav said to R. Assi: Do not dwell in a town in which no horse neighs and no dog barks.[9] Do not dwell in a town where the leader of the community is a physician.[10]

Rav said to R. Kahana: Better turn a carcass around than turn your words around. Flay a carcass in the marketplace and earn a wage, and do not say, "I am a priest, I am a great man, and such a task is odious to me." Even if you merely ascend the roof, [take] victuals with you. Even if a hundred pumpkins sell for one zuz in town, let them be under your skirts.[11]

541. On concluding his Tefillah, Rav would add the following: May it be Your will, O Lord our God, to grant us a long life, a life of peace, a life of well-being, a life of blessing, a life of sustenance, a life of bodily vigor, a life in which there is fear of sin, a life free from shame and disgrace, a life of wealth and honor, a life in which we may be filled with the love of Torah and the fear of Heaven, a life in which You will fulfill all our heart's desires for what will truly benefit us.[12]

542. Ardavan sent a pearl of purest ray to our master [Rav] and requested: Send me something equally precious in return. Rav sent him a mezuzah. Ardavan sent back word: I sent you something beyond price, and you sent me something that sells for a debased coin of no value. Rav: Neither my possessions nor yours can match it. Besides, you sent me something that I have to guard, whereas I sent you something that guards you while you lie asleep, as is said, "When thou walkest, it shall lead thee, when thou liest down, it shall guard thee" (Prov. 6:22).[13]

543. Ardavan ministered to Rav. When Ardavan died, Rav exclaimed: The bond [of friendship] is snapped![14]

544. When Rav died, his disciples followed his bier. On their way back,[15] they said: Let us go and have a meal by the river Danak. After they had eaten, they sat and discussed a question concerning the invitation to the saying of grace and the proper response. When they were unable to find an answer, R. Adda bar Ahavah rose, reversed his garment, which was rent in front,[16] and then made another rent in its back, saying: Rav has departed![17]

545. When Samuel was told, "Rav has departed," he made rents in twelve of his garments, saying, "Gone is the man before whom I stood in awe."[18]

546. When Rav died, R. Isaac bar Bisna decreed that myrtles and palm branches with the accompaniment of small bells not be brought to a wedding.[19]

547. It was the practice of people to take some earth from Rav's grave, and apply it [as a remedy] on the first day of an attack of fever.[20]

548. Shila bar Avina gave a practical decision in agreement with the view of Rav. At the time Rav was about to depart from this world, he said to R. Assi, "Go and tell Shila to reverse his decision [as I did], and if he does not listen to you, bend him with strong words."[21] R. Assi thought that he was told, "[If he does not listen to you], ban him with strong words."[22] After Rav died, R. Assi came to Shila and said to him, "Retract, for Rav has also retracted." Shila: "If Rav had retracted, he would have said so to me."[23] Since Shila would not listen, R. Assi put him under the ban. Shila: "Is not the master afraid of being burned by the glow of my fire?" R. Assi: "I am Issi ben Judah,[24] who is Issi ben Gur-aryeh,[25] who is Issi ben Gamaliel, who is Issi ben Mahalalel, a brazen mortar (assita) over which rust has no power." Shila: "And I am Shila ben Avina, an iron pestle that can break even an iron mortar." Soon after that, R. Assi fell ill, alternately burning up with fever and shivering with chills, until finally he died. Shila then went to his wife and said to her, "Prepare my shroud for me—R. Assi is likely to go to Rav and denounce me." She prepared his shroud for him, and at once Shila died. When people saw a myrtle

---

1. After buying, sell quickly.
2. Since the price may go up.
3. Had you waited, it might have turned to vinegar.
4. Be sure to get the money for the merchandise before delivering it to the purchaser.
5. Rather earn little near home, than much far away.
6. To brew beer from them—otherwise, you may eat them or they may deteriorate.
7. Even as medicine, as they are habit forming.
8. The strain affects the eyesight.
9. These guard the town: the dogs raise the alarm, and the marauders are pursued on horseback.
10. A doctor might be too busy to give proper attention to communal matter.
11. Keep them in stock and do not wait until you actually need them. B. Pes 113a.
12. This prayer is now said on the Sabbath on which the New Moon is announced. B. Ber 16b.
13. P. Pe 1:1, 15d; Gen. R. 35:16.
14. B. AZ 10a–11b.
15. Rav was not buried in the town where his academy was.
16. Which he had done when he heard of Rav's death.
17. B. Ber 42b–43a.
18. B. MK 24a.
19. B. Shab 110a.
20. B. Sanh 47b.
21. Garyeh, literally, "incite him."
22. Gadyeh, literally, "cut him off."
23. He was a disciple of Rav.
24. He probably meant that his name Assi resembled that of Issi ben Judah, who bore a variety of names. See Pes, Soncino, p. 585., n. 6.
25. Literally, "a lion's whelp" (see Gen. 49:9).

branch[1] flying from Shila's bier to R. Assi's, they said, "Evidently the two sages have made peace with each other."[2]

549. Once an epidemic broke out in Sura, but it did not appear in the neighborhood where Rav lived. People thought that this was due to Rav's extraordinary merit. However, it was made clear in a dream that the miracle was too slight to be attributed to Rav's great merit and it came about on account of the merit of a certain man who made it a practice to lend hoe and shovel for the digging of graves.[3]

Samuel (fl. 219–54 C.E.)

550. Abba, Samuel's father, dealt in silks. Once he came to R. Judah ben Betera in Nisibis [to sell him some silk] and reached an understanding with him about price. After a while, Abba asked him, "Does my master want that item?"[4] R. Judah replied, "But were there not only words between us?" Abba: "Do I not trust your word more than money?" R. Judah: "You trusted my word. May you be privileged to raise up a son like the prophet Samuel, of whom it is said, 'All Israel . . . knew that Samuel was trustworthy as a prophet' " (1 Sam. 3:20).[5]

551. Once Samuel's father found Samuel crying and asked him, "Why are you crying?"

"Because my teacher beat me."

"Why?"

"Because he said, 'You fed my son and did not wash your hands before doing it.' "

"But why did you not wash your hands?"

"It was he who ate, so why should I wash?"

"Is it not enough that your teacher is ignorant; must he also beat you?"[6]

552. Samuel's father was entrusted with money belonging to orphans. When he died, Samuel was not with his father, and the orphans dubbed Samuel "Son of the Orphans' Money Eater. So he went after his father to the cemetery and said to those buried there, "I am looking for Abba." They replied, "There are many Abbas here." "I want Abba ben Abba." They replied, "There are several Abbas ben Abba here." He then said to them, "I want Abba ben Abba, Samuel's father. Where is he?" They replied, "He has gone up to the academy on high." [When he got there] and saw Levi sitting outside, he asked him, "Why are you sitting outside? Why have you not gone up into the academy?" Levi replied: "Because they said to me, 'As many years as you would not go up to the academy of R. Aphes and so kept hurting his feelings, we will not let you go up into the academy on high.' " In the meantime, Samuel's father came by, and Samuel noticed that he was both weeping and smiling. Samuel asked him, "Why are you weeping?" He replied, "Because you will be coming here soon." "And why are you smiling?" "Because you are highly esteemed in this world." So Samuel said, "If I am esteemed, let Levi be allowed up." And Levi was allowed up.

Then Samuel asked his father, "Where is the orphans' money?" He replied, "You will find it in the rack of millstones. The money on the upper and lower millstones is ours; that on the middle one is the orphans'." Samuel: "Why did you put the orphans' money on the middle millstone?" He replied, "So that if thieves got at it [from the top], ours would be stolen; and if the earth eroded it [from below] ours would be eroded."[7]

553. Samuel Yarhinaah[8] was Rabbi's physician. When Rabbi was afflicted with a disease in one eye, Samuel said, "I will put a medicine in it." Rabbi: "I cannot bear such a thing." "Then let me apply it as a poultice." "That, too, I cannot bear." So Samuel placed a vial containing the medicine under Rabbi's pillow, and he was cured.[9]

Rabbi all but ached to ordain Samuel, but somehow it did not come about. So Samuel said to Rabbi, "Let it not grieve you. I have seen it written in the stars:[10] Samuel Yarhinaah will be called 'sage' but not 'rabbi,' and Rabbi's healing shall come through him."[11]

554. Samuel said: Except for the comet, whose nature I do not understand, I know the lanes of heaven as well as I know the lanes of Nehardea.[12]

555. "It is not in heaven" (Deut. 30:12). Samuel said, "Torah is not to be found among astrologers." People said to Samuel, "But you yourself are an astrologer and also a great man in Torah." Samuel: "I engage in astrology only when I am free from studying Torah." "When is that?" "When I go into a privy."[13]

556. Samuel said: I was able to make out the facial features of the midwife who assisted at my birth.[14]

---

1. According to Rashi, it was customary to lay a myrtle branch on a bier.
2. B. Nid 36b–37a.
3. B. Ta 21b.
4. Meanwhile the price of silk had risen, but Abba would not raise it to R. Judah.
5. Midrash Sam. 10:3; Yalkut, 1 Sam., §100.
6. He who eats must wash his hands—lift them, so to speak, in holiness (Ps. 134:2)—before blessing the Lord for the food he takes. Even a person who is fed must wash his hands, since his hands may inadvertently touch the food he is eating. On the other hand, he who feeds another is under no such obligation. B. Hul 107b.
7. B. Ber 18b.
8. The expert on the moon, or astronomer.
9. By the vapor.
10. "Written in the stars"—Solomon Funk, as quoted in BM, Soncino, p. 493, n. 4; BR: "Book of Adam."
11. B. BM 85b–86a.
12. B. Ber 58b.
13. Deut. R. 8:4.
14. P. Ket 5:6, 30a.

557. It happened that a fetus was brought to Samuel, and he said, "This is forty-one days old"; and what he said was found to be accurate.[1]

558. Samuel's tenant farmer brought him some dates. When he ate them, he tasted wine in them. He asked, "How did that come about?" The tenant: "The date palms were placed between vines." Samuel: "So date palms deplete the soil[2] that much! [Uproot them] and bring me their roots tomorrow."[3]

559. King Shapur [I] once said to Samuel, "You Jews profess to be very clever. Tell me what I shall see in my dream." Samuel replied, "You will see the Romans come, take you captive, and make you grind date stones in a golden mill." He thought about it all day, and in the night saw it in his dream.[4]

560. Samuel used to juggle eight cups of wine in the presence of King Shapur.[5]

561. Once, while Samuel and Avlat[6] were sitting together and happened to see some people going to a meadow, Avlat [pointing to one of them] said to Samuel, "That man is going but will not return, for a snake will bite him and he will die." Samuel replied, "If he is a Jew, he will go and return."[7] While they were still sitting, that man who went, returned. Avlat arose, removed the man's pack, and in it found a snake cut in two. Samuel asked the man, "What good deed did you do?"[8] He replied, "Every day we pool our bread and eat it. But today one among us had no bread, and he was embarrassed. So I said: I shall undertake to [collect the bread and] put it in the basket. When I got to him, in order to relieve him of his embarrassment, I pretended to take bread from his hand." Samuel said to the man, "You have done a wonderful deed." Then Samuel went forth and expounded the words "Charity delivereth from death" (Prov. 10:2)—not merely from unnatural death, but from death in any form.[9]

562. Even though "during the war of Vespasian[10] the use of crowns for bridegrooms was prohibited,"[11] R. Jeremiah plaited a crown of olive branches and put it on [in honor of a couple]. When Samuel heard of this, he said, "He should not have done such a thing. He deserves to have his head chopped off." And "due to this hasty remark which proceeded from a ruler [in Torah]" (Eccles. 10:5), that is exactly what happened to R. Jeremiah.[12]

563. When Samuel and Mar Ukba[13] were sitting together going over a theme in Halakhah, Mar Ukba sat deferentially before him at a distance of four cubits. But at a judicial session [when Samuel and Mar Ukba were sitting together, the arrangement was reversed, and] Samuel sat deferentially before Mar Ukba at a distance of four cubits. Nevertheless, in order that [his seat might not be on a level higher than Samuel's and also that] Samuel's words might be well heard, a place was hollowed out in the ground and a mat spread there for Mar Ukba the Exilarch to sit on.[14]

Every day Mar Ukba [walked ahead of Samuel] and escorted him to his lodging place. But one day Mar Ukba continued to be so preoccupied by a lawsuit [over which he had presided] that Samuel found himself walking on and on behind him, beyond his lodging place. Finally, when Mar Ukba reached his home [having forgotten that Samuel was still behind him], Samuel spoke up: "Has not the day already ended? Please, master, release me from the bind I am in and allow me to go to my own home."[15] Realizing that Samuel was miffed, Mar Ukba imposed upon himself for one day the isolation prescribed for a man under formal reproof.[16]

564. Phinehas, Samuel's brother, suffered a bereavement, and Samuel came to comfort him. When he saw that Phinehas's nails were long, he asked, "Why did you not trim them?"[17] Phinehas replied, "Had you been bereaved, would you have made so little of it [as to trim your nails]?" His words were [as ill omened] "as an ill-considered word that proceedeth from a ruler" (Eccles. 10:5),[18] and before long Samuel, too, suffered a bereavement. When his brother Phinehas called on him to console him, Samuel took his nail trimmings, tossed them to his brother, and said, "Are you not aware that, as a covenant's clauses follow each other, so does calamity follow ill-considered words?"[19]

565. Once certain women captives were brought to Nehardea. When Samuel's father placed watchmen with them,[20] Samuel asked him, "And who watched them till now?" The father replied, "If they had been your own daughters, would you also have made so little of it?" His words were [as ill omened] "as an ill-considered word that

---

1. B. Nid 25b.
2. "Soil"—BK, ed. E. Z. Melamed (Jerusalem, 1953), p. 151, BR: "wine."
3. B. BK 92a.
4. B. Ber 56a.
5. B. Suk 53a.
6. A Persian sage and friend of Samuel.
7. Prayer can set aside what is determined by the stars. So Rashi.
8. To escape your fate.
9. B. Shab 156b.
10. Roman emperor, 67–79 C.E.
11. Sot 9:14.
12. P. Sot 9:15, 24b.
13. " 'Mar' is a Babylonian title of rank and is sometimes also borne by Samuel, but mostly by the members of the exilarch's family. Samuel was the principal of the academy at Nehardea . . . while Mar Ukba was both a disciple of Samuel and exilarch, the supreme head [and judge] of the Jewish community invested with authority by the Persian king. . . . See Wilhelm Bacher" (MK, Soncino, p. 102, n. 2).
14. Isidore Epstein in MK, Soncino, p. 102, n. 4.
15. The translation follows the exposition and readings in the commentary of an anonymous disciple of Rabbenu Yehiel of Paris (Kitve Makhon Harry Fischel [Jerusalem, 1937], p. 34).
16. B. MK 16b.
17. In keeping with Samuel's belief that a person may trim his nails during the period of mourning.
18. One of the ruler's servants is apt to act on it at once—hence, inauspicious.
19. B. MK 18a.
20. To guard them until they were redeemed.

proceedeth from a ruler." Before long, Samuel's daughters were taken captive and brought to the Land of Israel. They persuaded their captors to remain outside while they walked into the school of R. Hanina. One said, "I was taken captive, but I am unsullied." The other said, "I was taken captive, but I, too, am unsullied." So [accepting their testimony] the sages gave them permission [to marry even priests]. As they left, and the captors entered,[1] R. Hanina said, "It is clear that the young women are children of a sage."[2] Then it became known that they were the daughters of Samuel. So R. Hanina said to Simeon bar Abba [Samuel's brother] "Go take care of your relatives." He married one, and she soon died; then he married the other, and she also died.[3]

566. R. Papa said: A man who was following the bier of Samuel made derogatory remarks about him, and a beam fell from the roof and crushed his skull.[4]

R. Judah (bar Ezekiel) (fl. 254–99 C.E.)

567. As Rabbi was about to die, he said: Today R. Judah will be born in Babylonia.[5]

568. Samuel said of R. Judah: This man cannot have been born of woman.[6]

569. Rav was the tallest man in his generation, and R. Judah reached only to his shoulder. R. Judah was the tallest man in his generation, and his attendant Adda reached only to his shoulder.[7]

570. Samuel [who was R. Judah's teacher] used to say to him, "Sharp wit, stand up in deference to your father!"[8]

R. Ezekiel was a man of such good deeds that even Mar Samuel used to stand up in deference to him.[9]

571. R. Judah used to pray only once every thirty days. So he had to go over his Tefillah [and prepare it] before saying it.[10]

572. A certain man from Nehardea entered a butcher's shop in Pumbedita and peremptorily demanded, "Give me meat!"

He was told, "Wait until R. Judah bar Ezekiel's attendant takes his order, and then we will serve you."

"Who is Judah bar Sheviskel,"[11] he exclaimed, "to take precedence over me and be served before me?"

They went and told R. Judah. Enraged, he brought out a ram's horn, [sounded it], and imposed a ban on that man.

They also told R. Judah, "That man is in the habit of calling people slaves." R. Judah then had him proclaimed a slave. So the man went off and summoned R. Judah to a lawsuit before R. Nahman. When the summons was served on R. Judah, he went to R. Huna and asked him, "Shall I go or not?"[12] "As a matter of fact," R. Huna replied, "you are not obligated to go, since you are a distinguished man; yet in deference to the exilarch's house,[13] arise and go."

On his arrival there, he found R. Nahman making a parapet for the roof of his house.[14] He said to him, "Does not the master accept Samuel's dictum 'Once a man is appointed head of a community, he may not do manual labor in the presence of three people'?"[15]

"I am [merely] making a little bit of a gundrita,"[16] R. Nahman replied.

R. Judah: "Is not maakeh,[17] as written in the Torah, or mehitzah,[18] as used by the sages, good enough? Why such highfalutin language?"

R. Nahman: "Sit down on a keraphita [seat]."

R. Judah: "Is not safsal, as used by the rabbis, or itztaba, as commonly used, good enough?"

R. Nahman: "Will you partake of etronga [citron]?" R. Judah: "Thus did [my teacher] Samuel say: 'He who says etronga has in him a huge measure of arrogance': either etrog, as it is called by the sages, or etroga, as popularly called."

R. Nahman: "Will you drink an anbaga [a small cup of wine]?"

R. Judah: "Are you then dissatisfied with the ispharagus, as it is called by the sages, or anpak, as it is popularly called?"

R. Nahman: "Let [my daughter] Donag come and serve drinks."

R. Judah: "Thus said [my teacher] Samuel: 'One may not make use of a woman.' "

"But she is only a child!"

"[My teacher] Samuel distinctly said, 'One may make no use of a woman at all, whether grownup or child.' "

"Will the master send greeting to [my wife] Yalta?"

"Thus said [my teacher] Samuel: '[To listen to] a

---

1. To demand ransom money for them.
2. Since they saw to it that their captors remained outside, so that they could act as their own witnesses, in which case the principle of "the mouth that forbids may also be the mouth that permits" applies.
3. Their dying indicated that their testimony was untruthful. B. Ket 23a; P. Ket 2:6, 26c.
4. B. Ber 19a.
5. B. Kid 72b.
6. He was so extraordinary. B. Nid 13a.
7. B. Nid 24b.
8. Even though you are superior to him in scholarship.
9. B. Kid 33b.
10. B. RH 35a.
11. A willful and contemptuous mispronunciation of Ezekiel, meaning: "meat eater," "glutton." The Arabic word shiwā' means "roast hunk of meat."
12. His eminent position entitled him to refuse to recognize R. Nahman's jurisdiction over himself.
13. R. Nahman was a son-in-law of the exiliarch, the official head of Babylonian Jewry.
14. See Deut. 22:8.
15. R. Nahman would be seen by at least that many people walking in the street below.
16. Balustrade.
17. The Hebrew name for it.
18. Literally, "barrier," the rabinnical term.

woman's voice'—[for your wife will respond to my greeting]—'is indecent.' "

"Then perhaps through a messenger?"

"Thus said [my teacher] Samuel: 'One may not inquire after a woman's welfare.' "

"Then through her husband?"

"Thus said [my teacher] Samuel: 'One may not inquire after a woman's welfare in any way whatsoever.' "

[When] R. Nahman's wife [heard of the interchange, she] sent word to her husband; "Adjudicate this case and get rid of him, lest he make you out to be a common ignoramus!"

R. Nahman to R. Judah: "Why did the master take the trouble to come here?"

R. Judah: "You, master, had a summons served on me."

R. Nahman: "Seeing that I barely know the master's manner of speaking, would I presume to send the master a summons?"

R. Judah drew out the summons from his bosom and showed it to him. "Here is the man and here the summons!"

R. Nahman: "Since the master did trouble himself to come here, let him set forth his plea, so that it will not be said, 'Disciples of the wise show favor to one another.' " After listening to R. Judah's account, R. Nahman asked him, "Why did the master put the man under a ban?"

"Because he abused a sage's messenger."

"Then the master should have had him lashed, for you know, of course, that Rav used to have the lash given to one who abused a messenger of the sages."

"I chose to deal with him more severely."

"Why did the master have it proclaimed, 'He is a slave'?"

R. Judah: "Because he is in the habit of calling people slaves, and we have been taught that he who declares [others unfit is] himself unfit. Since such a one never speaks well of anyone, he, in [my teacher] Samuel's words, 'stigmatizes others with his own blemish.' "

"But when Samuel said this, he meant that such a man is to be suspected of being a slave. Who said that he is actually to be proclaimed a slave?"

At this stage, his Nehardean opponent appeared on the scene and said to R. Judah, "You call me a slave—I who am descended from the royal house of the Hasmoneans!" R. Judah: "Thus taught [my teacher] Samuel: 'Whoever says, "I am descended from the Hasmonean house," is a slave.' "[1] R. Nahman: "Do you not agree with what was stated by R. Abbahu in the name of R. Huna in Rav's name: When a disciple of the wise [involved in a lawsuit] cites a ruling in the name of his master, he is heeded only if he cites it before the pleas are set forth; if after they are set forth, he is not heeded?" R. Judah: "But R. Mattenah [not involved in this lawsuit], who is ready to affirm what I have just cited, is here in the court."

Now, R. Mattenah had not seen Nehardea for thirteen years and only arrived there that day. So R. Judah asked him, "Does the master remember what Samuel said while he was standing with one foot on the riverbank and the other foot on the bridge?" R. Mattenah replied, "Thus indeed taught Samuel: 'Whoever says, "I am descended from the Hasmonean house," is a slave, because there remained of them only one maiden, who ascended a roof and cried out, "Whoever says, 'I am descended from the Hasmonean house' is a slave." Then she leaped from the roof and died.' "

After hearing R. Mattenah's reply, R. Nahman proclaimed the man a slave. [As a result, in Nehardea, the marriages of many women who sprang from that family were declared invalid] and their marriage contracts were torn up.[2] So, as R. Judah was leaving the city, its inhabitants came out after him to stone him. But he threatened them, "If you will desist, do so. If not, I will make known about you what [the master] Samuel said: There are in Nehardea two families, one called the House of the Dove, and the other the House of the Raven, and the mnemonic for them is 'The clean is clean, and the unclean is unclean.' "[3] They promptly dropped the stones they held in their hands, and the stones were so numerous that they clogged up the Royal Canal.[4]

573. R. Zera found R. Judah standing by the door of his father-in-law's house and noticed that he was in such a cheerful mood that if he were to ask him about all the secret processes of the universe, he would tell them to him. So he asked him: Why do the goats walk at the head of a flock, while the sheep follow after them? R. Judah: It is in keeping with the order of creation—darkness first, and light afterward.[5]

Why is the rear end of sheep covered with a fat-tail, while goats are uncovered? Those whose wool we cover ourselves with are themselves covered, while those whose hair we do not cover ourselves with are uncovered.

Why is a camel's tail short? Because it feeds on thorns.[6]

Why is an ox's tail long? Because it grazes in meadows and needs [a long tail] to beat off the gnats.

Why is the proboscis of a locust flexible? Because it dwells among young shoots. If the proboscis were hard, it would be dislocated, and the locust would go blind. For, as Samuel said, if one wishes to blind a locust, let him extract its proboscis.

Why is a fowl's [lower] eyelid bent upward?[7] Because it dwells among the rafters, and if smoke entered [its eyes], it would go blind.

---

1. Because the dynasty was wiped out by Herod, who, in spite of his having become king, was always regarded by the Jews as an Idumean slave. To ennoble his children, he called them Hasmoneans. See above, part 1, chap. 9, §51.

2. Since the women who belonged to that family were consequently reduced to the status of slaves, their marriages to freemen became null and void.

3. The dove, being a clean bird, is fit for food; the raven, being unclean, is unfit. Descendants of the two families were probably numerous in Nehardea, and their origin was forgotten.

4. B. Kid 70a–b and En Yaakov, ad loc.

5. In that part of the world, goats are dark, while sheep are light.

6. In which a long tail would be entangled.

7. When its eyes are closed, the lower eyelid turns upward and lies upon the upper. So Rashi. The reference is to a thin membrane beneath the lower lid of the eye capable of extending across the eyeball.

The word dasha, "entrance," is an acronym for derekh sham, "there is the way."[1] Darga, "stairs, ladder," is an acronym for derekh gag, "the way to the roof." Metukhilta, "a relish," is portmanteau for Matai tikleh da, "When will this end?"[2] Beta, "a house," is an acronym for Bo ve-etiv bah, "Come and settle it." Biketa, "a small house," is an acronym for Be akta, "confined place." Kufta, "a low seat," is an acronym for Kof ve-tiv, "Invert it, and sit down." Livne, "bricks," implies li-vene vanim, "to last for one's children's children." Hutza, "prickly shrubs," is a variant of hatzitzah, "barrier." Hatzba, "pitcher," is so called because it is used to draw (hotzev) water from the river. Kuzah, "a small jug," is a variant of ka-zeh, "like this."[3] Shotita, "a myrtle branch," is a variant of shetuta, "folly."[4] Meshikhla, "a washbasin," is an acronym for mashe khullah, "a vessel capable of washing everybody." Mashkilta, "another kind of washbasin," is an acronym for mashiya khalata, "a vessel in which brides are washed." Assita, "mortar," suggests hasirta, "hollow interior." Bukhna, "a pestle," is an acronym for Bo ve-akkennu, "Come, and I will pound it." Levusha, "upper garment," is an acronym for los vusha, "no shame." Gelima, "a cloak," is so called because in it one looks like a shapeless mass (a golem).[5] Gulta, "a long woolen cloak," is acronym for Geli ve-etiv, "Remove it and then sit down." Puria, "bed," is so called because in it human beings procreate, parin ve-rabbin. Bur zinka, "a well that springs up only occasionally," is an acronym for Bor zeh naki, "This well is empty." Sudra, "turban,"[6] is an acronym for Sod adonai li-re'av, "The secret of the Lord is revealed to those that fear Him." Apadna, "royal palace," is an acronym for Apit'ha din, "the door to which all come for judgment."[7]

574. When Ulla happened to visit Pumbedita, R. Judah said to his son R. Isaac, "Go offer him a basket of fruit, and observe how he recites Havdalah.[8] R. Isaac did not go, but sent Abbaye instead. When Abbaye returned, R. Isaac asked him, "How did he recite it?" " 'Blessed be He who distinguishes between sacred and profane,' " he replied, "and no additional blessing." When R. Isaac came to his father, his father asked him, "How did he say it?" R. Isaac replied, "I did not go. I sent Abbaye, and he told me that Ulla recited, 'Who distinguishes between sacred and profane.' " His father said, "Sir, your pride and arrogance are responsible for the fact that Ulla's practice will not be reported in your name."[9]

575. When Ulla visited R. Judah's home in Pumbedita, he realized that R. Isaac, R. Judah's son, was already grown up but remained unmarried. So he asked R. Judah, "Why does the master not find his son a wife?" R. Judah replied, "Do I know from whose stock[10] to take one?" Ulla replied, "Do we know the stock we ourselves come from? Perhaps from those of whom it is said, 'They ravished the women in Zion, the maidens in the cities of Judah' " (Lam. 5:11).[11]

576. R. Judah was reading with his son R. Isaac the verse "I find more bitter than death the woman" (Eccles. 7:26). R. Isaac: "What woman, for instance?" R. Judah: "For instance, your mother."

But did not R. Judah [on another occasion] teach his son R. Isaac: A man finds joy only with his first wife, for it is said, "Let thy fountain be blessed and have joy with the wife of thy youth" (Prov. 5:18)? When R. Isaac asked, "What wife, for instance?" R. Judah replied, "For instance, your mother." The truth is that R. Judah's wife was easily provoked and just as easily pacified.[12]

577. R. Judah permitted eye painting on the Sabbath [for medicinal purposes]. R. Samuel bar Judah commented sharply, "He who listens to R. Judah [in this matter] profanes the Sabbath." After a while, when R. Samuel himself had a sore eye, he sent an inquiry to R. Judah: "Is painting it permitted or prohibited?" R. Judah sent a reply: "For everyone else it is permitted, but for you it is prohibited." [R. Samuel bar Judah protested]: "Was it on my own that I had the temerity to differ with you? I merely cited what I learned from Mar Samuel."[13]

578. Once R. Judah, seeing two men using bread wastefully, exclaimed, "It seems that there is a superfluity of food in the world." He cast an angry look at the two wastrels, and suddenly there was a great scarcity of food. So the sages said to R. Kahana son of R. Nehunia, a disciple ministering as R. Judah's attendant, You, sir, who are constantly with him, persuade him to go out by the door next to the marketplace.[14] He prevailed upon him, and R. Judah went out into the marketplace. Seeing a large crowd there, he asked, "What is the matter?" He was told, "They stand around the offal of crushed dates, which is for sale." At this, he exclaimed, "There is evidently famine in the land," and said to his attendant, "Take off my shoes." As soon as R. Kahana had taken off one shoe, rain began to fall. As R. Kahana was about to take off the other shoe, the prophet Elijah appeared and said to him, "The Holy One says: If you take off the other shoe, I will lay waste the world [with flood]."[15]

R. Mari, the son of Samuel's daughter, related: On that day I was standing on the bank of the river Papa[16] and saw angels disguised as mariners bringing sand and

---

1. The following words, similarly treated, may be regarded as examples of popular etymology or as jeux d'esprit, not to be taken seriously.
2. Since relishes are used sparingly and last a long time.
3. "Give me a glass of this size to drink."
4. People danced with them at weddings and looked like fools as they did so!
5. Since there are no openings for the arms.
6. The distinctive turban worn by rabbinical scholars.
7. B. Shab 77b.
8. The benediction of separation recited at the close of a Sabbath or festival.
9. But in Abbaye's name. B. Pes 104b.
10. What stock is pure.
11. B. Kid 71b.
12. B. Yev 63b.
13. Who was his teacher. B. AZ 28b.
14. That he might see for himself how people were suffering because of the famine he had brought about.
15. R. Judah should not importune God with too much self-humiliation, as rain was about to come.
16. The canal passing through Pumbedita (Obermayer, p. 237).

loading ships with it, and the sand turned into fine flour. When everybody came to purchase it, I called out to them, "Do not buy this flour, because it was produced by a miracle." Next day, boatloads of rice [long overdue] came in.[1]

579. R. Judah was sitting before Samuel when a certain woman came and cried out in his presence [about a wrong inflicted on her]. But Samuel ignored her. So R. Judah said to him, "Does the master not agree that 'Whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the helpless, he also will cry but not be heard'?" (Prov. 21:13). Samuel replied, "O sharp wit, I, your superior, may have cold water poured on me [as punishment for ignoring a cry for justice]. But your superior's superior [Mar Ukba] will have hot water poured on him [as punishment for failure to judge rightly]. For Mar Ukba is head of the court, which is told, 'O house of David, thus saith the Lord: Execute justice in the morning, and deliver the spoiled out of the hand of the oppppressor, lest My fury go forth like fire, and burn that none can quench it, because of the evil of your doings' " (Jer. 21:12).[2]

580. Zutra bar Tobiah was once expounding a lesson in Scripture in the presence of R. Judah. When he came to the verse "And these are the last words of David" (2 Sam. 23:1), he asked R. Judah, " 'Last words' would imply, would it not, that there were first words—what were they?" R. Judah was silent, saying not a word. So Zutra repeated the question: " 'Last words' would imply, would it not, that there were first words—what were they?" R. Judah then replied, "What do you think—because one [like myself] has no explanation for this verse, I am not a man of distinction?" Zutra, realizing that R. Judah was offended, took upon himself the disability [of a reproof] for one day.[3]

581. A certain man died in R. Judah's neighborhood. Since there were no kin to be comforted, R. Judah assembled ten men every day who sat [in mourning] in the home of the deceased. After seven days, the deceased appeared to R. Judah in a dream and said, "May your mind be at rest, for you set my mind at rest."[4]

582. A certain woman of Nehardea came before R. Judah[5] in a lawsuit and was declared guilty. When she asked, "Would your teacher Samuel[6] have judged this way?" he asked her, "Did you know him?" She replied, "Yes. He was short, big-bellied, and soot-black, and he had large teeth." R. Judah: "So you came to insult him! Let this woman be put under the ban." Then and there her body swelled up and she died.[7]

583. There was once a certain disciple of the wise whose reputation was not very good. So R. Judah said, "What are we to do? If we put him under a ban, the sages will miss him [because he is an able teacher]. If we do not put him under the ban, the Name of Heaven will be profaned." Then R. Judah asked Rabbah bar Bar Hana, "Have you heard anything concerning such a problem?" Rabbah replied, "Thus said R. Yohanan: What is meant by 'The priest's lips should keep knowledge and they should seek the law from his mouth; for he is the messenger of the Lord of hosts' [Mal. 2:7]? It can only mean that if a master is like the messenger of the Lord of hosts, people should seek the law from his mouth; but if he is not, they should not seek it from him." At that, R. Judah pronounced the ban on that disciple. In the end, R. Judah fell ill and the sages came to visit him, and that disciple came with them. When R. Judah beheld the disciple, he began to laugh with joy. The disciple said to him, "As though it were not enough that you put me under the ban—now you even laugh at me!" R. Judah replied, "I am not laughing at you. But as I am about to go to the world-to-come, my spirit rejoices at the thought that, even in dealing with such a learned person as you, I allowed myself no partiality."

After R. Judah died, the same disciple came to the house of study and said to the sages, "Release me from the ban." The sages replied, "There is no man here of R. Judah's standing who could release you. Go to R. Judah the Exilarch[8]—he will release you." When the disciple came to him, R. Judah the Exilarch said to R. Ammi, "Examine his case. If releasing him is required, release him." R. Ammi examined his case and was inclined to release him from the ban. Then R. Samuel bar Nahmani got up on his feet and said, "Why, even a ban of 'separation' imposed by a maidservant in Rabbi's house was not treated lightly by the sages for three years. How much more so a ban imposed by our colleague R. Judah!" R. Zera asked, "What is signified by the appearance of the venerable [R. Samuel bar Nahmani], who for many years has not come to the house of study, but did come today? It signifies that we are not required to release the man from the ban he is under." So R. Judah the Exilarch did not release him. The disciple went out weeping as he walked away. Then a hornet came at him and stung him, and he died. When he was brought to a cave of the pious, they refused to receive him.[9] Then he was brought to a cave of public lecturers, where they did receive him.[10]

584. In Sura, people did not eat the udder of an animal. In Pumbedita, they did.

Rami bar Tamri, also known as Rami bar Dikuli, of Pumbedita once happened to be in Sura on the eve of Yom

---

1. B. Ta 24b.
2. B. Shab 55a.
3. B. MK 16b.
4. B. Shab 152a–b.
5. He lived in Pumbedita, where he had his school.
6. After the death of Rav and R. Assi, R. Judah was Samuel's pupil for a short time.
7. B. Ned 50b.
8. R. Judah II, grandson of Rabbi Judah I and son of Rabban Gamaliel III. Nesiah, the Aramaic form of nasi ("prince" or "exilarch"), is conveniently used to indicate the second Judah (and sometimes the third).
9. A serpent was coiled at the cave's entrance. See above in this chapter, §233 and §306.
10. Since he was a lecturer who had repented. B. MK 17a and En Yaakov, ad loc.

Kippur. When the townspeople took all the udders and threw them away, he immediately went to collect them and ate them. Then he was brought before R. Hisda, who asked him, "Why did you do it?" He replied, "I come from the place of R. Judah, where eating the udder is permitted." R. Hisda asked him, "But do you not accept the rule: [When a person arrives in a town], to him is applied the more stringent usage of the town he left, as well as the more stringent usage of the town he has come to?"[1] Rami replied, "I ate them outside the city's boundary." R. Hisda: "And with what did you roast them?" Rami: "With grape kernels." R. Hisda: "Perhaps they were kernels of grapes from which men had made wine used as libation for idols?" Rami: "They had been lying there more than twelve months."[2] R. Hisda: "Perhaps they were stolen?" Rami: "Since shoots were growing among them, the owners must have given up all hope of recovering them." Then R. Hisda noticed that Rami was not wearing tefillin and asked him, "Why do you not wear tefillin?" Rami replied, "I suffer from loose bowels, and R. Judah has said, 'One who suffers from loose bowels is exempt from wearing his tefillin.' " R. Hisda further noticed that Rami was not wearing fringes [on his coat] and asked him, "Why are you not wearing fringes?" Rami replied, "The coat [I am wearing] is borrowed, and R. Judah has said, 'A borrowed coat is exempt from fringes for thirty days.' " While this was going on, a man was brought in [to the court] charged with failure to honor his father and mother. They bound him [for flogging], but Rami said to them, "Let him go, for it has been taught, 'Any commandment whose reward is stated right after it is not to be enforced by a court below.' "[3] R. Hisda said to him, "I see that you are very sharp." He replied, "If you would but come to R. Judah's school, I could really show you how sharp I am!"[4]

R. Jeremiah (fl. middle of 4th century C.E.)

585. Abbaye said: One of those [who dwell in the Land of Israel] surpasses any two of us [Babylonians]. Rava responded: But when one of ours goes up there [to the Land of Israel], he is as good as two of theirs, for while R. Jeremiah was here, he was not able to grasp what the sages were saying. But when he went up there, he began to speak of us as "the stupid Babylonians."[5]

586. We have been taught: A young pigeon that is found on the ground within fifty cubits from a cote, belongs to the owner of the cote. If found beyond fifty cubits from the cote, it belongs to the finder. [Upon hearing these words], R. Jeremiah raised the question: "If one foot of the pigeon is within fifty cubits and the other is beyond them, how do we decide?" It is because of this question that they turned P. Jeremiah out of the house of study.[6]

587. On another occasion, the associate scholars in the Land of Israel sent a query on a matter of Halakhah to R. Jeremiah. He sent back his reply: "I am unworthy to rule on the query you sent me, but this is the view to which I, your disciple, incline." And he set forth the right Halakhah in the matter. For this [act of becoming modesty], they readmitted R. Jeremiah to the house of study.[7]

588. R. Isaac bar Redifa had a practical question in law. So he went and put the question to R. Jeremiah, who said: You have lions to consult, and you put the question to foxes?[8]

589. In the days of R. Jeremiah, a distressing tax was imposed on the people of Tiberias. So R. Jeremiah sent a request to R. Jacob son of R. Bun for a silver lampstand. R. Jacob replied with the words "Jeremiah has still not turned back from his evildoing"[9] and wanted to place R. Jeremiah under a ban. At this, R. Hiyya son of R. Isaac Atushaia, who was seated there, protested, "I understand that an elder is not put under the ban unless he has acted like Jeroboam the son of Nebat and his companions." R. Jacob replied, "Akavia ben Mahalalel was put under a ban because he said, 'Only in show did they make her drink.'[10] Was there anything in such a charge that could match what Jeroboam the son of Nebat and his companions did?"[11]

So each put the other under a ban; each minded the other's ban; and finally each had to release the other from it.[12]

590. R. Jeremiah was seated before R. Zera, and both were engaged in Halakhah. Evening drew near, the time for prayer arrived, and R. Jeremiah insisted on reciting it. R. Zera then applied to him the verse "He that turneth away his ear from hearing Torah, even his prayer is an abomination" (Prov. 28:9).[13]

591. Once, when R. Abba had a grievance against R. Jeremiah, R. Jeremiah went and sat down at R. Abba's door [waiting for him to come out so that he might ask to be forgiven]. Just then a maidservant of R. Abba's came

---

1. Pes 4:1.
2. Even if they were kernels of wine that had been used in idolatry, after twelve months they are permitted. See B. AZ 34a.
3. The reward for honoring parents is stated right after the commandment. See Exod. 20:12.
4. B. Hul 110a–b.
5. B. Ket 75a.
6. B. BB 23b.
7. B. BB 165b.
8. P. Shev 9:4, 39a.
9. Scholars were not called upon to pay such taxes.
10. There was a dispute as to whether a female proselyte or a freed bondwoman suspected of infidelity may be made to drink the water of bitterness (Num. 5). Akavia said No. The sages said Yes. When the sages recalled that Shemaiah and Avtalion had Karkemith, a freed bondwoman, drink such water, Akavia replied, "Only in show did they make her drink." For imputing the integrity of Shemaiah and Avtalion, Akavia was put under a ban.
11. Accordingly, an elder may be put under a ban for an offense of lesser gravity.
12. P. MK 3:1, 81d.
13. B. Shab 10a.

out to empty some dirty water into the dungheap, and as she was pouring it, jets of that water fell on R. Jeremiah's head. He remarked: They have used me for a dungheap, and in his own behalf he prayed, "May He raise up the needy one out of the dungheap" (1 Sam. 2:8). As soon as R. Abba heard what happened, he hastened out to R. Jeremiah, who in the meantime had turned around and was about to ask R. Abba's forgiveness. Interrupting him, R. Abba said: No need for you to beg to be forgiven. Now it is for me to remove from your heart [the memory of your humiliation], as Scripture says, "Go, grovel [if need be], in order to restore your neighbor's dignity" (Prov. 6:3).[1]

592. As he lay dying, R. Jeremiah left word: Wrap me in white shrouds that are hemmed; put socks on me, sandals on my feet, and a staff in my hand; and lay me down at the side of the road, so that I shall be ready when the Messiah comes.[2]

R. Huna (fl. 257–97 C.E.)

593. R. Huna once came before Rav with reed grass tied around his waist. Rav: "What is the meaning of this attire?" R. Huna: "I had no wine for Kiddush. So I pledged my girdle, and with the money got wine for Kiddush." Rav: "May it be Heaven's will that one day you be covered with silks."

Soon after, on the day when Rabbah, R. Huna's son, was getting married, R. Huna, who was a small man, happened to be lying asleep on a bed. [Unaware of R. Huna's presence], his daughters and daughters-in-law came in to change and threw their discarded garments over him, so that he was [temporarily] covered with silks.

When Rav heard of the incident [and realized how short-lived his well-meant blessing turned out to be], he was annoyed. "Why," he asked, "when I blessed you, did you not respond with 'The same to you, sir'? [Had you done so, you would have continued to be covered with silks.]"[3]

594. R. Huna was once carrying a hoe on his shoulder. When R. Hana bar Hanilai came over and wished to relieve him of it, R. Huna said: If you are accustomed to carry such gear in your own town, carry it. But if not, I refuse to be deferred to through abasement of your person.[4]

595. Once a certain man came to R. Huna for a lawsuit. [In reply to his request], R. Huna said, "Bring me a man who will take my place at work on my palm plantation."

R. Huna, who used to graze oxen, once knew of some evidence in behalf of a certain person. That person said to R. Huna, "Come and bear witness in my behalf." R. Huna replied, "Reimburse me for the wages [I will lose]."[5]

596. When a lawsuit was brought before R. Huna, he used to say to the litigants, "Provide me with a man who will draw the water [to irrigate my field], and I will adjudicate your case."[6]

597. R. Huna frequently passed the door of R. Avin the Carpenter. Seeing that R. Avin was scrupulous in kindling [Sabbath] lights, he said, "Two great men will issue from this household." And indeed, R. Idda bar Avin and R. Hiyya bar Avin did issue from there.[7]

598. When R. Huna was delivering a discourse, he required thirteen interpreters.[8] After such a discourse, when the disciples rose up and shook out their garments, the dust rose so high that it obscured the light of day. Indeed, even in the west,[9] they would say, "The disciples in the academy of R. Huna the Babylonian have just now stood up."[10]

599. When R. Huna went forth to hold court, he took ten scholars with him from the house of study, in order, he said, that only one chip of the beam might fall on him.[11]

600. R. Hisda asked R. Huna, "What do you think of a disciple whom his master needs?"[12] "Hisda, Hisda," R. Huna exclaimed, "I do not need you, but you will have need of me till the age of forty." After that, they were so angry at each other that they did not even visit each other. [But subsequently] R. Hisda kept forty fasts because R. Huna had felt humiliated; while R. Huna kept forty fasts because he had suspected R. Hisda [unjustly].[13]

601. Rava said to Rafram bar Papa: Tell us some of the good deeds R. Huna did. He replied: Of his earlier years, I remember nothing; but of his later years, I remember that on stormy days he used to be taken out in a gilded carriage to inspect every part of the city, and wherever a wall appeared to be wobbly, he would order its demolition. If the owner was in a position to rebuild it, he had to do so; if not, R. Huna would have it rebuilt at his own expense. Every Friday, at the approach of evening, R. Huna would send his emmisary to the market to buy up all the

---

1. JV: "Go, humble thyself, and urge thy neighbor." But rehav ("urge") can also mean "dignity," "pride." En Yaakov version of B. Yoma 87a.
2. For the resurrection and for meeting the Messiah. P. Kil 9:2, 32b; Gen. R. 100:2.
3. To have a blessing flow fully, the one blessed must respond by voicing his thanks. Otherwise, the blessing may be, so to speak, short-circuited. B. Meg 27b. Rabbi Mordecai Savitsky provided the interpretation to the translator.
4. B. Meg 28a.
5. P. Sanh 1:1, 18b.
6. B. Ket 105a.
7. B. Shab 23b.
8. Each of whom spoke to a small portion of the large gathering.
9. The column of dust rose so high that it was visible even in the Land of Israel.
10. B. Ket 106a.
11. That, in the event of a wrong decision, responsibility for it would be shared by the others. B. Hor 3b.
12. Because the disciple may have traditions of which his teacher is unaware. R. Hisda was R. Huna's disciple, so R. Huna regarded the question as an affront.
13. B. BM 33a.

gardeners' leftover vegetables and have them thrown into the river.

Should he not rather have distributed these among the poor?

[He was afraid] that at times they would rely on these gifts and would fail to come and buy [for the Sabbath].

Why then did he not feed the vegetables to domestic animals?

He was of the opinion that food fit for human beings should not be fed to animals.

Then why did he purchase them at all?

Because if he had not done so, the gardeners might have been tempted [not to grow enough vegetables for the community] in the future.[1]

When he had a meal, he used to open the doors and declare, "Whoever is in need, let him come and eat."

Rava said: All these things I, too, could do, except the last one, because there are so many soldiers in Mahoza.[2]

602. Once four hundred jars of wine belonging to R. Huna turned sour. The sages came to visit him and said to him: The master ought to examine his [past] actions. He asked them: Am I suspect in your eyes? They replied: Is the Holy One suspect of executing judgment without justice? He said to them: If anyone has heard something against me, let him speak up. They replied: We have heard that you do not give your tenant his [lawful share of] vine shoots.[3] R. Huna replied: Does he leave me any of them? He steals them all! They said to him: That is exactly what the proverb says: "Even if you steal [what is your own] from a thief, you also are a bit of a thief!" He said to them: [From now on] I pledge myself to give them to him.

Then vinegar went up so high that it sold at the same price as wine.[4]

603. R. Huna had wine stored in a dilapidated building. When he wanted to remove it, he took R. Adda bar Ahavah into that building and kept him occupied in a learned discussion until he removed the wine. Then, as soon as R. Adda bar Ahavah left the building, it collapsed. When R. Adda ben Ahavah realized that he was used for such a purpose, he was annoyed and quoted R. Yannai, who once said, "A man should never stay in a place of danger in the hope that 'surely a miracle will be wrought for me,' for it might be that no miracle will be wrought for him. But even if it is wrought for him, it will be charged against his merits [in the world-to-come]."[5]

604. R. Hisda praised R. Hamnuna before R. Huna as a great man. So R. Huna said, "When he visits you, bring him to me." R. Hamnuna came, and R. Huna noticed that he was not wearing the distinctive turban[6] of scholars. "Why," R. Huna asked, "are you not wearing your turban?" R. Hamnuna: "Because I am not married." R. Huna turned his face away from him and said, "See to it that you do not appear before me again until you are."[7]

605. R. Huna died suddenly, and the sages were greatly concerned [for, according to a Baraita, "If one dies suddenly, it is deemed that he was 'snatched' "]. However, Zoga from Adiabene recited another Baraita: "Sudden death is called 'snatching' only when it occurs before one attains [eighty], the age of strength; after a man has attained this age, sudden death is called 'death by a kiss.' "[8]

606. When R. Huna died, the sages were about to place a Torah scroll on his bier. But R. Hisda said to them: Should one do something for him that he disapproved of while he was alive? Remember that R. Tahalifa told us, "I once saw R. Huna about to sit down on a couch on which there lay a Torah scroll. He inverted a jar on the ground and laid the Torah scroll upon it." Clearly he thought that sitting on a couch that had a Torah scroll lying on it was forbidden.

When R. Huna's bier could not be got through the doorway, they thought of letting it down from the roof. But R. Hisda said: This is what I learned from R. Huna: "Deference to a deceased sage requires that his bier should pass through the door." They thought of moving the corpse from one bier to another, but R. Hisda again said to them: I have also learned from him: "Deference to a deceased sage requires that he be taken out on the original bier upon which he was placed." So they broke the door and carried him out.

R. Abba began his eulogy: "Our master was worthy of having the Presence rest upon him, but his being in Babylonia prevented it."[9]

But then a son of R. Hisda challenged R. Abba's statement by quoting, "The word of the Lord came unto Ezekiel the Priest, the son of Buzi, in the land of the Chaldeans [Babylonia] by the river Chebar" (Ezek. 1:3). His father gently tapped him with his sandal and said: Haven't I told you not to worry your head too much with such matters? In saying "came," Scripture means that "the word of the Lord" came in the past [but no more].

When the bier was brought to the Land of Israel, R. Ammi and R. Assi[10] were told, "R. Huna has arrived." They said, "While we were in Babylonia, we could not raise our heads because of him;[11] now that we have come here, he is still after us." When they were told that it was his bier that had arrived, R. Ammi and R. Assi went out to meet it. They asked themselves: Where shall we lay him to rest? and decided: Let us bring him into R. Hiyya's grotto, for R. Huna disseminated Torah in Israel, just as

---

1. Causing a rise in prices, as a result of which the poor would suffer.
2. B. Ta 20b.
3. The tenant is entitled to as great a share in the shoots cut during the vintage as in the grapes. BM 9:1.
4. B. Ber 5b.
5. B. Ta 20b.
6. The sudarium.
7. B. Kid 29b.
8. B. MK 28a.
9. See below, part 3, chap. 2, §45.
10. Two Babylonians who had become leading scholars in the Land of Israel. Cf. B. Ket 17a.
11. Being aware of his superiority and seniority. See B. Meg. 22a.

R. Hiyya disseminated Torah in Israel. But who was to bring him into the grotto? R. Hagga spoke up, "I shall bring him in; because I corroborated R. Huna's teaching, he made me his attendant, and I know of his pious deeds. One day, when a thong of his tefillin was [accidentally] reversed, he fasted forty days to atone for the accident." So R. Hagga brought R. Huna's bier to the grotto, where Judah was reposing at the right of R. Hiyya, his father, and [his twin] Hezekiah at R. Hiyya's left. Judah spoke up to Hezekiah, "Rise from your place; it is not good manners to have R. Huna remain outside." As Hezekiah rose, a column of fire rose with him. When R. Hagga saw it, he was overcome with fear. So he stood the bier up [as a shield between himself and the column of fire] and left.[1]

R. Hisda (died 300 C.E.)

607. R. Hisda [who was a priest] used to hold up high two priestly gifts given him as his due[2] from the flesh of an ox and say: Whoever comes to me with a new utterance of Rav's, I will give him these.[3]

608. R. Hisda said: The reason I am superior to my colleagues is that I was married at sixteen.[4] Had I married at fourteen, I would have said to Satan, "An arrow in your eye!"[5]

609. R. Hisda was in the habit of frequently passing the door of R. Shizbi's father's house, where he regularly saw many lights [in honor of the Sabbath]. He said: A great man will issue from there.[6] Indeed, R. Shizbi issued from that household.[7]

610. R. Huna and R. Hisda were once sitting together when Geniva happened to pass by. One said to the other: Let us stand up for him—he is a man of Torah learning. The other replied: Are we to stand up for a quarrelsome man?[8]

611. R. Hisda said to his disciples: There is something I would like to say to you, but if I say it, I am afraid you may leave me and go elsewhere. [I will nevertheless say it]: "Whoever learns Torah from only one master will never see a sign of blessing in his studies." Hearing these words, they left him and went to sit before Rabbah, who explained to them that the dictum applied only to logical analysis and that oral traditions are better learned from only one master, for then the disciple will not be confused by a variety of terms.[9]

612. The exilarch [Mar Ukba II] asked R. Huna, "By what authority are nuptial crowns for grooms prohibited?" R. Huna replied, "By the sages on their own authority." After R. Huna got up to leave the room, R. Hisda[10] said to the exilarch, "There is scriptural authority for the prohibition: 'Thus saith the Lord God: The miter shall be removed, and the crown taken off; this shall be no more the same: that which is low shall be exalted, and that which is high abased' [Ezek. 21:31]. It may be asked," he continued, "what the miter has to do with the crown. It is to indicate that when the miter is worn by the high priest,[11] ordinary persons can wear the crown; once the miter has been removed from the head of the high priest, the crown must be removed from the head of all ordinary persons." At this point R. Huna returned, and, finding them still discussing the matter, he said, "I swear to you that the prohibition was made by the sages on their own authority, but as your name is Hisda, 'favor,' so do your words find favor."[12]

613. R. Huna asked his son Rabbah, "Why are you not to be found in the presence of R. Hisda, whose traditions are so keen?" Rabbah replied, "Why should I go to him? When I go to him, he treats me to secular discourses![13] Thus he tells me, 'When one enters a privy, one should not sit down abruptly nor strain overmuch, for the rectum is supported by three teethlike glands, and should these teethlike glands become dislocated, one's health would be endangered.' " R. Huna: "R. Hisda treats of matters that concern the life of mankind, and you call them secular discourses! All the more reason for you to go to him!"[14]

614. Whenever R. Hisda had to walk among thorns and thistles, he lifted up his clothes, saying, "The body heals itself, but clothes do not."[15]

615. R. Hisda noticed date-palm shoots sprouting in his vineyard, so he said to his tenant farmer, "Uproot them—grapevines [produce enough income to] buy date palms, but date palms do not [produce enough income to] buy grapevines."[16]

616. R. Hisda used to hand all his keys to his servant except the key to the woodbin, for R. Hisda would say: A storehouse of wheat requires sixty stores of wood for fuel.[17]

617. R. Hisda said: Neither when poor nor when rich did I ever eat vegetables. When I was poor, because they whet the appetite; when rich, because I said: Where veg-

---

1. B. MK 25a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. The shoulder, the jaws, and the maw were the priest's due.
3. B. Shab 10b.
4. So that my mind was entirely free for study.
5. "I defy you." B. Kid 29b–30a.
6. In keeping with "Where the command of the Sabbath lamp is heeded, there will be the light of Torah" (Prov. 6:23).
7. B. Shab 23b.
8. B. Git 31b.
9. B. AZ 19a.
10. He was R. Huna's disciple and therefore did not like to speak up in his presence.
11. I.e., while the Temple is standing.
12. B. Git 7a.
13. I.e., not Torah.
14. B. Shab 82a.
15. Cf. above in this chapter, §8. B. BK 91b.
16. B. BK 92a.
17. To bake the bread. B. Git 56a.

etables are to enter, fish and meat [which are more nourishing] may as well enter.

R. Hisda also said: If a scholar has but little bread, he should take care not to break it up in small pieces, but eat it all at once [and feel sated at least for a while].

R. Hisda also said: If a scholar has but little bread, he should not break it into smaller portions. Why not? Because [the portions being skimpy], he is not likely to recite the blessing for bread with a willing heart.

R. Hisda also said: Formerly [when I was poor] I did not break bread for the blessing until I put my hands into the basket to make sure I found in it all that I required.[1]

R. Hisda advised his daughters: Act modestly before your husbands. When someone calls at the door, do not say, "Who is he who wishes to enter?" but, "Who is she who wishes to enter?"[2] R. Hisda used to take a jewel in one hand and a berry in the other. He showed them the jewel, but he did not show them the berry until they were distressed by their eagerness to know what was in the other hand. Only then did he show it to them.[3]

618. R. Hisda's daughter was sitting on her father's lap, and before him sat Rava and Rami bar Hama. Her father asked her, "Which of them would you like to marry?" She replied, "Both." Rava asked, "May I be the second?" And thus it came to pass.[4]

619. Rava said: [Length of] life, children, and sustenance depend not on merit but on mazzal.[5] Take Rabbah and R. Hisda, both of whom were sages, both saintly. When one prayed for rain, it came, even as it came when the other prayed for rain. Yet R. Hisda lived to the age of ninety-two,[6] while Rabbah died at the age of forty.[7] In R. Hisda's house, sixty[8] wedding feasts were celebrated; in Rabbah's house, sixty bereavements. In R. Hisda's house, dogs were fed bread of fine flour, which was never missed; in Rabbah's, barley bread was for human beings, and even that was hardly to be had.[9]

620. Once, when Ulla and R. Hisda were walking along the road, they came to the door of the house of R. Hana bar Hanilai. R. Hisda broke down and began to sigh. Ulla said to him: Why are you sighing? Remember what Rav said: A sigh breaks half a man's body, as evident from, "Sigh therefore, thou son of man, with the breaking of thy loins," etc. (Ezek. 21:11). And R. Yohanan said: Indeed, it breaks all of a man's body as evident from "And it shall be, when they say unto thee, wherefore sighest thou? . . . every heart shall sink and all hands hang nerveless" (Ezek. 21:12). R. Hisda replied: How shall I refrain from sighing? Here is a house in which there were once sixty bakers by day and sixty bakers by night, who baked for everyone who was in need. Nor did R. Hana ever take his hand away from his purse, thinking that perhaps a poor man of good family might come and be put to shame as R. Hana was reaching for his purse. Moreover, the house had four doors, opening to the four cardinal points, and whoever came in hungry went out full. In years of scarcity, wheat and barley were piled outside, so that anyone who was ashamed to take some by day might come and take some by night. Now that this house has fallen into ruins, shall I not sigh? Ulla replied: Thus said R. Yohanan: Since the day the Temple was destroyed, a decree was issued against the houses of the righteous, that they should become desolate, as is said, "In mine ears said the Lord of hosts: Of a truth many houses shall be desolate, even great and fair, without inhabitants" (Isa. 5:9). R. Yohanan said further: The Holy One will someday restore them to their inhabited state, as is said, "A Song of Ascents. They that trust in the Lord are as Mount Zion, which cannot be moved, but abideth forever" (Ps. 125:1). Just as the Holy One will restore Mount Zion to its inhabited state, so will He restore the houses of the righteous to their inhabited state. Observing that R. Hisda was still not reassured, Ulla said to him: Enough for the servant that he should be like his Master.[10]

621. R. Hisda's daughter asked him: Wouldn't you like to take a short nap? He replied: Soon enough there will come days that are both long and short, when we will have plenty of sleep.[11]

622. R. Hisda was sitting in the school [of Rav] studying, so that the angel of death was unable to come near him, for his mouth did not cease reciting the words of the lore he was at. But when he proceeded to sit down on a cedar bench in the school, [the angel of death saw to it that] it split under him, so that R. Hisda was silent for a moment. In that very moment the angel of death prevailed over him.[12]

623. When R. Hisda died, it was suggested that a Torah scroll be placed on his bier. But R. Isaac bar Ammi said: Shall we do for him what he disapproved of doing for his master? Then it was suggested that the [mourning] rent in their garments not be sewn. But R. Isaac bar Ammi said: With regard to a deceased sage, as soon as the faces of those who follow the bier are turned away, the rent may be sewn together again.[13]

624. R. Hisda used to find quail among the logs in his woodshed, while Rava's gamekeeper used to bring Rava

---

1. And thus could say the blessing with a whole heart.
2. To indicate that you do not associate with strange men.
3. He thus proved the folly of being curious and lacking in reserve. B. Shab 140b.
4. Ten years after the death of her husband Rami bar Hama, Rava married her (B. Yev 34b). B. BB 12b.
5. Destiny.
6. He died in 390 C.E.
7. He died in 330 C.E.
8. A proverbial number.
9. B. MK 28a.
10. That R. Hana's house should be like the house of God. B. Ber 58b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
11. "The days in the grave are long in quantity but short in quality. In the grave one cannot continue his studies or perform any of the other good deeds" (Er, Soncino, p. 453, n. 15). B. Er 65a.
12. B. Mak 10a.
13. B. MK 25a.

quail daily from the meadow. But one day the gamekeeper failed to bring them, and Rava wondered why. He went up to the roof, where he heard a child reciting the verse "When I heard, my inward parts trembled" (Hab. 3:16). At that, Rava said: The child's verse intimates that R. Hisda is dead and that [I] the disciple was able to eat quail only by the grace of the master.[1]

R. Sheshet (fl. 1st half of 4th century C.E.)

625. R. Hama applied to R. Sheshet the verse "Wisdom is good with an inheritance" (Eccles. 7:11).[2]

626. Every thirty days R. Sheshet used to go over his studies, and then, leaning on the door bolt of his house, he would say, "Rejoice, O my soul; rejoice, O my soul. For you have I read Scripture. For you have I recited Mishnah."[3]

627. [During the reading of Scripture], R. Sheshet used to turn his back to the reader and, reviewing [interpretations of the text], would say: We are busy with ours [advanced study], while they are busy with theirs [cursory perusal].[4]

628. Rabbah said: A hard man who is as hard as iron[5] raised a question. And who was it? R. Sheshet.[6]

629. Whenever R. Hisda and R. Sheshet met each other, R. Hisda's lips trembled because of R. Sheshet's great command of Mishnah,[7] and R. Sheshet trembled all over his body because of R. Hisda's capacity for keen analysis.[8]

630. R. Isaac bar Judah used to attend Rami bar Hama's lectures, but then left him and began to attend R. Sheshet's lectures. One day Rami bar Hama met R. Isaac and said, "Just because a high dignitary took us by the hand, do we think that his [sweet] scent remains on [our] hand? Just because you have gone to R. Sheshet, do you think you will be [esteemed] like R. Sheshet?" "That was not the reason," R. Isaac replied. "When I ask you a question, you give me an answer based on logic; then I find a mishnaic passage[9] that refutes your answer. But when I put a question to R. Sheshet, his answer is based on a mishnaic passage, so that if I come upon another mishnaic passage that refutes him, it is merely a case of one passage against the other."[10]

1. B. Yoma 75b.
2. B. Bekh 52b.
3. B. Pes 68b.
4. B. Ber 8a.
5. "A scholar who is not as hard as iron is no scholar" (B. Ta 4a).
6. B. Men 95b.
7. Since many Mishnayyot appeared to contradict one another, R. Sheshet would embarrass R. Hisda by challenging him to reconcile them.
8. So keen that R. Sheshet was embarrassed. B. Er 57a.
9. Or a Baraita.
10. A controversy: I have my choice of which to follow. B. Zev 96b.

631. When R. Sheshet and R. Ahadboi bar Ammi [were discussing a question in Halakhah], R. Ahadboi finally voiced his dissent from R. Sheshet in a derisive fashion, so that R. Sheshet felt deeply humiliated. Soon after that, R. Ahadboi lost his speech and forgot his learning. R. Ahadboi's mother came weeping before R. Sheshet, but, in spite of her [pitiful] cries, he gave her no heed. Finally she said to him: Look at these breasts from which you sucked.[11] At this, R. Sheshet prayed in R. Ahadboi's behalf, and he was healed.[12]

632. R. Sheshet was blind. Still, on one occasion, when all the people went out to welcome the king, R. Sheshet arose and went with them. A certain heretic came across him and said to him, "Sound pitchers are taken to the river, but why should cracked ones go there?"[13] R. Sheshet replied, "I will show you that I know more than you."

When the first legion passed by and a shout arose, the heretic said, "The king is coming," but R. Sheshet retorted, "He has not yet come." When a second legion passed by, and again a shout arose, the heretic said again, "The king is coming now," but R. Sheshet once more retorted, "Not yet." When a third legion passed by in perfect silence, R. Sheshet said to the heretic, "Now it is certain that the king is coming." The heretic asked, "How do you know this?" R. Sheshet replied, "Because royalty on earth is like royalty in heaven, about which it is written, 'The Lord was not in the earthquake; and after the earthquake a still small voice' " (1 Kings 19:12).

When the king came, R. Sheshet pronounced the appropriate blessing over him. The heretic asked, "You pronounce a blessing over one you cannot see?" R. Sheshet fixed his eyes upon him, and sparks of fire came forth and quenched the sight of the heretic's eyes.[14]

633. The exilarch once asked R. Sheshet, "Why, sir, will you not dine with us?" R. Sheshet: "Because your servants are not decent people, for they are suspected of serving limbs cut from live animals." "Who says so?" asked the exilarch. R. Sheshet: "I will show you," and he [quietly] said to his attendant, "Steal an animal's leg and bring it to me." After the attendant brought it to R. Sheshet, the latter said to the exilarch's servants, "Set out all the pieces of the animal before me." They brought three of its legs and placed them before him. R. Sheshet asked, "Was this a three-legged animal?" When the exilarch's servants produced another leg from outside [the exilarch's house], R. Sheshet said to his attendant, "Now produce yours." R. Sheshet's attendant did so. R. Sheshet asked the exilarch's servants, "Was this then a five-legged animal?"

The exilarch said to R. Sheshet, "Let the food be prepared in the presence of your own attendant and then eat." "Very good," replied R. Sheshet. So they brought a 11. She had nursed R. Sheshet.

12. B. BB 9b.
13. Why should a blind man be going to see the king?
14. B. Ber 58a.

table to him, upon which was placed meat, and in front of him was set a portion containing a tiny bone.[1] He felt it, picked it up, and wrapped it in his turban. [The servants noticed that he had wrapped something in his turban.] So after he finished eating, they said, "A silver cup has been stolen from us."[2] They searched him and found the piece of meat wrapped in his turban. They said to the exilarch, "Sir, you can see that he does not want to eat—he only wants to vex us." R. Sheshet: "I started to eat, but found it tasting of a leprous animal." They replied, "We slaughtered no leprous animal today." He said to them, "Examine the skin in the place where my portion came from."

They examined it and found that it was as he said.

When R. Sheshet was about to leave, the exilarch's servants dug a pit, threw a mat over it, and said to him, "Come, sir, and recline here." R. Hisda uttered a snort of warning behind him. So R. Sheshet said to a boy, "Tell me the last verse you studied." The boy: "Turn thee aside to thy right hand or to thy left" (2 Sam. 2:21). Then he asked his attendant, "What do you see?" The attendant: "A mat placed in front of us." R. Sheshet: "Turn away from it." After he got away safely, R. Hisda asked him, "How did the master come to know?" He replied, "For one thing, because you, sir, warned me by your snort; then, too, from the verse the boy quoted; and finally, because the exilarch's servants are not decent people."[3]

634. The angel of death showed itself to R. Sheshet in the marketplace. R. Sheshet said to him: Will you seize me in the marketplace like cattle? Come to my house.[4]

R. Nahman [bar Jacob] (died 329 C.E.)

635. After Rabbi died, humility and fear of sin ceased. But R. Nahman said to the teacher [who taught this]: Do not include "fear of sin," because I am still here.[5]

636. R. Nahman himself used to carry [whatever was needed for the Sabbath] on his shoulder in and out on the eve of the Sabbath, saying: Were R. Ammi and R. Assi to visit me, would I not be carrying in and out [whatever they needed]?[6]

637. R. Nahman used to send men from his personal guard[7] [to give a hand to the aged, but he would not do so himself], saying, "But for Torah, how many Nahman bar Abbas would there be in the marketplace?"[8]

638. R. Nahman and R. Isaac once were dining together, and R. Nahman said to R. Isaac, "Let the master expound something," R. Isaac replied, "R. Yohanan said the following: One should not converse while eating, lest the windpipe open before the gullet and thus endanger life." After they had dined, R. Isaac said, "Thus declared R. Yohanan: Jacob our patriarch is not dead." R. Nahman objected: "Was it then for nought that mourners mourned, embalmers embalmed, and gravediggers dug a grave?" R. Isaac replied, "I derive this teaching from Scripture, where it is said, 'Therefore fear thou not, O Jacob, My servant . . . for, lo, I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity' [Jer. 30:10]. Here the verse likens Jacob to his seed [Israel]—as his seed is alive, so, too, he is alive."

When R. Nahman was about to take leave of R. Isaac, he said, "Please, master, bless me." R. Isaac replied, "Let me tell you a parable by which I would respond to your request—the parable of a man who was journeying in the desert. He was hungry, weary, and thirsty, and he lighted upon a tree whose fruits were delicious and its shade pleasant, and a stream of water was flowing beneath it. He ate of its fruits, drank water from the stream, and rested under the tree's shade. When he was about to continue his journey, he said: Tree, O tree, what blessing shall I bestow upon you? If I say to you, 'May your fruits be delicious,' behold, they are delicious. If I say, 'May your shade be pleasant,' behold, it is pleasant. If I say, 'May a stream of water flow beneath you,' behold, a stream of water does flow beneath you. Therefore I say, 'May it be [God's] will that all the seedlings taken from you be like you.' You, too, [dear Nahman]—what blessing shall I bestow upon you? Knowledge of Torah? Behold, you already possess such knowledge. Eminence? You are already eminent. Honor? You are already honored. Riches? You are already rich. Children? You already have children. Hence I say, 'May it be [God's] will that your offspring be like you.' "[9]

639. Ulla happenend to visit the house of R. Nahman. They had a meal, after which Ulla said grace and then handed the cup of blessing[10] to R. Nahman to recite the blessing over it. R. Nahman said to him, "Please send the cup to [my wife] Yalta, that she may recite it.[11] Ulla replied, "Thus taught R. Yohanan: The fruit of a woman's body is blessed only from the fruit of a man's body, since Scripture says, 'He will also bless the fruit of thy body' [Deut. 7:13]—it does not say, 'The fruit of her body,' but, 'The fruit of thy [that is, a man's] body.' [So if you recite the blessing over the cup, there is no need for her to recite it.]" Yalta heard[12] [that Ulla had refused to send her the cup], and she flew into a rage, stormed into the wine pantry, and smashed four hundred jugs of wine. R. Nahman again said to Ulla, "Would the master please send her the cup." Ulla [again refused and] sent her a message: "The huge quantity of wine you splattered should provide the cup of blessing you demand." She shot back the reply:

---

1. Literally, "the portion intended to choke a mother-in-law." It is a part containing a tiny bone and is taken from flesh just above the animal's hind leg. So Rashi.
2. A pretext in order to search him.
3. B. Git 67b–68a.
4. B. MK 28a.
5. B. Sot 49b.
6. How much more so to welcome the Sabbath. B. Shab 119a.
7. As the exilarch's son-in-law, he had them at his disposal.
8. I must therefore husband my time for teaching Torah. B. Kid 33a.
9. B. Ta 5b–6a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
10. The blessing over a full cup of wine following the grace after a meal in which at least three men have partaken.
11. Apparently, Yalta, with R. Nahman's consent, expected that women be given the right to utter such a blessing.
12. Yalta sat in an adjoining room during the meal, as was the custom for women.

"Insulting words from itinerant peddlers[1] are as inevitable as vermin from rags."

640. While seated at the bedside of R. Nahman, Rava saw him falling into the sleep [of death], yet R. Nahman managed to say to Rava, "Master, tell the angel of death not to torment me." Rava replied, "But, master, are you not important enough [to say so to him yourself]?" R. Nahman: "Who is sufficiently important, esteemed, or well enough put together [to make such a request]?" Then Rava asked R. Nahman, "Master, show yourself to me in a dream." When [after his death] he did show himself, Rava asked him, "Master, did you suffer any pain?" And he replied, "As little as in pulling a hair out of milk. Still, if the Holy One were to say to me, 'Go back to that world and become again what you were,' I would not wish it, the fear of the angel of death being so great."[2]

Rabbah [bar Nahmani] (died 339 C.E.)

641. Rabbah's brothers sent him an urgent message:[3] Since [the patriarch] Jacob knew that he was a completely righteous man [and knew that] the dead [buried] outside the Land were to come back to life, why did he impose on his sons [the task of carrying his corpse to Canaan]? Because he could not reconcile himself to the distress he would experience in going back to the Land through underground passages.[4]

Ilfa added to Rabbah's brothers' words the following: There was once a man who ached to marry a certain woman living outside the Land and was about to move there. But when he heard of the journey [made by the dead] through underground passages, he resigned himself to the distress of giving up the woman he loved [and remained in the Land] until the day of his death.

[In their plea, Rabbah's brothers went on]: Even though you are a great scholar, you must admit that a man who learns by himself is not the equal of a man who learns from a master. And if you suppose that there is no master fit for you [in the Land of Israel], there is one. Who? R. Yohanan.[5]

642. R. Joseph was "Sinai,"[6] and Rabbah was "an uprooter of mountains."[7] When the time came for one of them to be needed [to head the academy of Pumbedita], their colleagues sent an inquiry to the Land of Israel: As between "Sinai" and "the uprooter of mountains," which should have the preference? Word came back: Sinai, because everybody needs the master of the wheat.[8] Nevertheless, R. Joseph would not accept the post, because the astrologers had told him, "You would be head for only two years." So Rabbah served as head for twenty-two years, and after him R. Joseph for two years and a half.[9]

During all the time that Rabbah was head, he did not so much as summon a cupper[10] to come to his house.[11]

643. When the main body of sages left the schools of Rabbah and R. Joseph, and only four hundred remained, they described themselves as orphans.[12]

644. Before Rabbah began his discourse to the sages, he told them a humorous story to put them in a cheerful mood. Then, in a solemn manner, he sat down and began the discourse on Halakhah.[13]

645. Rav said: During the day, [when a man ought to be studying Torah], his sleep should last no longer than the sleep of a horse. And how long is that? Sixty respirations.

Abbaye said: The sleep of the master [Rabbah bar Nahmani] is as short as that of Rav.[14]

646. [On the eve of a Sabbath], Rabbah and R. Joseph used to split wood.[15]

647. Abba bar Martha (sometimes called Abba bar Manyumi),[16] who owed Rabbah money he had lent him, brought it to Rabbah's house in the seventh year of a septenary.[17] Rabbah said: I cancel the debt. So Abba bar Martha took his money and went away. Subsequently, Abbaye, seeing that Rabbah looked sad, asked him, "Sir, why are you sad?" Rabbah told him what had happened. So Abbaye went to Abba bar Martha and asked him, "Did you offer money to Rabbah?" R. Abba replied, "Yes." Abbaye: "And what did he say to you?" R. Abba: "I cancel the debt." Abbaye: "And did you say to him, 'Nevertheless, take it'?" R. Abba: "No." Abbaye said to him, "If you had said to him, 'Nevertheless, take it,' he would have taken it. At any rate, go now, offer it to him, and say, 'Nevertheless, take it.' " R. Abba went and offered it to Rabbah, saying, "Nevertheless, take it." Rabbah took it from him and said, "Until now, this disciple of the wise did not have the sense to know what to do!"[18]

648. At first the sages said: If an associate scholar[19] becomes a tax collector, he is expelled from the fellow-

---

1. She was referring to Ulla's journeying from Babylonia to the Land of Israel and back again. B. Ber 51b.
2. B. MK 28a.
3. Pleading with him to move to the Land of Israel. He lived in Pumbedita, Babylonia.
4. And only then come back to life.
5. B. Ket 111a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
6. His knowledge of the traditions was encyclopedic.
7. He was exceptionally skillful in dialectics.
8. One who is master of the authentic traditions.
9. Rabbah was head in 309–30 C.E. R. Joseph, who succeeded him, died in 333 C.E.
10. One who draws blood from the body by means of a cupping glass as a form of medical treatment.
11. But instead went to him, like any other individual. B. Ber 64a.
12. See above in this chapter, §528. B. Ket 106a.
13. B. Shab 30b.
14. B. Suk 26b.
15. B. Shab 119a.
16. Martha was the name of his mother, by whose name he was designated because it was she who once cured him from the bite of a mad dog. See B. Yoma 84a.
17. When loans are canceled.
18. B. Git 37b.
19. One scrupulous in observance of the law, particularly with regard to ritual cleanness and separating priestly and Levitical dues.

ship.[1] If he gives up the office, he is not again accepted as a fellow. Subsequently, however, they declared: If he resigns, he is treated like any other person.

It so happened that the sages required the presence of R. Huna bar Hiyya.[2] So Rabbah and R. Joseph set out to go to him, together with four hundred pairs of sages. When he learned that they were coming, he arranged four hundred mats to seat them. [On their way], when they heard that he had become a tax collector, they [decided not to go to him, but] sent a [contemptuous] message: "Go on to your important post, go on to your eminent office!" He sent back word to them: "I regret what I have done." R. Joseph did not go to visit him, but Rabbah did. R. Joseph reasoned: We have been taught: If he gives up the office, he is not again accepted as a fellow. However, Rabbah reasoned: We have been taught: Subsequently they declared that if he resigns, he is treated like any other person.[3]

649. Abbaye asked Rabbah: For the likes of you, sir, whom all of Pumbedita hates [because of your outspokenness], who will offer a eulogy? Rabbah replied: You and Rava bar R. Hanan are enough for me.[4]

650. R. Kahana said: R. Hama, the son of the daughter of Hassa, related to me [that] Rabbah bar Nahmani died as a result of religious persecution, having been denounced to the king by informers, who said: Among the Jews there is one man who for one month in summer and one in winter prevents twelve thousand Jews from paying their royal poll tax.[5] At that, a royal emissary was sent to bring him in, but he could not find him, for Rabbah kept fleeing from Pumbedita to Akra, from Akra to Agam, from Agam to Shahin, from Shahin to Tzarif, from Tzarif to En Damim,[6] and from there back to Pumbedita. Finally the emissary chanced to visit the inn in Pumbedita where Rabbah was staying. A small table was placed before the emissary, he was served two goblets [of liquor], and then the table was removed, whereupon his face was turned backward [by demons].[7] "What shall we do with him?" the inn attendants asked Rabbah. "He is, after all, a royal emissary." Rabbah: "Put the table before him again, and make him drink another goblet; then remove the table, and he will recover." They did so, and he recovered. The emissary then said, "I know that the man I am seeking is here." He looked for Rabbah, and when he caught sight of him, he said, "I will go away from here. Even if I am sentenced to die, I will not reveal his whereabouts. Still, if I am tortured, I am likely to reveal it." So he had Rabbah brought into his presence, had him taken into a chamber, and locked the door [to keep him there as a prisoner]. But Rabbah invoked God's mercy, and the wall of the chamber fell down. Then he fled to Agam, where he sat on the stump of a fallen palm and studied Torah.

Meanwhile, in the academy on high they were debating an instance in the laws concerning leprosy, where the Holy One ruled, "Clean," while the entire academy on high maintained, "Unclean." Finally, they asked, "Who is to decide the matter?" and answered "Rabbah bar Nahmani, the one who said, 'I am unique in understanding the laws of leprosy and the laws of tents in which there is a corpse.' " A messenger was sent for him, but the angel of death could not touch him, because his mouth did not stop studying even for one instant. In the meantime, a wind blew up and soughed in the reeds. Imagining it to be a legion of horsemen, he said, "Let me die at the hands of the angel of death, rather than be delivered into the hands of the government." As he was dying, he exclaimed, "Clean, clean!"[8] A divine voice cried out, "Happy are you, O Rabbah bar Nahmani, whose body is pure and whose soul has departed with [the word] 'clean.'

In Pumbedita a tablet fell from heaven upon which was written, "Rabbah bar Nahmani has been summoned to the academy on high." So Abbaye and Rava left [their homes] to attend to his burial,[9] but they did not know where his body lay. They went to Agam, where they saw birds shading something with their wings. They said, "He must be over there." When they found him, they eulogized him for three days and three nights. Then another tablet fell: "He who [will now] cease eulogizing should consider himself under a ban." So they eulogized him for [another four days, making it] seven in all. Finally a third tablet fell: "Return to your homes in peace."

On the day Rabbah died, a mighty storm lifted an Arab riding his camel from one bank of the river Papa and flung him across to the other bank. He asked, "What does this signify?" and was told, "Rabbah bar Nahmani is dead." At that, he cried out to the Holy One, "Lord of the Universe! The whole world is Yours, and Rabbah bar Nahmani also is Yours. You are [the friend] of Rabbah, and Rabbah is Your [friend]. Why then would You destroy the world?" With that, the storm subsided.[10]

651. When Rabbah and R. Joseph died, it seemed as though the cliffs on both sides of the Euphrates had kissed each other.[11]

R. Joseph (died 333 C.E.)

652. When Rabbi died, humility and fear of sin ceased. R. Joseph said to the one who taught this: Do not mention humility, for I am still here.[12]

---

1. "Publicans or customs collectors had the taxes farmed out to them by the crown and as a rule recouped themselves by imposing iniquitous burdens on the people: consequently they were considered robbers in Jewish law" (Bekh, Soncino, p. 196, n. 5).
2. To consult him on a question in Jewish law. Literally, "the time needed him."
3. B. Bekh 31a.
4. B. Shab 153a.
5. They used to come to the academy in Nisan and Tishri, months during which popular lectures were given; in consequence, the tax collectors could not collect their taxes during those months. So Rashi.
6. All these places appear to be in the neighborhood of Pumbedita.
7. To drink an even number of glasses was believed to excite the ill will of certain demons.
8. As though the subject of the heavenly controversy had already been communicated to him.
9. See above in this chapter, §649.
10. B. BM 86a.
11. The mourners were so numerous that they seemed to have crowded out the water. B. MK 25b.
12. B. Sot 49b.

653. A woman [whose husband had vanished] came to Abbaye to inquire about her status. He deferred answering her for the time span of three festivals.[1] So R. Adda bar Abba said to her: Go to R. Joseph, whose mind is as keen as the blade of a knife.[2]

654. Rava said: Rabbah and R. Joseph found a certain matter difficult for twenty-two years, with no answer forthcoming, until R. Joseph became head of the academy and solved it.[3]

655. R. Joseph applied to himself the verse "Good crops come from the work done by the ox" (Prov. 14:4).[4]

656. On the Feast of Weeks [Shavuot], R. Joseph would say, "Prepare for me a calf thirdborn of its dam.[5] But for this day,[6] how many Josephs would there be in the marketplace!"[7]

657. R. Joseph [who was blind] said: Formerly, I thought that if anyone were to tell me, "The Halakhah agrees with R. Judah that a blind person is exempt from the [observance of the] precepts," I would have made a festive meal for the sages, since even though I am not obliged to observe the precepts, I do observe them. But now, having heard what R. Hanina said—"He who is commanded to observe the precepts and does observe them is greater than he who observes them though not commanded to do so"—the contrary has become true. Were anyone to tell me, "The Halakhah does not agree with R. Judah," I would make a festive meal for the sages.[8]

658. When R. Joseph took sick and forgot his learning, Abbaye restored it to him. Hence the exchange that occurred frequently: R. Joseph saying, "I have not heard this tradition," and Abbaye responding, "You yourself taught it to us—deduced it in fact from this particular Baraita."[9]

659. R. Joseph was studying the Work of the Chariot,[10] while the elders of Pumbedita were studying the Work of Creation.[11] They said to R. Joseph, "Will our master teach us the Work of the Chariot?" He replied, "Teach me the Work of Creation." After they had taught him, they said to him, "Now teach us the Work of the Chariot." He replied, "Concerning it, we have been taught, 'Honey and milk are under thy tongue' [Song 4:11][12]—the things that are as sweet as honey should remain under your tongue."

R. Abbahu said, "The restriction of teaching the Work of the Chariot is inferred from the verse 'The lambs [kevasim] will be for thy clothing' [Prov. 27:26]. Read not kevasim, 'lambs,' but kevushim, 'things mysterious'—the things that are the mystery [kivshon] of the world should remain under your clothing [in your bosom]." But the elders of Pumbedita said to him, "We have already studied these mysteries up to the verse 'And he said unto me: Son of man' " (Ezek. 2:1). R. Abbahu replied, "This verse is the very essence of the Work of the Chariot."[13]

660. R. Joseph observed a fast for forty days and [in a dream] had read to him, "They shall not depart out of thy mouth" (Isa. 59:21). He observed forty more fasts and [in a dream] had read to him, "They shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed" (ibid.). He observed still another forty fasts and [in a dream] had read to him, "They shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed" (ibid.). "From now on," he said, "I have no need to fast. The Torah will keep coming back to the place where it has been made to feel at home."[14]

661. When from a distance Abbaye saw only the ear of Joseph's donkey as it was approaching, he would rise up.[15]

662. When Rava took leave of R. Joseph, he would walk backward, so that his feet were bruised and the threshold of R. Joseph's house was stained with blood. People told R. Joseph what Rava did.[16] R. Joseph said to him, "May it be [Heaven's] will that your person be raised above the entire city."[17]

663. In the days of R. Joseph, when there came the affliction of famine,[18] the sages said to R. Joseph: Let the master entreat for mercy. He replied: [During a like famine], after the main body of Elisha's disciples left, there remained two thousand two hundred sages[19] [for whom he had to provide]. Yet he did not entreat God's mercy. Should I, then, left with a mere four hundred to provide for,[20] entreat God for mercy?[21]

---

1. When scholars who assembled to listen to discourses were asked to consider difficult problems in law that had come up during the preceding months.
2. B. Yev 121b–122a.
3. B. Kat 42b.
4. Since his name was Joseph, he spoke of himself as an ox, in keeping with what was said of the tribe father Joseph: "Like a firstling ox in his majesty" (Deut. 33:17). B. Sanh 42a.
5. Choice; and, being thirdborn, it corresponds to the third month in the year, Sivan, during which the Feast of Weeks occurs.
6. When the Torah is said to have been given to Israel.
7. But for my knowledge of Torah, I would be but another Joseph. B. Pes 68b.
8. B. Kid 31a.
9. B. Ned 41a.
10. Intimated at the beginning of Ezekiel.
11. Intimated in Genesis.
12. Song of Songs is construed as a mystical dialogue between God the groom and Israel the bride.
13. B. Hag 13a.
14. B. BM 85a.
15. B. Kid 33a.
16. R. Joseph, being blind, did not see it.
17. The blessing was fulfilled. Rava became head of the academies of Sura and Pumbedita. B. Yoma 33b.
18. Perhaps during the time he was head of the academy.
19. The number is arrived at by close examination of 2 Kings 2:42–44. See Rashi.
20. See above in this chapter, §643.
21. B. Ket 106a.

664. R. Joseph owned small date palms under which cuppers [with his permission] used to sit and draw blood. When ravens, coming to drink up the spilled blood, would land on the palm trees and damage the dates, R. Joseph said to the cuppers: Get your croakers away from here![1]

665. R. Joseph had a garden plot which he hoed repeatedly, and it produced wine that, when mixed, could take twice the usual amount of water.[2]

666. Rava bar R. Hanan had small palm trees growing next to R. Joseph's vineyard, and birds roosting in the palms would fly down into the vineyard and damage the grapes in it. R. Joseph said to Rava, "Go, cut down your palms." Rava: "I will not cut them down, for Rav has said, 'It is forbidden to cut down a palm that bears a kav of dates'; and R. Hanina has said, 'My son Shibhat died because he cut down a fig tree before its time.'[3] However, if it pleases the master, let him cut down the palms himself."[4]

667. The sages taught: There are three kinds of men whose life is no life: those who are overly compassionate, those who are too prone to anger, and those who are too fastidious. R. Joseph said: The three qualities are in me.[5]

668. R. Joseph said: I once entered the baths after Mar Ukba. When I was about to leave, he made me drink a cup of [aluntit] wine,[6] and I then experienced a cooling sensation from the hair of my head right down to the nails of my toes. Had he made me drink a second cup, I fear that my merits in the world-to-come would have been diminished.[7]

Abbaye bar Kaylil (280–338/39 C.E.)

669. When Abbaye's mother conceived him, his father died. When she gave birth to him, she died. But did not Abbaye used to say, "Mother told me"? He meant his foster mother.[8]

670. Abbaye's foster mother trained a lamb to go with him into the privy.[9]

671. A boy who knows to whom a benediction is addressed may be invited by the partakers to say grace with them after a meal.

[When they were still very young], Abbaye and Rava sat in the presence of Rabbah, who asked them, "Whom do we address when we pronounce a benediction?" The two: "God."

"And where does God dwell?"

Rava pointed to the ceiling, while Abbaye went outside and pointed to the sky. Rabbah said to them: Both of you will grow up to be sages.

Hence the popular saying: Each young pumpkin can be told by its stalk.[10]

672. Abbaye, Rava, R. Zera, and Rabbah bar Mattenah once sat studying together at a time when the need had arisen to appoint a head [for the school of Pumbedita].[11] Rabbah suggested: He who makes a statement that cannot be refuted by others shall be appointed head. The statements of three of them were refuted, but not Abbaye's. When Rabbah realized that Abbaye was destined to become head, he said: Nahmani[12] begin to expound.[13]

673. Abbaye said: In the streets of Tiberias I am like Ben Azzai.[14]

674. When the main body of disciples departed from the school of Abbaye, there still remained two hundred. Nevertheless, [because they believed they were too few], they described themselves as most orphaned among orphans.[15]

675. Abbaye said: May it be counted as merit for me that whenever I saw a disciple of the wise finish a tractate, I made a festive day for the sages.[16]

676. Rabbah and Abbaye sprang from the house of Eli[17] [doomed to be short-lived]. Still, because Rabbah occupied himself with Torah, he lived forty years; and because Abbaye occupied himself with Torah and deeds of loving-kindness, he lived sixty years.[18]

677. Abba, who was a cupper, used to receive greetings daily from the academy on high, while Abbaye received such greetings only on Sabbath eve, and Rava only on Yom Kippur eve. When Abbaye was depressed because of the signal honor shown to Abba the Cupper, people said to him: You cannot do what Abba the Cupper does.

What was the special merit of Abba the Cupper? When he let blood, he had a separate place for men and

---

1. Go away and find another spot to do your work. R. Joseph presumed to ask the cuppers to remove themselves, even though the damage they caused was indirect. B. BB 23a.
2. "Usually wine was adulterated with water in the proportion of three parts of water to one of wine (cf. Shab 77a); this wine could stand an admixture of water in the proportion of six parts of water to one of wine" (Men, Soncino, p. 526, n. 6). B. Men 87a.
3. Before it withered.
4. B. BB 26a.
5. B. Pes 113b.
6. A mixture of old wine, clear water, and balsam.
7. B. Shab 140a.
8. B. Kid 31b.
9. So that he should not be afraid. B. Ber 62a.
10. B. Ber 48a.
11. "After the death of R. Joseph" (Isidore Epstein in Hor, Soncino, p. 105, n. 10).
12. Nahmani, a nickname for Abbaye, may mean "one who brings comfort."
13. B. Hor 142.
14. "Said humorously—'I am ready to face all comers.' Ben Azzai was the keen scholar able to answer all questions. Cf. Bekh 28a" (Kid, Soncino, p. 92, n. 6). B. Kid 20a.
15. B. Ket 106a.
16. B. Shab 118b–119a.
17. See 1 Sam. 1:3 and 2:22ff.
18. B. RH 18a.

a separate place for women. Then, too, he had a garment to which the cup for receiving the blood was attached; the garment was slit at the shoulder blades, and whenever a woman patient came to him, he would have her wear this garment in order not to see the exposed parts of her body [and would stand behind her as he worked]. Outside his office, he had a discreet place where small coins were to be deposited [as his fee]. Whoever had money put it there; whoever had none could come to him without feeling embarrassed. Whenever a disciple of the wise happened to consult him, he would accept no fee from him. When he saw a man who [he felt sure] had no means, as that man was leaving, he would hand him some small coins, saying, Go and [use the money to] regain your strength.

One day Abbaye sent two disciples of the wise to Abba the Cupper in order to test him. Abba received them, gave them food and drink, and in the evening spread mattresses for them [to sleep on]. In the morning the two disciples of the wise rolled up the mattresses and took them to the marketplace. [Then Abbaye[1] saw to it that Abba the Cupper came to the marketplace, where the two, making believe they were hawking the mattresses], said to Abba, "Sir, appraise them—how much are they worth?" He replied, "So much." The two: "Perhaps they are worth more?" Abba: "This is what I paid for some like them." Then they said to him, "They are yours—we took them from you."

They asked him, "Please, tell us: what did you suspect we were up to?" He replied, "I said to myself: Perhaps the sages needed money to redeem captives and were too embarrassed to say so to me." The two: "Now, sir, take back what is yours." Abba: "From the moment I missed them, I diverted my mind from them by considering them assigned to charity."

When Rava felt depressed because of the special honor shown to Abbaye, the latter appeared to him in a dream and said to him: Be content that your merit protects the entire city.[2]

678. During the rejoicing at the place of the water-drawing,[3] Abbaye used to juggle eight eggs before Rabbah, tossing one into the air and catching another without having them touch each other.[4]

679. Abbaye was seated before Rabbah, who noticed that he seemed quite joyous. Rabbah cautioned him, "It is written, 'Rejoice with trembling' " (Ps. 2:11). Abbaye replied, "But I have my tefillin on."[5]

680. When Abbaye was riding a donkey along the bank of the Sagya Canal, R. Mesharsheya and other sages seated on the opposite bank did not rise for him. He protested, "Am I not your distinguished teacher?" They replied, "We were otherwise occupied [and did not see you]."[6]

681. When Ravin and Abbaye were traveling on a [narrow] road, Ravin's donkey got in front of Abbaye's donkey, yet Ravin did not stop and say to Abbaye, "Let the master get ahead of me." So Abbaye muttered sharply, "Since this one has come up from the west [the Land of Israel], he has grown arrogant." But when they reached the entrance of a synagogue, Ravin said, "Let the master enter first." Abbaye: "And until now I have not been master?" Ravin then quoted R. Yohanan: One gives precedence to a master only as one enters a structure with doorposts.[7]

682. When Abbaye lost a donkey in a place inhabited by Cutheans, he sent word to them: Have it brought back to me. The Cutheans: Let us have a mark of identification. Abbaye: Its belly is white. The Cutheans: Were you not Nahmani, we would not have sent it back to you. Do not all donkeys have white bellies?[8]

683. R. Shimi bar Ashi appeared before Abbaye and asked him: Will the master give me private instruction?[9] Abbaye: I have to use my private time for my own studies. R. Shimi: Will the master instruct me at night? Abbaye: At that time I must irrigate [my field]. R. Shimi: I will irrigate the master's field in daytime; let the master instruct me during the night. Abbaye: Very well. Then R. Shimi went to the people above Abbaye's field and said to them: The people below have the right to draw water first. After that, he went to those below Abbaye's field and said to them: The people above have the right to draw water first. Meanwhile, he dammed the watercourse and irrigated Abbaye's field. When he presented himself before Abbaye, Abbaye was greatly distressed and would not taste anything of that year's produce.[10]

684. Abbaye used to inspect his properties daily. One day he came upon his tenant farmer carrying a bundle of vine shoots. When Abbaye asked him, "Where are you taking them?" the tenant farmer replied, "To the master's house." Abbaye said, "The sages anticipated you long ago."[11]

685. Abbaye said: One who is required to present a specimen of his signature at a court of law should not write it at the foot of a blank scroll, lest someone find it and write above it that the signer owes him money.

A customs collector once came before Abbaye and said to him: Will the master let me have his signature, so that when the sages come by and show it to me with your authorization, I will allow them to pass without payment.[12]

---

1. See Ta, trans. Henry Malter, p. 158.
2. B. Ta 21b–22a.
3. For a description of the rejoicing, see above, part 1, chap. 9, §85.
4. B. Suk 53a.
5. Therefore I may be joyful. B. Ber 30b.
6. B. Kid 33a.
7. If such deference were shown on a narrow road, others hurrying to work, etc., would be held back. So Menahem ha-Meiri, quoted by Adin Steinsaltz, Ber, 205. B. Ber 47a.
8. B. Git 45.
9. Literally, "Let me sit by the master during study."
10. B. Git 60b.
11. In advising daily inspection of property to stop pilfering. B. Hul 105a.
12. "His possession of Abbaye's signature, he contended, would enable him to verify Abbaye's signature on any authorization that might be presented to him" (BB, Soncino, p. 726, n. 16).

Abbaye wrote it down for him at the head of a scroll. As the customs collector had tried to pull the scroll up [so that a blank space would be left above Abbaye's signature], Abbaye said to him: The sages anticipated you long ago.[1]

686. There was a certain magus who used to rummage among graves.[2] When he came to the burial cave of R. Tobi ben Mattenah, R. Tobi grabbed hold of him by his beard. Abbaye[3] came and said to him, "Pray, let go of him." A year later the magus came back, and the dead man again seized hold of his beard; Abbaye came again [to rescue him], but this time the dead man would not let go, so that they had to bring scissors and cut off the magus's beard.[4]

687. Abbaye used to offer his hand to old Arameans to lean on.[5]

688. When Rabbah was about to send Abbaye to Mari bar Mar with a basketful of dates and a cupful of flour made from roasted ears of corn, Abbaye said to Rabbah: Mari is now apt to say, "Even when a villager becomes a king, he still does not take the basket off his neck."[6] Later, when in return Mari was about to send [Abbaye] to Rabbah with a basketful of ginger and a cupful of long-stalked pepper, Abbaye said to Mari: Rabbah is now apt to say, "I sent him sweet things, and he sends me things sharp."

Subsequently Abbaye reminisced: When I left my master's house, I was pretty full, but when I reached Mari's place, sixty dishes containing different entrees were set before me, and I partook of sixty portions from them. The last entree, which was called potroast, [I liked so much that] I wanted to lick the dish that contained it.

This, Abbaye went on, bears out the proverb: The poor man is hungry, but does not know it.[7] Or the other proverb: There is always room for a savory dish.[8]

689. Abbaye said: At first I used to snatch the priestly portions, saying to myself, "I shall show my zeal for the precept." But when I heard the tradition "In saying, 'They shall give' [Deut. 18:3], Scripture implies that the priest is not to take them on his own," I no longer snatched them, but would merely say, "Give them to me." And when I heard the Baraita that taught, " 'They turned aside after lucre' [1 Sam. 8:3] means, according to R. Meir, that Samuel's sons used to ask right out for the portions due them."[9] I decided not to ask for them, but would accept them only when they were given to me. And when I heard the Baraita that taught, "The [priests who were] modest withdrew their hands from them, but the greedy took their share," I decided not to accept them at all, save on the day before Yom Kippur, so as to establish my status as a priest.[10]

690. Abbaye suffered from dropsy. Rava said: I know about this, about Nahmani—he practices hunger [being always engaged in fasting].[11]

691. Abbaye heard a certain man say to a woman, "Let us get up early and be on our way." He said to himself: I will follow them to keep them from doing what is prohibited. He followed them through meadows a distance of three parasangs. Then, as they were about to separate, he heard them say, "The company is pleasant, but the way is long." Abbaye had to admit: If I were in their place, I could not have restrained myself. And in deep anguish he leaned against the bolt in a doorway. An elder came and recited the tradition: "The greater the man, the greater his impulse to evil."[12]

Rava bar Joseph bar Hama (fl. 299–352 C.E.)

692. When R. Judah died, Rava was born.[13]

693. When Rava and Rami bar Hama were studying before R. Hisda, they first went over the Gemara [the traditional statements on the Halakhah in hand], and then they investigated the logical underpinning.[14]

694. Rava said: In the streets of Tiberias, I am deemed [as keen witted] as Ben Azzai.[15]

695. R. Nahman bar Isaac observed: A legal decision must be as clear as a day when the north wind blows.

Abbaye said: If my foster mother had said to me, "Bring me the kuttah,"[16] I would not have been able to study.[17]

Rava remarked: If a louse bit me, I could not study.[18]

696. Rava said: Three things I asked for from Heaven; two were granted me, and one was not. I asked for the scholarship of R. Huna and the wealth of R. Hisda, which

---

1. B. BB 167a.
2. Persian fire-worshipers considered it sinful to defile the earth by the burial of dead bodies in it. Accordingly, they would exhume bodies and expose them to the birds.
3. Who was apparently a friend of the magus.
4. B. BB 58a.
5. B. Kid 33a.
6. Although you, Rabbah, have become head of the academy in Pumbedita, you keep sending ordinary gifts. See above in this chapter, §642.
7. He is so inured to hunger that he is not aware of its pangs until he sits down to eat.
8. B. Meg 7b.
9. See above, Part 1, chap. 6, §70.
10. When his abstention from the many gifts brought at that time to priests would make it seem that he was not one of them. B. Hul 133a.
11. B. Shab 33a.
12. B. Suk 52a.
13. B. Kid 72b.
14. B. Suk 29a.
15. See above in this chapter, §673. B. Er 29a.
16. A dish of bread crusts, sour milk, and salt.
17. Even so slight a chore would have distracted his mind.
18. B. Er 65a.

were granted me; but the humility of Rabbah bar R. Huna[1]—that was not granted me.[2]

697. A certain heretic saw Rava utterly absorbed in his studies, with his hands under his feet, which pressed down so hard that his fingers spurted blood. The heretic exclaimed: O you precipitous people, who put your mouth before your ears![3] You continue to be precipitate! You should have listened first to determine whether you could accept the Commandments, and if not, not accept them. Rava replied: To us, who walk in integrity, the words "The integrity of the upright shall guide them" (Prov. 11:3) apply. But to others, who walk in perversity, apply the words "The perverseness of the treacherous shall destroy them" (ibid.).[4]

698. When Rava saw R. Hamnuna overlong at his prayers, he said, "There are people who give up [study, which is] eternal life, and occupy themselves [with praying] for transient needs.[5]

699. [As a mark of humility], Rava used to remove his [costly] upper cloak, clasp his hands, and pray, explaining what he did: [I pray] like a slave in the presence of his master.[6]

700. Whenever Rava went to [preside at] court, he used to say: Out of his own will, he [the judge] goes toward death; he does not supply the needs of his household, for he returns empty[7] to his home. May his coming back be like his going forth. And when Rava saw a crowd escorting him, he would say, "Though his excellency mount up to heaven, and his head reach into the clouds, yet shall he perish forever like his own dung; they that have seen him shall say: 'Where is he?' " (Job 20:6–7).[8]

701. R. Joseph bar Hama used to seize slaves belonging to people who owed him money and make them work [for him]. His son Rava said to him: Sir, why do you allow this to be done?[9] R. Joseph: Because R. Nahman stated that a slave is not worth the bread he puts into his stomach. Rava: But of whom did R. Nahman say such a thing? Only of one like Daru, his own slave, who spent his time dancing in taverns. Did R. Nahman speak thus of other slaves who do in fact work?" R. Joseph: I hold with R. Daniel bar R. Ketina, who stated in Rava's name that he who seizes another man's slave and makes him work [for him] is exempt from any payment, a statement that proves that preventing a slave from being idle is beneficial to his owner. Rava: Such a statement is valid only when the owner of the slave does not owe money to the man who seizes him. As for you, sir, since the slave's owner owes you money, seizing that slave to work for you is clearly a form of interest. R. Joseph: I retract what I said.[10]

702. R. Abba, to whom R. Joseph bar Hama owed money, said to R. Safra, "When you go there, bring me back the money owed me." Upon R. Safra's arrival, Rava, R. Joseph's son, asked R. Safra, "Has the creditor given you a written statement that he will deem your receiving the money as though he himself had received it?" When R. Safra said, "No," Rava went on, "Then you must first go back and have him execute such a written statement." But in the end Rava said, "Even if he were to prepare such a statement, it would still avail nothing, since before your return, R. Abba [being an old man] might die. Then his right to the money my father owes him would devolve to the heirs, and the written statement executed by him would be of no avail."[11] "What, then," R. Safra asked, "is the remedy?" Rava: "Go back and let him transfer to you the ownership of the money he claims by giving you title to some land[12] he owns. Then come back and execute for us your written statement that you received the money."[13]

703. [Before his death], the son of Mar Samuel ordered that thirteen thousand zuz out of the income from his produce be given to Rava. Rava sent R. Joseph a request to define "produce," but then did not accept the definition R. Joseph sent him.[14] So R. Joseph was annoyed, saying, "Since he does not need us, why did he send the inquiry to us?" Rava heard [that R. Joseph was annoyed], and as the eve of Yom Kippur came around, he said to himself: I will go and appease him. He went off and found R. Joseph's attendant mixing him a cup of wine. He said to him, "Give it to me, and I will mix it for him." The attendant gave it to Rava, and he mixed the wine for R. Joseph, who, upon tasting it, said, "This mixture is like that of Rava son of R. Joseph bar Hama." Then Rava spoke up, "I am he."[15]

704. Once Rava came to Hagronia[16] and ordained a fast. The people entreated [Heaven] for mercy, but no rain fell. So he said to them: Continue fasting overnight. Next morning he said: If there is anyone among you who had a dream, let him tell it. R. Eleazar from Hagronia spoke up: In my dream, the following was said to me: Greetings of well-being to the good teacher from the good Lord who dispenses from His bounty good things to His people. At that, Rava

---

1. Died 309 C.E.
2. B. MK 28a.
3. Referring to the Israelites' reply to Moses: "All that the Lord hath spoken will we do and hear" (Exod. 24:7).
4. B. Shab 88a–b.
5. B. Shab 10a.
6. Ibid.
7. Judges were not paid for their services.
8. B. Yoma 86b–87a.
9. Is not the benefit you derive from such work a form of interest?
10. B. BK 97a; B. BM 64b–65a.
11. The death of the principal renders a contract of agency null and void.
12. In accordance with the principle that property such as money, for which there is no security, can be transferred in conjunction with property such as land, for which there is security. Kid 1:4.
13. Since you will then be the legal owner of the sum claimed. B. BK 104b.
14. Does "produce" mean only the produce of fields, or is income from other sources also to be included?
15. B. Er 54a; B. Ned 55a.
16. A city near Nehardea.

said: This is a favorable time to pray. So they prayed, and rain fell.[1]

705. Once, when Rava came to Tigris,[2] he said to Bar Avin, "Get up and utter a prayer for God's mercy."[3] He rose and said:

More than a third of the land is already submerged in water;
Remember Your covenant[4] and have mercy upon us.
We have strayed from You like a wife who strayed from her husband.[5]
O do not abandon us,
But save us as [You saved our fathers] at Marah.[6]

706. Thieves broke in and stole a few rams owned by Rava. Presently the thieves returned the rams, but he refused to accept them, saying, "Rav has ruled: If a thief breaks into a house, steals some items, and gets away, he is exempt from punishment. Why? Because he acquired them with his blood."[7]

707. When R. Dimi of Nehardea brought a ship's load of figs, the exilarch said to Rava, "Go and see if he is a disciple of the wise. If he is, reserve a place in the market for him."[8] So Rava said to R. Adda bar Ahavah, "Go and smell the wine [of his learning]." R. Adda went out and put to R. Dimi the following question: "If an elephant swallows a basket made of palm fronds and passes it in his excrement, is it still subject to uncleanness?"[9] R. Dimi could not give an answer and asked R. Adda, "Sir, are you Rava?" R. Adda tapped him with his sandal and said, "There is a great difference between me and Rava, but evidently I can be your teacher, so that Rava is the teacher of your teacher." In the event, a place in the market was not reserved for R. Dimi, and his figs were a dead loss. He appealed to R. Joseph: "See what R. Adda did to me." R. Joseph responded: "He who did not delay avenging the wrong done to the king of Edom will not delay avenging the wrong done to you."[10] Shortly afterward, R. Adda bar Ahavah died.

R. Joseph said: It is through me that he was punished [by his untimely death], because I invoked God's vengeance upon him.

R. Dimi of Nehardea said: It is through me that he was punished, because he made me lose my figs.

Abbaye said: It is through me that he was punished, because he said to the disciples, "Instead of gnawing at bones in the school of Abbaye, come eat fat meat in the school of Rava."[11]

Rava said: It is through me that he was punished, because, when he went to the meat market to buy meat, he used to say to the butchers, "Serve me before Rava's servant, because I am superior to him."

R. Nahman bar Isaac said: It is through me that he was punished. R. Nahman bar Isaac was the principal lecturer during a kallah.[12] Every day, before delivering his lecture, he used to go over it with R. Adda bar Ahavah, and only then would he enter the kallah. One day R. Papa and R. Huna ben R. Joshua detained R. Adda bar Ahavah. Dusk set in, and R. Nahman bar Isaac was still waiting for him. The sages came and said to R. Nahman, "Stand up to lecture. It is already dusk. Why does the master remain seated?" R. Nahman replied, "I remain seated because I am waiting for the bier of R. Adda bar Ahavah." Even as he said this, the report came that R. Adda bar Ahavah had died.[13]

708. Rava and R. Nahman bar Isaac were sitting together when R. Nahman bar Jacob went by in a gilded litter with a shabby green cloak spread over him. Rava went out to meet him, but R. Nahman bar Isaac did not stir, saying: He is probably a member of the exilarch's court. Rava needs them, but I do not.[14]

709. Rava said: May the merit of what I used to do stand by me. Whenever a disciple of the wise came before me in a lawsuit, I did not lay my head on the pillow [to sleep] before I considered what might be said in his favor.[15]

710. A poor man once applied to Rava [for maintenance]. Rava asked him, "What do your meals ordinarily consist of?" He replied, "Of fat chicken and aged wine." Rava: "Do you not consider the burden you impose on the community?" The poor man: "Do I eat what is theirs? I eat [the food] of the Holy One. For we are taught: In the verse 'The eyes of all wait for Thee, and Thou givest them their food in his season' [Ps. 145:15], it is not said, 'In their season,' but, 'In his season,' implying that the Holy One provides food for every individual in keeping with his 'season,' his particular habits." Just then Rava's sister, who had not seen him for thirteen years, arrived and

---

1. B. Ta 24b.
2. "Tagrit or Tekrit lies higher up on the Tigris between Mosul and Baghdad and is often mentioned in Syriac literature" (MK, Soncino, p. 161, n. 3).
3. When the Tigris overflowed in April and May.
4. With Noah, that a flood not come again. See Gen. 9:15–16.
5. Such a wife was tried by the ordeal of water, which caused her death (Num. 5:22). So, too, when the water of the Tigris rose, it was unfit to drink, and many who drank it died.
6. Where You sweetened the bitter water. See Exod. 15:23–25. B. MK 25b.
7. The owner might have taken his life (Exod. 22:1). B. Sanh 72a.
8. So that no one else should sell until he has disposed of his stock.
9. Is it regarded as a basket and subject to uncleanness, or as excrement, which is not subject to it?
10. A reference to "Thus saith the Lord, for three transgressions of Moab, yea, for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because he burned the bones of the king of Edom into lime" (Amos 2:1).
11. Where the instruction is greatly superior.
12. The kallah was the semiannual gathering of Babylonian scholars during the months of Adar and Elul under the leadership of the heads of the academies.
13. B. BB 22a.
14. See Aaron Mordecai Hyman, Toledot Tannaim ve-Amoraim (London, 1911; repr. 1964) 3:930. B. Git 31b.
15. So high was his opinion of scholars that he felt they would not be involved in a lawsuit unless they were certain of being in the right. So Samuel Edels. B. Shab 119a.

brought him a fat chicken and aged wine. "What a remarkable coincidence!" Rava exclaimed, and he said to the poor man, "I defer to your request—come and eat."[1]

711. Rava said: At first I thought that all the people of Mahoza[2] loved me. When I was appointed judge, I thought that some hated me and some loved me. After I became aware that he who is held wrong today is held right tomorrow, I decided that if I am loved, all love me, and if I am hated, all hate me.[3]

712. A certain man who had intercourse with a gentile woman was sentenced by Rava's court to be flogged. After Rava had him flogged, the man died. When news of the incident reached King Shapur,[4] he wanted to punish Rava, but Ifra Hormiz, the king's mother, said to him, "Do not meddle with the Jews, because anything they ask of their Lord, He grants them." The king asked her, "What, for instance?" She replied, "They ask for mercy, and rain falls." The king retorted, "That is simply because it is the season for rain. Let them ask for such mercy now, in the Tammuz solstice, and make rain come down." So they sent word to Rava, "Concentrate your mind and ask for mercy that rain come down now." Rava did so, but no rain came. Then he pleaded, "Lord of the universe, 'We have heard with our ears, our fathers have told us, what work Thou didst in their days, in the days of old' [Ps. 44:2]. But we have not seen it with our eyes." Immediately rain came down so heavy that the gutters of Mahoza carried the water into the Tigris. Rava's father then appeared to Rava in a dream and said to him, "Is there another man who puts Heaven to such trouble? Change your [sleeping] place, change your [sleeping] place."[5] He did so, and the next morning he found that his regular bed was lacerated with knife cuts.[6]

713. Ifra Hurmiz, King Shapur's mother, sent four hundred denars to R. Ammi [in Tiberias], but he would not accept them. Then she sent them to Rava, who, to maintain cordial relations with the government, accepted them and distributed them to poor Gentiles.[7]

714. On a heathen feast day, Rava once sent a present to Bar Sheshak, saying, "I know that he does not worship idols." But when he called on him, he found him sitting up to his neck in a bath of rose water, with naked harlots standing before him. When Bar Sheshak asked, "Will you [Jews] have anything like this in the world-to-come?" Rava replied, "We will have something much finer than this." Bar Sheshak asked, "Is there anything finer than this?" Rava answered, "Upon you is the fear of the ruling power,[8] but for us there will be no such fear." Bar Sheshak asked, "What fear have I of the ruling power?" But even as the two were sitting together, a king's courier arrived with the message: "Arise, the king requires your presence." As Bar Sheshak was about to depart, he said to Rava, "May the eye of him who wishes you ill burst!" Rava responded, "Amen," and Bar Sheshak's eye burst [out of its socket].

R. Papi said: Rava should have answered him by quoting the verse "Kings' daughters are for thine honor;[9] at thy right hand doth stand the queen in gold of Ophir" (Ps. 45:10). R. Nahman bar Isaac said: Rava should have answered him by quoting the verse "No eye hath seen [the rewards awaiting us], O God, but Thou who acts for those who trust in Thee" (Isa. 64:3).[10]

715. Bar Hadaya was an interpreter of dreams. He would give a favorable interpretation to one who paid him [a fee] and an unfavorable interpretation to one who did not. Abbaye and Rava each had [the same] dream. Abbaye gave him a zuz, and Rava gave him nothing. The two said to him: In our dream, we had read to us the verse "Thine ox shall be slain before thine eyes, and thou shalt not eat of it" (Deut. 28:31). To Rava, Bar Hadaya said: Your merchandise will depreciate, and because of the distress in your heart, you will be unable to eat. To Abbaye, he said: Your merchandise will appreciate so much that you will be unable to eat because of the joy in your heart.

Another time, the two reported: We had read to us the verse "Thou shalt beget sons and daughters, but they shall not be thine, for they will go into captivity" (Deut. 28:41). To Rava, he interpreted the verse in its [literal] unfavorable sense. To Abbaye, he said: You will have many sons and daughters, and your daughters will wed abroad, and it will seem to you as if they had gone into captivity.

Another time, the two reported: We had read to us the verse "Thy sons and thy daughters shall be given unto another people" (Deut. 28:32). To Abbaye, he said: You will have numerous sons and daughters; you will want your daughters to marry your kin, and your wife will want them to marry her kin, and she will force you to marry them off to her kin, which will seem to you like giving them to an alien people. To Rava, he said: Your wife will die, and her sons and daughters will come under the sway of another wife.

The two further reported: We had read to us the same verse "Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy" (Eccles. 9:7). To Abbaye, he said: Your merchandise will appreciate, and you will eat and drink and read this verse with joy in your heart. To Rava, he said: Your merchandise will depreciate, you will eat and drink, and you will read this verse to counteract your distress.

---

1. B. Ket 67b.
2. A Jewish trading center in the vicinity of Babylon.
3. B. Ket 105b.
4. Shapur II, king of Persia (310–79 C.E.).
5. "It was a general belief that by changing one's place (here the bed in which Rava was to sleep), one might escape the evil that was to befall him" (Ta, trans. Henry Malter, p. 185, n. 348).
6. B. Ta 24b.
7. B. BB 10b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
8. Your fate is in the hands of your king, who can at will deprive you of all you possess.
9. That is, Jews will be attended by noble ladies in the world-to-come, and not by harlots, as this heathen was. JV: "among thy honorable women."
10. That is, the good things in the world-to-come cannot be conceived by the mind of man. B. AZ 65a.

The two reported: We had read to us the verse "Thou shalt carry much seed out into the field, and shalt gather little in" (Deut. 28:38). To Abbaye, he interpreted only from the first half of the verse; to Rava, only from the second half.

The two reported: We had read to us the verse "Thou shalt have olive trees throughout all thy borders, but thou shalt not anoint thyself with the oil" (Deut. 28:40). To Abbaye, he interpreted only from the first half of the verse; to Rava, only from the second half.

The two reported: We had read to us the verse "And all the peoples of the earth shall see that the Name of the Lord is called upon thee; and they shall be afraid of thee" (Deut. 28:10). To Abbaye, Bar Hadaya said: Your fame will go forth, you will become head of the academy, and people will be afraid of you. To Rava, he said: You will be arrested in the company of thieves, and because of what will be done to you, all will be the more afraid for themselves.[1] The next day, the royal treasury was broken into by thieves, and the authorities arrested Rava.

The two told Bar Hadaya: We saw a head of lettuce lying over the mouth of a cask. To Abbaye, Bar Hadaya said: Your merchandise—deemed as flavorful as lettuce—will be snapped up. To Rava, he said: Your merchandise—deemed as bitter as lettuce—will be rejected.

The two reported: We saw some meat lying over the mouth of a jar. To Abbaye, Bar Hadaya said: Your wine will be sweet, and everyone will come to buy meat and wine from you. To Rava, he said: Your wine will turn to vinegar, and everyone will come to buy meat to dip in it.

The two reported: We saw a jar hanging from a date palm. To Abbaye, Bar Hadaya said: Your merchandise will rise in price as high as a date palm. To Rava, he said: Your goods [will depreciate so much that to the purchaser they] will be as sweet as dates.

The two reported: We saw a pomegranate sprouting from the mouth of a jar. To Abbaye, Bar Hadaya said: Your goods will be as high priced as a pomegranate. To Rava, he said: Your goods will be as tough as a [dry] pomegranate.

The two reported: We saw a jar falling into a pit. To Abbaye, Bar Hadaya said: Your goods will be in demand.[2] To Rava, he said: Your goods will be spoiled and be thrown into a pit.

They reported: We saw a young ass (hamor) standing upon a block and braying. To Abbaye, Bar Hadaya said: You will be head of the academy, and [an interpreter] will stand by you [and "bray"]. To Rava, he said: The words "the firstborn of an ass" (Exod. 13:13) are erased in your tefillin.[3] Rava said to him: I have just looked at them, and those words are there. Bar Hadaya replied: Certainly the letter vav in the word hamor has been erased in your tefillin.[4]

Later, Rava went alone to Bar Hadaya and reported: In my dream I saw that the outer door [of my house] fell out. Bar Hadaya: Your wife will die.

Then Rava reported: I dreamed that my back and front teeth fell out. Bar Hadaya: Your sons and daughters will die.

Rava reported: I saw two doves flying away. Bar Hadaya: You will divorce two wives. Rava said to him: I saw two turnip tops.[5] He replied: You will receive two blows with a cudgel. Rava went and sat all that day in the house of study, where he came upon two blind men quarreling with each other and went to separate them, and they gave him two blows with their cudgels. They raised their cudgels to give Rava a third blow, but he said, "Enough! [In my dream] I saw only two."

Finally, Rava went over, paid Bar Hadaya a fee, and reported: I saw a wall fall down. To which Bar Hadaya replied: You will acquire wealth without limit.

He reported: I saw Abbaye's mansion fall, and its dust covered me. Bar Hadaya replied: Abbaye will die, and [his presidency of] the academy will pass to you.

Rava reported: I saw my own mansion collapse, and everyone came and took it away brick by brick. Bar Hadaya replied: Your teachings will spread throughout the world.

Rava reported: I dreamed that my head was split open and my brains spilled out. Bar Hadaya replied: The feathers stuffed in your pillows will burst forth bit by bit. He reported: In my dream I had the Hallel of Egypt[6] read to me. Bar Hadaya replied: Miracles will happen to you.

Once, when Bar Hadaya was traveling with Rava by ship, he said to himself: Why should I accompany a man to whom a miracle will happen?[7] As Bar Hadaya was disembarking, he accidentally dropped a book, which Rava found: He saw written in it: All dreams follow the [interpreter's] mouth. At that, he exclaimed, "Wretch! It all depended on you, and you caused me such great distress! Still, I forgive you everything, except [what you said about] the daughter of R. Hisda.[8]

716. Rava said to R. Hisda's daughter, "The sages are criticising you [for remaining unmarried]." She replied, "All these years I had my mind set on you."[9]

717. [After Abbaye died], Homah, Abbaye's wife, came to Rava and asked him, "Grant me an allowance for food [from my husband's estate]. He granted it to her. "Grant me an allowance for wine." "I know," Rava said to her, "that Nahmani[10] did not drink wine." "By your life, master, [I swear]," she replied, "that he gave me drink from beakers as long as this arm." As she was exhibiting her arm,

---

1. Saying: If Rava, who is rich and powerful, is suspect, how much more so are we.
2. Like something valuable that has accidentally fallen into a pit and is eagerly retrieved.
3. This passage is one of the four contained in the tefillin.
4. The scribe erroneously wrote in the letter vav, which he then erased, since in that verse hamor is spelled without it.
5. Which look like cudgels.
6. Pss. 113–18, recited on Passover eve to celebrate the going forth from Egypt.
7. He will be saved, but I will not.
8. Rava's wife, whose death Bar Hadaya had foretold. B. Ber 56a–b.
9. She married Rava ten years after her husband Rami ben Hama died. She even had children with Rava which rarely happens after such a prolonged widowhood. B. Yev 34b.
10. Literally, "my comforter," a name by which Abbaye was often referred to. See above in this chapter, §672.

it was uncovered and [its beauty] lit up the court chamber. At once Rava rose and went home.[1] His wife, R. Hisda's daughter, noticing that his appearance was greatly changed, asked, "Who was at court today?" Rava replied, "[Homa], the wife of Abbaye." Rava's wife immediately went after her, whipping her with litter straps, until she chased her clean out of Mahoza. "You have already killed three men,"[2] she kept saying to her, "and now you come [flirting] to kill another!"[3]

718. Rava said to his sons: When you cut meat, do not cut it while holding it in your hand (some say because of danger, and some say because of spoiling the meat); do not sit on the bed of an Aramean woman; and do not walk around the rear of a synagogue when the congregation is at prayer.

Do not sit upon the couch of an Aramean woman. Some explain: Do not go to sleep without first reciting the Shema. Others: Do not marry a proselyte woman.[4] And still others: Literally, "the couch of an Aramean woman," on account of the kind of thing that happened to R. Papa. R. Papa went to an Aramean woman. She pulled out a couch for him and said, "Sit down." He said to her, "I will not sit down until you lift the bedding." When she lifted the bedding, they found a dead infant there.[5]

719. R. Seorim, Rava's brother, while sitting at Rava's bedside, saw him about to fall into the sleep of death. Still, Rava managed to say, "Tell the angel of death not to torment me." R. Seorim asked, "Are you not [as a teacher of Torah] the angel's intimate friend?"[6] Rava: "Since my mazzal[7] has already been delivered to him, the angel of death has no regard for me."

Then R. Seorim said to his brother, "Please, master, show yourself to me in a dream." When Rava did appear to him [after his death], he asked, "Master, did you suffer pain?" Rava: "No more than from the prick of the cupping lancet."[8]

720. When Abbaye and Rava died, it seemed as though the cliffs on both sides of the Tigris had kissed each other.[9]

1. It was deemed indecent for a woman to expose her arm, even when washing clothes.
2. Homah had already married three times, and each of her husbands had died. See B. Yev 64b.
3. B. Ket 65a.
4. Rava's aversion to female proselytes is exceptional. Generally, they are welcomed and reckoned as desirable spouses.
5. B. Ber 8b. She herself had smothered the infant and planned to accuse R. Papa of having killed it when he sat down on it. See below in this chapter, §733.
6. The teacher of Torah is a messenger of the Lord of hosts (Mal. 2:6–7), hence a bosom friend of another messenger, the messenger of death.
7. My guardian angel.
8. B. MK 28a.
9. The mourners were so numerous that they seemed to have crowded out the water. Cf. above in this chapter, §651. B. MK 25b.

R. Papa (died 375 C.E.)

721. R. Papa and R. Huna son of R. Joshua once came before Rava, who asked them, "Have you mastered such-and-such a tractate and such-and-such a tractate?" They: "Yes." Rava: "Are you a little better off now?" They: "Yes, we bought a parcel of land." He explained: Happy are those righteous men who receive in this world what the wicked receive in this world [for the few good deeds they perform].[10]

722. R. Papa said: Had I not brewed beer, I would not have become wealthy.

He also said: Had I not married a priest's daughter, I would not have become wealthy.[11]

723. R. Papa said: Whoever can drink beer but drinks wine violates "Thou shalt not waste" (Deut. 29:19).[12]

724. R. Yose said: May my portion be with those who, though innocent, are under suspicion. R. Papa said: I was suspected of something I was innocent of.[13]

725. R. Papa was asked, "What is your name?" He replied, "Rav Papa." He was told, "But is it not said, 'Let others praise thee [with titles], but not thine own mouth' (Prov. 27:2)?" He replied, "But if there are no others, then it must be one's own mouth."[14]

726. R. Papa and R. Huna son of R. Joshua were once walking along the road, when they met R. Hanina son of R. Ika. They said to him: The instant we saw you we recited two blessings, "Blessed be He who has imparted of His wisdom to them that fear Him" and "That has kept us alive." He replied: And the instant I saw you, I, deeming you to be equal to the sixty myriads of the House of Israel, recited three blessings, the two you mentioned and "Blessed is He that discerns secrets.[15]

727. R. Papa and R. Huna son of R. Joshua bought sesame seed on the bank of the Royal Canal and hired some boatmen who guaranteed to bring it across[16] regardless of any mishap that might occur. When, as it turned

10. "As a rule, the righteous suffer in this world, so as to atone for their earthly sins and be worthy of full reward in the world-to-come. The wicked on the other hand, prosper in this world, so as to receive condign punishment for their wickedness in the world-to-come. Hence, if they do occasionally perform a righteous deed, they are immediately rewarded for it in this world, so as to retain their record of wickedness in the world-to-come. Rava expressed his pleasure at seeing the two rewarded for their devotion to Torah in this world by a bit of material prosperity (Leon Nemoy). B. Hor 10b.
11. "R. Joshua said, 'He who desires to become wealthy, let him cleave to the seed of Aaron.' " B. Pes 113a and 49a.
12. B. Shab 140b.
13. See above in this chapter, §718. B. Shab 118b.
14. Teshuvot ha-Rashba, in Rishonot 84.
15. The blessing spoken at the sight of the hosts of Israel. B. Ber 58b.
16. To Naresh, the home of R. Papa. The boats had to sail up the Euphrates and from there pass into the Naresh Canal.

out, passage through the Royal Canal was blocked, the sages said to the boatmen: Hire ass drivers and deliver the stuff to us, since you have guaranteed us against any mishap. The boatmen appealed to Rava, who said to the sages: You wizened geezers, you would strip men of the very clothes they wear. This mishap is of a kind that could not possibly have been anticipated.[1]

728. R. Papa once visited Tuakh[2] and said: If there is a disciple of the wise in this town, I would like to go and pay him my respects. An old woman said to him: There is a disciple of the wise here—his name is R. Samuel, and he is able to recite tannaitic traditions. May it be [Heaven's] will that you become his equal. R. Papa said to himself: Since she blesses me by praying that I become his equal, he must be a God-fearing man. So R. Papa went to R. Samuel, who in his honor slaughtered an ox and then all but "slaughtered" his guest with legal queries. R. Papa sought to answer them, but R. Samuel refused to accept his answers. Finally R. Papa exclaimed: May it be [Heaven's] will that the rest of the ox be eaten in peace [without further wrangling]. Then he left R. Samuel and went to R. Shimi bar Ashi.[3]

729. R. Shimi bar Ashi would frequently attend [the discourses] of R. Papa and annoy him greatly with his questions. One day he observed that R. Papa fell on his face [in prayer] and heard him say, "May God preserve me from the insolence of Shimi." After that, he vowed silence and annoyed him no more with such questions.[4]

730. While making arrangements for his son to be married into the house of Abba of Sura,[5] R. Papa went there to have the marriage contract written for the bride. Judah bar Meremar heard [that R. Papa was on his way] and went out to welcome him. However, when, upon reaching the door of Abba Sura's house, R. Papa said to him, "Will the master come in with me?" Judah asked permission to take his leave. Realizing that Judah was reluctant [to come in], R. Papa asked him, "What is your reason? [Are you reluctant to come in] because Samuel said to R. Judah [bar Ezekiel], 'Keen wit, do not be present at a transfer of inheritance,[6] even if it be from a bad son to a good son, because one never knows what issue may come forth from the bad son; all the more so [when such transfer is] from a son to a daughter?[7] But surely you are aware that a father's duty to provide a dowry for his daughter is confirmed by an enactment of the sages."[8] Judah replied, "The enactment applies only to a father who does so voluntarily. Does it also imply that the father should be compelled to do so?" R. Papa: "Did I tell you to come in and compel him? What I meant was: Come in, but exercise no pressure upon him." "My coming in," Judah replied, "would amount to pressure."[9] Nevertheless, R. Papa kept urging Judah until he came in and sat down, but remained silent.[10] Abba thought that Judah was vexed [by the paltriness of the dowry he was offering] and consequently assigned [to his daughter as dowry] all that he possessed. Finally, Abba asked Judah, "Will you remain silent even now? By your life, I left nothing for myself!" "If the matter depended on me," Judah replied, "any amount [however small] you might have assigned would have been unacceptable." "If so," Abba said, "I will renege." Judah: "I did not suggest that you turn into a reneger."[11]

731. A certain beggar who used to go from door to door came to R. Papa [for alms], but he did not respond to him. R. Samma son of R. Yeva said to R. Papa: If you do not respond, he will die. R. Papa: But we have been taught: If he is a beggar who goes from door to door, we need not respond. R. Samma: We need not respond with a large donation to be sure, but with a small donation, we must.[12]

732. As R. Papa was climbing a ladder, his foot slipped, and he almost fell down. So he said: It is evident that I—may my enemy incur such liability—am guilty of a trespass as grave as that of a Sabbath breaker or an idolater.[13] R. Hiyya bar Rav from Difti[14] said to him: Perhaps a poor man came to you and you did not feed him, for we have been taught that R. Joshua ben Korhah said: He who shuts his eye to an appeal for alms is deemed to be the same as a worshiper of idols. For in one place it is written, "Beware that there be not a base thought in your heart[15] . . . so that you are mean to your needy kinsman and give him nothing" (Deut. 15:9), and elsewhere, "Certain base[16] fellows are gone out from the midst of thee and have subverted the inhabitants of their town, saying, 'Come, let us worship other gods' " (Deut. 13:14). Even as the sin in the second instance is idolatry, so the sin in the first instance is idolatry.[17]

733. An Aramean woman owed money to R. Papa, and he used to go to her home to collect it. One day she strangled her child and placed him under [the bedding of] her couch. When R. Papa came, she pointed to the couch and said to him: Sit there until I fetch your money. He

---

1. B. Git 73a.
2. Near Naresh, not far from Sura (Obermeyer, p. 208).
3. B. Nid 33b.
4. B. Ta 9b.
5. R. Papa's father-in-law. R. Papa's son married the sister of R. Papa's wife.
6. From persons legally entitled to be heirs.
7. By giving his daughter a dowry, the father deprives his sons of a portion of their inheritance.
8. Allowing one's daughter a dowry.
9. The father of the bride would be ashamed to offer a small dowry in the presence of a distinguished legal scholar.
10. While R. Papa was discussing the amount of the dowry with the bride's father.
11. B. Ket 52b–53a.
12. B. BB 9a.
13. They were executed by stoning, before which the condemned was thrown down from a high place. See B. Sanh 45a.
14. A town near Apamea on the Tigris. See Obermeyer, p. 197.
15. The "base thought" is not to lend to the poor before the onset of the sabbatical year.
16. In both instances, the Hebrew for "base" is beli-yaal, a word sharply condemnatory.
17. B. BB 10a.

replied: I will not sit down unless you lift up the bedding. She lifted the bedding, and the dead child was exposed.

Hence, said the sages: It is prohibited to sit on the couch of an Aramean woman.[1]

734. R. Papa ordained a fast. Feeling very weak, he ate a morsel, then prayed for God's mercy, but no rain came. So, in his ravenous hunger, he gulped down a plateful of grits and prayed again, but still no rain came. R. Nahman bar Ish Prati ("Man of the Euphrates")[2] said tauntingly, "If the master had gulped down a second plateful of grits, rain would surely have come." R. Papa felt humiliated. And then the rain came.[3]

R. Ashi (352–427 C.E.)

735. When Rava died, R. Ashi was born.[4]

736. In the book of Adam[5] it is written, "R. Ashi and Ravina will conclude authentic teaching."[6] A hint of their activity is to be found in the verse "Until I went to the Sanctuary (mikdeshe [she = Ashi]) of God, where I understood (avinah = Ravina) that the task of concluding was to be theirs" (Ps. 73:17).[7]

737. R. Adda bar Ahavah said: From the days of Rabbi to R. Ashi we did not find Torah and high office in the same person. You say, "We did not? But was there not Huna bar Nathan?"[8] Huna bar Nathan was subordinate to R. Ashi in matters of instruction.[9]

738. When R. Ashi noticed cracks in the synagogue of Mata Mehasia,[10] he had the area of the crack pulled down. Then he put his couch there and did not remove it until the very gutters [of the repaired area] had been completed.[11]

739. R. Ashi said: The people of Mata Mehasia are "stubborn of heart" (Isa. 46:12), for twice a year[12] they see the glory of the Torah and yet never has even one of them become converted.[13]

740. When an animal afflicted with an organic disease [and therefore possibly unfit for consumption] was brought to R. Ashi, he would have all the butchers of Mata Mehasia gather, in order, as he put it, that each of them should carry one chip of the beam.[14]

741. R. Ashi made a wedding feast for his son. When he saw the sages very merry, he fetched a white crystal goblet and smashed it in their presence. Then they grew pensive.[15]

742. R. Ashi had a grove in Shelania, and on a weekday during a festival, he went to cut down some trees in it. R. Shela of Shelania protested: "What justification have you for doing this? Is it because R. Hananel, citing Rav, said: During the weekdays of a festival a man may lop off branches from a date palm, even if he requires no more than its sawdust? But did not Abbaye vehemently denounce such a practice?" R. Ashi responded, "I have not heard it"—a way of saying, "I do not concur." Then his hatchet slipped and just missed slicing his thigh. So he abandoned the task and came back on another day [not during the festival].[16]

743. R. Ashi had a grove that he sold to a Parsee temple. Ravina said to him: But there is the injunction "Thou shalt not put a stumbling block before the blind" (Lev. 19:24)![17] R. Ashi replied, "Most wood is used for ordinary heating."[18]

744. Amemar, Mar Zutra, and R. Ashi were sitting at King Yezdegerd's gate. When the king's butcher passed by them [carrying a tray of meat], R. Ashi saw that Mar Zutra's face had turned pale [from hunger]. So R. Ashi picked up some food with his finger and put it in Mar Zutra's mouth. The butcher said, "[By putting your finger in the food], you spoiled the king's meal." When the king's officers asked him, "Why did you do this?" R. Ashi replied, "Because a commoner who touches the king's food renders it unfit." They: "Then why did you render it unfit?" R. Ashi: "Because I saw an unwholesome piece of meat in it." They examined the dish but did not find such meat. He placed his finger on the unwholesome piece and asked them, "Did you examine here?" They examined it and found it unwholesome. The sages asked R. Ashi, "Why did you depend on a miracle?" He replied, "I sensed the vapor of leprosy hovering over it."[19]

745. Once [during prayer] Ravina was standing behind R. Ashi. When Ravina felt an urge to spit, he spat out behind him. R. Ashi asked him, "Does not the master agree with R. Judah's dictum that sputum may be stanched with one's turban?" Ravina replied, "But I am squeamish."[20]

---

1. B. Ber 8b; Rashi on B. Pes 112b. See above in this chapter, §718.
2. Or, "Man of Sparta" (Leon Nemoy).
3. B. Ta 24b.
4. B. Kid 72b.
5. The book containing the genealogy of the whole human race, which God showed to Adam.
6. They compiled and arranged in order in the Gemara the mass of accumulated Amoraic discussion of the laws set down in the Mishnah.
7. JV: "Until I entered the Sanctuary of God." B. BM 86a.
8. "According to Sherira's Epistle, he was exilarch in the time of R. Ashi" (Isidore Epstein's note in Sanh, Soncino, p. 227).
9. B. Sanh 36a.
10. A suburb of Sura, which attained fame as a center of learning in the days of R. Ashi (Obermeyer, p. 289).
11. B. BB 3b.
12. During the semiannual kallah assemblies in which the Torah was expounded.
13. B. Ber 17b.
14. Share in responsibility for the decision. B. Sanh 7b.
15. B. Ber 31a.
16. Throughout the week of a festival, wood may be chopped for the preparation of food, but not for any other purpose. B. MK 12b.
17. That is, nothing may be done to aid idolatry.
18. Not for idolatrous service. B. Ned 62b.
19. B. Ket 61b.
20. And the awareness of spittle under my turban would distract me from my prayer. B. Ber 24b.

746. The angel of death appeared to R. Ashi in the marketplace. He said: Give me thirty days' respite, so that I may go over my studies, inasmuch as it is said [in heaven], "Happy is he who comes here with his learning in hand."

When the angel of death came back on the thirtieth day, R. Ashi asked him: What is the urgency? [The angel of death replied]: R. Huna bar Nathan is close on your heels,[1] and remember, "No sovereignty may encroach upon another even by as little as a hairsbreadth."[2]

747. R. Ashi said to Bar Kipok: [On the day of my repose], what will you say about me? Bar Kipok responded:

If a flame felled lofty cedars,
What chance for lowly hyssop on the wall?
If a hook hauled up Leviathan,
What chance for fishes in shallow streams?
If drought stilled cascading torrents,
What chance for water in tranquil pools?

Bar Avin said to Bar Kipok: God forbid that I would use words such as "hook" or "flame" with regard to the death of the righteous. Then what would you say? Bar Kipok asked. Bar Avin: I would say:[3]

Weep for the mourners,
Not for the soul that is gone—
It to its repose,
We to grief.

Patriarch and Exilarch

748. "Thou hast manifested princely power over an angel, and wilt do so over men" (Gen. 32:29).[4] The angel thus intimated to Jacob that two lines of princes would issue from him: the exilarch in Babylon and the patriarch in the Land of Israel.[5]

749. We have been taught: The words "The scepter shall not depart from Judah" (Gen. 49:10) refer to the exilarchs of Babylonia, who rule over Israel with the authority of a scepter;[6] and the words "Nor a lawgiver from between his feet" (ibid.) refer to the descendants of Hillel, who teach Torah's laws to multitudes.[7]

750. R. Judah son of R. Nahmani, the interpreter of R. Simeon ben Lakish, expounded in a discourse: When a man looks at any one of three things, his eyes become dim: at the rainbow, at the patriarch, and at the priests [standing on their dais and blessing Israel with the Ineffable Name]. At the rainbow, because it is written, "As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain . . . so was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord" (Ezek. 1:28). At the patriarch, because Moses was told concerning Joshua his successor, "Thou shalt put thine honor upon him" (Num. 27:20).[8]

751. Rabban Gamaliel said: [On a festival] my father's household never baked bread in twisted loaves[9] but only in thin wafers. The sages said to him: How can we counsel others to follow the example of your father's household, who were stringent toward themselves and lenient toward all Israel, permitting them to bake bread in twisted loaves and in thick cakes?[10]

752. Our masters taught: When the patriarch enters, all the people rise and do not sit down until he says, "Be seated." When the president of the court enters, a row on one side of him and another row on the other side of him rise [to provide a passageway and remain standing] until he sits down. When the sage counselor enters, each person rises as he passes and sits down after he passed, while the last person he passes sits down only after he has sat down.[11]

753. Our masters taught: When the sage counselor dies, his house of study is closed [the day of his death]. When the president of the court dies, all the houses of study [in his city] close [on the day of his death]; and when the people of his town enter their synagogues, they change their usual places: those who usually sit in the north sit in the south, and those who usually sit in the south sit in the north. When the patriarch dies, all houses of study [in the area] close [the day of his death], and the people of all synagogues gather in his synagogue, where seven persons read [the weekly lesson in the Torah],[12] and then all leave the synagogue. R. Joshua ben Korhah added that, afterward, people are not to talk about idly in the street, but are to sit at home in [mournful] silence.[13]

754. There [in Babylonia], upon the death of an exilarch, the Torah scroll was taken to his home [where the weekly lesson was read]. Because the [exilarchs, who are] descendants of David, are settled in Babylonia, things that

---

1. Waiting to succeed you.
2. B. MK 28a.
3. B. MK 25b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
4. JV: "Thou hast striven with God and with men." But sarita ("thou hast striven") may also, by association with sar ("prince"), be understood as "showing princely power."
5. B. Hul 92a.
6. Backed in their office by the government.
7. But are not backed by the government. B. Sanh 5a. Leon Nemoy differs sharply with the translator: "I don't believe your interpretation of bashevet will wash—the reference is not to the scepter of the Persian Empire, but to the rod of tyrannical power. There was no love lost between the exilarch and the sages, nor between him and the rank and file of the people, who groaned under his taxation and the arrogance of his bureaucracy (one of the causes of the rise of Karaism, by the way)."
8. Moses could not be looked at. B. Hag 16a.
9. Because they were burdensome, handling them would not be in keeping with the observance of the festival. It would constitute a violation of shevut, an act forbidden not in Scripture but by the rabbis.
10. Betz 2:6.
11. B. Hor 13b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
12. But they pray individually, not as a congregation. So Rashi.
13. B. MK 22b–23a and commentary by a disciple of R. Yehiel of Paris (Kitve Makhon Harry Fishel [Jerusalem, 1937], section 3: Rishonim 1:97–98); Tosafot of R. Asher, pp. 69–70.

were done for their ancestors [the Davidic kings] are also done for them.[1]

755. R. Aha son of Rava said: From the days of Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] to the days of R. Ashi, Torah and high office were not found in the same person. Not found? But were they not found in Huna bar Nathan? It was not the same thing with Huna bar Nathan, for he submitted to R. Ashi [in decisions on law].[2]

756. R. Ashi said: Huna bar Nathan told me: Once while I was standing before King Yezdegerd, my girdle was tied too high up. He pulled it down while saying to me: It is written of you, "Ye shall be unto Me a kingdom of priests and a holy nation" (Exod. 19:6).[3] When I came before Amemar, he said to me: The promise "Kings shall be thy foster fathers" (Isa. 49:23) has come to be fulfilled in you.[4]

757. Rav said: When one wishes to decide monetary suits by himself and be free from liability [to reimburse the injured party] in the event of an erroneous decision, he should obtain permission [in advance] from the exilarch.[5]

758. R. Zera said to R. Simon: The master should rebuke the exilarch's household. R. Simon: They do not heed me. R. Zera: Even if they do not heed you, master, you should still rebuke them.[6]

759. [Before he became], the exilarch Mar Ukba,[7] who used to go to bed and rise to the accompaniment of music, sent a writ to his predecessor in office, saying, "No rejoicing, Israel, no cries of gladness now! Wouldst thou be like the heathen?" (Hos. 9:1).[8]

760. [After becoming exilarch], Mar Ukba sent a query to R. Eleazar: "Certain men are against me, but I am able to get them into trouble with the government. Shall I do so?" R. Eleazar scribbled his answer on the same paper: "I said, 'I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue; I will keep a curb upon my mouth, while the wicked is before me' [Ps. 39:2], meaning, even though the wicked is before me, I will still keep a curb on my mouth." Mar Ukba sent another message to R. Eleazar: "They are troubling me very much, and I no longer can put up with them." Eleazar replied, " 'Resign thyself unto the Lord, and wait patiently [hit'holel] for him' [Ps. 37:7]; [that is to say], he added, "Wait for the Lord, and He will [utterly prostrate them (halalim)] before you. [Pay them no heed], go to the house of study morning and evening, and they, by their own doing, will soon come to an end."

R. Eleazar had hardly written these words when Geniva[9] was placed in chains [for execution].[10]

761. The exilarch once came to Hagronia to the house of R. Nathan. Rafram and all the sages attended the lecture. R. Huna did not. The next day Rafram wished to remove the hurt caused by R. Huna from the exilarch's heart. So [in the exilarch's presence] he asked R. Huna: Why did the master not come to the lecture? R. Huna: Because my foot hurt.[11]

762. Samuel said to R. Hinena bar Shila: No sage associated with the exilarch should go out [on the Sabbath] wearing a cloak fastened by a brooch with the exilarch's insignia[12] on it, except you, at whom the exilarch's household take no offense.[13]

763. A certain old woman[14] came before R. Nahman[15] and said to him: The exilarch and all the sages of the exilarch's household are sitting in a stolen sukkah. She complained loudly, but R. Nahman paid no attention to her. She persisted: A woman whose ancestor[16] had three hundred and eighteen slaves is crying out to you, and you pay her no heed. R. Nahman said to the sages: She is a noisy woman, but all she can claim is the value of the wood.[17]

764. A certain person cut down a date palm belonging to his neighbor, and then came to the exilarch [to inquire what he should pay]. The exilarch said: I myself saw the place. Three date palms stood there close together, and the three were worth one hundred zuz. Go therefore and pay your neighbor thirty-three and one-third zuz. At this, the man exclaimed: What have I to do with an exilarch who judges according to Persian law? And he went to R. Nahman [who ruled in keeping with the laws of Israel].[18]

The Merit of the Sages

765. Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai had five distinguished disciples. He used to sum up their merits: R. Eliezer ben

---

1. P. Yoma 7:1, 44a. Ordinarily, the Torah scroll may not be taken out of the synagogue to be read elsewhere, except to honor a Davidic king.
2. B. Git 59a.
3. Hence, like priests, you must not wear your girdle too high up.
4. B. Zev 19a.
5. B. Sanh 5a.
6. B. Shab 55a.
7. See above in this chapter, §563.
8. P. Meg 3:2, 74a.
9. He was one of Mar Ukba's chief antagonists.
10. B. Git 7a.
11. B. Yoma 78a.
12. If the insignia should fall off, the sage, fearful of being seen without it, might remove the cloak, fold it, put it over his shoulder, and thus find himself carrying it, an act forbidden on the Sabbath.
13. B. Shab 58a.
14. Who felt that the exilarch's household had helped themselves to her wood to build their sukkah.
15. The exilarch's son-in-law.
16. Abraham. See Gen. 14:14.
17. No need to demolish the sukkah to return to her the wood she claims. B. Suk 31a.
18. The amount of damages to be paid by the person who chopped down the palm tree is equivalent to the amount of depreciation in value that a stand of sixty palm trees would suffer if one of the palm trees were to be chopped down. Thus the amount of damages to be paid in Jewish law would be less than in Persian law. B. BK 58b.

Hyrcanus—[his memory is so retentive that he is like] a cemented cistern, which does not lose a drop; R. Joshua ben Hananiah—she who gave birth to him is happy; R. Yose the Priest—the embodiment of piety; R. Simeon ben Nathanel—the embodiment of sin-fearing; R. Eleazar ben Arakh—[his originality is so great that he is like] a spring with ever-welling strength.

He also used to say: If all the sages of Israel were in one pan of a scale and R. Eliezer ben Hyrcanus in the other, he would outweigh them all. Abba Saul, however, quoted him otherwise: If all the sages of Israel, including R. Eliezer ben Hyrcanus, were in one pan of a scale, and R. Eleazar ben Arakh in the other, he would outweigh them all.[1]

766. In like manner[2] Rabbi Judah [I] the Patriarch used to list the merit of the sages Rabbi Tarfon, Rabbi Akiva, Rabbi Eleazar ben Azariah, Rabbi Yohanan ben Nuri, and Rabbi Yose the Galilean:

R. Tarfon he called "a pile of stones"—some say, "a pile of walnuts." When a person removes one of them, all come clattering down as they fall over one another. Such was R. Tarfon. Whenever a disciple of the wise came to him and said, "Teach me," he would bring forth for him Scripture and Mishnah, Midrash of Halakhot and of Aggadot. When the disciple left R. Tarfon's presence, he went away laden with blessing and [intellectual] wealth.

R. Akiva he called "a treasury with compartments." To whom may R. Akiva be likened? To a laborer who took his basket and went forth to the field. When he found wheat, he put some into it; when he found barley, in it went; emmer, likewise; beans, the same; lentils, too, went into the basket. Upon returning home, he sorted out the wheat by itself, the barley by itself, the emmer by itself, the beans by themselves, the lentils by themselves. This is how R. Akiva acted: all the Torah [he amassed], he sorted into its various compartments.

R. Eleazar ben Azariah he called "spice peddler's basket." For to whom may R. Eleazar be likened? To a spice peddler who takes up his basket and comes into a city; when the people of the city come up and ask him, "Have you good oil with you? Have you spikenard ointment with you? Have you balsam with you?" they find that he has everything with him. Such was Rabbi Eleazar ben Azariah. When a disciple of the wise came to him and asked him about Scripture, he answered him; about Midrash, he answered him; about Halakhah he answerred him; about Aggadah, he answered him. So when the disciple left R. Eleazar's presence, he went away filled with [intellectual] wealth and blessing.

R. Yohanan ben Nuri he called "a basket filled with Halakhot."

R. Yose the Galilean he called "a man who gathers [traditions] with discrimination." Utterly without arrogance, he held fast to meek lowliness, a requirement that the sages inferred from [the fact that] Mount Sinai [was a lowly mountain], and in such a spirit of lowliness he taught all the sages of Israel.[3]

767. Issi ben Judah used to count the distinctive merits of various sages. R. Meir—sage and scribe; R. Judah—a sage whenever he chose to speak;[4] R. Tarfon—a pile of walnuts; R. Ishmael—a well-stocked shop; R. Akiva—a treasury with compartments; R. Yohanan ben Nuri—a basket of fancy goods; R. Eleazar ben Azariah—a basket of spices. The Mishnah of [the elder] R. Eliezer ben Jacob was small in quantity but good.[5] R. Yose always had his reasons [for his decisions]. R. Simeon used to grind much but discard little, and what little he did discard was only bran. R. Simeon used to say to his disciples: My sons, learn my rules, for my rules are the cream of the cream of R. Akiva's.[6]

768. R. Joshua said: Happy are you, O our father Abraham, that R. Eleazar ben Azariah issued from your loins! The generation in whose midst R. Eleazar ben Azariah lives is not one that is orphaned.[7]

769. Ben Azzai used to say: Except for this baldhead [R. Akiva], all of Israel's sages are as thin as a garlic's husk compared to me.[8]

770. He who has disciples and disciples of disciples is called Rabbi. When his disciples are forgotten, he is called Rabban. When both his disciples and the disciples of his disciples are forgotten, he is called by his name alone [without titles].[9]

771. Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] and R. Nathan concluded the Mishnah. R. Ashi and Ravina concluded [authentic] teaching [by redacting the Talmud].[10]

The Former and the Latter Generations

772. R. Haggai said in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman: The former generations plowed and sowed, weeded and trimmed, hoed and reaped, piled up sheaves, threshed, winnowed, and sifted, ground the grain and sifted the flour, kneaded the dough, tore it in pieces, and baked. Yet we do not know how to make use of what was prepared for us.[11]

---

1. Avot 2:8.
2. Even as Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai described the distinction of his disciples, so R. Judah described those of his masters.
3. ARN 18.
4. See above in this chapter, §261.
5. His rulings were always accepted.
6. B. Git 67a.
7. P. Hag 14b and 3b.
8. B. Bekh 58a.
9. Hillel, for example. Such a master is so outstanding that his teachings are cited directly in his name only, omitting the names of the disciples who transmitted them. Tos Ed 3:4.
10. They arranged Amoraic discussions in systematic order, even as R. Judah I, the Patriarch, arranged tannaitic utterances in such order. B. BM 86a.
11. Literally, "Yet we have no mouths to eat it with." P. Shek 5:1, 48c.

773. R. Zera said in the name of Rava bar Zemina: If the former generations were like sons of angels, we are like sons of men; and if the latter generations were like sons of men, we are like asses—and not even like the asses of R. Hanina ben Dosa and R. Phinehas ben Yair,[1] but like ordinary asses.[2]

774. R. Yohanan said: The intellectual powers of former generations were as wide as the door of the Outer Hall leading into the Temple's interior; the powers of latter generations were narrower like the door of the Temple Hall;[3] but ours is as narrow as the eye of a fine needle.

R. Akiva is classed with the former generations. R. Eleazar ben Shammua with the latter generations. Others say: R. Eleazar ben Shammua is classed with the former generations, and R. Oshaia Berabbi with the latter generations.

"But ours is as narrow as the eye of a fine needle." Abbaye said: With regard to Gemara, we find mastering it as difficult as forcing a peg into a wall [with bare hands]. Rava said: With regard to logical reasoning, we are like a finger trying to press into hardened wax.[4] R. Ashi said: As to forgetfulness, we are like a finger inserted into a bowl of seeds[5] [and taken out].[6]

775. R. Yohanan said: The fingernail of former generations has more substance than the entire body of the latter generations. Resh Lakish replied: On the contrary, the latter generations have more substance, for they occupy themselves with Torah despite oppression by the kingdoms. R. Yohanan retorted: The Temple proves what I say. It was restored for former generations but was not restored for the latter generations.

R. Eleazar was asked: Were the former generations superior, or were the latter generations superior? He replied: Set your eyes upon the Sanctuary! Some say, he said: Your evidence[7] is the Sanctuary.[8]

776. R. Judah [I] the Patriarch said of R. Yose ben Halafta: Like the difference between the holiest of the holy and the most common of the common is the difference between our generation and the generation of R. Yose.[9]

777. R. Papa asked Abbaye: Why were miracles performed for former generations, and no miracles are performed for us? Is it on account of learning? In the days of R. Judah, the sum of their learning was Nezikin,[10] whereas we range over the entire six orders [of the Mishnah]. And when R. Judah happenend to reach the tractate Uktzin,[11] he would say in despair, "I find myself helpless in confronting the intricate theses of Rav and Samuel"; whereas, in matters of Uktzin, we on our own are able to advance thirteen ways of interpreting it. Nevertheless, R. Judah had only to draw off one of his shoes[12] and rain came, while we fast and cry out, but no one [on High] seems to need us.

Abbaye replied: Former generations gave up their lives for the hallowing of the Name; but we do not give up our lives for the hallowing of the Name.[13]

778. Abba Saul was the tallest man in his generation, and R. Tarfon reached only to his shoulder. R. Tarfon was the tallest man in his generation, and R. Meir reached only to his shoulder. R. Meir was the tallest man in his generation, and Rabbi reached only to his shoulder. Rabbi was the tallest man in his generation, and R. Hiyya reached only to his shoulder. R. Hiyya was the tallest in his generation, and Rav reached only to his shoulder. Rav was the tallest man in his generation, and R. Judah reached only to his shoulder. R. Judah was the tallest man in his generation, and his waiter Adda of Pumbedita reached only to his shoulder. Parshtabina of Pumbedita reached to half the height of the waiter Adda, while everybody else reached only to the loins of Parshtabina of Pumbedita.[14]

779. R. Zera said: Last night [in a dream], R. Yose son of R. Hanina appeared to me, and I asked him, "Near whom are you seated [in the academy on high]?" "Near R. Yohanan." "And R. Yohanan, near whom?" "Near R. Yannai." "And R. Yannai?" "Near R. Hanina." "And R. Hanina?" "Near R. Hiyya." I then asked, "Is not R. Yohanan [worthy of a seat] near R. Hiyya?" He replied, "In the region of sparks of fire and tongues of fire, who needs to bring in a smith's son?"[15]

The Sages of the Land of Israel and the Sages of Babylonia

780. R. Oshaia said: What is the meaning of the verse "And I took unto me the two staves; the one I called Noam, "graciousness," and the other I called Hovelim, "binders" (Zech. 11:7)? Noam refers to the disciples of the wise in the Land of Israel, who, when engaged in halakhic debates, treat each other graciously [manimim]; Hovelim refers to the disciples of the wise in Babylonia, who, when discus-

---

1. See above in this chapter, §67 and §283.
2. B. Shab 112b.
3. The door of the Outer Hall was twenty cubits wide, while the door of the Temple Hall was only ten cubits wide.
4. We can no more penetrate the reasoning than we can press a finger into hard wax—we merely depress the surface.
5. Instead of bira ("pit"), according to Tosafot, ad loc., R. Hananel reads bizra ("seeds").
6. Once the finger is taken out, no trace of its having been there is left. B. Er 53a.
7. The words eneykhem ("your eyes") and edeykhem ("your evidence") differ but slightly.
8. B. Yoma 9b.
9. P. Git 6:7, 48b.
10. The old name for Bava Kamma, Bava Metzia, and Bava Batra, which made up one tome (the law of torts).
11. A tractate dealing with the definition of a fruit—are its leaves, its stem end, or its bottom end deemed to be part of the fruit or extraneous?
12. To prepare for a fast, during which people sat on the ground without wearing shoes.
13. B. Ber 20a.
14. B. Nid 24b–25a.
15. To work the bellows and fan the fire. (R. Yohanan was known as Bar Nappaha, "the smith's son.") B. BM 85b.

sing Halakhah, injure each other's feelings [mehabbelim].[1]

It is written, "And two olive trees by it. These are the two yitzhar, anointed ones" (Zech. 4:3 and 4:14). R. Isaac said: Yitzhar designates the disciples of the wise in the Land, who, when engaged in halakhic debates, are soothing to one another like olive oil; while "And two olive trees stand by it" symbolizes the disciples of the wise in Babylonia, who in halakhic discussions make each other as bitter as [unripe] olives.[2]

781. Why are disciples of the wise in Babylonia so particular about their attire? Because they are not too well learned.[3] R. Yohanan said: Because they are not in their [original country].[4] As people say, "In my own town, my name is what matters; away from home, my attire."[5]

782. "In days to come . . . Israel shall blossom and bud" (Isa. 27:6). R. Joseph taught: The verse refers to disciples of the wise in Babylonia, who by their discourses wreathe Torah with blossoms and buds.[6]

783. Ulla happened to visit Pumbedita, where he was offered a basketful of dates. He asked, "How much are these worth?" He was told, "One zuz."[7] Ulla said, "So in Babylonia one may have a basketful of date honey for only one zuz, and yet the Babylonians do not occupy themselves with Torah!" During the night, the dates he had eaten upset his digestion. He remarked, "A basketful of [poison that cuts like] knives for one zuz. And yet the Babylonians occupy themselves with Torah!"[8]

784. What does the name Babel [Babylonia] suggest? R. Yohanan said that, in Babylonia, study is a proper blend (belulah) of Scripture, Mishnah, and Talmud. But R. Jeremiah applied the verse "He hath made me dwell in dark places like those that have been long dead" (Lam. 3:6) to the study of the Talmud in Babylonia.[9]

785. R. Jeremiah said: Those foolish Babylonians! Because they dwell in a dark country,[10] they voice murky utterances.[11]

786. The verse "Indeed, it shall be said of Zion: 'This man and that man also was born there' " (Ps. 87:5), R. Meyasha grandson of R. Joshua ben Levi explained, means that [it will be said, "He is of Zion"] of a man born in Zion as well as of a man yearning to see Zion.

Abbaye said: Yet one of them [of Zion] is better than any two of us. Rava added: Still, when one of ours goes up to Zion, he is as good as any two of theirs. Thus, when R. Jeremiah was with us, he actually did not understand what the sages were saying. But when he went up there, he used to call us "foolish Babylonians."[12]

787. When R. Zera went up to the Land of Israel, he kept a hundred feasts, to help him forget the Babylonian method of study, so that it should not confuse him.[13]

Sages at Their Going In and Their Coming Out of the House of Study

788. When he went into the house of study and also when he came out, R. Nehunia ben ha-Kaneh used to say a short prayer. He was asked: Why is such prayer necessary? He replied: When I go in, I pray that no offense should occur through me,[14] and when I come out, I voice thanks for my lot.

Our masters taught: On going in, what should a man say? "May it be Your will, O Lord my God, that no offense may occur through me, that I may not stumble in a matter of Halakhah and allow my colleagues to rejoice at my discomfiture,[15] that I may not declare the unclean clean or the clean unclean, or that my colleagues may not stumble in a matter of Halakhah and allow me to rejoice at their discomfiture." On his coming out, what should he say? "I give thanks to You, O Lord my God, that You have set my portion among those who sit in the house of study and not set my portion with those who loiter at street corners.[16] For I rise early and they rise early—I rise early for words of Torah and they rise early for idle talk. I labor and they labor—I labor and receive a reward, while they labor and receive no reward. I run and they run, but I run to life in the world-to-come, while they run to the pit of destruction."[17]

789. When the main body of disciples departed from the school of Rav, one thousand two hundred disciples were left; [when they departed] from the school of R. Huna, eight hundred were left; when they departed from the schools of Rabbah and R. Joseph, four hundred were left, yet they spoke of themselves as orphans. When they departed from the school of Abbaye (some say, from the school of R. Papa, others, from the school of R. Ashi), two hundred were left, and they spoke of themselves as most orphaned among orphans.[18]

---

1. In the Babylonian academies, discussions were carried on far more energetically than in the Palestinian ones; consequently, there is considerably more controversy in the Babylonian than in the Jerusalem Talmud.
2. B. Sanh 24a.
3. So they have nothing but attire to distinguish them.
4. They are immigrants from the Land of Israel.
5. B. Shab 145b.
6. Ibid.
7. So Munich ms., as quoted by Isidore Epstin, Pes, Soncino, p. 465, n. 4. BR read: " 'How many baskets for a zuz?' 'Three.' "
8. B. Pes 88a; Ta 9b.
9. B. Sanh 24a.
10. Perhaps an allusion to the Parsees' prohibition of kindling lights during Parsee festivals. Leon Nemoy writes, "Darkness is a common synonym of ignorance. Palestinian scholars were contemptuous of Babylonian scholars."
11. B. Men 52a.
12. B. Ket 75a.
13. The Babylonian dialectics were complicated and at times obscure. Palestinian analysis was clear and simple. B. BM 85a.
14. By giving a wrong decision.
15. And so bring sin upon themselves.
16. Or, shopkeepers. So Rashi.
17. B. Ber 28b.
18. B. Ket 106a.

790. When the disciples left the school of R. Ammi, they used to say to him:

During your life, may you see your worldly needs provided,
But may your ultimate reward be in the world-to-come,
And may hope for it endure through the generations that spring from you.
May your heart meditate understanding,
Your mouth speak wisdom,
And your tongue be moved to song.
May your gaze scan what lies ahead,
Your eyes shine with light of Torah,
Your face be radiant as the brightness of the firmament.
May your lips utter knowledge,
Your reins rejoice in uprightness,
And your steps hurry to hear the words of the Ancient of Days.[1]

791. When the disciples left the school of R. Hisda, they used to say to him:

"Our learned ones[2] are well laden" (Ps. 144:14)—our men learned in Torah and obedient to percepts are well laden with suffering.

"May there be no breach" (Ps. 144:14)—may our fellowship not be like the fellowship of Saul, from whose midst issued Doeg the Edomite [who caused so great a breach].[3]

"And no going forth" (Ps. 144:14)—may our fellowship not be like the fellowship of David, from whose midst Ahithophel went forth.[4]

"That there be no complaining" (Ps. 144:14)—may our fellowship not be like the fellowship of Elisha, from which issued Gehazi.[5]

"In our streets" (Ps. 144:14)—may we have no son or disciple who disgraces himself in public.[6]

The Death of Sages and Their Eulogies

792. Our masters taught: When the elder Rabban Gamaliel died, the glory of Torah ceased and Levitical purity and abstinence died out. When Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai died, the radiance of wisdom ceased. When R. Eliezer died, the Torah scroll was hidden. When R. Joshua died, counsel, speculation, and [the blessing of] plenty ceased in the world. When R. Ishmael ben Phiabi died, the radiance of priesthood ceased. When Rabban Gamaliel died, locusts came[7] and tribulations increased. When R. Akiva died, the strong arms of Torah ceased, and the wells of wisdom were stopped up. When R. Eleazar ben Azariah died, the crowns of wisdom ceased, for the crown of sages is their wealth. When R. Hanina ben Dosa died, workers of miracles ceased. When R. Yose Ketanta died, men of piety died out. (And why was he called Ketanta? Because he was the youngest [katan] of the pious men.) When Ben Azzai died, the assiduous students of Torah ceased. When Ben Zoma died, the expounders of Scripture ceased. When R. Meir died, the tellers of parables ceased. When Rabbi died, humility and fear of sin ceased.[8]

793. When R. Akiva died, Rabbi was born. When Rabbi died, R. Judah was born. When R. Judah died, Rava was born. When Rava died, R. Ashi was born. This teaches that a righteous man does not depart from the world until another righteous man like himself is brought into being, as is said, "The sun riseth, as the sun goeth down" (Eccles. 1:5). Before Eli's sun was extinguished, the sun of Samuel the Ramathite rose, as is said, "Even before the lamp of God was extinguished [in Eli], Samuel was . . . already in the Temple of the Lord" (1 Sam. 3:3).[9]

794. When R. Abbahu died, the columns of Caesarea ran with tears.[10] At the death of R. Yose, the gutters on the roofs of Sepphoris ran with blood. (It is said that he was willing to lay down his life for performing circumcision.) When R. Jacob died, stars were visible during the day. When R. Samuel bar R. Isaac died, all cedars in the Land of Israel were uprooted. At the death of R. Hiyya [bar Abba], fiery stones came down from the sky; at that of R. Nahum bar Simai, the Man of the Holy of Holies, all images were covered with mattings. (Why was he called Nahum the Man of the Holy of Holies? Because during his entire life he never gazed at the image engraved on a coin. And so, people said: Even as he did not gaze at images during his life, so he should not have to gaze at them after his death.) When Rabbah and R. Joseph died, it seemed as though the cliffs on both banks of the Euphrates were kissing one another.[11] When Abbaye and Rava died, it seemed as though the cliffs on both banks of the Tigris were kissing one another. When R. Mesharsheya died, the date trees were laden with thorns.[12]

795. When Rabbah bar R. Huna and R. Hamnuna died, their coffins were carried up [to the Land of Israel]. When the cortege reached a bridge, the camels halted. An Arab asked: What's happening? The sages [accompanying the cortege] replied: The deceased scholars are deferring to each other, one saying, "Master, you go first," and the

---

1. B. Ber 17a.
2. JV: "oxen." But aluf ("ox") may be associated with the stem alef ("to learn, to study").
3. See 1 Sam. 22:9–23.
4. See 2 Sam. 16:21–23.
5. See 2 Kings 5:20–27.
6. By heretical teaching, as did—so munich Ms. of the Talmud—the Nazarene. B. Ber. 17a.
7. Some take it to refer to the plague of locusts in 164 C.E., when Rabban Gamaliel died; others, to the proliferation of tax collectors.
8. B. Sot 49a and En Yaakov, ad loc.; P. Sot 9:16, 24c; P. BK 3:7, 3c.
9. B. Kid 72b.
10. Munich ms.; BR: "Water."
11. So numerous were the mourners that they seemed to have crowded out the water.
12. B. MK 25b; P. AZ 3:1, 42c.

other saying, "You, master, go first." The Arab interjected: By rights, a lion son of a lion should go first. Accordingly, the camel carrying Rabbah bar H. Huna went first.

The eulogizer at Rabbah bar R. Huna's funeral began:

A scion of noble lineage is brought up from Babylon,
And with him a book of Torah's battles.
Double the number of jackdaws and owls[1]
To mourn the crushing loss brought from Shinar.[2]
God, angered at His world,
Snatches souls from it
But rejoices in them, as at the coming of a new bride.
He who rides the skies rejoices, jubilates
When a soul pure and just comes to Him.[3]

When Ravina died, the eulogizer at the funeral began:

Palm trees sway their heads,
Mourning the palmlike righteous man.
He turned nights into days [meditating in Torah].
So must we Turn night into days
Lamenting him.

R. Ashi asked Bar Kipok: [On the day of my repose], what will you say about me? Bar Kipok responded: I shall say:

If a flame felled lofty cedars,
What chance for lowly hyssop on the wall?
If a hook hauled up Leviathan,
What chance for fishes in shallow streams?
If drought stilled cascading torrents,
What chance for water in tranquil pools?"

Bar Avin said to Bar Kipok: God forbid that I would use words such as "hook" or "flame" at the death of righteous men. Then what would you say? Bar Kipok asked. I would say:

Weep for the mourners,
Not for the soul that is gone—
It to its repose,
We to grief.

R. Hanin, the patriarch's son-in-law, had no children. He besought God's mercy, and a son was born to him. The day his son was born, R. Hanin died. The eulogizer at the funeral began:

Joy is turned to sorrow,
Gladness and grief, commingle.
In the father's moment of joy, he sighed [his last breath].
At the very instant the child was being caressed (haninato),
He who was caressing him (hanino) died.

The child was named Hanin after his father.

When R. Yohanan died, R. Isaac ben Eleazar began the funeral oration:

Grievous is this day for Israel,
As a day when the sun sets at noon.

When R. Zera died, the eulogizer at the funeral began:

The land of Shinar conceived and bore him,
The Land of Beauty[4] made eminent him who was her delight.
Now Rakkath[5] laments. Woe to her,
She has lost her most precious ornament.[6]

1. Birds whose presence signifies mourning.
2. Babylon. See Gen. 14:1.
3. See MTeh 116:7 (YJS 2:226–27).
4. R. Zera migrated to the Land of Israel.
5. An ancient name for either Sepphoris or Tiberias, where R. Zera lived. See B. Meg 6a.
6. B. MK 25b and En Yaakov, ad loc.

PART III

CHAPTER ONE

ISRAEL AND THE NATIONS OF THE WORLD

God's Love for Israel

1. R. Akiva used to say: Israel are beloved, called as they are "children of God." As a special token of His love, it was made known to them that they are called "children of God," for He said to them, "You are children of the Lord your God" (Deut. 14:1). Israel are beloved, the precious instrument [Torah] having been given to them. As a special token of His love, it was made known to them that the precious instrument through which the world was created was given to them, for He said, "I give you good doctrine; forsake not My Torah" (Prov. 4:12).[1]

2. "Thou hast affirmed the Lord this day . . . and the Lord hath affirmed thee" (Deut. 26:17–18). The Holy One said to Israel: You have declared Me a unique entity, and I shall declare you a unique entity. You made Me a unique entity in the world by saying, "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is the only Lord" (Deut. 6:4); and I shall declare you a unique entity by having it said, "Who is like Thy people Israel, a nation one in the earth" (1 Chron. 17:21).[2]

3. R. Simeon ben Lakish said in the name of R. Yannai: The Holy One partnered His great Name with Israel. What He did may be illustrated by the parable of a king who had a small key to a treasure chest. He said to himself: If I leave the key without identification, it may be lost. So I will attach a chain to it, and if it should be lost, the chain will identify it. So, too, the Holy One said: If I leave Israel without identification, they may be lost among the nations. So I shall join My great Name to them and they will remain alive [as a distinct entity]. Hence [when there was danger that Israel's name might be wiped out] Joshua asked, "What wilt Thou do for Thy great Name?" (Josh. 7:9), by which he implied that the Name is partnered with us.[3]

4. "I sleep; nevertheless, my heart waketh" (Song 5:2). R. Hiyya bar Abba asked: Where do we find that the Holy One is actually identified as the heart of Israel? In the verse "God is the rock, my heart, and my portion forever" (Ps. 73:26).[4]

5. Israel are more beloved by the Holy One than the ministering angels . . . for the ministering angels do not utter song above until Israel first utter it below.[5]

6. "He will give His angels charge over thee, to guard thee" (Ps. 91:11). R. Meir said: Who is greater, the guardian or the guarded? Since it is written, "He will give His angels charge over thee, to guard thee," it follows that the guarded is greater than the guardian.

"They shall bear thee upon their hands" (Ps. 91:12). R. Judah said: Which is the greater, he who is borne up by another or he who bears another up? Since Scripture says, "They shall bear thee upon their hands," you must conclude that he who is borne up is greater than he who bears another up.[6]

7. R. Nehemiah said: See how great is the love of the Holy One for Israel, for He has designated the ministering angels, the "mighty creatures who do His bidding" (Ps. 103:20), to be watchmen over Israel. Who are those angels? Michael and Gabriel, of whom it is said, "I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem" (Isa. 62:6).[7]

"And saviors shall come up on Mount Zion to judge the Mount of Esau" (Obad. 1:21), the saviors being Michael and Gabriel. However, our holy Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] maintained that the verse refers to Michael alone, for Scripture says, "At that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince who standeth for the children of thy people" (Dan. 12:1), because he it is who presents Israel's needs and pleads for them, as Scripture says, "Then the angel of the Lord spoke and said: 'O Lord of hosts, how long wilt Thou not have compassion on Jerusalem?' " (Zech. 1:12), and also, "And there is none that holdeth with me against these, except Michael your prince" (Dan. 10:21).

R. Yose said: To whom may Michael and Samael[8] be compared? To an advocate and a prosecutor before a tribunal. The one speaks and then the other speaks. And when the one finishes what he has to say, and the other finishes what he has to say, if the advocate knows that he has prevailed, he begins to praise the judge in the hope that he will give his verdict [in the defendant's favor]. Then, if the prosecutor wishes to say more, the advocate tells him, "You be quiet and let us hear the judge." So also do Michael and Samael stand before the Presence, with Satan making accusations and Michael pointing to Israel's merits. When Satan wishes to say more, Michael silences him, as indicated in the verse "Let me hear what God, the Lord, will speak: for He will speak of well-being to His people" (Ps. 85:9).[9]

---

1. Avot 3:15.
2. B. Ber 6a.
3. The name Israel includes El ("God"); and the name Yehudah includes YHVH ("Lord"). P. Ta 2:6, 65d; Yalkut, Josh., §17.
4. Yalkut, Song, §988.
5. B. Hul 91b.
6. Gen. R. 78:1; MTeh 104:3.
7. The verse continues: "They shall never hold their peace day nor night." Such capacity can be attributed only to angels.
8. Satan.
9. The whole psalm pleads for God's mercy on Zion and is understood to have been uttered by Michael. Exod. R. 18:5.

8. Beloved are Israel, for when God calls them by a pet name, He calls them "priests," as is said, "Ye shall be called the priests of the Lord" (Isa. 61:6).[1]

9. R. Ashi said: R. Huna bar Nathan told me: Once I was standing before King Yezdegerd and my girdle was tied too high. He pulled it down, saying to me: You are described as "a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation" (Exod. 19:6).[2] When I came before Amemar, he said to me: The promise "Kings shall be thy foster fathers" (Isa. 49:23) has come to be fulfilled in you.[3]

10. R. Simeon said: All Israel are royal princes.[4]

11. R. Simeon said: Great is God's love for Israel. The Holy One revealed Himself in a place of idolatry, in a place of sexual pollution, in a place of ritual uncleanness in order to redeem them, as is said, "I am come down to deliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians" (Exod. 3:8).[5]

12. R. Simeon ben Yohai asked R. Eleazar bar R. Yose:[6] Have you perhaps heard from your father an interpretation of the verse "The crown wherewith his mother hath crowned him" (Song 3:11)? R. Eleazar replied: Yes. R. Simeon: How does it go? R. Eleazar: The verse may be understood by the parable of a king who had an only daughter whom he loved exceedingly. He called her "my daughter," but as time went on and his love kept increasing, he came to call her "my sister" and finally "my mother." So at first, in His endearment of Israel, the Holy One called her "My daughter"—"Hearken, O daughter, and consider" (Ps. 45:11). As His love increased, he called her "My sister"—"My sister, My bride" (Song 5:1). And finally, as His love grew more intense, he called her "My mother," as is indicated by the verse "Attend unto Me, O My people, and give ear unto Me, O My nation" (Isa. 51:4), where u-leummi, "O My nation," is spelled defectively and may also be read u-le-immi, "O My mother."

[Upon hearing this interpretation] R. Simeon ben Yohai rose, kissed R. Eleazar on the brow, and said: Had I come into the world only to hear this interpretation from you, it would have been enough for me.[7]

13. Elijah said: Once while I was traveling from place to place, a certain man came to me and asked me about matters pertaining to Torah, saying, "My master, there are two things in my heart I love with a very great love—Torah and Israel. But I do not know which of them comes first." I replied, "Generally people say that Torah is to be put first before all else. But I used to say: Israel, being holy, comes first."[8]

14. The verse "But now thus saith the Lord: Jacob created thee, Israel formed thee" (Isa. 43:1)[9] means, so said R. Phinehas in the name of R. Reuben, that the Holy One said to His world: My world, My world, who created you? Who formed you? Jacob created you. Israel formed you.

R. Berekhiah [hastened to explain]: Heaven and earth were created only for the sake of Israel, for it is said, "On account of the beginning God created" (Gen. 1:1). Here, by "the beginning" is meant Israel, of which Scripture says, "Israel is the Lord's hallowed portion, the beginning of His harvest" (Jer. 2:3).[10]

15. "As a lily among thorns" (Song 2:2). R. Azariah, citing R. Judah son of R. Simon, illustrated the verse by the parable of a king who had an orchard planted with a row of fig trees, a row of grapevines, a row of pomegranate trees, and a row of apple trees. The king turned the orchard over to a keeper and went away. After a while, the king came back and inspected the orchard to see how it had done, and found it overgrown with thorns and thistles. So he summoned woodcutters to raze the orchard. But when he saw there a rose-colored lily, he picked it up and breathed in its fragrance, and his spirit was calmed. The king said, "Because of this lily, let the orchard be spared."

Likewise, the world was created only for the sake of Israel. After twenty-six generations, [in the time of Moses], the Holy One inspected His world to see how it had done, and He found it had reverted, as it were, to water in water:[11] the generation of Enosh—water in water; the generation of the flood—water in water; the generation of the dispersion—water in water. Finally, He brought destroyers to raze the world, but then He saw there a rose-colored lily—Israel. He picked it up and breathed in its fragrance at the time Israel received the Ten Commandments, and His spirit was calmed. When Israel said, "We will do and obey" (Exod. 24:7), the Holy One said: On account of a lily, an orchard was spared; on account of the Torah and Israel [who study it], let the world be spared.[12]

16. "There is none like unto God of Jeshurun" (Deut. 33:26). Israel says, "There is none like unto God." And

---

1. Sif Num., §119.
2. Like a priest, he was not to wear his girdle too high.
3. B. Zev 19a.
4. B. Shab 128a.
5. Exod. R. 15:5.
6. R. Simeon ben Yohai turned to R. Eleazar because R. Eleazar's father, the historian R. Yose ben Halafta, was the best judge of the range of meaning in any verse of the Song of Songs. R. Simeon's turning to R. Eleazar would indicate that the Song's interpretation had long been linked with the crossing of the Red Sea, the revelation at Sinai, and the building of the Tabernacle. The Song was systematically interpreted as symbolizing each of these events, and it was for this reason that R. Simeon asked R. Eleazar how Song 3:11 was to be construed in reference to the building of the Tabernacle (see Saul Lieberman's appendix D in Gershom G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism, Merkabah Mysticism, and Talmudic Tradition [New York, 1960], pp. 118–26).
7. Song R. 3:11, §2; Exod. R. 52:5; Num. R. 12:8.
8. TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 71.
9. JV: "But now thus saith the Lord, that created thee, O Jacob, and He that formed thee, O Israel."
10. Lev. R. 36:4; Yalkut, Isa., §452.
11. "The creation can be thought of as the act of separating the waters from the waters, i.e., making order out of chaos by setting limits; so sin, the disruption of the order decreed by Heaven, can be thought of as mixing once again the waters with the waters from which they were separated by Heaven's decree" (Brother Caedmon Holmes).
12. Lev. R. 23:3; Song R. 2:2, §3.

the holy spirit replies, "Like unto God is Jeshurun—[unique].

Israel says, "Who is like unto Thee, O Lord, among the mighty?" (Exod. 15:11). And the holy spirit replies, "Happy art thou, O Israel, who is like unto thee?" (Deut. 33:29).

Israel says, "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is one" (Deut. 6:4). And the holy spirit replies, "Who is like unto Thy people Israel, a nation one on the earth?" (1 Chron. 17:21).

Israel says, "As an apple tree among the trees in the wood, so is my Beloved among the sons" (Song 2:3). And the holy spirit replies, "As a rose among thorns, so is My love among the daughters" (Song 2:2).

Israel says, "This is my God, and I will glorify Him" (Exod. 15:2). And the holy spirit replies, "The people which I formed for Myself" (Isa. 43:21).

Israel says, "Thou art the glory of their strength" (Ps. 89:18). And the holy spirit replies, "Israel, in whom I will be glorified" (Isa. 49:3).[1]

Between Israel and the Nations

17. It is taught in the name of R. Meir: Why was the Torah given to Israel? Because they are of a fiery temper. For in the school of R. Ishmael it is taught: "At His right hand was a fiery law unto them" (Deut. 33:2) means that the Holy One said, "It is right that they be given a fiery law [to restrain them]." Some say, Israel's laws had to be of fire, for if the Torah had not been given them, no people or tongue could withstand them. In this connection, R. Simeon ben Lakish said: There are three creatures of a fiery temper: among nations, Israel; among beasts, the dog; and among fowls, the cock.

R. Isaac bar Redifa said in the name of R. Ammi: You may think that such a description of Jews [as fiery tempered] is disparaging. In fact, it is complimentary. Their attitude is: Let me be a Jew or be crucified! Indeed, as R. Avin said, to this day Jews outside the Land are called "stiff-necked people."[2]

